Methodist Protestant Herald.

ONE IS YOUR MASTER EVEN CHRIST AND ALL YE ARE BRETHREN.

VOLUME XXXI.

GREENSBORO, N. C., JANUARY 1, 1925.

METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD.

J. F. McCulloch, Editor and Publisher.

Published weekly in the interest of the Methodist Protestant Church as an organ of the North Carolina Annual Conference.

PRICE.—$1.50 a year, payable in advance. Papers are discontinued on expiration of the term of subscription. However, subscribers who request to be marked on our books as "regular," their papers to be continued and payment to be made at the beginning of the year is convenient.

Subscribers can remit directly or hand their money to pastors who act as our agents in the field. In directing change of address, give the old address as well as the new. In renewing, give the same initials as before.

We cannot often supply back numbers.

We acknowledge receipt of money on subscription accounts by changing the date on the label. If this is not changed within two weeks after your money is forwarded, write us.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Greensboro, N. C.

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

Why not adopt this as your motto for the New Year? Can you find a better one? The royal law, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," is good as gold. The golden rule, "Do unto others as you would they should do unto you," is a safe guide to conduct above reproach. But the human life of Jesus is a most holy inspiration. To live His life as He would have us live it is a most sacred privilege. He craves such an invitation. He commands us to be and do like Him. "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you."

The ordinary standards of life are entirely too low. Ideals of conduct and service run in a vain circle of doing as others do. Men imitate the ordinary, the self-centered, and the indifferent. They pass along the ruts of failure or mediocre attainment.

Get a vision of the Christ. He still lives, moves, and has His being in the Holy Scriptures. He still walks among the seven golden candlesticks. He is still with us always, even unto the end of the world. He still rules in trusting hearts. His will is written large in the Gospels and Epistles. He is speaking to mind, heart and conscience. He is telling you what He would do if He was in your place. Give ear to His still, small voice. "Go, and do thou likewise."—Word of Life.

—The Greensboro Daily News is this week celebrating the opening of its splendid new home. Heretofore it has dwelt in a hired house. But a great newspaper needs a house made especially made for the purpose, and now The News has such a house—planned and constructed to suit the purpose. Many friends are accepting the invitation to the public to visit and inspect the plant. It was our privilege to be entertained in a six o'clock dinner on Tuesday evening given by the Daily News to about a hundred newspaper men and women in the Jefferson Standard Cafe. The News received many congratulations on the progress it has made and the service it has rendered and is now more than ever capable of rendering.

The leading spirit in this advance in a business way is perhaps Mr. Jeffress, though he gives full credit to his associates, Messrs. Godby and Stockton and others for their essential parts. May the News continue to thrive, giving the news showing the facts, giving the true interpretation of the facts, and helping all readers to see the correct answer to the question, What are you going to do about it?

—Woe to them that divide the spoils of unholy and unjust warfare to build universities, colleges and churches.

—The meeting at High Point College yesterday was well attended considering the very inclement weather. The meeting was opened by Scripture reading and prayer by Prof. Paul S. Kennett. Addresses followed by Dr. A. G. Dixon, Dr. R. M. Andrews, and Brother J. Norman Willis. The need of Christian education was stressed and the necessity of church schools that there may be Christian education. Brother Willis threw light upon the financial situation of High Point College. In order to equip for opening, money had to be borrowed. This was done on favorable terms, but the interest must be paid until we are able to discharge the debt. This must be done promptly, and the first installment is due this month. It is therefore pressing important that pledges be paid when due and even before they are due, if that can be done. We have a great property in High Point College, and we want to make it completely our own by paying the full cost of building it. As long as there is debt on it, it is only partly our own.

DR. LEWIS WILL BROADCAST.

By an arrangement made with WCAP, Washington, Dr. Lewis, president of the General Conference, will broadcast a sermon to the Methodist Protestant Church from the Rhode Island Avenue Church Sunday morning, January 11. This special arrangement is made with the hope that as many of our churches as can will tune in and reproduce the service. This is something of an experiment but it is entirely practicable, and has in it many interesting possibilities. It is suggested that an arrangement be made with someone in the congregation who has a portable set or with some dealer in the community who will probably be glad to introduce a set for the service with small charge. There are many sets not requiring outside aerial. The receiving outfit should by all means be in place not later than Friday evening before and WCAP located so that no difficulty need be experienced when the service begins.

We should have at least a hundred churches tune in on this service. I shall be pleased to answer any inquiries about it, but as pastor of the church I have a natural pride that we shall make the very most of this opportunity.

Certainly we are indebted to WCAP for their kindness. Jas. H. Straugn, Pastor.

MAKING MONEY.

Suppose we could double our money with every investment we made. Would it be a blessing? Two Christian men were talking together about a legitimate investment that was offered to them, which promised very large returns. One of the men was seriously questioning whether to go in. "Are you afraid you may lose?" asked the other. "No," said the first, "I am afraid I may win." And he had good reason to fear such large winnings. Some years ago the well-known Christian layman, Mr. A. A. Hyde of Kansas, wrote to various men of reputed wealth asking them whether they had received the greater satisfaction from material or from altruistic investments. One of the replies was as follows: "Those investments which have turned out well have troubled me more than my losses. It is the dollars I have that keep me anxious." It is in view of such practical testimonies as these, from men who know by experience, that we may well recognize that money gains are not necessarily blessings, and money losses are not necessarily to be deplored. It is true indeed that we can use money to the glory of God; that is the only way it ever ought to be used; and when so used God will bless us and others. But the wealth that we all may have in the all-sufficient Savior is infinitely greater than any money-wealth that we may long for. And there is no risk attached! The best investment we can ever make is not to "trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy."—Selected.

GENERAL FENG'S WISDOM.

God gives swift, unerring wisdom to his children who really listen to Him. At the recent Victorious Life Conference at America's Keswick Dr. Jonathan Goforth, of China, told the thrilling story of the great Christian general of China, Feng Yu-hsiang, and his really Christian army. He told of a conversation he had with this modern Cornelius when he said to him, "General, you are being known all over the world." "That is my danger," said the General. "But, General, wherever you are known throughout the world, the Christian people are praying for you." "That is my safety," said the General. And so this Christian commander is forewarned by the Holy Spirit, and forearmed by the Captain of his salvation. The really Christian life is the most dangerous life in the world; and it may always be the safest, if we keep behind the shield of faith.—Sunday School Times.

HOW TOBACCO KILLS.By Will H. Brown.

Luther Burbank in an article in Henry Ford's paper, The Dearborn Independent, on "Tobacco, Tombstones and Profits," says: "Let me tell you how tobacco kills. Smokers do not all drop dead around cigar lighters in tobacco stores. They go away, and years later, die of something else; and when they die the doctors certify that they died of pneumonia, heart disease, typhoid fever, or what not."

As is well known, President Harding, who died suddenly in San Francisco on August 2, was a heavy user of tobacco. In the signed statement of the five physicians attending him appeared these words: "We all believe he died from apoplexy, or a rupture of a blood vessel in the axis of the brain. His death came after recovery from the acute illness was in process."

Earlier in the same statement the physicians said: "For some years his blood pressure had ranged around 180, and there was evidence of some arterial sclerosis, enlargement of the heart, and defective action of the kidneys. Except for fatigue and the fact that his heart and blood vessels were some years older than the rest of his body, he was in reasonably good health." Normal blood pressure for a man of President Harding's age—58 years—should be about 140 to 160.

According to Dr. Matthew Woods, of Philadelphia, Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Dr. William Brady, and many other physicians of note, the conditions found in President Harding's case, resulting in his death, are more or less in evidence in the condition of nearly all heavy users of tobacco. In this connection it is well to remember Luther Burbank's words as to how tobacco kills.

CHAPLAINS FOR THE NAVY.

By Rev. E. O. Watson, Secretary, General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

More than a year ago provision was made by the Bureau of Navigation to increase the number of Navy Chaplains from 85 to 100. There was, and is, great need in the Navy for more even than 100 Chaplains. One hundred Chaplains would leave some fifteen stations without supply, but would fill nearly, if not all, the important places.

Earnest call was issued in July and August last for the fifteen additional Chaplains provided for. Since that time we have constantly stressed the demand for Chaplains, even going so far as to address the dean or president of all the larger theological seminaries of the country asking for lists of ministers passing through the seminary for five years past who, in the judgment of the dean, would make good chaplains. A number of names were furnished us and correspondence was entered into with these. Representatives of the Chaplaincy visited a number of the general meetings of religious bodies the past spring and summer and presented the need for Chaplains. The General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains wrote to representatives of each denomination, stating the need and urging co-operation in finding the men. A definite article on the need was sent out to the religious press and releases were sent out showing quotas needed from the various denominations. Others were requested to write articles concerning the need. To date the net result of all this effort is that there are now exactly 84 Navy Chaplains, one less than the number actively in service fifteen months ago.

This office wrote directly to many ministers asking if they were disposed to consider the Navy Chaplaincy as a life work. From these and others, sixteen applications were received, of which ten were approved by representatives of the churches, three of these failed in physical examination, so that only seven new Chaplains have been commissioned. The denominational affiliation of the seven is as follows: Baptist North 2, Baptist South 2, Congregational 1, Presbyterian U. S. A. 1, Roman Catholic 1. Meantime, resignations, retirements and death removed eight from the active service: Episcopal, 3 resigned; Roman Catholic, 3 resigned; Baptist North, 1 deceased; Methodist Episcopal South, 1 retired.

This is both surprising and painful. Surprising in view of the great opportunity for service in the Navy Chaplaincy; painful as we think of what the failure to respond means on the one hand to the men of the Navy, and on the other to the ministry and the churches they represent.

Each Chaplain in the Navy on regular assignment has a parish with an average of approximately 1,200 men. Few pastors have as many men, and we dare say none has a better opportunity to reach every man of his parish. Within the compass of a battleship the Chaplain may find at all times each and every one of his parishioners, or secure definite information concerning him. Sooner or later, he touches at the port of practically every country. The Chaplain in the Navy has an unparalleled opportunity, not only to the man of the ship with whom he is so intimately associated, but a great missionary opportunity as he touches foreign ports. There is, too, opportunity for study, the broadening influence of travel and intimate association with Navy officers, who are cultured men. In his work aboard ship the Chaplain does not sugar from ungenerous denominational rivalries. In the regular ministry even a small parish in the country or country town has to meet the rivalry of half a dozen or more denominations. The Chaplain aboard ship is the sole representative of the Christian ministry. Should the minister be away from the regular pastorate, whether for a long period or a short, there is no fear but that the gospel will be preached and his parishioners have opportunity to hear it. Indeed too often the pastor's chief fear is that his people will hear too much from some rival denomination. On the other hand, if the battleship is without a Chaplain there is no gospel preached and no spiritual ministry save of a purely voluntary character.

Again, while we would have no man come into the Chaplaincy for mercenary reasons, ministers must live in order to carry on their work and they can carry on that work all the better if assured of a certain living and of adequate provision in case of breakdown, or upon retirement. The budget of the Bureau of Navigation shows that the average provision for Chaplains for the next twelve months is approximately $4,186 each for the year—a better average we feel sure than is afforded in what might be termed the middle, if not the upper tier of pastoral charges. Should one break down, or reach the age of retirement, under the law he is assured of three-fourths base-pay for the remainder of his life. The writer was born in the ministry nearly sixty years ago and entered it actively thirty-nine years ago. He has more than once been face to face with the problem, "What if my health gives way," and now that he is within a few years of the legal age of retirement in Army and Navy, it would be a comfort to know that in either contingency he might receive "to the end" three-fourths of his pay. He could easily plan a useful and happy old age of retirement on three-quarters of the requirement for active service. So, all in all, we are surprised in view of the opportunity also for effective service.

We are pained, above all, that the men of the Navy should be left without spiritual ministry. Sixteen stations averaging 1,200 men without spiritual ministry means that a total of approximately 19,000 young men of America engaged in the service of their country, representatives of homes of every part of the land, are without spiritual ministry. No argument of pacifist or militarist enters, or should enter, into this. It is a question of 19,000 American citizens who have been taken from their homes to serve their country being neglected by the churches and allowed to go absolutely without the service of a Christian minister.

It is painful, too, to think that this failure to secure Chaplains for the Navy may be due either to unwillingness on the part of the church to give their finest young men to this service, or, on the part of young ministers to invest their lives in such service. It is true the churches need these men for pastors. Some of our replies indicated that church leaders would not recommend that young men enter the Chaplaincy because there was such a great need at home. This is painful to think of because of the selfish spirit it would indicate, finally resulting in fatal consequences to the churches themselves. The church that pursues a policy of that sort has always dried up. Besides, the men who are enlisted in the service of the Navy will, in a few years as a rule, return to the home communities from which they enlisted. Their value as they return is largely dependent upon the religious ministry they receive while in the service. Men who lack such religious service during the period of their enlistment returning to their communities are not likely to be of value to the churches to which they return.

From the ministers' standpoint, there are sacrifices in the Chaplaincy of the Navy. He is called upon to be removed sometimes for long periods from home and home ties. He is cut off to some extent from association with his brethren of the ministry. In many respects he stands alone. On board ship he is without the backing of an official board. He must work out his own plans. But what is to be said of the man who weighs mere circumstances of this sort against opportunities and need for service? We believe the true conception of the call to preach includes willingness to serve where there is need, whether at home, in the foreign field or in the Chaplaincy.

The call for Chaplains is a Macedonian cry. We need men who, in the spirit of Paul, will answer. We need men who have had the threefold vision of Isaiah; the vision of God, the vision of sin and the vision of grace, and who, qualified by such vision, will reply as he did, "Here am I, send me."

The age limits for Chaplaincy in the Navy are from 21 to 31½ years. A Chaplain should be well educated, having not only a college degree, but a full course in some theological seminary. It is also highly desirable that he should have experience in work for men and in athletics. He should be a virile, red-blooded, tactful man, standing four-square and not easily led away by surroundings. He must be a real man and a man's man. Such a man will appeal to officers and enlisted men alike. The Navy desires and will accept only the finest and best equipped men for Chaplains. One enters with the rank of junior lieutenant; after seven years' service he is promoted to lieutenant. After serving not less than eleven years in all, he is promoted to lieutenant commander, and after that, promotion is according to record by selection. At present, the highest rank to be reached is that of Captain, which corresponds to that of Colonel in the Army. Pay and allowance ranges from some $3,000 on entering the service, to $6,000 in its higher ranks.

We urge church leaders to look for and commend young men suitable to this service. We urge qualified young men to consider seriously the opportunity of the Navy Chaplaincy for life investment. (We believe it is a ringing call of God. "Who will go for us and whom shall I send?")

Correspondence is invited either directly with the office of the Chief of Chaplains, Captain Evan W. Scott, Bureau of Navigation, Washington, D. C., or with Rev. E. O. Watson, Secretary, General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, 937 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

INCOGNITO AND ECONOMY.

His article in a recent issue of the Herald was both interesting and amusing. He had a good subject, and this scribe heartily agrees with him in condemning extravagance; but he seems to think his views and practice are the only correct ones. I am glad the brother has attained perfection in the use of money; but he has something to learn about talking on the subject. In defending the right he has given the tightwad great encouragement. I am sorry he never received a larger salary; but that is no reason for striking at the brother who gets a living.

It is true that the preacher who owns a home and a good farm and has two or three special sources of income can travel a work for less than the brother who does not own anything.

Evidently Incognito knows very little, from personal experience, about the present cost of providing one's own conveyance, or he would not set $1,000 as the maximum salary. I, too, believe the budget ought to be raised, but it is ridiculous to rob Peter to pay Paul.

It seems that Incognito has slept through this age of progress, and therefore does not know that the demands have multiplied along all lines.

Let's practice economy, but not at the expense of our fellowman, as I know a great many do.

I have known people to go into a store and hem and haw for a long time over the price of a head of cabbage or some other small article, and then call it economy, but the public has another name for it.

Incognito Number Two.

MOCKING-BIRDS AND CATS.

Tradition has always emphasized the fact that birds fear cats, but if you have ever lived in California, where the mocking-birds are found in great numbers, you will find this old belief completely shattered. For the mocking-bird torments every cat he sees to such an extent that most house pets prefer to remain indoors until nightfall and then do their prowling.

It is really quite an amusing sight if you don't have to listen to the unpleasant cawing which accompanies their war maneuvers. Our pet could not even show herself at the open window where she loved to doze at times but that Mr. Mockingbird would spy her and start pecking at her through the screen. If she dared to venture out on the lawn or porch he would swoop down on her as if to alight on her back, always screeching at the same time, as if wishing to call the attention of other birds to his boldness and prowess. His ungodly cawing as long as pussy remained in sight made him a most unwelcome guest in the neighborhood, and oftentimes would drive our pet to such distraction that she would lie down close to the ground and plaintively meow for mercy. But the mocking-bird is absolutely merciless in his persecution of anything feline, and not until he saw his much-hated enemy enter the house would he become quiet and invisible.

I was informed that the mocking-bird acts this way only while their young are in the nests as a matter of warning to cats to keep away, or while building their nests so that they may line it with soft hair stolen from the cat's unprotected back, but there seems more fiction than truth to this statement for the mocking-birds kept up the foregoing described persecution on our Persian throughout the entire summer. In fact, we even saw how Senior introduced Junior to the gentle are of making life miserable for our pussy. Although we would chase him away innumerable times, he would be back in a minute, for timidity is a quality that the mockingbirds do not possess.—Elsa E. Brocker in Our Dumb Animals.

THE EVERY-MEMBER CANVASS—HOW TO MAKE IT.

Before the every-member canvass is made in any congregation, the plan should have had the endorsement of the official members of the church, and if possible of the congregation itself. There should be first of all, a meeting of the stewards, or board of finance of the church. In many cases it is advisable to call a joint meeting of the stewards and trustees for the purpose of considering the financial affairs of the church, the pastor being present and presiding at the meeting.

A very good presentment is a chart showing the financial record of the church for the past year. This report should show all the details far enough to present a summary from each department, and if the record of each contributor was present it would add to the effectiveness of this financial study.

In many churches, the result of this detailed study should be presented to the next meeting of the congregation, with a recommendation from the board of finance that the every-member canvass plan be adopted by the congregation. After this vote of approval has been secured, either from the board of finance or from the congregation, plans should be made for its introduction.

The Canvassing Committee.

Much will depend upon the selection of this committee. It should be a representative committee, and should include men and women of influence from each of the official boards and from the congregation. Only those upon whom the people look with confidence, and whose leadership they will heartily follow, should be chosen. They should be men of vision, earnestness, and tact, with undaunted perseverance, and who will be spurred by the difficulties in the way to still greater efforts to succeed.

The Supplies.

You will need pledge cards with which to begin the work. These are not expensive, and can be purchased from either of our publishing houses. It will be worth while to secure the official pledge card, rather than to use merely a subscription list, or to secure pledge cards from a local printer. Small explanatory leaflets can also be secured from our publishers and enough should be secured to allow the committee to leave a copy with every member visited. Enough subscription cards should be provided to allow one for each member and contributing friend of the church. The envelopes should also be ordered in advance and should be distributed before the beginning of the fiscal year of the church. The duplex envelopes, with an attractive carton, are worth the additional expense to the church. The envelope is worthy of a more extended discussion than it can be given this week.

The Individual Subscription.

This article is already too long. I will only introduce this section here, and leave it for fuller discussion next week. The success of the whole plan will depend upon the ability of your committee in securing a response from every member of the congregation. The very name of the method itself requires a unanimous response from the membership.

CONFERENCE JOURNALS—NOTICE.

To those who have written me about the Conference Journals I will say that I have had nothing at all to do with the printing of them though they happen to be in the process of making here in Henderson. I simply promised Brother Bates to go over the day the Journals are to be mailed to see that each man gets the correct number and without giving away any of Brother Bates's secrets will say that the printer says that day will not come before some time next week.

THE BETTER PART.

It was evening—a soft, warm evening in Africa. Athwart the sunset sky great flaming pendants flung their fiery length. The mellow light, sifting through the lacy branches of the olive trees, bathed in a ruddy glow the clean and unpretentious buildings of the mission compound. Beyond the mission grounds, clustered in a friendly group, stood the rude thatched huts of the native workers—teachers, hospital assistants, house-boys. They too were caught in the rosy flood, the kindly evening light touching their rough untidiness into a certain picturesque beauty.

Supper was over, and the doctor, who was in charge of the girls' home at the mission, was preparing for her weekly trip to the native villages, which lay scattered here and there, like so many hay-stacks, on top of the hill rising abruptly at the back of the mission station. The doctor was very tired tonight. It had been a hard day, unusually so, it seemed. A feeling of homesickness, of weary depression and discouragement, swept suddenly over her. She longed to stay quietly at home, resting in her simple, cozy room; but there was no one else to go. The people expected her. She sat down a moment to rest, thinking rather impatiently of her long years of service with the mission. She was the only doctor within many miles, and the demands made upon her were numerous and insistent. She was a good doctor, skilled and conscientious. She worked quickly and with careful efficiency. Day by day she went in and out of the squalid huts, chatting with the women, holding fat, naked babies, or eating a roasted yam that the village might not be cursed.

There was the hospital, too. She had had dreams about that in those early years. Dreams of a big hospital, finely equipped, of many doctors and nurses. But the dreams were but memories now. After years of faithful service there was still only the same old hospital, all too small, and she was still the only doctor. She felt oppressed, weighed down. The work seemed far beyond her time or strength. It troubled her, too, to realize that the duties once so loved had become irksome. They were as burdens, dragging at her heart and feet. The joy of service had fled.

Of a sudden a strange, new feeling of rebellion crept into her heart, a feeling almost of resentment toward these trusting, brown-skinned people for whom she had given her life. Did it pay, she wondered irritably, this never ceasing grind? From early morning until often far into the night the days were crowded full, caring for wee babies or their frightened little child-mothers. Medicine, bandages, or a hurried operation. It meant giving, always giving, of her time, her strength, her skill, her very self, to these people. And did they appreciate it? These strange brown people, steeped as they were in weird customs and superstitions, how could they know—for their minds seemed scarcely able to rise to higher heights than a village dance or a sacrificial feast—how could they know how deeply her heart yearned over them?

Wistfully she recalled the protestations of her friends when first they knew her heart was set upon this far-away place. Why must she go to Africa? Stay at home, they urged. In one of the big cities, where life flowed by like an endless mighty river, work would be abundant. Fame, too, would come to her. For ambition's sake they pressed her to seek the populous districts, but she smiled and shook her head.

And so she had gone. She had chosen, she felt, the better part, and she had toiled faithfully through the years. True, she had reaped some fruit—a few had responded and found their way into the fold. But she had had dreams about this, too—this higher work of which the healing of the body is but a symbol. Many brands she had hoped to snatch from the burning, but there had been all too few. There were still so many, so many—and she could do so little. She felt suddenly alone. Who could understand that her dreams had faded, even as the morning stars?

Through the open door came the sound of the girls' voices. "Work, for the night is coming," sang some one cheerily. It roused the doctor from her momentary abstraction. Yes, night was coming, and her work for the day was not finished. She sighed as she rose, and going to the door stood looking thoughtfully out. A little breeze stirred, sheep-bells tinkled, children called. The sounds drifted to her, faint and subdued by distance, seeming to blend and mingle in the still, soft air. It was very quiet, very peaceful. Only the doctor's heart was restless and disturbed.

"Come, girls," she called, with forced briskness. "It's time for our service up on the hill. Who is going with me tonight?"

"Is it not I?" some half-dozen of the girls responded.

The doctor waited a moment in the doorway, idly watching as the evening tasks were completed. Small Ndundu swept the hard, beaten ground with a broom of twigs, until it was as clean and bare as a floor. Here came Njeri with a bundle of wood strapped at her back, for Bibi's morning fire. One of the older girls brought water from the spring, the heavy jar resting easily on her shoulder. She set it down on a bench at the door, the clear cool water splashing out in runnels and puddles at her bare brown feet. Ndundu, her sweeping finished, tugged shyly at the doctor's arm.

"Look, Bibi," she said in her pretty, reed-like voice, "I have the lantern. Shall we not go now?"

The doctor smiled down into the brown, upturned face, and calling the other girls, started off up the path which wound its way up the heavily wooded hillside. The shadowy light of early evening hours hung over the path. Ndundu ran ahead and lighted her lantern. It cast faint pools of yellow light about her feet. Soon, laughing and chatting, the girls reached the hilltop and stopped to wait for the doctor, still trudging along in somewhat moody abstraction some yards behind. Rather pantingly she emerged from the dark, still depths of the forest path. It was much lighter out here on the broad, open hilltop. The doctor stood still a moment to regain her breath, her heart thrilling at the beauty of the dear familiar scene before her. The brief African twilight was fast fading. A soft, rosy glow filtered through the trees and fell over her in a shaft of light. A little wind shook the olive branches above her, and over all were the gold-tipped, sunset clouds, looking down in utter peace upon the great Kidong

Valley spread out in dim and ethereal glory at her feet. Faintly from far-away villages came the beating of drums, children's shrill voices, the tinkling sheep-bells. The air was filled with the brooding quiet of ended day, but in the doctor's heart was that growing unrest and discontent, engulfing her like a wall of fog.

She was recalled by the sound of singing, for the girls had gone on ahead, and stopping in one of the nearby huts, had themselves begun the simple service. Guided by their voices the doctor joined them and sat down on a stool by the door-way, that she might escape the heat and smoke of the close, crowded hut. The low doorway formed the only opening. Smoke from a small, smudgy fire, built in the middle of the mud floor, filled the air and floated upward to seep slowly through the heavily thatched roof. Huddled closely about the fire sat twenty or more women, their brown, satiny skin shining in the flickering, uncertain light. The copper bracelets on their arms gleamed and glinted. Long strings of tiny beads twinkled gently from their ears. Behind the women, almost hidden in the deep shadows, sat Ndundu, her keen eyes watching the movements of one of the women who seemed restless and uneasy.

Suddenly a stick broke and a flame of fire-light flashed out. For a brief moment the gloom lifted, the dim corners were faintly revealed. Ndundu, alert and watchful, fancied she saw something move over on the darkest side of the hut. The woman also started and talking now, telling again the new-old story, though her heart was still burdened and heavy. Preoccupied, she did not notice Ndundu, or the odd restless movements of the woman.

Soon the short service was ended and the doctor and the girls went outside. All but Ndundu. Too well she knew the methods and customs of her own people. Going quickly to the fire she seized a burning stick, and using it at a torch to light her way, she walked boldly about peering into the dark shadows of the hut. In vain the woman assured her nothing was there. Ndundu was not satisfied. Holding aloft her fire-brand and looking carefully into every dark place, she found at last the object of her search. Ah! Just as she thought! A child—a little girl!

She was huddled away under one of the rude beds, Ndundu's torch showing frightened eyes staring out of a small, pinched face. For a moment the hut seemed turned to stone. A half-dozen of the women still lingered by the fire, motionless, expectant. The woman who had tried to keep secret the child's presence flung out her arms, awaiting too the releasing moment of arousal. Ndundu went quickly to the door and called the doctor. The women at once fled outside, breathless with quick, cold fear.

"It is wickedness," they said. "Should she not be let alone? Surely, this village will bite off great bitterness."

The doctor brushed swiftly past the frightened, chattering women. Stooping down to enter the low doorway she called to the child to come out by the fire.

"Come out," she said. "You need not fear. Tell me, what are you called?"

"Gathinji," the child answered, timidly.

"Come out, Gathinji," the doctor urged gently. "Come out by the fire. See, we are alone, and my eyes are not able to see you in this darkness."

The child peered cautiously out from her hiding-place, and seeing only the doctor's kindly face she slowly ventured into the room. The doctor gasped and stared in amazement. The child's slender body was naked, unwashed. She could not walk, but crawled along, haltingly, to the doctor's feet. Like a broken flower she lay upon the floor, gazing steadily with apprehensive eyes into the understanding eyes of the doctor. The last glow from the waning fire fell upon the brown, delicate face. She trembled, and the doctor in great pity stooped and touched her shoulder. Instantly from without came a scurrying of bare feet, a cry of alarm.

"Ah, Bibi, do not touch her. The evil spirits!"

"Be quiet," said the doctor, lifting her voice a little. "I am not afraid."

She turned again to the child, smiling down into the frightened face. She wondered for a moment what might be the best thing to do. It was impossible to do anything for Gathinji there. The hut was dark and hot and smoky. She would come again in the morning. Still, her doctor's heart felt reluctant to leave the child here, so apparently alone and neglected. So she called the girls and sent them back to the station for a stretcher. Gathinji should be taken to the hospital, she explained. A few women still waited about, curious and half afraid. The doctor questioned them.

"Is it not the affair of the evil spirit?" said one of the women.

"Is she your child?" asked the doctor.

"Oh, no, she is the child of another." It was the woman who had tried to hide Gathinji who was explaining. "Her people moved away and because Gathinji could not walk they left her on the path to die."

"Did they live near?" the doctor asked again.

"Yes, over there." The woman indicated the direction by a forward thrust of her chin.

"How is it that she is here in your village?" The doctor went on with her questions.

"Is it not because I greeted her?" the woman responded simply. "On my way to the gardens I saw her. It was very early. No one had been on the path before me. I greeted her. And at night she was here."

To the woman this explanation was evidently sufficient. But the weird ways and customs of these people are legion. Puzzled, the doctor asked again.

"But why did she come all the way to your village? There are other villages nearer the big path than this one."

"Ah," said the woman. "The white doctor does not understand. It was I who greeted her first. I could not send her away. Is it not the affair of the evil spirit in her body? If I had sent her away our village would have been cursed, or perhaps the evil spirit would have left her and gone into one of our own children. Truly, Bibi, the ways of the evil spirit are bad with much badness. Is not the white doctor afraid?"

"No, no," the doctor answered quickly. "Why should I be afraid? Have I not told you in the Jesus thinking there is no fear?"

"Well," said the woman, wholly unconvinced, "the white doctor does not need to be afraid. She is able to drive out the evil spirit."

The doctor shook her head impatiently. How like these people! How bound they were by the iron chains of ignorance and superstition! She recalled now that age-old custom, spanning as it were the distant years. Fear of the evil spirit had made of the child a friendless, homeless outcast. But even so bad that same fear given forced shelter to an unwelcome guest. They would not touch her. Ah, no! To do that would mean long weeks of purification, the sacrificing of precious sheep. A bit of food had been pushed toward her now and then, a gourd of water left near by. But never had any one touched her or tried to ease her pain.

In the simple service that evening the doctor had tried to explain the difference between the "foreign-born faith" and the fearful exacting worship of these superstitious people. The way of the Jesus thinking was one of love. The way of the evil spirits was hate. The God of the foreign-born faith loved men and women alike. He loved even little sick babies that mothers would throw away. Very carefully and simply she had explained it, but it almost seemed that these people were incapable of understanding. Her work seemed useless, wasted.

Moodily she gazed out into the night. It was dark and cool. Stars shone. In the dim light she could see the scattered villages. Faint odors of roasting corn and yams stole out from the depths of the huts about her. All around her was Africa, its very essence and sound and smell; its people, bound still by the primeval bondage of the land, afraid of a little child who was sick and lame! A sudden bitterness clutched at her heart. Then, as if some desire deep within her woke to sudden life, she spoke aloud, softly, yet with an intensity that shook her voice:

"Lord of heaven, I am tired, tired. Thou knowest my heart—I would serve Thee. Renew my strength, my joy. Send me a sign. O Thou that rulest all things, hear me!"

The tense shaken voice faltered, stopped. The women stood by, hushed by the passionate tones, though the words they could not understand. Down the path at the edge of the village a lantern glimmered, and there was the soft spat of bare feet on the beaten path. The boys from the station had come, bearing the stretcher. In their hearts was the love and trust of the foreign-born faith and they had no fear of Gathinji or of evil spirits. Amazedly the women watched while Gathinji was quickly and gently placed upon the stretcher and borne away to the hospital.

The days that followed were filled with strange new experiences for Gathinji. Carefully she had been washed, the matted hair cut, and a fresh clean gown of un-bleached muslin slipped over the thin brown shoulders. Sitting up on her cot she ate her morning rice or roasted yam, her heart filled with wonderment that these people would come near her, would touch her, would even wait upon her! The ways of the Jesus thinking people were strange indeed but very pleasant. The sun streamed in through the high windows and open door. It lay upon the bare board floor in roses and sunflowers of pink and gold. The native assistants came and went, moving softly through the sun splashed room. Gathinji watched them idly, the thoughts of her heart all warm and mixed and confused. She was very happy.

The doctor came each morning, making the round of her native patients. She stopped always at Gathinji's cot, smiling down upon her, glad to see that in the eyes raised to hers all fear had fled. To Gathinji all the brightness of the sun-warmed day seemed caught and imprisoned in the doctor's face. She could not know that behind the smiling eyes and cheerful service the light in the doctor's soul burned low and fitfully. Her own heart was filled with a wondering gratitude—a joy she but dimly understood. Never before had there been any joy in her life. Never before had any one come near her. Even her own mother had been afraid of her. Always she had been hustled out of the way, huddling herself into some far dark corner. Now out of the chaos of her childish years had come rest and happiness. It seemed very new, very strange, and quite impossible.

"Is it permitted to a little girl to worship the God of the foreign-born faith?" she timidly asked the doctor one morning.

"It is permitted to all," the doctor assured her. "He loves all alike. Truly, His heart is still more loving than the heart of a mother. Come, will you not believe the Jesus way?"

A brief moment she hesitated. A sudden deep yearning for this friendless waif swept the doctor's heart. She waited, tense. If she could lead this child to the matchless Friend—

"I am very fearful." Gathinji gazed out into the warm sunshine. Around her lay all the old familiar things and her heart clung to them, for she was only a child. She felt timid in stepping out into this new and unknown land. The doctor sighed. After all, was it any use?

The days slipped quickly by. Gathinji was better now. She could even walk, with the help of two sticks, over the narrow beaten paths. She no longer needed the doctor's daily care so she had left the hospital and was living at the girls' home. She loved it here. She loved her small daily tasks, the gay companionship, but she was shy and timid and hid her happiness, folding it away within her own happy heart.

One Sunday morning the sweet glad story of good tidings had been told once more in the mission chapel. The rows of benches were filled with silent dusky worshippers. Children sprawled on the floor. On a table stood a jar filled with ferns and starry jessamine. The sunlight streamed into the little chapel through an open window, shining upon the brown skins of the people and mottling the floor with gorgeous, flower-like splashes. A brooding spirit of peace hung over the waiting throng. The invitation had been given—was there any one who wanted to know the "affairs of God and to walk in His path?" The place was very quiet and peaceful. It seemed flooded and filled with an all-pervading sense of love. Still, no one stirred, and the messenger quietly waited.

The doctor grew uneasy. Into her heart crept the old feeling of resentment. Would no one respond to such an appeal? Such people!

A BRIEF REVIEW.

In behalf of the Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration I extend best thanks to our pastors and members for their cordial co-operation in carrying on the foreign missionary work of our church, and tender heartfelt good wishes for a most prosperous New Year.

The year now drawing rapidly to a close has been marked by the coming to America of missionaries on furlough, and the return of some to their field, and the addition of nine new missionaries to the three missions in Japan, China and India.

The disastrous effects of the great Japan earthquake of September 1, 1923, have been overcome to a large extent by the gifts of our people, so far as replacing the church's destroyed and damaged properties are concerned, but all losses have not been met, and additional gifts will be welcomed.

The splendid gifts of the Nagoya College students and friends, amounting to Yen 50,000, have been applied to the erection of two large wings to the main building, and the center tower erected by the board, and improvements on the second main building, etc., have added greatly to the appearances which have been enhanced by the painting of nearly all of the buildings.

But we regret exceedingly that the board has not been able to comply with its agreement to build the church for the religious work of the institution, whose enrollment has passed the 1100 mark, and we are appealing most earnestly to all subscribers to the fund raised for this purpose at the General Conference in Tiffin, O., to please send the amounts promised to Treasurer Staley as soon as possible.

The work of the Japan Mission Conference has gone on steadily, another church became self-supporting, and the First Church, Yokohama, having suffered greatly by the earthquake, is putting forth strong efforts to regain self-support.

Rev. Paul F. Warner is scheduled to reach Japan by the time this is read, and he will be heartily welcomed.

Dr. C. S. Heininger's return from China on furlough left only Rev. C. G. Soderbom to care for the Boys' School, and the work of the mission conference, but another small building has been built, for the school which is flourishing, and the work at the outstations, etc., is doing well.

Dr. Roberta Fleagle has been greatly burdened with the care of the Girls' School, besides her medical work, owing to the breaking down of Mrs. Hines.

Miss Maude Lawson of our Newark, N. J., church, is at the Peking Language school, as is also Mr. Horace S. Williams, son of Rev. Dr. J. C. Williams, president of our Ohio Conference, two important additions to the China Mission, Miss Lawson being for the evangelistic work, and Brother Williams for the Boys' School.

The India Mission has had its working corps increased by the arrival of five new missionaries, including Miss Perley, trained nurse for the medical work at the hospital on the Girls' School compound, and Rev. and Mrs. Paul M. Cassen.

The completion of the hospital and the sending out of equipment supplies, the building of a school building for Boys' School, progress at the settlement, the better organization of the work outside of Dhulia in the development of the mission conference, with growth of the two schools are encouraging features.

The Union Board is administering the work as economically as possible, and confidently expects the continued and increasing support of all pastors and members, for it is the one work of our church, and for the success of all its enterprises each of us has assumed solemn vows at its altars.

THE NEW YEAR TREE.

It had been the custom in the Elliott family to strip the Christmas tree on New Year's morning and to put away all the Christmas decorations for the next year. For three years Robert, who was now eleven, had been the one to climb up on the stepladder and hand down the high-up trimmings, while nine-year-old Tom wrapped the things up and put them into boxes. Then, when the branches were bare, the tree was thrown from the nearest window, and carried to the trash pile in the back yard.

This particular New Year's Day the plan was changed, because Elizabeth had been ill for a long time and was not able to do her share. However, she was well enough to watch the others from a big chair and help out just a little with a word now and then. As for work, she could only sort the gay beads and wrap a few of the things, but she was happy to do even that.

When the tree was finally stripped, Robert and Tom dragged it to the window and threw it out into the snow.

"It doesn't look like the tree we had a week ago, does it?" said Robert. Indeed, it did not. Then it had been fresh and green and had smelled of the woods; now the branches were bare and the whole tree looked dingy.

"Let's ask mother if we can't make a bonfire of it," suggested Tom.

"Oh, no, boys!" Elizabeth exclaimed, with a shiver. "That would seem like burning up Christmas! If you don't want to put it on the trash pile, why don't you play with it? I should think that would be fun."

"Fun to play with that bare thing?" Robert rejoined scornfully. "What could we do with it?"

"With the Christmas tree?" asked Mrs. Elliott, who came into the room just then. "I have a plan, but I don't intend to tell it till the last minute. Come, boys, put on your sweaters and mittens and set the tree up in the back yard."

Robert hesitated. "Elizabeth can't go outdoors," he said. "I wish she could play with us sometimes!"

"She's going to play with you this time," said Mrs. Elliott. "She's an important part of this plan. You run along and do your share, and Elizabeth and I will do ours."

The boys lost no time after that; they knew something jolly was on hand. When they had dragged the tree to the yard they set it upright and began to brace it with planks.

As soon as they left the room, Mrs. Elliott brought four boxes to Elizabeth's chair, and four trays filled with the most curious-looking things the little girl had ever seen.

"Why, mother!" she exclaimed. "What in the world is this?"

"Sh-h!" said Mrs. Elliott. "We'll have to work very fast, because the boys will be back in a jiffy. Put everything into the boxes as quickly as you can. Fill each box with the contents of one tray. Then I'll cover the boxes and tie them up."

Elizabeth went to work without another word, and just as the cover was tied on the last box the boys came rushing into the room.

"The tree's up!" exclaimed Robert. "What next?"

"Next, you each choose two boxes," Mrs. Elliott replied. "First you take one, then Tom; then you again, and Tom takes the last."

"But what's in the boxes?" asked Tom. "Wait and see!"

"You'll like it," added Elizabeth, although she was almost as much in the dark as he. "Hurry and choose."

"I'll take the little round one," said Robert. "The best goods come in the smallest packages, I've always heard."

"I'll take the long, slim one," Tom declared.

"Then I'll take the square one," Robert reached for his second choice.

"That leaves me the flat one, and I wanted it, anyway," said his brother. "Now, may we open them?"

Elizabeth nodded, and they pulled off the covers in a hurry. The boys' faces looked blank, and Elizabeth's somewhat puzzled.

"What's all this?" Robert asked in a disappointed voice.

"Why, mother!" cried Tom. "What can we do with these things?"

"Trim a tree for somebody," replied Mrs. Elliott. "Can't you guess who it will be?"

The children thought a minute. "Oh, I know!" Elizabeth broke in, her eyes shining. "The birds! It will be fun! See, Robert, you have suet in your box. Bits of that will do for the small ornaments."

"And Tom has pieces of apple, strings of pop corn," Robert added; "and here are bread crumbs to take the place of beads."

They took up their boxes and started out. "I wish Elizabeth could see us trim the tree," said Tom, pausing at the door.

"She's going to," replied Mrs. Elliott. "Robert, you take one arm of her chair and I'll take the other and we'll carry her to the window of the back room. Then you boys get to work, and your sister will watch you."

It was not long before that back-yard, left-over Christmas tree was so trimmed up that it would hardly have known itself. Bits of white suet ornamented the twigs, and ropes of white pop corn and festoons of bread crumbs hung from branch to branch.

Scarcely had the boys finished and joined Elizabeth at the upstairs window before a little bird—one of a flock that had quickly gathered—ventured down for a taste. Evidently he was satisfied, since he stayed for more. Presently his friends, seeing him feasting so happily, came flying down for their part.

"I think that's as much fun as a tree indoors," said Elizabeth happily. "But won't they eat every single thing before night?"

"Never mind about that," laughed Robert. "Tom and I will retrim it every day if you and mother will furnish the trimmings."

"That's a bargain," said Elizabeth. "I love to string things. And there'll be no more hungry birds in our back yard! We'll call it our New Year's tree and keep it trimmed as long as the snow covers the ground."

After that year the Elliott Christmas tree never failed to do doubt duty.—Clara Ingram Judson, in The Youth's Companion.

FATHER'S BAG.

"My father's bag?" asked Jimsy, stretching his overalled length lazily in the fragrant summer grass. "If course my father brings a bag when he comes, week-ends. Brown leather—looks sort of kicked in. He's had it a long time, I s'pose. Why?"

"I didn't mean, what does it look like outside," explained Billy, idly stroking the back of a beetle with a wisp of grass. "I mean, is there always something inside?"

"Why, of course, or he wouldn't bring it. Would he?" Jimsy's voice sounded the scorn of a logician. "What things? My goodness, what funny questions you do ask! Collars, I s'pose, and brushes and a comb, and maybe socks for mother to darn—I don't know. Oh, yes, and newspapers. Always lots of newspapers stuffed in. Why?"

"Oh, I don't mean those things," said Billy, blocking the beetle's progress with a stone. "When does he open it? Is your father coming up today on the same train that my father is, or on the last one?"

"Same train," yawned Jimsy, his eyes on sleepy white clouds sailing in a blue sea high above the green treetops. "When does he open it? My goodness, Billy, what makes you ask such funny questions, anyway? How do I know what minute he opens it?"

"I know the minute my father opens his," insisted Billy. "He dumps it on the piazza when he comes, and it's stuffed out fat—fat's a—fat's a Thanksgiving turkey. My father's bag never looks a bit kicked in; the leather's always stretched as tight as a drum. And I poke it, but he just laughs and says, 'No, not till after dinner—not a peek!'"

"Why? What's in it?" asked Jimsy, carelessly.

"Thank goodness it's dinner-time when my father gets here," went on Billy, forgetting his beetle, and spreading a broad grass-blade between thumb and finger, preparatory to a screeching whistle. "Guess the train's just leaving Boston now, don't you think so?"

"'Bout half-way to Lowell," decreed Jimsy, squinting an eye at the sun as if he could tell accurate time by it. "But what's in your father's bag? Doesn't he bring collars and newspapers?"

"Guess so," said Billy, indifferently. "Never noticed much—'cause there's so much else for everybody."

"For everybody? What?" demanded Jimsy, his interest at last awakened.

"Why, s'prises, of course," said Billy. "Guess you'd be s'prised if your father handed you a flat box and you opened it and found the Scout cooking-kit you'd been saving for, yourself."

"Guess I would!" agreed Jimsy.

"Well, I was," said Billy. "We've cooked supper with it three times already down by the river-bed. Best bacon! Um-m!"

"He doesn't bring you a s'prise every single week-end?" Jimsy's eyes were as incredulous as his voice.

"Not just for me—for everybody," said Billy. "Week he brought my cooking-kit he brought mother a box of peppermints, 'stead of a book. Most usually he brings mother a book, but she likes peppermints as well as I do—she says so. And that time he brought Alice a little box of Japanaese flowers. When you open the box they don't look like flowers at all, they look like little pieces of sticks green and red, but when you put them in water, they open into flowers and leaves—tiny bits of ones—on stems."

"But he gave you a cooking-kit. Did Alice cry?"

"Cry? Course not. Why? Oh, I know what you mean, but that doesn't matter anyway. One week he brought Alice a doll, a pretty big one, new kind that floats, with a real bathing suit that you can take off and hang on the bushes to dry. We swim her—I mean Alice swims her—in the duck-pond. Course I go along, so if she floats out too far I can pole her in."

"What did he bring you that week?"

"Just a little puzzle, little metal pieces; you make a square of them. Get them at the five-and-ten," said Billy contentedly. Then, looking up, he answered the surprise plainly written on Jimsy's face by saying: "But there's always something that's fun. Doesn't have to cost much to be fun, my father says."

"Then you had all the money you'd saved up toward your Scout kit for something else? Anything you wanted?" questioned Jimsy.

"'Course," said Billy, joyously. "I've spent forty cents of it already."

"What for?"

"Well," said Billy, magnificently, "I thought my father was pretty good to give me that Scout kit, and the next week Mr. Brown—you know, the farmer we're staying with—let me ride to Bristol with him, and I saw some neckties in a window, marked twenty-five cents—pretty ones, stripes—and I bought one for my father—yellow and green."

"You did!" Jimsy sat erect. "Did he like it?"

"Like it?" Billy's eyes shone. "He said it was different from any necktie he'd ever had and he liked it the best. He said he hated to wear it out in the city where we couldn't see it, and so he keeps it here, and he wears it every week-end, all the time he's here. And that day I got my mother a little bag of peppermints and Alice a five-cent bag of peanuts. Alice likes peanuts better'n a chip-munk."

"What'd you get yourself that day?"

Billy also sat erect and looked startled. "Why, I never thought about it till this minute, but I didn't get a thing. I was thinking all the time about the money I didn't have to spend for my Scout kit. It's fun to have money, isn't it?" he sighed.

"Guess it is!" agreed Jimsy. "I get twenty-five cents a week, do you?"

"So do I. Some boys get only ten cents. You can do a lot with twenty-five."

"Did your father always do it? Bring you things every single time he comes, I mean?" asked Jimsy, after a thoughtful pause.

"Course," said Billy. "Always. I don't mean we 's'pect them, 'zactly, but they're always there! He says he gets twice as much fun out of it as we do! Don't fathers make funny jokes?"

"Yes," said Jimsy, slowly.

"Here comes Mr. Brown," said Billy, suddenly, "I'm going to ride home with him. Oh, Jimsy!" he stopped to call back, "if you can, come down to the river-bed tomorrow for supper—'bout six! Think your mother'd let you? We'll be going down—my father wrote he can't wait to taste the bacon I fry!"

"Come if I can," answered Jimsy, a little listlessly.

The next afternoon Jimsy fled down the river-path, crashed through the underbrush, and dashed up to Billy, who with his family was kindling a small fire to leeward of a large boulder. "Billy, look!" he shouted breathlessly, diving into his pocket and flourishing a fine size jack-knife under Billy's nose.

"Scout knife!" shouted Billy. "How many blades? Yes, sir, every one—where?"

"My father came yesterday, you know," began Jimmy, casually, though he was radiating happiness from every pore, "and after dinner he opened his bag"—

"Other fathers have bags, then, too!" said Billy's mother, happily.

"Why, you didn't say yesterday," began Billy.

"Well," said Jimsy, snapping blades open and shue, "he just hadn't thought 'bout it, that's all, or he would have—always, like your father. And last week he came up on the same train with your father, too, and I 'xpect they got to talking"—

"Talking!" said Billy's father. "I guess maybe two bags got to talking under the seat. Come here, both of you, and tend this fire."

"Is that the necktie Billy gave you?" asked Jimsy with great interest.

"It is," said Billy's father, gravely, "and my proudest possession. I wouldn't have a spark light on it for worlds."

"My father says," said Jimsy with beaming face, "that he's going to increase my allowance to thirty cents a week. He thought of it all himself. Course I didn't ask. I want to buy him a necktie, too. Think he'll like it as much as you like this one Billy gave you?"

"He will, I can speak for him," said Billy's father, decidedly.

And mother sang suddenly and unexpectedly, "Hurrah for all fathers' bags!"—Rose Brooks, in Zion's Herald.

"GOD AND I WILL NEVER GIVE YOU UP."

She was one of the worst women with whom the ladies of a certain church in lower New York had ever had to deal. She had sunk to the point where she begged money of the church only to spend it in the nearest saloon.

Finally, in answer to one of her appeals for money, the spokesman for the Women's Society said, "No, Maggie, we can do no more for you. The women of this society have given you up."

A young man, Walter G—— by name, who was a worker at the settlement connected with the church, overheard the closing remark, and as Maggie turned away he said, "Yes, Maggie, the women of the society have given you up, but God and I will never give you up."

She passed out into the welter of slum life, and it seemed as if oblivion had swallowed her, for no one heard of her again for years.

Meanwhile the young man who had said that he would never give her up had died of a disease that he contracted while nursing a human wreck. Some account of his dramatic career, together with a picture of him, appeared in one of the New York papers.

Two years more slipped by; then one Sunday evening the minister of the church was shaking hands with the congregation as they filed out after service, when he noticed a woman standing off at a distance and weeping convulsively. When all had gone he looked at her more intently. A faint shadow of recollection crossed his mind as he scrutinized her face more closely. Then as she approached him he saw that she was Maggie; yet not the old Maggie of a few years ago, but a new Maggie of redeemed womanhood.

Maggie opened the conversation. "Doctor B——," she said, "you remember that some years ago the women of this church told me that they had given me up? Walter G—— said to me that he and God would never give me up. I saw the account of his death in the paper, and I cut his picture out and had this medallion made from it. I worked two years scrubbing offices before and after hours to save money enough to have it made. It has kept me straight ever since. But I want you to take it now for fear that, if it should be found in my possession, it might bring reproach on his name. When you preach, you might sometimes tell the people that what saved Maggie D—— was Walter G——'s saying to her, 'Maggie, the women of this church have given you up, but God and I will never give you up.'"—Youth's Companion.

AMERICA'S DEADLIEST DANGER.

It is the menace of materialism, and it comprehends the misuse and abuse of all the temporal blessings that God has so richly showered upon us. The most searching testing time of a nation, as of an individual, is not adversity, but prosperity. It is the smooth ice upon which we slip. So long as people are fighting their early battles, and struggling against difficulties and dangers, they progress, for the very effort to win against such odds develops fortitude and constancy, and strengthens mental and moral fiber. But when the time of affluence and wealth and ease has come, then come temptations to effeminacy and self-indulgence. Our country is at this point today. Our forefathers came here with high ambitions and resolute purpose. They faced the hardships of the wilderness and battled against the dangers of wild beasts and ferocious savages, and they were undaunted by these things. They put their axes upon their shoulders and marched out into the virgin forests and built their homes and their independence by their own sturdy hands. Thus they journeyed further and further West, until the Pacific was reached, and a continent was transformed from native wilderness into the abode of culture and civilization.

This achievement was one of the miracles of history. We glory in it, but we are living now upon the strength of body, mind and heart which was developed in our forebears and passed on to their descendants by these efforts. And now we need to ask ourselves what the next generation will be. Will it remain loyal to the precepts and principles that made the past great, or will it surrender to the forces of materialism? We have come into a time of ease and comfort, when every luxury lures us to soft living, and when manifold temptations beset the pathway of life. Above all, we have made money so fast in America that we are threatened by the domination of the great god, Mammon. Money is a good servant but a bad master, and this truth our people need to take to heart.—Christian Herald.

THE DISCIPLINE OF LOVE.

"A number of years ago a young thief was caught in the act of committing burglary in the home of Edward Everett Hale in Roxbury. Many believed that Dr. Hale, so well known for his love of mankind, would not appear against him. But, on the contrary, Dr. Hale took an active part in having the burglar committed to the reformatory. He believed that the law ought to take its course, and he testified against the prisoner himself, so that the thief was sent to the reformatory for three years.

"But though Dr. Hale upheld the law, he did not any the less fail to care for the youthful criminal. Busy as he was, he took time every week, during the three years, to write personally to the thief, trying to wake up his self-respect and stimulate his courage. When the time was up he had secured a good position for the former law-breaker. The young burglar, who had come to regard him as his truest friend, went into the new position, proved himself worthy of it, and became a useful, honest, self-respecting man. A weak mercy might have let him slip back into crime. A loving justice saved him.

"It would have been far easier for Dr. Hale to have let him go at first. It would have saved the trouble of thinking about him and planning for him during the three years. It would also have seemed more kind to many unthinking people. There is a great deal of so-called 'kindness' in the world today along just such labor-saving lines. To love our fellowmen actively and wisely is a great comparison. But it is the sort of love that is the fulfilling of the law that pays—pays just because it costs."—Wellspring.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE. The Human Tree.

Text: "Let it alone this year also." Luke 13:8.

A fig-tree was planted in a vineyard, a choice bit of ground. It was protected by its walls. No tree had a better chance to make good. But for three years it bore no fruit. It may be the ground was too rich. The owner was inclined to cut it down. The vinedresser pleaded for another year of grace. "Let it alone this year also." Every human being is like a tree, bearing either good or bad fruit. Every saved man is like this fig-tree, planted in the vineyard of the church of God. The Psalmist speaks of him as "a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season." "He shall flourish like the palm tree; he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon." The prophet Isaiah speaks of believers in Christ as "trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord."

The tree is planted to bear fruit. The Christian is planted in Christ to bear fruit for the betterment of mankind and for the glory of God. The Christian is expected to bear three kinds of fruit, the fruit of faith, the fruit of righteousness, and the fruit of love.

Let us note first

The Fruit of Faith.

The fruit of faith is transformation into the image and likeness of Christ. Faith in prayer appropriates and feeds upon the bread of life. The child of God thereby grows in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faith sees Christ through the mirror of the Holy Scriptures, and transmits His likeness to the soul. "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

Another fruit of faith is triumph in temptation. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Faith invests the soldier of the Cross with the helmet of salvation, the breastplate of righteousness, and the preparation of the gospel of peace. Faith grips the shield of defense. Faith wields the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. And faith puts to flight the armies of the aliens.

Still another fruit of faith is peace and joy. It is the peace that passeth understanding; and it is the joy unpeakable and full of glory. The blessedness pledged in the beatitudes is realized only through the exercise of faith. "Be glad in the Lord and rejoice, ye righteous," for the fountain of living waters is also a fountain of everlasting joy. Happy is the man who puts his trust in the Lord.

The man whose heart the Lord has touched is expected to bear also

The Fruit of Righteousness.

Character is the all-important product of righteousness, the threefold product of thinking right, speaking right, and doing right. Character is the manifestation of a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men. It is the jewel of wisdom, more precious than rubies, more desirable than gold, and more enduring than the everlasting hills. It is the only accomplishment of man that he takes with him into the world to come. "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still."

Reputation is another fruit of righteousness. The esteem of fellow-mankind is a most valuable asset in the battle of life. To be well thought of by neighbors and acquaintances goes a long way in attaining success in any line of activity.

Another product of righteousness is influence. This is a powerful factor in doing good. In fact, influence is the power behind a good deed that makes it acceptable and effective. And a good influence never dies. It lives on and dispenses blessing after the soul has gone to its reward.

In the third place the human tree must bear

The Fruit of Love.

This is Christian service. And loving service may operate along three lines. There are the hungry, the sick, and the orphan that appeal to all who have the love of Christ. There are ignorant and unenlightened people all over the world who are perishing without hope. They must have the light of the gospel of the Son of God. And there are the lost who know better than they do. They must be rescued from sin, failure, and everlasting punishment. This is the task of all who are animated by "the love of Christ that passeth knowledge."

Another year of golden opportunity is upon us. Shall it be the old year of neglect and failure lived over again? Or, shall it be a really new year of larger faith, more consistent conduct, and deeper consecration to duty? Have you been a barren tree through the years forever gone? To you the Master of destinies is saying, "Let him alone this year also. Give him another chance." And this may be the last chance, the closing year of life's opportunity. Let us make the most of this year,—a priceless jewel extended to us by the Hand of Love. Make it a year of prayer and soul-enrichment. Make it a year of character-building. And make it a year of winning souls from sin.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JAN. 4.

Christ's Triumphant Entry.

Lesson Text: Luke 19: 29-40.

Golden Text: Luke 19: 38.

The Central Truth: The King of kings and Lord of lords stands in supreme and anxious need of loyal subjects to grace His final entry into "the city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

Scriptural Points.

1. Jesus' triumphal entry seems to be a mere formal fulfilment of prophecy. It was more than that. It was in itself a faint prophecy of His grand entrance at His second coming, when He shall be accompanied by ten thousand of His saints and all the holy angels. It was also a declaration of His right to a world-wide, universal Kingdom.

2. Though He had not where to lay His head, He now asserted His real ownership of this world and all its contents. He sent two of His disciples to fetch the colt as if it was His own. And if the under-owner, or any one else, should question their right to take away the colt, they were to reply that the Master, the Owner of all the worlds, had need of him.

3. The omniscience of Jesus is here displayed in saying that the colt would be found tied at a particular place.

4. "The Lord hath need of him." Creation and providence are not needless and futile displays of power and care. God has made all things for Himself, for His self-satisfaction, for His service, and for His glory. In this age of redemption the Master has a peculiar and insistent need of all things.

5. "And they brought him to Jesus." No gift is complete till it is actually turned over to Jesus. Formal and make-believe giving is all too common. Jesus was put in actual possession of the colt.

6. "They set Jesus thereon." This was preliminary to the unusual coronation. It was a plain declaration that Jesus was the King of the Jews. It is significant that this was the official offense for which He was crucified.

7. A frenzy of joy now seized the multitude that followed Jesus from Galilee and Perea. Some spread their outer garments along the way. Others broke off twigs or small branches and scattered them on the road. All shouted hosannas to the King of Israel. Extravagant ascriptions of praise, honor, and glory were bestowed upon "the King that cometh in the name of the Lord." Evidently there was more or less a lack of sincerity in all this celebration. For a few days after many of this frenzied crowd cried, "Crucify him, crucify him."

8. The Pharisees were displeased, as usual. They were insanely jealous of any honors that came to Jesus. They looked upon this entire scene as a grievous and dangerous affront to the Roman emperor. If this king-making business should be persisted in too far, the Roman authorities might take steps to suppress it by a wholesale slaughter.

9. Jesus claimed that He was entitled to these ascriptions of praise, and that He would eventually get all that was due Him, even if the stones might be given tongues and power of speech to pay this holy debt.

Practical Points.

1. The right of Jesus to rule has been questioned by the unthinking and the unbelieving. They are saying, "We will not have this man to rule over us." They enthroned the god of this world in the place of Jesus. And they invite inevitable and eternal retribution by so doing.

2. Jesus actually does reign in every trustful and loyal heart and life. "The kingdom of God is within you." "Christ in you the hope of glory." And He dwells in our hearts by faith.

3. Jesus needs you as truly as you need Him. You need His full salvation. He needs your best service. You need His power to live a life above sin and the world. He needs your enlistment to rescue those for whom He died. You need the many mansions that He is building. He needs you to glorify Him forever.

4. "Praise is comely." Nothing is so appealing to the ears of the Lord of glory as genuine and unceasing praise. Therefore, "Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name."

5. The chief wealth of a king is not his wide territory, nor the mines, manufacturies, or bankstocks. But his loyal subjects are worth the most to him. The true servant of our King of kings are worth more to Him than all His universe besides.—Word of Life.

A Christian Endeavor Social.

The members of Mt. Pleasant Young People's Christian Endeavor society were delightfully entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Stafford Saturday evening, December 27.

The guests arrived about seven o'clock, after which many interesting and amusing games were played. In the doll contest, which was directed by Miss Miriam Spoon, the winner was Coley Shoffner.

When games had been played for a considerable length of time, the party was invited to the dining room, where hot chocolate, cake, raisins, candies, and apples were served.

Those present were: Misses Grace and Edna Coley, Miriam Spoon, Pearle Staley, Jeanette Bowman, Lillian Shoffner, Josie Amick, Vallie, Minnie, and Nettie Bowman, Lalah, Ila and Ola Stafford, Hettie Lineberry, Edith Causey, Mrs. H. Floyd Amick, and Messrs. Condon and Raymond Coley, Clayton Greeson, Guy Alexander, Seymour, William and Talton Stafford, Colon Staley, Enos and Gordon Causey, H. Floyd Amick, Clemon Lineberry, Boone Ferguson, Coley Shoffner, and Andrews.

The haughty feet of power shall fail

Where meekness surely goes;
No cunning find the key of heaven,
No strength its gates unclose.

Alone to guilelessness and love

Those gates shall open fall;
The mind of pride is nothingness,
The childlike heart is all.

THEIR HAPPIEST CHRISTMAS.

Mrs. Flaherty called Tommy and Johnny to her side, saying, "Children, it will soon be Christmas but with your poor dear father still overseas, I don't know what to be doin' for presents!"

Before Johnny had time even to rub his tousled red head and open his wide blue eyes Tommy answered, "Now don't yer be after worryin', Mother. Johnny an' I'd rather yar made more socks to send over to Father than to spend a cent on us! We can have a foine dinner an'—an' play games an' be glad we're not the Belgian children an'—"

Here Tommy was interrupted by Johnny, who squealed, "So long's I get a horn an' Johnny a drum we don't care a-tall! We can make as much noise as if we had all sorts of things! Nobody'll ever know the difference!"

Mrs. Flaherty rubbed her eyes with her faded blue calico apron, as she fumbled in her spacious skirt for one of her husband's handkerchiefs.

That very day a strange thing happened. Tommy and Johnny were out skating in front of their tenement. Johnny had one skate on his left while Tommy had the other on his right foot.

The boys had their arms twisted about one another's waists and whenever one fell, down flopped the other. But that was part of the fun and sometimes they really skated. At last they came to a small hill, tightened their grip upon one another, lifted their feet which had no skates and down they glided right into the arms of Aspinwall Davis.

Aspinwall asked, "Why do you skate with one pair of skates instead of two? It's splendid! I never thought of such a thing!"

Tommy answered, "It's fine! Don't you want to try it? We own this pair between us!"

In a minute Tommy was clasping Aspinwall on one side while Johnny supported his staggering form upon the other. Tommy wore one skate, Aspinwall the other. Such shouts you never heard! Such sprawling and kicking of legs you never saw!

Just as the game reached the most exciting point a slender, fur-clad mother stepped daintily from an automobile, gently calling, "Why Aspinwall! What are you doing here? I told you to be gone only a minute."

Aspinwall and Tommy advanced on their skates, while Johnny cried, "Look at um! Look at um. We've learned Aspinwall to skate like a real un!"

Before he finished speaking the skates suddenly slipped and down went both boys, dragging Aspinwall's mother with them. Instead of brushing the dust from her clothes, she only laughed, a soft rippling laugh which made Tommy cry, "Do it again! It sounds foine!"

And do it again she did, as Aspinwall hobbled to her side, doing what he could to help his mother rise and at the same time whispering something in her ear.

Mrs. Davis gave him a sudden hug and asked, "Tommy, can you and Johnny come to see us tomorrow afternoon?"

Tommy became thoughtful, then questioned, "Could the muther come too?"

"Yes, indeed, your mother shall come. I will have the car here for you at three o'clock."

At two o'clock the following day, Tommy, scrubbed till his small nose and ears shone, sat upon a trunk; while Johnny in the same state of cleanliness sat upon the bed. Each boy wore a much stared, spotless shirt, while one of father Flaherty's neckties adorned each neck. Their coats could be left in the automobile, as the elbows were patched with a material which did not in the least match. Mrs. Flaherty was busily pinning a faded bunch of violets upon her red straw hat.

On the tick of three the dwellers of Blossom street beheld Mrs. Flaherty and her two sons stepping grandly into an automobile and before their dazed eyes the Flaherty's entirely disappeared!

Mrs. Flaherty sank back upon the cushioned seat and closed her eyes. Not so with Tommy and Johnny who pointed and squealed at the passing objects.

Mrs. Davis and Aspinwall met their guests at the front door. As in a dream the Flahertys followed them up the softly carpeted stairs to a room which Aspinwall called the "nursery."

Again Mrs. Flaherty sank into a cushioned seat. Tommy and Johnny straddled a huge rocking-horse. Wildly he galloped backward and forward, while Johnny slid cautiously into the seat of an automobile, grabbing the wheel. Round and round the nursery he swept. Aspinwall jumped out of his way just in time and huddled into a corner watching his friends.

Mrs. Flaherty eyed her darlings. How they did enjoy these riches—just as if they were born to them! There stood poor Aspinwall gazing at their enjoyment. Poor little fellow, probably he didn't know how to gallop so fast or speed so recklessly.

When the happy afternoon drew to a close a maid walked into the nursery and placed a silver tray on the table. Now came the time when Mrs. Flaherty knew what to do. Defily she cut the ice cream; on the side of each plate she arranged the cakes which she divided evenly. Mrs. Davis accepted her share, Aspinwall his and after came the Flaherty's turn. Tommy scraped his plate clean. Johnny scraped his plate clean. Johnny neatly wiped the sides of his with a lady-finger. Aspinwall stood watching the Flahertys with part of his ice cream untasted.

When last good-byes were said, the Flahertys drove quietly home. Even Tommy had so many things to think about that he could not speak.

Christmas morning Johnny blew his horn joyfully, while Tommy marched up and down, up and down, loudly beating his drum. The family who lived over them thought, "Those Flahertys certainly are having a grand Christmas!" The family who lived under them decided those nice automobile friends must be paying a Christmas call!

While the horn was tooting its gladdest, while the drum was beating its fastest, a knock sounded upon the Flaherty's door. And if I gave you three guesses I doubt if you could tell what Tommy and Johnny saw when the door was thrown open. For there stood the huge rocking-horse. There stood the toy automobile filled with packages! And there stood Mrs. Davis and Aspinwall!

"Come right in an' make yourselves to home," murmured Mrs. Flaherty. Again her husband's handkerchief seemed far away, again she sought the end of her calico apron.

Then Mrs. Davis did the strangest thing of all. She walked up to Mrs. Flaherty and put her fur-clad arms straight around the solid form as she whispered, "Somehow we couldn't stay at home this year, Aspinwall and I—with his father still over there. Aspinwall said he knew Tommy and Johnny liked these toys best. We've a little food here in the automobile. Will you please let us stay for dinner?"

Mrs. Flaherty gave one frightened look about her room, remembering the cushions, remembering the nursery, remembering the carpeted stairway. But all at once she remembered something else, she remembered this was home and that over there Aspinwall's father had stood fighting side by side with Mr. Flaherty! Together they'd fought, together they'd won!

"Take off your things an' lay them on the bed. Slip on this apron, Mrs. Davis, now do. You set the table while I cook the dinner! Here, Aspinwall, you can beat the drum and blow the horn at the same time, while Tommy rides the horse and Johnny runs the automobile!"

The "little dinner" wasn't little at all; in fact it was the most wonderful Christmas dinner the Flahertys had ever tasted and when night came every one decided there never had been quite such a Christmas. Tommy thought the horse and automobile should be returned, but Aspinwall said he much preferred the drum and horn. He had sent the money which his presents would have cost to the French orphans, so these, after all, were his Christmas gifts.—Ethel Bowen White, in Congregationalist.

MOLLY'S CHRISTMAS GUEST.

Molly Wing jumped up quickly when she heard her friend, Belle Manners, honking out in front, and, running into the living-room of her little second-floor apartment, threw open the window.

"I'd no idea it was so late," she called. "Can you wait just a minute?"

"Don't hurry; we have plenty of time," returned Belle, good-naturedly.

So Molly ran back into her bedroom and sat down at her desk to write a brief, hurried note to Cousin Anne Harmon. It should have gone before, for it was an invitation to Christmas dinner, and today was the 23d. Of course, Molly could have telephoned up to Brockton, where Anne lived; but when one's income is being stretched to the utmost in the effort to live in New York and be an artist, even twenty-cent tolls are not indulged in unnecessarily. Anne expected to come anyway, so it wouldn't make any particular difference if she didn't get the invitation till the day before. She wasn't one of those supersensitive people who are always on the look-out for slights, Molly reflected thankfully as she slipped the note into its envelope. Then she picked up the handsome, hand-illuminated card that she had painstakingly colored for Cousin Anne Milton, and put that into its envelope, sealed them both, and hastened down to the waiting Belle and the car that was to take her to the afternoon musicale. What did it matter if she couldn't have a car of her own, when people were so lovely to her, Molly asked herself as they sped along.

Miss Manners even drove around by the post-office for her to mail her cards when she heard the situation.

"Anne will laugh at my urgent invitation," Molly laughed, as she hopped back into the machine. "I just said: 'Expecting you for dinner Christmas. Love, Molly.' But it's a regular thing, you know. Her brother and his family always go to his wife's folks for the day, and she comes down to me. Then, I go to Brockton for Easter. We've done it ever since I've been in the city."

There was hardly time to get an answer from Anne, so Molly didn't worry when none came. She hummed gayly as she stepped briskly about her household duties Christmas morning, and it was not until about noon that the first little shadow of misgiving flitted through her mind. Anne always came early, so as to help. Had the invitation been delayed? But surely Anne knew, anyway. At half-past twelve the shadow had grown enormously, and at one o'clock Molly had just put in a long-distance call over the phone when there was a sharp peal at the bell, and she let the receiver fall back with a clang and sprang to the door.

The next instant her eyes nearly popped out of her head. For there, coming slowly, but confidently, up the stair, was—not Cousin Anne Harmon, but Cousin Anne Milton.

"Why," began Molly, helplessly. Then in a flash she knew what she had done. She had mixed the envelopes. But there was no time to wonder what Anne Harmon was thinking of her Christmas card, and forcing a welcoming smile, Molly ran down the stairs to greet her unexpected visitor.

"I'm sorry there's no elevator, but it's on only one flight up," she said encouragingly. "Let me take your coat."

As the rich fur wrap slipped off, Molly gave an inward gasp. It seemed to her she had never seen a lovelier dress than the one Miss Milton was wearing. And as for the rare lace with which it was trimmed, Molly eyed it hungrily. No one loved beautiful, exquisite clothes better than she. Her eyes turned from Cousin Anne's rich attire to her own blue-and-white gingham, and suddenly, because she possessed a sense of humor as well as an artistic temperament, her lips twitched visibly.

"Thank you," said her cousin. "You said you were expecting me, so I didn't trouble to phone. Your invitation was certainly brief and to the point," she went on, as Molly led her into the apartment; "but I liked it all the better for that. I don't believe in wasting words myself. But how did you come to ask me?"

How did she come to ask her? Molly breathed a fervent prayer that she might never find out. But her spirits were rapidly falling. What in the world was she to do with this unwelcome visitor? This was an entirely different matter from having Cousin Anne Harmon come to dinner. Why, by this time the latter would have hustled out into the kitchen and been demanding her share in the dinner's preparation. A sudden vision of the elegant Miss Milton seated at her kitchen table paring potatoes caused Molly to turn quickly.

"I'll have to be seeing to the dinner," she murmured, and fled precipitately into the regions to the rear.

It really was getting late by this time, and Molly's fingers were fairly flying when she was startled by a voice from the doorway.

"So this is where you are!"

"Yes, thank you; you can fix the salad, if you like," returned Molly. And it was fully a minute before she realized that she had not been offered any help, that it was undoubtedly the clock just opposite her eyes pointing to half-past one that was responsible. But by that time Cousin Anne's dainty silk and laces were in total eclipse under a large gingham apron and the lady herself was seated before the table, a varied assortment of fruit and nuts and other salad ingredients before her.

"Well, anyway, it's done," reflected Molly, grimly, "and I guess it won't hurt her."

But she couldn't help wondering what Cousin Anne was thinking. Probably she had never sat down in a kitchen before in her life, much less worn a kitchen apron. Once, during her first winter in the city, two years before, Molly had been invited to Cousin Anne Milton's for dinner; but she had never gone again, except for a perfunctory bread-and-butter call. The dinner had been such a stiff, formal affair, so obviously tendered as a clear duty, that Molly had breathed an almost audible sigh of relief when her call had found Miss Milton indisposed and unable to see her. As for ever asking her to visit her, Molly would as soon have thought of nodding the moon an invitation to call.

But whether or not she had ever spent that much time in a kitchen before, Miss Anne made a surprising success of the salad, and by the time Molly had the potatoes on and boiling merrily there were two dainty dishes lined with lettuce and heaped with finely cut fruit.

"And now," said Cousin Anne Milton, timidly, "is there anything else I can do?"

Molly did need help, and if she was surprised her visitor never gressed it.

"There is the butter to cut, and then perhaps you will open the preserves and pickles. Doesn't it smell good?" She opened the oven-door invitingly, and Miss Milton peered over her shoulder and sniffed appreciatively. "It's only chicken, not turkey," Molly explained; "but it's a good tender one, and I've all the other Christmas fixings."

But had she? She suddenly remembered that Cousin Anne Harmon always brought the plum pudding.

"That is," she amended hastily, "I've only cheese and crackers and coffee for dessert. I hope that will suit you."

"Exactly. I never eat rich desserts. Really, Molly, I—I can't tell you how nice it is of you to take all this trouble just for me,"

"And for myself," laughed Molly. "I'm hungry as a bear. But it won't be long now till things are ready."

She was really beginning to feel very happy, though her amazement at having Cousin Anne Milton dining with her deepened rather than abated with the passing minutes. Perhaps the dinner was not as jolly as it would have been had Anne Harmon been sitting in Anne Milton's place, but it passed off pleasantly enough, and at its close the guest, at her own suggestion, dried the dishes while the hostess washed. When they were through, Miss Anne sank into her chair with an unmistakable sigh of relief, and Molly had an inspiration.

"You're to take off your dress and lie down for awhile," she commanded. "Here's my kimono: now make yourself comfortable. I've some phoning to do, and then I want to change my gown in honor of the day."

And the minute Cousin Anne was ensconced on the couch, Molly flew into her own room, closed the door carefully behind her, and pulled the telephone toward her. Now to find out what Cousin Anne Harmon was thinking.

Two minutes later she was talking eagerly and much more loudly than she realized into the transmitter.

"No, Jim didn't phone me. I expect he forgot. Isn't that just like him? I'm awfully sorry about your sprained ankle, and, of course, I'll come out, but—oh, Anne, don't you see? When the card went to you, your invitation went to Cousin Anne Milton. And she came, Anne! She came! What do you know about that? Was I? Well, you ought to have seen me. I all but sank through the floor."

She probably said a good deal more—she couldn't remember afterward just what she had said—but, at any rate, when she finally dropped the receiver and turned to see Cousin Anne Milton standing beside her, she gave a startled gasp and heartily wished she might indeed sink through the floor.

"I couldn't help but hear, Molly," said Miss Milton, more gently than Molly had imagined she could speak, "and I—I understand. I ought to have known when the note came, that it was a mistake."

And then, to Molly's consternation, she burst into tears. But in a minute she wiped her eyes.

"Come over here, Molly," she said; "I want to talk to you."

There were a good many words used in the next hour, but that is not to say they were wasted. For during that sixty minutes several discoveries were made. Molly, on her side, learned that, in spite of her money and clothes and beautiful house, Cousin Anne Milton was a very lonely young woman; that Molly's missent invitation had warmed her heart as nothing had done in years. And as for Miss Milton, she found out that devotion to one kind of art doesn't at all mean that one can not enjoy any other kind; that a girl may stay home from the opera in order to save money for her expenses at the art school and yet often just fairly ache to hear some beautiful music.

"One is never too old to learn, it seems," Miss Anne remarked finally. "I was very stupid. Just because you were studying at the institute, I took it for granted you didn't care about going anywhere but to studios and galleries. I've always tried to avoid attending concerts and the opera with numbskulls who don't know an 'Ave Maria' from 'Old Hundred,' and I'm glad to find some one I can count on not to disappoint me. I shall send for you often to go with me. I hope you will be able to go."

Molly nodded. Her cheeks were pink, her eyes sparkling. "I will," she promised.—Selected.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Rockingham Charge.—Old Santa Claus came round to the parsonage Christmas eve in spite of the downpour of rain. He came with the following: 15 pies and eustards, cakes of various kinds, two chickens, several dozen of oranges and apples, nuts, candies, jelly, preserves, one ham, one sack flour, one shirt for our boy, one necktie, one dress for Mrs. Garner, and one more bed quilt. The following is a list of those who took part in this act of kindness to pastor and family: Mrs. Will McCaskill, Mrs. Francis Justice, Mrs. S. E. Covington, Mrs. R. E. Mills, Miss Myrtle Baldwin, Mrs. D. E. McKenzie, Mrs. John McCaskill, Mrs. Winston Morse, Mrs. Lizzie Horne, Mrs. John Phillips, Mrs. Henry Jenkins, Miss Pauline Phillips, Mrs. J. D. Jenkins, Mrs. J. H. Collins, Mrs. Jim McKinnis, Mr. Abner Jenkins, Mr. Harold Snead. We do not know how to express our feelings of appreciation to these who made us so happy because of their thoughtfulness of us during the Christmas holidays. Some of the above names are not on the Methodist Protestant church register. For some of them are Baptists, some are Presbyterians and some Methodist Episcopalians.

Our Christmas exercise which was given Christmas night was rendered real well. The children did unusually well considering the short time and few times they got to practice.

We wish the editor and all the Herald's readers a happy new year.

D. I. Garner, Pastor.

Henderson.—We were all glad to have Mr. Pritchard, who has been on the sick list for the past ten days, back with us yesterday. In the pastor's absence, Rev. E. R. Nelson, of the Baptist church, conducted prayer meeting on Wednesday night, 17th.

On last Friday night the Philatheas gave "A Christmas Eve" pageant to a packed house, repeating it on Sunday night to another full house. A free-will offering was taken both nights. Mrs. C. L. Finch, who was director of the pageant, deserves the highest praise for the way everything was carried out.

The Young Ladies' League held a very successful bazaar on December 11.

Mr. Pritchard announced Sunday that in just a few more weeks we would be able to use our new Sunday school rooms, as the work was nearly completed.

Next Sunday we will have reception of new members, and our quarterly communion service.

Rev. J. E. Pritchard expects to leave here next Sunday night, after services, for Chicago, to attend a joint meeting of the Board of Education and the college presidents of the denomination.

Henderson, December 29, 1924.

Bethel, Mocksville Charge.—As I have seen no report from Bethel since conference I thought I would write a few lines. We held a splendid Christmas service December 24. The children did their part well. Collection, $7.50.

Our Sunday school and prayer meeting are moving on nicely and are growing. We have recently put in new lamps and carpeted the pulpit and put rubber matting in the aisles, which adds much to the appearance of the church. Brother Sisk held communion service and opened the doors of the church on last Sunday. It was a sweet service. There were four united with the church: Mr. Nail and wife, Mrs. Sain and her daughter. This makes nine new members Brother Sisk has taken in at Bethel since conference.

We are so glad that conference sent Brother Sisk back to us for our pastor another year, and now let us all pray and work together that we may do and accomplish a great year's work for the Lord.

We were glad to have Miss Mary Hopkins of Topeka, Kan., spend the holidays in and around Bethel, her old home church. Mary is a loyal Methodist Protestant. Glad to have her worship with us Sunday.

We wish the Herald and all of its readers a happy new year. Mrs. J. W. Cartner.

State Street Church, Lexington.—We have had a fine time at our church during the Christmas time. On the night of the 23d the Christmas entertainment was held. There were carols and recitations by the children, after which treats and gifts were distributed. The children were hilarious to the highest pitch but none forgot their pieces for all that. Last Sunday the attendance at Sunday school and preaching was good, considering the fact that some of our folks were visiting out of town.

Mr. Bethea's children were all home and worshiped with us. Also Miss Crews of Charlotte was a very welcome visitor. She and our pastor favored the congregation with a beautiful duet at the morning service.

We are all hoping to make the new year a profitable one, hoping and expecting many to be added to our number during the year. One new member has been received since the last writing.

Reporter.

Haw River, Glen Raven Charge.—I feel like we all enjoyed Christmas, as we have so much to be grateful for. Our Sunday school is doing nicely for the cold Sundays we have. Our school gave a nice little treat of fruit, nuts and candy; all appreciated it. Also a beautiful pageant was given by the children, "Day-springs From on High." Each child did his part so nicely. The entertainment was on Christmas night and we also had a Christmas tree that was very well filled with presents for the children of the school. Miss Espa Bullard and Mrs. Nellie Bullard had charge of training the children for the pageant. We want to thank them for this. The school presented the superintendent a nice and useful present.

Some of our faithful members are on the sick list. Mrs. J. R. Stuart has been sick for several weeks. We pray that she will soon be well again.

Wishing the Herald and its readers a happy new year,

Saxapahaw Charge.—Our first quarterly conference was held at Salem church December 20. Several of the official members showed their interest in the church by being present. It was decided to put forth an earnest effort to raise the budgets in full. The every-member canvass is being made at three of the churches on this work; the other church will apportion her part of the budget among the several members. Conference had the pleasure of listening to a splendid address by Prof. P. E. Lindley, who is a member of the faculty of High Point College. He spoke to us concerning the budgets and the work the college is doing.

A Junior Home Missionary Society has just been organized at Concord church with Miss Rosa Johnson as president. Miss Johnson is an earnest church worker, and will make a splendid president. The Myra Crawford Mission Band of Orange Chapel gave a very interesting program of songs and recitations last third Sunday. Mrs. Ira Lewis, the president, had trained the children well. The offering, of course, will go to mission work.

Three Christmas entertainments were given on this work. Salem and Orange Chapel gave splendid programs of songs and recitations. A pleasing service in the form of a cantata was given at Saxapahaw on the evening of the 24th.

All the sick people on this work are improving. Mrs. T. H. Moore, who spent some time in Rainey hospital at Burlington, has returned home. Miss Josie Woody is now in Rainey hospital recovering rapidly from an operation for appendicitis.

The writer is beginning his third year with the good people on this charge. Universal kindness has been shown him wherever he goes. Since conference the following have helped the pastor in a substantial way: Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Overman, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Paris, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Crawford, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Maynard (of M. E. Church), Mr. D. M. Lewis, a friend $5, and another friend $2.50. During the holidays the pastor was the recipient of many valuable and useful presents from members of the different churches. They all have our sincere thanks.

H. L. Isley.

P. S.—A Surprise. Life is made up of surprises. Some of them are agreeable and pleasant, while others bring sadness and disappointment. The pastor of this charge was agreeably surprised at the first quarterly conference when Brother J. C. Guthrie, of Concord church, rose to his feet and in a few chosen words moved that the pastor's salary be increased $200 for this year, making $120 in all. Brother H. G. Paris promptly seconded the motion. Brother R. S. Woody put the question before the house, every member voting in the affirmative. The pastor's vocabulary was too limited to express in words his appreciation for this, but he is filled with renewed desire to serve the people better than ever, and he pledges them the best service he is able to give.

H. L. I.

Whitakers, Whitakers Charge.—It has been some time since a report has gone in from this church, and quite a good many things have been done. It is rather late to say we are glad to have our pastor returned, how ever, I guess we have proven to him we are glad to have him. On Tuesday before Thanksgiving our Ladies' Aid held a bazaar, from which we realized about $175. We felt very thankful for this. Our pastor preached for us on Thanksgiving morning, gave us a very pretty sermon, and our offering for the Home was $43. This too made us thankful. On Christmas night we held a service ("White Gifts for the King") and while the crowd was small, there was a nice lot of gifts, and $23 in money for our Pine Ridge school. We feel that this money will help put those mountain people in touch with the world since Dr. Woodford stated that money sent would be used to buy a radio. We all feel very much concerned just now over the condition of Uncle Mack Cutchin who is we feel in a very serious condition. He is well known to a number of the readers of the Herald, having many times in former years represented us in annual conferences. He has lived to a ripe old age, being over 83 years old. He has not been able to attend church for several Sundays now, and we certainly miss seeing him come in.

Our Sunday school is not doing so well now. I am sure it is on account of the bad, cold weather we are having. There are right many colds around, but not much other sickness. When we stop to count our blessings there are so many things for which to give thanks, but most of all we should be thankful for Him whose birthday we have just been privileged to celebrate; and may we all carry the spirit of Christmas with us through all the coming year. Wishing a happy and prosperous new year to the editor and readers of the Herald,
Mamie Johnston, Rep.

Matthews Chapel.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society met on Sunday evening, December 28, at the home of Mrs. J. R. Shell, with 14 members present and six visitors. Collection, $1.30. Bible reading by Mrs. J. R. Shell, prayer by Mr. J. B. Edwards. Reading by Misses Gertrude Bowen, Daisy Moore and Addie Archer.

After the meeting confectionary was served by the hostess. Our next meeting will be held in the home of Mr. J. B. Edwards on Saturday evening, January 24, at 7:30 o'clock.

Wishing the Herald and its readers a happy new year,
Dora Edwards,
Corresponding Secretary.

The Bible.

This Book contains the mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners, and the happiness of believers. Its doctrine is holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable. Read it to be wise, believe it to be safe, and practice it to be holy. It contains light to direct you, food to support you, and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's charter. Here heaven is opened, and the gates of hell closed. Christ is its grand subject, our good its design, and the glory of God its end. It should fill the memory, rule the heart, and guide the feet. Read it slowly, frequently, prayerfully. It is a mine of wealth, health to the soul, and a river of pleasure. It is given you here in this life, will be opened at the judgment, and is established forever. It involves the highest responsibility, will reward the greatest labor, and condemn all who trifle with its sacred contents.—Selected.

The Bible is pre-eminently the study book of the Christian Endeavorers. We should know the Bible above all books. We may be ignorant of other books but none of us can afford to be ignorant of the Bible.

President Harding said: "I have always believed in the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, whereby they have become the expression to men of the word and the will of God."

Theodore Roosevelt: "To every man who faces life with real desire to do his part in everything, I appeal for a study of the Bible. No man can afford to be ignorant of the Bible."

Woodrow Wilson: "The only book that can have any possible significance as a text book in the Sunday school is the Bible, itself, and as we must train our children in the rest of the thought of the world, we must, if we are to make progress as a nation, ground each generation as it comes along in the established and tested moral judgments of the world. No great nation can survive its own temptations and its own follies that does not indoctrinate its children in the Word of God."

Dr. W. L. Phelps of Yale: "I thoroughly believe in a university education for both men and women; but I believe a knowledge of the Bible without a college course is more valuable than a college course without the Bible. Every one who has a knowledge of the Bible may truly be called educated; and no other learning or culture, no matter how extensive or elegant, can form a proper substitute."

William McKinley: "The more profoundly we study this wonderful book and the more closely we observe its divine precepts the better citizens we will become and the higher will be our destiny as a nation."

Daniel Webster: "If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible our country will go on prospering and to prosper; but if we and our posterity neglect its instructions and authority, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may overwhelm us and bury all our glory in profound obscurity."

Robert E. Speer: "If we want to do any Christian work with others and for others we must know the Bible. A knowledge of the Bible and a love in our hearts constitutes the best equipment for Christian work."

God's Gift to Man.

This Book is the word of God. In it He makes known to men His character and will. It is all given by inspiration of the Holy Ghost, and is profitable, teaching men what to believe, showing them in what they are wrong, instructing them in what is right; and leading them, through the grace of God, to do it. Although written by men, God directed them what to write and how to write it, that as a rule of human faith and conduct it might be perfect. Having been all written, not in words taught by the wisdom of men, but the wisdom of God, it is perfect, "converting the soul; sure, making wise the simple; and right, rejoicing the heart." Of course a knowledge of this book is more to be desired than gold; because in understanding, believing, and obeying it, there is great present and great future reward.

Hence, every person who can should own a copy of it, and should read it every day; asking God to teach him, by His Spirit, rightly to understand, cordially to believe, and faithfully to obey it. It will then be spirit and life to his soul, and make him wise to salvation. It will be a lamp to his feet, and a light to his path, guiding him in the way of righteousness, that way of pleasantness, and path of peace. He will be wiser, in the things of God, even than his teachers, if they do not understand, believe, and obey the Bible. Through it he will get understanding and will hate every false way; by it he will be furnished thoroughly for every good work.

Study It by Chapter.

A chapter study of the Bible is a most helpful way to study it. Read the chapter through first very carefully to get the main thought and events of the chapter, then select a name for it. This name should embody the outstanding features of the chapter. Second, select the events of the chapter, numbering them. Do not take too many of these—three or four for the whole chapter. Then under these heads or with them clearly in mind read the chapter again or read the events separately so as to be able to tell each one in your own language.

As a sample we will take Genesis 1. Name for the chapter, "Chapter of Beginnings."

Outline:—God the Creator, First Day's Work, Second Day's Work, Third Day's Work, Fourth Day's Work, Fifth Day's Work, Sixth Day's Work, The First Covenant.

Under these eight heads we can recall the first chapter of Genesis and tell just what is in it if we get it so that we can tell all that is

Hebron, Orange Charge.—We have heard our new pastor, Rev. B. M. Williams, preach one time, and he was present the second appointment, but Rev. A. G. Dixon being present preached in his place.

We are well pleased with Brother Williams. He comes to us as a stranger, but he doesn't seem that way to us now, as he is beginning to seem like one of our number. We enjoyed listening to his sermon, as it was so plain and helpful.

We also enjoyed Brother Dixon's sermon; his messages are always uplifting and helpful. We enjoyed the talk Mrs. Dixon made, as she always has something interesting to tell us.

We miss our old pastor, Mr. Stubbins, very much, also his good wife, but hope he will do great good where he was sent, and that we will have the best year here we have ever had.

Our Sunday school is getting on fine; going to have a Christmas tree which I hope will be a success. We are hoping to do some work on our church soon, as it is not finished inside; we hope to see it completed soon. We hope to have more good things to report next time. Best holiday wishes to all the readers of the Herald.

Mrs. F. W. Nelson, Reporter.

Palestine, Flat Rock.—As this reporter has not reported since Conference, guess it is time to begin again, to keep our new pastor from thinking I have "quit" or "backslided." Nevertheless, I have not quit and hope I may never backslide.

Our hearts were greatly grieved in the removal of Brother Hutton from our charge to another place of labor. We pray God's richest blessings upon him, his good wife and children, and assure them they will ever have a warm welcome in our church and homes at Palestine.

Our new pastor, Rev. J. B. Trogdon, filled his first appointment at Palestine the fifth Sunday in November, bringing with him Mrs. Trogdon and the children. The reporter did not get to attend this service, but everyone speaks very highly of the new pastor. The third Sunday in this month Brother Trogdon filled his second appointment to a very good sized crowd, considering the extremely cold day. The work has started off very nicely under our new pastor. A collection was taken Sunday for old ministers which amounted to about $14.00. Some has been paid on pastor's salary.

Brother Trogdon's sermon Sunday was inspiring and impressively spoken. He pictured to us the little baby Jesus,—how the mother and father could find no room in the inn for their dear baby, and had to go to the stable where the cattle were fed, and there the baby Jesus was laid in the manger; how the angels told the shepherds the good news that the little baby in the manger was the Son of God, and that our only hope of eternal life rested in this little babe Jesus that there was no room in this sinful world for. No wonder that the Savior said later, "The Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." We pray that this message may sink deep into the hearts of those that heard it, and that we may all try to make more room for this little babe, our blessed Lord.

A number of our faithful members were too feeble to attend church Sunday. We pray our Lord to strengthen them in their feeble bodies.

The singing school held a Christmas tree at Ellishoro Baptist Church Christmas eve night. The school contains a number of our members.

Our Sunday school has closed until spring, owing to the long distance our people have to go.

We will close, wishing every reader of the Herald and the dear Editor also a happy Christmas season.

Grace R. Tucker, Reporter.

Orange Charge.—The Christmas season is rapidly passing. We have been remembered by a number of useful articles during these days, for all of which we express our sincere thanks.

We were especially pleased to receive a box of nice mountain apples from Brother W. G. Edwards of Weaverville, N. C.

On December 19, A. S. Daniels and Lila E. Thompson were married by the writer at the home of the bride's parents. We wish for them a happy voyage through life.

All appointments have been filled to date. Fair congregations yesterday at Hebron and Chestnut Ridge considering the rough weather.

Hebron paid her full amount for the superannuates, Chestnut Ridge is nearly out, Effland will pay out, also think Union Grove will pay out next Sunday. So we are hoping to send the full amount for this charge to Brother Taylor next week. We thank all who have responded to the appeals for this fund. It makes the pastor feel good to see his people interested in, and trying to carry out the program of our Conference. May we live up to what our great church expects of us.

Sincerely,

B. M. Williams.

News of Shelby Methodist Protestant Church.

The Christmas program was rendered Wednesday night, December 24. Mr. S. C. Tate, the new superintendent, presided during the rendering of the program. The exercises consisted of songs and recitations by the children of the Sunday school and a pantomime, "Silent Night," by five young women. An old-fashioned Christmas tree was a feature of the exercises.

The Sunday school and church services were well attended last Sunday, considering the cold weather.

The prayer service Wednesday night will be conducted by a layman in the absence of the pastor.

At the 11 o'clock service next Sunday morning the Lord's Supper will be observed. A brief sermon by the pastor will precede the Holy Communion. The usual preaching service in the evening at seven o'clock.

Ref. C. B. Way, the pastor, is attending a conference of pastors and laymen of the Methodist Protestant Church in the central section of the state which is being held at High Point.—From the Cleveland Star, Shelby, N. C.

Delivers Sermon at Fallston Quarterly Conference.

Rev. C. B. Way, pastor of the Methodist

Protestant church here, delivered the sermon at the quarterly conference of the Fallston charge of the denomination which was held at Knob Creek near Fallston last Saturday. The conference began at 11 o'clock with the preaching service. Dinner was served at the church and in the afternoon the business session of the conference was held.

Rev. J. M. Morgan, of Fallston, is the pastor, and presided over the progress of the conference. Rev. Mr. Morgan is beginning his second year as pastor of the group of churches forming the Fallston charge.—From the Cleveland Star, Shelby, N. C.

Calvary News.—Christmas has come and gone and the pastor of Calvary Methodist Protestant church, Greensboro, and family have been made happy by many remembrances by members of Calvary church and by friends of former pastors. The pastor was completely surprised when at the mid-week service last Wednesday evening Mrs. James Sullivan presented him with a ten-dollar gold piece, a Christmas gift from the Sunday school. All who had any part in this have our sincere thanks. Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Jobe remembered us with a fine dressed hen with cranberries and celery as accompaniments. Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Parrish gave a fruit cake and two chickens, Mrs. James Sullivan gave Mrs. Gerringer an apron and a jar of jelly. Mr. John Glass, three cans of fruit, and the Misses McCulloch remembered each member of the pastor's family with a gift. Mrs. J. Frank Coble, previous to Christmas time, had been sharing fresh meat with us. Miss Velna McCulloch discovered by some means that the pastor had a birthday the 13th and gave him a real nice pair of driving gloves. We appreciate all these gifts and thank the givers.

The work moves along real well considering the unfavorable conditions under which we work and worship. We appreciate the use of the school house, but it is not like being in a church. We hope to be worshipping in our new church in a few more weeks. The pastor hopes also to be more conveniently located in a short while, having made himself and family a Christmas present of a home on Bellevue street. After we get moved again and settled we hope to render more and better service to the church.

The ladies are still energetic and enthusiastic. The bazaar conducted by them previous to the holidays was entirely successful, as they usually are.

We have such a good reporter in the person of Brother A. C. Dixon that it will not be necessary for the pastor to report often in order that the friends of Calvary may know how the work is progressing.

To all our friends who read the Herald we wish to say, "A happy and prosperous new year to you!" L. W. Gerringer, Pastor.

—Brother J. A. Gunn, of Wentworth, is going with Mrs. Gunn to spend the winter in Florida. He hopes there to escape rheumatic troubles.

—We were pleased to have a call recently from Ira Gunn, once a linotype operator in our office. He is now in business with headquarters in Danville, Va.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Jobe.—Caroline Gill Jobe was born April 14, 1846, died July 8, 1924, aged 78 years, two months and 24 days.

Before her marriage, March 10, 1878, to Levi Jobe, she was a member of Hawfields Presbyterian Church, but later joined at Hebron M. P. Church, of which she remained a member until death.

Her husband has been dead for several years; since then she has remained in her home with her son and his family, but made visits to her daughters in their homes. It was during one of these visits that the end came.

She had been in bad health for some time, but gradually grew worse, until death freed her from her suffering. All that loving hands could do was done for her, to keep her with them, but God said, It is enough, come and rest.

Mrs. Jobe was a devoted wife and mother, doing what she could to make home pleasant and happy. She was a good-neighbor and had many friends. She is greatly missed in her home and community and church; while she could not attend church very much, yet we younger members will miss her good influence and presence when there. Just knowing that one of our older members has passed away makes us all feel sad, as we are passing one by one.

Only one son, Julian Jobe; three daughters, Mrs. J. P. Thompson, Mrs. Albert Nicholson of Hebron community, Mrs. Will Squires of Mebane, and Mrs. Bettie Crutchfield, of Ridge community; several grandchildren and many other relatives survive her.

She was laid to rest in Hebron graveyard, Rev. R. C. Stubbins conducting the services. The floral designs were beautiful.

"Dearest mother, thou hast left us;

Here thy loss we deeply feel;

But 'tis God that hath bereft us,—

He can all our sorrows heal."

Mrs. F. W. Nelson, Reporter.

Jones.—James S. Jones was born May 6, 1856, died October 20, 1924, aged 68 years, five months and 14 days. He was a member of Hebron church for many years.

He leaves a wife, Mrs. Delia Jones, and two sisters, Mrs. Henry Smith and Mrs. Martha Stubbins, of Mebane, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

Mr. Jones had been suffering for some time with heart trouble, and his death came suddenly as he was sitting in a chair, and he fell over, dying almost instantly. So many die like this, and yet some seem to think it isn't necessary to prepare for death. "We know not the day nor the hour."

Mr. Jones will be greatly missed in his home, church and community, as he always seemed pleasant and agreeable, and usually attended church, showing his interest in the church in many ways. We are sure his companion misses him greatly, as they had no children to brighten their home. Another of Hebron's older members gone. We feel that those older members being taken is a warning for the younger people to be ready.

May the bereaved wife and relatives look to God for help, and serve Him faithfully, and may they meet Mr. Jones on the other shore where there will be no more parting.

Mrs. F. W. Nelson, Reporter.

SACRILEGIOUS, BUT NOT INDECENT.

By unanimous decision the appellate division of the New York court last week reversed the conviction of Abraham S. Baylinson, secretary of the Society of Independent Artists, for hanging in the society's 1923 exhibition J. Francis Kaufman's painting, "Father, forgive them. They know not what they do." Mr. Baylinson was convicted before the court of special sessions and fined $100 for the exhibition of the picture on the ground that it is in violation of public decency. In reversing this decision and ordering that the amount of the fine be returned to Baylinson, the higher court held that while the picture may be said to be sacrilegious it is not indecent within the meaning of the law. The Kaufman painting presented a burlesque on the first miracle of Christ, that of turning water into wine at the marriage feast of Cana. Besides depicting the Biblical characters the artist also inserted likenesses of William Jennings Bryan, William H. Anderson and former Congressman Volstead. The picture portrays the Savior with the mother of Jesus in an attitude of adoration, but Bryan, Anderson and Volstead are portrayed as being hostile to the Savior's act.—The American Issue.

Did it pay, she began again— But suddenly a voice began to speak, a timid, childish voice:

"I was born in the darkness of evil spirits"—the pretty, flute-like tones faltered, then went on again bravely, "but I want now to walk in the path of God."

The doctor turned. Yes, it was Gathinji! Her head was bowed, and she spoke softly, but there was an ecstasy unmistakable in the hushed tone. Then she lifted her head. Her eyes held a hidden rapture and her face seemed transfigured with an inner radiance.

"In my heart was the fear of many things," she went on bravely, "but in the Jesus way there is no fear. When the wind screams, it is but the wind, not evil spirits. When the summer breeze blows, it is but the summer breeze. There are no evil spirits—they cannot curse our village. Truly, the Jesus thinking way is love, not fear. Is it permitted to women, to little girls, to believe the God of the foreign-born faith? My understanding is but young and fearful. My feet are but child feet, blind to the touch of the road, for it is new; but I would walk in the path of God."

In a sudden rapturous joy the doctor bowed her head. The sign! She wondered, in that warm flood of happiness, why she had ever doubted. The old love of her work, a love that made all the rest of life so precious, each daily task a glorification, surged over her like a great, engulfing wave. A greater glory than all the marts of time could give her crowned her work. For she had chosen the better part, and the joy of it could not be taken from her. —Edith Palmer Youngken, in Zion's Herald.

written under each head. Your own outline made in this way will help you more greatly than any outline you could secure in any other way.

Study the Chapters by Verse.

When you have a good knowledge of the contents of a chapter then take the verses and outline the plain teachings of each verse. For example, 2 Peter 1:1. This verse says plainly that Simon Peter was first a servant of Jesus Christ, second an apostle of Jesus Christ, third he was a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, fourth, he was a servant and an apostle to the people, fifth, these people were of like faith with the apostle, sixth, this faith was through the righteousness of God, seventh, that Jesus Christ is co-ordinate with and works with God, eighth, that Jesus Christ is our Savior. Then besides the plain teachings of a verse there are many very evident inferences we may draw from the plain teachings. In this verse a few of these are: first, that Jesus needs servants and apostles; second, different ways of serving (Peter was leaving a written testimony for Jesus Christ for all time); third, if Jesus Christ is our savior we must need one; and others, but be sure the inference is there before you draw one.

Read a Whole Book at one Sitting.

Most of us do not take time enough to get interested in Bible study or Bible reading. We read a few verses and then think our duty done whether we have got help or not. Read a whole book through to find out the story, the purpose and the leading facts of the book. Then read it again to find out the teachings and the beauty of expression and the key verses to commit to memory. These readings should each be at one sitting or continuous or before you have read the last part you will have forgotten much of the first. Then by reading at a moderate rate the Bible can be read through in sixty days by reading an hour per day. If you read slowly it will take longer.

May the New Year bring to each one of us some plan by which we will do more real intelligent study of so important a book as the Bible.

SHE TOOK THE WRONG BOOK.

"They gave the sense." Last year Mr. — came to our mission anniversary; and after he had preached in the afternoon, as I was going home for tea, old Mary Howarth joined our company. "Well, how have you enjoyed the preacher this afternoon?" "None so grand," Mary answered. "I took the wrong book with me." I looked at the book under her arm, and there, sure enough, was the large-print Bible she always took to church with her. I said, "No, you didn't, it's your regular Bible you have got with you." "Ah," she said, "I know that; but it was the dictionary I needed this afternoon." What a pity that to the old lady the "sense" was lost through the high-flown words of man's wisdom.—From the Christian Herald, Quoted in Sunday School Times.

THE CHRISTIAN'S DEATH.

The fire never died out of Paul's heart. Yet in the prison, the old Great-Heart is nearing the end of his warfare. What ringing notes sound out in his final charge to Timothy. He seems to be standing in the presence of Him who shall judge the quick and the dead, as he bids him watch and make a full proof of his ministry. Notice how he describes his death. He is to be a sacrifice on the altar of Love. The next word used is a nautical one—departure, i. e., weighing the anchor, crossing the bar, going out on the bosom of the great ocean of Eternity. For the Christian, the last experience is not that of a dismayed vessel, just making the harbor, but of a bark, with all sails set, fretting at the anchor, and waiting to be set free. Surely this was Tennyson's thought when he gave us his well-known sonnet on Crossing the Bar. "Let there be no moaning of the bar when I put out to sea." One other metaphor was the receiving of the Crown of Amaranth by the successful athlete, who had finished the course in the stadium and kept the faith, as Ezra's bands of Levites kept the sacred vessels, which they bore across the desert. Are we amongst those described in Timothy 8, who have set their love on the appearing of Jesus Christ. It must have been good for Mark to hear that Acts 13:13 was forgotten, and that he was wanted by Paul. It was cold in that dark cell and he needed his cloak: and the parchments may have been the first draught of the Gospel story.—F. B. Meyer.

WHY THE MOVEMENT FOR COLLEGE ENDOWMENT.

Last week we printed an announcement of a campaign for the endowment of High Point college. We suppose all our intelligent readers recognize the fact that our college as well as others must be endowed. Perhaps all do not see the propriety of beginning the campaign for endowment at this time. Hence a few words of explanation may be in order.

There are some things we can put off and do at our convenience, and there are other things that must be done now. This is one of the things that must be done now. Necessity constrains us.

In order to open the college last fall we had to have dormitories to house students and teachers. In order to build the dormitories we had to have money. We knew of but two honorable ways to get the money, for people to give it to us and for people to lend it to us. We would have been very glad indeed to have people give the money, but they did not do it in sufficient quantity. We had either to borrow or postpone indefinitely the opening of the college. Some one will ask why we did not pursue the latter course—wait for the money to be given. There are several reasons why this was not best. A sufficient reason is that it would not have been fair to some who had contributed their money to build the first building—Roberts Hall. They gave their money with the understanding that they were helping to build a college for the education of their own children. To postpone the opening of the college till their children were too old to go would have been manifestly unfair to these people. There was but one course left, open, and that was to borrow the money and build. We had to borrow $150,000. It is not always easy to borrow money. To borrow $150,000 is never easy. Few individuals have so much money to lend. We knew of no individual that would accommodate us. We had to turn to a corporation, to meet the conditions required by a corporation—the Jefferson Standard Insurance Company. They make it a condition that the borrower take out insurance to the amount of the loan. They said, we will let you have $150,000 if you will take out insurance in our company to the amount of $150,000. We had to accept the condition to get the money.

But we saw that if we could meet the condition by getting the insurance written for the benefit of the college, we would be doing a great thing for the college. At the end of ten years the college would receive the $150,000 of insurance money for an endowment fund. Two things were necessary, first, to find a number of people willing to have their lives insured for the benefit of the college, people that could pass the examination of the company, and secondly, to find people who would pay the annual premiums, which have to be paid for a period of ten years. These premiums aggregate $15,000 a year. Divided into 300 parts, each part would be $50 a year. The plan agreed upon is to seek for 300 individuals or groups of individuals who will agree to contribute this $50 a year. Some with good prospects will be able to do this for ten years; others may not be able to continue paying so long, but can take their places among the three hundred for this year and perhaps other years. It is understood that the obligation assumed in joining this three hundred club will be canceled by death or disability.

To find these three hundred is the object of the campaign that has been projected. It is going to be an honorable band. Wasn't it three hundred through whom in the days of Gideon the Lord saved Israel from their formidable enemies, the Midianites?

GROUP AND MASS MEETINGS IN THE INTEREST OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

In our group meeting at the College today, January 13, in consultation with the brethren gathered at the College, it was thought wise to make some changes and hold the group meetings in the interest of Christian education on Sundays in the main.

The president of the College and I were appointed a committee to map out the plans for these meetings. Below is a list of the appointments up to January 29. Watch the Herald for further announcements.

Meetings will be held as per schedule below:

January 21—

Friendship, Haw River circuit, 10:30 A. M.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

I know very well that there is nothing new in what I am saying. Everybody knows it already. But what I shall say are truths that we need to be often reminded of. I know of nothing that we are more prone to forget than these common-place truths. It is what we know best and most firmly believe that we fail most to consider and lay to heart. The most familiar truths have always been the truths by men most disregarded.

But let us hear what the Bible says Christians are. Well, the Bible says, among other things, that they are "the light of the world." The blessed Jesus himself is the speaker, and he is addressing his disciples, and he says to them, "Ye are the light of the world." Observe, he does not say, "Ye may be if you are careful to live up to your privileges," or ye ought to be—it is your duty, or ye shall be by and by when you have made greater progress in religion, but he speaks of it as a present matter of fact. "Ye are the light of the world." So it seems that Christians shine. We talk of a shining Christian, meaning to distinguish such from Christians in general. But there is no Christian who is not a shining one. Every Christian emits light. Paul testifies of the Christians of Philippi, that they shone as lights in the world. They were what Christ said his disciples were. And must not all Christians in our towns and rural districts be the same?

It also appears that Christians are not merely receivers. They give out, they communicate. That is their character. They do not live merely or mainly for themselves. A candle is not lighted for its own convenience, but for the benefit of others, that it may give light unto all that are in the house. Some people think it is enough if they personally enjoy religion. But that is not the case. No man liveth to himself—much more does no Christian.

There are two objects for which Christians shine. One is to discover themselves, that the world may know what Christians are, and so be led to emulate their character. This our Savior contemplates when he says, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." We are to emit light for others to see by, and in this way they see our good works. All Christians perform good works. They are all of them doers. They are the most practical men and women in the world, though regarded by many as visionaries. There are, to be sure, speculators and theorists enough in the church, but real Christians are working people. But what is the use of our good works' being seen? Why is it not enough that they be done? Does not humility dictate that they should be concealed rather than exposed? The thing is impracticable. "A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." Were the thing possible, the attempt at concealment might be proper enough, if there were no others to be influenced by the sight of our good works. Whether a candle in an uninhabited house be on a candlestick or under a bushel is a matter of little consequence, but not so if there are people in the house. The Christian's good works are to be visible, not that he may be applauded for them, but that men may be made to glorify God.

I would not have any one believe that a Christian is to make an effort to let his good works be seen—to be ostentatious of them. No, he is only to let his light shine. He is active in doing good works, but quite passive in showing them. A luminous body makes no effort in emitting light. It cannot help shining. A Christian has only, in all his intercourse with men, to act out the Christian spirit, and be governed by the fear of God and the principles of his holy religion, and the thing is done. The light is emitted, and the good works are seen. And this is the way, under God, to commend truth to the conscience, to reach the hearts of men, and make converts to God.

The other object for which Christians shine is to enlighten others. But on this I cannot now enlarge. Only this I would observe. They are the light of the world. Their influence reaches to the ends of the earth. If we want to make good our Savior's assertion with respect to ourselves, if we want to be the light of the world, let us first take heed that the light which is in us be not darkness. And let us next see to it that our light make discovery to others of good works. As for those who are too far off to see us, it only remains that we carry them the light, or send it to them.

H. L. Isley.

THE BIBLE TEACHER AND BIBLICAL FACTS.

In the sphere of education, facts are having a hard time. The old-fashioned notion of reading a book or hearing a lecture and simply storing up in the mind what the book or the lecture contains—this is regarded as entirely out of date. The other day I heard a noted educator give some advice to a company of college professors. It is a great mistake, he said, to suppose that a college professor ought to teach; on the contrary he ought simply to give the students an opportunity to learn.

This pedagogic theory has been having its natural result; it has joined forces with the natural indolence of youth to produce in present-day education a very lamentable decline. The decline has not perhaps been universal; in the sphere of the physical sciences, for example, acquisition of facts is not regarded as altogether out of date. But in the spheres of literature and history, and still more in that of language-study, the tendency is perfectly plain. An outstanding feature of contemporary education in these departments is the growth of ignorance; pedagogic theory and the growth of ignorance have gone hand in hand.

The undergraduate student is being told that he need not take notes on what he hears in class, that the exercise of the memory is a rather childish and mechanical thing, and that what he is really in college to do is to think for himself and to unify his world. He usually makes a poor business of unifying his world. And the reason is clear. He does not succeed in unifying his world for the simple reason that he has no world to unify. He has not acquired a knowledge of a sufficient number of facts in order even to learn the method of putting facts together. He is being told to practise the business of mental digestion; but the trouble is that he has no food to digest. The modern student, contrary to what is often said, is really being starved for want of facts.

But if that condition prevails in the sphere of general education it is tenfold worse in the sphere of the Christian religion and in the sphere of the Bible. Bible classes today often avoid a study of the contents of the Bible as they would avoid pestilence or disease. It surely that tendency should be resisted. It does seem to me—hopelessly out of date as it may be regarded—that the first function of the Biblical teacher is to impart a simple knowledge of what the Bible contains. Discussion may come later, but the first thing is to let the Bible—the whole Bible, not an expurgated Bible—the first thing is to let the Bible speak for itself.

The Abandonment of Historical Method.

A generation or so ago this notion of letting the Bible speak for itself, or at least letting the individual Biblical writers speak for themselves, was exalted to the dignity of a principle. The principle was called "grammatico-historical exegesis." The fundamental notion of it was that the modern student should distinguish sharply between what he would have said or what he would have liked to have the Biblical writer say, and what the writer actually did say. The latter question only was regarded as forming the subject-matter of exegesis.

This principle, in America, is rapidly being abandoned. It is not being abandoned in theory; lip-service is still being paid to it. But it is being abandoned in fact. It is being abandoned by the most eminent scholars.

It is abandoned by Professor Goodspeed, for example, when in his translation of the New Testament he translates dikaiaio, "justify," by "make upright." I confess that it is not without regret that I should see the doctrine of justification by faith, which is the foundation of evangelical liberty, thus removed from the New Testament; it is not without regret that I should abandon the whole of the Reformation and return with Professor Goodspeed to the merit-religion of the Middle Ages.

But the point that I am now making is not that Professor Goodspeed's translation is unfortunate because it involves—as it certainly does—religious retrogression, but because it involves an abandonment of historical method in exegesis. It may well be that this question how a sinful man may become "right with God" does not interest the modern translator; but every true historian must certainly admit that it did interest the Apostle Paul. And the translator of Paul must, if he be true to his trust, place the emphasis where Paul placed it and not where the translator could have wished it placed.

What is true in the case of Paul is true also in the case of Jesus. Modern writers have abandoned the historical method of approach. They persist in confusing the question what they could have wished that Jesus had been with the question what Jesus actually was. In reading one of the most popular recent books on the subject of religion—The Reconstruction of Religion, by Professor Ellwood—I came upon the following amazing assertion. "Jesus," the author says, "concerned himself but little with the question of existence after death!" In the presence of such assertions any student of history may well stand aghast. It may be that we do not make much of the doctrine of a future life, but the question whether Jesus did so is not a matter of taste but an historical question which can be answered only on the basis of an examination of the sources of historical information, which we call the Gospels.

And the result of such examination is perfectly plain. As a matter of fact, not only the thought of heaven but also the thought of hell runs all through the teaching of Jesus. It appears in all four of the Gospels; it appears in the sources, supposed to underlie the Gospels which have been reconstructed, rightly or wrongly, by modern criticism. It imparts to the ethical teaching of Jesus its peculiar earnestness. It is not an element which can be removed by any critical process but simply suffuses the whole of Jesus' teaching and Jesus' life. "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." "It is good for thee to enter into life with one eye rather than having two eyes to be cast into the Gehenna of fire"—these words are not an excrescence in Jesus' teaching but are quite at the center of the whole.

At any rate if you are going to remove the thought of a future life from the teaching of Jesus, if you are going to reject the prima facie evidence, you can do so only by a critical grounding of your procedure. And my point is that that critical grounding is now usually thought to be quite unnecessary. Modern American writers simply attribute their own predilections to Jesus without, apparently, the slightest scrutiny of the fact.

This wholesale abandonment of historical method is being summed up in the use of one word—the word "interpretation." Formerly when men had brought to their attention perfectly clear assertions they used to accept or else deny them. Now they no longer deny, but merely "interpret." History, men say, must be interpreted in accordance with the thought of our own age. But I sometimes wonder just where this business of interpretation will stop.

I am in a company of modern men. They begin to test my intelligence. And first they test me on the subject of mathematics. "What does six times nine make?" I am asked.

I breathe a sigh of relief; many questions might have placed me very low in the scale of intelligence, but this question I think I can answer. I raise my hand hopefully. "I know that one," I say. "Six nines are fifty-four."

But my complacency is short-lived. My modern examiner puts on a grave look. "Where have you been living?" he says. "Six nines are fifty-four—that is the old answer to the question."

In my ignorance I am somewhat surprised. "Why," I say, "everybody knows that; that stands in the multiplication-table; do you not accept the multiplication-table?"

"Oh, yes," says my modern friend, "of course I accept the multiplication-table. But then I do not take a static view of the multiplication-table; every generation must interpret the multiplication-table in its own way. And so of course I accept the proposition that six nines are fifty-four, but I interpret that to mean that six nines are a hundred and seventeen."

And then the examination gets into the sphere of history. The examiner asks me where the Declaration of Independence was adopted.

That one also I think I know. "The Declaration of Independence," I say, "was adopted at Philadelphia."

But again I meet with a swift rebuke. "That is the old answer to the question," I am told.

"But," I say, "every one knows that the Declaration of Independence was adopted at Philadelphia; that stands in all the history books; do you not accept what stands in the history books?"

"Oh, yes," says my modern friend, "we accept everything that stands in the history books—hundred per cent Americans we are. But then, you see, we have to interpret the history books in our own way. And so of course we accept the proposition that the Declaration of Independence was adopted at San Francisco."

Interpretation, a Substitute for Denial.

And then finally the examination turns to the history of the Christian religion. "What do you think happened," I am asked, "after Jesus was laid in that tomb near Jerusalem about nineteen hundred years ago?"

To that question also I have a very definite answer. "I will tell you what I think happened," I say: "He was laid in the tomb and then the third day he rose again from the dead."

At this point the surprise of my modern friend reaches its height. The idea of a professor in a theological seminary actually believing that a dead man rose from the grave! "Every one," the examiner tells me, "has abandoned that answer to the question long ago."

"But," I say, "friend, this is very serious: that answer stands in the Apostles' Creed as well as at the center of the New Testament; do you not then accept the Apostles' Creed?"

"Oh, yes," says my modern friend, "of course I accept the Apostles' Creed; do we not say it every Sunday in church—or at least if we do not say it we sing it—of course I accept the Apostles' Creed. But then, do you not see, every generation has a right to interpret the Creed in its own way? And so now of course we accept the proposition that 'the third day he rose again from the dead'; but we interpret that to mean, The third day he did not rise again from the dead."

In view of this modern art of interpretation one may almost wonder whether the lofty human gift of speech has not been rendered entirely useless. If everything that I say can be interpreted to mean its exact opposite, what is the use of saying anything at all? I do not know when the great revival of religion will come. But one thing is perfectly clear. When it does come, the whole elaborate art of "interpretation" will be brushed aside, and there will be a return, as there was at the Reformation of the sixteenth century, to plain common sense and common honesty. It is a very great mistake to suppose that as Biblical teachers you "have a right" to interpret the Bible as you please. Certainly if your interpretation differs from one I have no right to force you, by physical compulsion, to hold my view. But as for you, in the presence of God, the only interpretation which you have a right to hold is the interpretation which is true—not an interpretation which changes from generation to generation, but the interpretation which was held by the original author of the books.

The widespread abandonment of historical interest in dealing with the Bible is not without importance. At bottom it involves nothing less than an abandonment of the Christian religion. For the Christian religion differs from other religions just in being founded, not merely upon permanent truths, but upon events. If certain things happened in the first century of our era, as they are said to have happened in the New Testament, then the Christian religion is true; if they did not happen, then the Christian religion is false, and some totally different religion, such as the naturalistic Modernism of the present day, which is essentially the same, I suppose, as the religion of humanity of the Positivists and of Professor Ellwood, must be substituted for it. Or else—an alternative which I personally might be obliged to prefer—we shall have to get along without any religion at all.

But is the Christian religion really founded upon events? That question involves a question which has actually gotten into the magazines and the front pages of the newspapers—the question, "What is Christianity?"

How shall that question be answered? I for my part believe that it can be answered only by an examination of the thing that is to be defined. I am actually old-fashioned enough to think that if you are going to tell what Christianity is the proper thing to do is to look at Christianity. If I were asked to give a description of the City of New York I should not go into the center of Kansas and evolve a description of New York out of my inner consciousness, but I should take a train to this city, and, having looked the place over, I should try to tell what it is like. So it is with Christianity. Christianity is a historical phenomenon like the City of New York or the United States of America or the Kingdom of Prussia or the Roman Empire. And being an historical phenomenon it can be investigated only by historical means. When you say that Christianity is this or that you are making an assertion in the sphere of history; it is very different from saying that Christianity ought to be this or that, or that Christianity would have been better if it had been this or that, or that the ideal religion would be this or that. The question "What is Christianity?" does not lie in the sphere of ideals; it is not a question about what ought to be, but a question about what is. And as such it must be investigated by historical means.

But how shall we determine what any great movement in its essence really is? I do not see how you can avoid going back to the beginnings of the movement. Unless there is some sort of continuity between the later manifestations and the beginning, the use of the original name is obviously misleading. So it is with Christianity. It is quite conceivable that the originators of the Christian religion whoever they were were mistaken—that is a matter for investigation. It is quite conceivable that they had no right to legislate for all subsequent generations. But at any rate they did have the right to legislate for all generations that should choose to bear the name of "Christian." We can determine what Christianity is only by examining the beginnings of Christianity.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

The last Annual Conference, in session in Reidsville, N. C., asked me to write to the president of the General Conference, Dr. T. H. Lewis, and ask him relative to credits to be given to the woman's missionary societies for funds raised in the local churches. Below is a copy of my letter to Dr. Lewis and a copy of his reply.

Greensboro, N. C., December 24, 1924.

Rev. T. H. Lewis, D.D., LL.D.,

2844 Wisconsin Avenue,

Washington, D. C.

My dear Dr. Lewis:

Our Conference directed me to write and ask you just what credit will be given to the local church, during this quadrennium, for moneys raised by the woman's missionary societies.

The Reidsville church has a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and a Woman's Home Missionary Society. Suppose these societies raise more than 12 per cent and six per cent respectively on the apportionment for the General Conference budget to that local church. Will the local church get credit, or not, for the total raised by the missionary societies?

Also what is the difference, if any, in the relation of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and the Woman's Home Missionary Society to the General Conference budget?

If it is not asking too much, I will thank you for a reply in time to have it for a committee meeting on December 31.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

2844 Wisconsin Avenue,

Washington, D. C.,

December 27, 1924.

Rev. A. G. Dixon, D. D.,

Greensboro, N. C.

Dear Dr. Dixon:

The General Conference took no action changing the relation of the woman's societies to the budget. All moneys collected by these societies, up to $60,000 and $30,000 respectively will therefore be credited to the budget of the local church as was done during the last quadrennium. If these societies raise in the Reidsville church, therefore, as the example you cite, more than 12 and six per cent respectively, the church will be credited for the full amount raised. When these societies shall have collected more than these amounts, the local churches will still receive credit on their budget, but the money will be turned over to the general budget.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society has the same relation to the budget it had last quadrennium, and so has the W. F. M. S.

Yours sincerely,

T. H. Lewis.

Those Report Blanks.

Pastors, please don't forget that your report for first quarter is to be sent in within the next three weeks. I received one from Whitakers charge this morning which looked good. It reported, "Annual conference budget paid in full, and $20 paid on General Conference budget."

Three months of the conference year will soon be gone. I trust that many charges will report the annual conference budget paid in full during the first quarter. And then the last nine months of the year can be given to raising the General Conference budget.

We hope to publish a full statement of amounts paid to date on budgets in next week's Herald, and from that on we will keep before you regularly the standing of the charges.

Group Meetings.

Watch this week's Herald for announcement of time and places for some twenty five or thirty group meetings to be held, from January 21 to February 1, in the interest of Christian education. We are hoping for and expecting the very best of co-operation. We would like to take these group meetings into each local church, but as that is impossible we are asking that you attend the meeting that is nearest to you. If these meetings are well attended they will mean much in Kingdom progress.

Appointments.

January 18—Opening services, Calvary church.

January 20—Meeting Board of Young People's Work, Baltimore, Md.

January 21 to February 1—Group meetings in the interest of Christian education.

Yours in His name, A. G. Dixon.

OBITUARY COMMITTEE.

At the request of Dr. J. F. McCulloch, I am this day asking the following to serve as the Conference Obituary Committee for Mrs. J. F. McCulloch, deceased: Rev. T. M. Johnson, D.D., Rev. S. K. Spahr, D.D., Rev. R. C. Stubbins, Mrs. J. M. Millikan, Mrs. R. M. Andrews, and Mrs. W. C. Hammer.

In behalf of Dr. McCulloch and his family I thank these individuals for this service.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

Hawkins Chapel, Littleton Charge.—I is rather late to say was glad to have Brother O'Briant back with us again this year. He has preached twice since he came back from conference, and his sermons were enjoyed by all who were present to hear him. Owing to the weather on the last appointment, there were only a few who came out to worship.

Our Sunday school is still being carried on by the assistant superintendent, W. W. Hawkins, when our superintendent, Mr. Baldy Greene, is absent, but we hope our superintendent will be with us the remainder of this year, although our assistant superintendent is doing splendid work.

There is sickness among the aged people of the community, who we hope will be able to worship with us again soon.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers,

January 12.

State Street Church, Lexington.—Sunday was a good day at our church, although the rain was pouring down. The attendance was good and all the services interesting and helpful.

Mrs. Bethea presented the church 25 new M. P. Hymnals, which were quite a much needed and highly appreciated gift. Mr. Harold Lanier, teacher of the junior boys, gave all his class Testaments as a reward for good attendance during the past year.

Last Wednesday the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society met with Mrs. Fred Cox. A fair number of the ladies were present. The honorary members were represented by Brother Bethea. We are always glad to have him meet with us. He is so helpful in so many ways. Mrs. Cox led the meeting. There were readings by three of the members. Plans were adopted to take up a regular course of study at the next meeting, which will be held at the home of Mrs. A. H. Evans the first Thursday in next month. Our first quarterly conference will be held next Friday night.

Wish that High Point reporter would sign his or her name. The reports from High Point are always so "newsy" and good.

Reporter.

Fairview, Fairview Circuit.—We have been doing some fine work during the past year in spite of the difficulties we have had. During the summer months the church was remodeled; many things were done to better its looks. Rev. J. H. Bowman left the circuit in good circumstances.

We did not get a preacher at the annual conference as we hoped to do, but were fortunate in getting Rev. Clarence Isley, whose home is near here, and who we are sure is going to do all in his power to make this year the best that Fairview has ever had. We have a fine Sunday school and much good is being done through it.

The first quarterly conference was held Saturday, January 10, and the new officers were elected for this year. We hope to do better this year than ever before.

Elsie Lee.

Concord.—Nothing could have been more refreshing and encouraging than the splendid reports made by the various organizations of the church to the first quarterly conference, held tonight (January 12) in the Baraca room of the church. As pastor, I just cannot refrain from giving some of the outstanding features to the whole church through the Herald.

Perhaps it does not become us to boast of our own folks and their work, but I seriously doubt if any Sunday school in the conference can produce a better all-around report for the last quarter's work than the report made tonight by our superintendent, W. J. Widenhouse. Among the many items of interest, the following stand out: The present enrollment is 315. A year ago it was 221—a gain of 94 during the year. The average attendance for last quarter was 224, while that of the last quarter of 1923 was only 159—a gain of 65 per Sunday. The offerings for last quarter more than doubled the offerings of the same period of last year. The school introduced the Closely Graded Literature this quarter for the Beginners', Primary, and Junior Departments. Perhaps the splendid work done by the superintendents of these departments and their helpers did much to improve the attendance and offering. 97 members of the school were present every Sunday in the quarter. More than 60 were present every Sunday last year. This record was made possible, not by any special or spectacular contests, but by steady push and constant effort on the part of Mr. Widenhouse and his assistants. Although our school is about sixth in size among the churches in cord, it is not unusual for us to have the large-est attendance of all the schools in the city. In fact, it is rather the usual thing.

The Christian Endeavor societies are doing splendid work. Especially helpful are the monthly meetings held every third Sunday at the County Home. The Endeavorers arrange their own program and entertain those old people with much that is worth while. They raised a total of $31.50 in a recent "Golden Rule Sunday" appeal for the Near East Relief.

The Home Missionary Society held a rather unique service some time ago in the interest of the Pine Ridge School—a "Christmas tree" in November!—and sent a substantial offering, as well as three big boxes of clothing, to Dr. Woodford.

The Ladies' Aid Society is collecting funds for the purchase of a piano for the use of the Sunday school.

The treasurer's report was most gratifying indeed. He advised us that all bills were paid up to date, and until February 1 and a small balance is still in the treasury. The assessments for street paving were behind two years. That has been paid in full. The Building and Loan payments are paid a month in advance. The annual conference budget apportionment is paid up to March. The General Conference budget apportionment is behind, but by unanimous action on the part of the quarterly conference, it was decided to make a special canvass of the church membership for funds to apply on this, and that will be taken care of before February 1, in full for the quarter.

The conference decided to put forth special efforts during the next quarter on the devotional and spiritual side of our work. We shall endeavor to improve the spirit of reverence and worship at the regular services and shall carry the spirit of evangelism out into the community and especially to the various classes in the Sunday school.

God has been wonderfully good to Concord this last quarter, and, as pastor of the church, I want to thank Him for His blessing. I want, also, to thank every member of the church for his hearty co-operation.

Lawrence Little, Pastor.

Whitakers Charge.—During the Christmas holidays we held two special services in our church here. On Christmas night we held the White Gift Service and considering the circumstances the service was a success. The weather was bad, there was much sickness and the White Gift Service had never been given here before. However, the results were gratifying. The offering amounted to $23 in cash and a large box of nice gifts. The cash and the gifts were sent to Pine Ridge. It is the pastor's wish that this service be held every Christmas because of the underlying principle. As a usual thing Sunday school children are given too much and it is to be feared that this often results in selfishness. They ought to be taught to give self, service and substance to their King. If they are taught this in youth, it seems to me that when they grow to manhood and womanhood, that we would have a church composed of more liberal givers.

On Monday night, December the 29th, an illustrated lecture, "The Light of the World," was given by the pastor. The slides depicted the life of Christ from His nativity to His ascension. They were instructive and inspirational.

Sadness and gloom came into the heart of a great number of people at the beginning of this year, when the death angel came and took from our midst two of our members. Brother J. M. Cutchin, Sr., having lived to the ripe old age of nearly eighty-four years, was called to his reward on January 1, 1925. Surely a good man and one faithful to his church has gone from us. On the same day Sister Ida Smith was called to her reward. She was also an interested and faithful member of our church. May the grace of God be in the hearts of those who are bereaved.

The work is hindered some just now by inclement weather, yet the outlook is encouraging. We are praying and working for a successful year in every phase of church work. It is the writer's sincere wish that this year will bring health, peace and success in great abundance to all.

Yours and His,

F. W. Paschall.

Mt. Pleasant Societies Are Entertained.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies, also the Ladies' Aid, met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Spoon December 9, 1924. The meeting was called to order by the foreign president, Mrs. Spoon. Devotional services were then conducted by Rev. G. F. Millaway.

A business meeting followed. The quilt, for which the societies have been soliciting names, and which has been pieced by Mrs. Joe Kirkman, was turned over to the societies, and some of the money collected for names on the quilt was then paid to the treasurer, making a total of $13.60 received for names. There was some discussion about giving a pageant. It was then decided to give one the seventh of March, 1925.

After all the business had been transacted, Miss Miriam Spoon called all the guests into the dining room, which was beautifully decorated with wandering Jew, and where hot chocolate, cake, mints, nuts, and fruit were served.

The societies then adjourned to meet again February 4, 1925, at the home of Mrs. John Brown.

Those present were: Rev. and Mrs. G. F. Millaway, Mrs. R. F. Amick, Mrs. John Brown, Mrs. C. E. Spoon, Mrs. T. G. Smith, Mrs. Meyers, Mrs. H. F. Amick, Mrs. N. G. Amick, Mrs. J. T. Shoffner, Misses Sallie Amick and Hettie Lineberry. Mrs. J. T. Schoffner, Reporter.

Calvary Church, Greensboro—The first service held in the new church was a prayer and song service conducted last night by Pastor Gorringer. There were about fifty people present. The formal opening will come next Sunday at three P. M. Sermon by President Dixon. Special music. All friends and neighbors are invited to be present.

Lalah Coble, Greensboro milliner, daughter of the late Henry Coble, died suddenly this morning. She had gone to Piedmont for an operation, and was thought to be recovering health.

—Chicago is drawing too much water from Lake Michigan, the U. S. Supreme Court held last week. For several years that city has been taking 10,000 cubic feet of water a second from the lake, although under an order by the Secretary of War it was limited to 4,167 cubic feet a second. The Court gives Chicago sixty days to get back to the lower amount. Not only the Government but also the States bordering on the Great Lakes contend that the large amount of water used by Chicago has lowered the level of the lakes and thus has interfered with navigation.

—National Thrift Week begins on Saturday of this week, January 17, and continues through January 23.

—The mints are located at Philadelphia, Denver and San Francisco.

—The famous tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen, near Luxor in the Valley of the Nile, is soon to be reopened. Howard Carter, co-discoverer, with Lord Carnarvon, of the tomb, has reached an agreement with the Egyptian government and will begin work there in the near future. There is much work to be done by Mr. Carter and his assistants. Thousands of articles, placed in the tomb more than three thousand years ago, must be specially treated with chemicals if they are to be preserved.

—The worst storm in one hundred years swept the British Isles and the west coast of Europe last week. Many small vessels were lost and even large ships were in distress.

—Joseph McKenna, of California, Associate Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court for twenty-seven years, retired from that Court January 5. On the same day President Coolidge named Harlan Fiske Stone of New York, Attorney General in the Cabinet, to succeed him.

—The sun will be eclipsed on January 24.

—A big snowstorm in New York recently cost that city more than a million dollars. Twenty thousand men, fourteen thousand trucks and four hundred snow plows were required to clear the streets.

HER LITTLE PRAYER ANSWERED.

Alfred Day, general secretary of the Michigan Sunday School Association, tells the story of a little girl who came under his observation. This little girl was a Christian and regularly attended Sunday school though her parents did not. One day the primary teacher gave a talk in which she told her class how they might carry the Sunday school influence into their homes. As a result this little girl decided to read a verse and kneel down and say the Lord's prayer after breakfast each day.

It was a trying moment for the little girl on Monday morning, but she was true to her resolve. The father did not object, and the verse was read; neither was there objection to the little prayer, and with childish faith she stood in the presence of her father and mother, both of whom, however, remained seated at the table. Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday following it was the same. Before the next week was ended both father and mother were on their knees by the side of the little girl when prayer time came. It was not a great while after this that both father and mother were converted and joined the church. —Selected.

And when the examination is carried on without prejudice, the result of it is plain enough. Clearly Christianity at its inception was not just a way of life, but a way of life founded upon a message. If one thing in abundantly plain it is that the first Christian missionaries did not just come forward and say, "We have been living in contact with a wonderful person, Jesus of Nazareth, and we call upon you our hearers to submit yourselves to the contagion of that great personality." That is what modern men might have expected the first missionaries to say. But as a matter of cold historical fact it is perfectly plain that they said nothing of the kind. What they did say was, "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." Christianity at its inception was certainly a strange new type of life; but it was a type of life founded not upon mere exhortation or upon the contagion of personal relationship, but upon a piece of news; it was not a life as distinguished from a doctrine, but a life founded upon a doctrine.

Jesus came, as has been well said, not primarily to say something, but to do something. And all Christianity is based upon the recognition of that fact. Christianity, in other words, is not a philosophy but a redemptive religion; it is founded not merely upon what always existed but upon what happened, not merely upon eternal truths but upon historical facts.

There is one advantage about facts—they stay put. All knowledge is based upon a static view of facts—the knowledge involved in the physical sciences and also the knowledge involved in the Christian religion. When I was very young I used to ask myself whether God could make a thing that had happened so that it had not happened. The question no longer troubles me. Possibly God could do it, but I am quite sure that he never will. A fact remains a fact for millions upon millions of years, and it remains a fact not only here but on the remotest star.

But modern Biblical study is increasingly indifferent to facts. "It makes no difference" is its great slogan where historical questions are concerned. The result is a lamentable intellectual decline. In the evil days upon which Biblical scholarship has now fallen one can almost long even for the errors of the past. The Hegelianism of Baur and his associates was no doubt a serious error; but unlike modern pragmatism it was not an error that discouraged intellectual life.

Many of you no doubt disagree with me about the facts of Biblical history—about the Virgin Birth of Jesus, his miracles, his resurrection. I certainly cannot hope to convince you, in the half-hour which is now at an end, that I am right and you are wrong. But let us be clear about one point—these things are not matter of indifference. It is upon these questions that the future of the Christian religion depends. The Christian religion is not independent of science—scientific history or the physical science—it is not a harmless and useless epiphenomenon without inter-relation with other spheres of knowledge, but like everything else that is worth while it must seek to justify its place, despite all the conflicts which that involves, in the realm of facts.—J. Gresham Machen, D.D., in The Sunday School Times.

THE LION OF JUDAH.

By Rev. W. A. Ledford.

The sculptors, the artists, the writers, the theologians have selected figures portraying and stressing the gentler side of Christ's nature, till the king-like majesty and peerless strength which John saw on the Island of Patmos, suggested in the reference, "the Lion of the tribe of Judah" has either been overshadowed or sadly neglected. Jesus was more than meek and lowly; yea, He was majestic and powerfully courageous. He never manifested a thought of personal danger. He visited among His bitterest enemies wherever duty called Him, reproving, rebuking, denouncing them; and even cleansing the temple with as much ease and composure as He washed the feet of the disciples. It is written that He hated certain things and despised others; but there is no intimation that He was ever afraid of anything. He prayed earnestly that He might learn the will of the Father, but never for courage to enable Him to do it.

Jesus Christ holds a position far more supreme among men than the eagle among the fowls of the air, or the lion among the beasts of the field. Jesus Christ remains "Lord of heaven and earth" despite all that the powers of darkness have been able to do. It is true that He suffered much while on His mission of salvation in this world; but His suffering was from choice and not unavoidable suffering. All His limitations were self-imposed and voluntarily accepted. He might have chosen the easier and bloodless way to the throne: calling legions of angels to His protection when amid perils of any kind; but while possessing all power in heaven and in earth, He refused any other way than the "way of the cross" to His throne. It is good for Christians to pray that they may possess the dying love of Christ; but doubtless it would be more appropriate for them to pray for His courage, bravery and fearlessness, enabling them to fight the good fight of faith, and get home at last.

The symbol of royal majesty and supreme power has never been so full of meaning and highly honored as when applied to Christ, "the Lion of the tribe of Judah." In possession of such power, dignity and glory and yet He consented to become the Lamb of God to be slain for the sins of the world. His humiliation and sacrifices in behalf of sinful men were the greatest possible. Ten thousands should sing daily in the language of Alfred Tennyson, "Strong Son of God, immortal love." Surely a lack of understanding has caused the world to reciprocate His matchless love so poorly. The Lion should be as prominent in the world's sculptors, art, literature as the Lamb.

TO ALL PASTORS AND FINANCIAL LEADERS.

Each church has its financial problem. In any local self-sustaining church of one hundred members, each with an income, the financial problem is one one-hundredth part solved when one member tithes. When fifty of the hundred members tithe the problem is one-half solved. When the entire hundred members tithe the problem is fully solved—except to decide what to do with the surplus! Wouldn't that be something new under the sun, a church handling a surplus instead of a deficit!!

In view of the fact that February is stewardship month, President Dixon suggests that I call attention to a simple and inexpensive plan by which tithing literature may be distributed to church members through a period of months.

Drop a postal card to the Layman Co., 35 N. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., asking them to send you their sample package of tithing literature and their offer to pastors. What they send you will explain fully. The offer in brief is: You examine the samples. If you do not care to buy, return the samples and they will refund your postage. If you wish to buy, send them 40c for the samples when you make your first order and they sell you at forty per cent discount any literature you order. That is, you pay at the rate of 60c per hundred, postage prepaid for any leaflets listed at one dollar per hundred, as most of them are, or same per cent discount no matter what the price. You agree, if you accept their offer, to order at intervals through a period of months, but may terminate your agreement at any time by simply notifying them of your purpose to do so.

For conciseness, clearness, convenience, and cheapness no literature on tithing, I think, compares with that offered by The Layman Co. "Layman" has been almost fifty years building up these leaflets, taking out of his own pocket the necessary funds to meet any deficit in the publishing and distributing of it. He does this because he has learned the blessedness of tithing and wants others to know.

Our Mebane Baraca class is distributing this literature to our Mebane church members.

DR. LEWIS WILL BROADCAST.

The date has been changed to Sunday morning, January 25, 11 o'clock, Eastern standard time. The change was unavoidable. As stated in the previous notice the entire service of our Rhode Island Avenue Church, Washington, Dr. Lewis preaching the sermon, will be broadcast by WCAP. While the sermon will not be strictly denominational it is, however, in the nature of a message to the entire church and as such will make its appeal to our entire constituency. Letters have come to me from Illinois, Ohio, West Virginia, New York, and other places, stating that their churches are preparing to tune in and reproduce the service. Not myself alone, but I am sure a great many of us hope a large number of our churches will take advantage of this opportunity.

It is not difficult nor impractical. If it is not convenient to erect an aerial, which, however, is best, many instruments are accessible with inside loops or built-in antennae. Be sure, however, to set up the receiving instrument not later than Friday night preceding and locate WCAP. It happens that WRC of Washington also broadcasts on the same wave length but on alternate nights with WCAP. Should you fail to locate the latter Friday night you could probably get WRC Saturday night. I shall be pleased to answer any letters on inquiry.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

Foreign Missions Convention of the United States and Canada, Washington, D. C., January 28 to February 2, 1925.

Prayer is the method which relates the irresistible might of God to the missionary enterprise.

The church has not yet discovered, still less begun to realize, the limitless possibilities of intercession.

"In everything . . . let your requests be made known unto God."

This convention will bring together from all parts of North America officially appointed representatives of the foreign mission boards of Canada and of the United States. There will also be in attendance missionary leaders from Great Britain, Europe, Asia, Africa, Latin-America and other parts of the world.

No assembly of a similar character has met since the World Missionary Conference at Edinburgh in 1910, nor has any such gathering been convened in North America since the Ecumenical Missionary Conference of 1900.

Its purpose will be to give a fresh vision of the foreign missionary enterprise of the church as it is today, to arouse an enlarged enthusiasm for the task and to deepen the conviction of Christian people regarding their foreign mission responsibilities.

The deliberate conclusions of the Edinburgh Conference, which may well be reviewed at this time, reiterated the "necessity for prayer as the one victorious force" and emphasized that every visitation of the Spirit of God resulting in spiritual awakenings in the home church and on the mission fields is in itself a convincing evidence of the reality of prayer.

"The supplication of a righteous man availeth much in its working."

"Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do."

Therefore let us pray:

That throughout the whole world there may be an increasing number of those who, fulfilling the exacting conditions of effective prayer, will give themselves to the mighty ministry of intercession that devastating failure may thus be averted and victories achieved by the releasing of the great spiritual forces of the Kingdom.

That the leaders of the church, both men and women, by the utter extremity of the present world situation and the consciousness of human failure may be cast upon God and in unity of faith may lead His church to avail itself of the unclaimed wealth of His exhaustless resources.

That, under the guidance of the Spirit of God, the various committees and all those upon whom rest special responsibilities in connection with the convention may be enabled to plan and carry through wisely and effectively the arrangements for this great assembly.

That throughout the sessions of the convention there may be an overmastering sense of the presence of Christ and that the speakers may be given the endowment of His Spirit and the persuasive power of His love.

"The harvest is rich, but the laborers are few; so pray."

"Wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him."

That all delegates may be led into a richer fellowship with Christ in His breadth of vision, His depth of insight and His purpose for the world and may carry back to their home churches a deepened conviction of responsibility and a contagious passion for world service.

That as a result of the convention the workers in the mission fields may be inspired with new hope and courage and our home churches come to a larger recognition of their obligations and be led to undertake, with courageous faith and in fellowship with indigenous leadership abroad, the greater works of the Master's program for His church.

That in this day of peculiar need and opportunity the church may rise to her privilege and with the abandonment of love and devotion give, with selfless interest, of her life and treasures for the advancement of the Kingdom.

That with daring faith and decisive obedience we may pray, "Our Father, Thy kingdom come. They will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

"Unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think—be the glory."

—Mrs. Coble, widow of the late G. W. Coble, died today about three o'clock at the home of her son, Mr. M. A. Coble. The funeral service will be held tomorrow from the First M. P. Church, and interment will follow in Pineview cemetery.

SOCIETY TO REPRINT WHEELER'S HISTORY.

Arrangements for reprinting Wheeler's History are being made by the John Hoyle Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, at Hickory, through Mrs. E. L. Shuford, organizing regent, it was announced yesterday.

The last two copies of the history recently sold for $25 and $50 each.

Advance subscriptions for the reprinted work are being solicited at $4.00 per volume. Hickory, N. C., January 9, 1925.

—A tragic accident is reported from Western Maryland College. A sled laden with students and teachers collided with an automobile. One of the students, a theologian, was killed and six others were hurt. One of the injured was a lady teacher of mathematics.

—The wife of Rev. J. W. Clegg has been operated on for appendicitis and is in a serious condition. She is in Long's hospital.

—President Andrews went last week to Chicago to attend an important meeting of educators. He gave report of his trip in chapel at the college on Monday morning.

—People do not yet realize the dangerous nature of gasoline. Charles Scott near Greensboro went out in the early morning to draw some gasoline from a truck to lend to a neighbor. The lantern overturned, the gasoline ignited, Mr. Scott's house and furniture and the truck were burned up, and Mr. Scott was painfully burned.

THE EVERY-MEMBER CANVASS—THE ENVELOPES.

Some weeks ago a minister at one of the district conferences made some inquiries with reference to the every-member canvass which we have attempted to answer in this series of articles. We announced a school of methods, and each week since that time some phase of this financial plan has been under discussion.

This week we will discuss the envelope. It is just as important to the success of this plan that the envelopes be in hand on time, as it is necessary for a carpenter to have his tools with which to work. The envelopes should be ordered in advance, and should be distributed before the beginning of the fiscal year of the church. We advise the use of the duplex envelopes, dated, and numbered, with the supplies for a year enclosed in a neat carton, substantial and attractive so that the subscriber will take pleasure in hanging it up in his home. The two-pocket envelope, printed in two colors, one side for ourselves, and one side for others, can be had for a slight additional cost, and are well worth the money.

The duplex envelope is not merely a double envelope. Integral parts of the system are first, a set of fifty-two envelopes for each contributor; second, printed to meet the special requirements of the church; third, dated consecutively for each Sunday in the year, numbered to correspond with the number of the contributor on the books of the treasurer, the entire set having the same number.

It will be worth while too to get the initial offering envelope. They will pay for themselves in the average church. Special envelopes for the special days of the church will be provided by the boards and societies without expense to the local congregations.

A good church treasurer's book can be secured from either of our publishing houses for a record of all contributions. A system of monthly or quarterly reports should also be established. All of this is necessary, and this material properly used will mark the difference between system, and haphazard methods. This system will not appeal to the church that wishes to give just as little as possible, but the church that gives freely and intelligently will welcome this up-to-date method which is proving so successful in so many wide-awake churches.

The canvassers should have a list of the members of the church, both children and adults, including those friends of the church who attend and contribute. They should also have a memorandum showing the sums each person to be seen has contributed for the previous year.

I wish to repeat here what has already been said in another form. The poorest way in the world to secure your canvassers is to ask for volunteers. Every member of the teams should be carefully selected, and his consent secured before the appointments are announced. Next week we shall discuss the preparation for a successful canvass.

Charles H. Beck.

—Miss Bessie Wagner seems to have changed her name. At any rate it is changed on our subscription list to Mrs. E. P. Tatum, and the postoffice is also changed to Spencer, Va.

Suggestions for the Meeting.

Write to Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, 516 North Charles street, Baltimore, Md., and ask him to send you any literature he may have appropriate to this topic.

Make a poster of denominational leaders of our colleges and other institutions, of our leading churches and our missionary workers.

Appoint just as early as possible a conference historian and have him give briefly the history of the North Carolina Conference, telling when and where it was organized, something of its early struggles, its growth, who the early ministers were, how many charges, churches, pastors, Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor societies and church members we now have. (See Conference Journal for these figures.) If this meeting is to be a success the leader, historian and committees for the meeting must be appointed at least two weeks ahead of the meeting.

A Bit of History.

Most of the Methodist Protestant churches were organized between the years 1820 and 1828. In the fall of 1828 the first General Conference composed of regularly elected delegates from organized annual conferences met in St. Johns Church, Baltimore, Md. Our next session, to be held in 1928, will be held in St. Johns Church, Baltimore, Md., and will celebrate our hundredth year as an organized body or as a denomination.

The reason for the existence of this new organization was the question of mutual rights in church government between laymen and ministers and equal representation in conferences and the executive councils of the church, where the voice and the vote of a layman meant as much as a minister's in establishing the government and polity of the church. There were thirteen conferences represented in the first General Conference. At present there are 31 conferences. Rev. Nicholas Sneath was president of the first General Conference. Rev. T. H. Lewis, D.D., is president now. Our first church paper was called "Mutual Rights" and now under the name of "The Methodist Protestant" is the oldest church paper in existence. We have three leading church papers, "The Methodist Protestant," "The Methodist Recorder," and "The Methodist Protestant Herald."

Organization.

The organization of the Methodist Protestant Church is very simple. First are the local churches in the different communities and these are organized into the annual conferences in the different states. All the annual conferences are united in one General Conference. This is the highest law-making body of the church and meets every four years, and is presided over by the General Conference president. The annual conferences are presided over by the conference presidents. The General Conference president is elected every four years and the annual conference president every year.

Loyalty and Co-operation the Key-stones of Denomination.

No organization can possibly succeed and prosper unless there is loyalty among the members of the organization, neither can a denomination, though Christian and holding Christ as its head, its guide and leader; and where there is loyalty there will be co-operation. I may not like all that my church does or all that the leaders of my church do but that does not justify me in not doing my full duty to make my church a great power in kingdom service. It does not justify me in not doing all I can do to make my church a power in the community in which I live or a great world power for Jesus. Nothing justifies me in being unfaithful to every requirement of my church, in being loyal to all her regulations and in attendance on all her services. I am under obligation to do all in my power to advance all her interests and to make the church the most popular place in the community. As a member of a church I am in duty bound to co-operate in all the denominational activities and do my best to make my church a world power in missionary work and the sending of the gospel to all nations.

Question Box.

(The leader of the Question Box should be appointed a week or more ahead and should be able to answer all the questions himself so that if those present cannot answer he can.)

1. How old are we as a denomination?
2. Where was the first General Conference held?
3. How long ago? When will the next General Conference be held?
4. Who was president of the first General Conference?
5. Who is president of the General Conference now? How long has he been president? When does his term expire?
6. Who is president of the North Carolina Conference?
7. How often do we elect annual conference presidents? General Conference presidents?
8. How often does the General Conference meet? The annual conference?
9. Where will the next annual conference meet?
10. How many churches in the North Carolina Conference? How many members in the Sunday schools? In the Christian Endeavor society? In the church?
11. How many ministers in the North Carolina Conference?
12. How many countries have we missionary work in? How many missionaries in each country?
13. What organizations of the church are carrying forward the home missionary work of the denomination?
14. What organization in our conference helps to build churches in new places, and helps to support pastors in new fields and so is largely responsible for the growth of the Methodist Protestant Church in North Carolina?

Can Our Christian Endeavor Societies Help?

They can help to put on the every-member canvass which is simply seeing every member and finding out what each will give weekly or monthly, and so help their church to raise the budgets—making their church a 100 per cent church financially. They can band themselves together in a boosters club, the object being to boost every good thing the church has as her program, and especially the financial, and spiritual side of the work—working for new converts and for new members, for better attendance at church and Sunday school. They can be a pastor's aid society, helping him to carry out his work and make it efficient by their prayers and co-operation.

COME ON, THE REST OF YOU PREACHERS.

Last week's Herald carried an appeal to the ministers of the conference to lead out in the matter of registrations to our Young People's Conference to be held in High Point College in June. I am especially anxious to have as large a list of the ministers as possible to head the list. I am very much gratified that so many have responded, either with their 50c fee or with a postal card saying, "Count me in on that."

The following ministers have already sent in their registrations: Surratt (and wife), Ridge, Dixon, Pierce, Hunter, J. D. Williams, Gerringer (and wife), Harrison, Bethea (and wife), Paschall, Little (and wife), Stubbins, and Johnson.

Just thirteen! A lucky dozen!

But where are the nine?

Seriously, fellow preachers, I want your name on the list before I publish the whole list. I have nearly a hundred registrations, all received last week, and I wanted to list them in this week's Herald, but I want at least fifty preachers to head the list. Won't you help me? Please send me fifty cents by return mail—you'll have to hurry to get it in by time for next week's paper!—or send me a postal card, and I'll credit you! Please do it now! We want you at the head of the list! (Note to Christian Endeavor societies and Sunday schools: why not register your pastor for him, if his name is not included in the above list, and send me a fine long list in addition? I dare you to!)

The fees are: fifty cents for grown-ups, and twenty-five cents for children. The proceeds of the campaign will go toward paying the expense of our Young People's Conference, to be held at High Point College, June 16-26. Come on, let's go!

ANOTHER LITTLE CORRECTION.

In the outset let me apologize for undertaking to fix any date. The two dates which I thought I knew have been ruined, viz: The discovery of America by Columbus in A. D. 1492, and the exodus from Egypt in B. C. 1492. The first of these was ruined by the boy's rhyme; the next by some simple fundamentalist or sap-headed modernist or fool of some other denomination. I have almost no memory for date. Some facts I do know.

Among these are that on a certain day I washed hog chit'lins for the first and only time—that on the same day, I wore my first and only pair of white kid gloves—that I bought them from the store of Harris Crews

THE MANSFIELD CLAN.

The Mansfield family were clannish—so clannish that people who did not know them very well thought they were sufficient unto themselves. They had just as good a time in their own family circle and were just as bright and entertaining as when they were out in society. Besides the father and mother, there were five Mansfields.

Bob was the oldest. He had just graduated from college, and had gone into his father's law office. Katherine was next; and she was studying music. Preston had just started his sophomore year in college, and Irene was still in high school. Lillian, the five-year-old youngest, was everybody's pride and joy.

They lived in a great big old-fashioned house on the outskirts of the town. Mr. Mansfield had purchased the house because Mrs. Mansfield had always wanted a house big and roomy and comfortable. And this house was all three. It was furnished in true Mansfield style—everything for comfort, and yet everything in exquisite taste. The rooms of the various members of the household were fitted up according to each one's own ideas. Any one walking into Katherine's room would have at once surmised that the occupant was a lover of music, for pictures of some of her favorite composers adorned the walls. Her desk usually had a pile of music manuscript on it, for Katherine often composed simple little tunes to the words of some of the poems which Preston and his chums wrote.

Irene's room was all girl. Sweet sixteen seemed to permeate the atmosphere. Bob's looked like a real student's, books and magazines holding full sway; while Preston's room was pretty much of a mix-up," as Katherine expressed it. Lillian's room was pretty and dainty and white.

On evenings when all the members of the family were at home, they loved to gather around the big open fireplace in father's study and talk. They always talked over the things which lay nearest their hearts in the family circle.

Sometimes friends would drop in and join the fireside group. They were always welcomed cordially into the circle and drawn into the conversation. Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield always knew where their boys and girls were, when they went out for an evening. For no pleasure was complete unless it had been discussed before and after in the family clan, and mother had been consulted as to what should be worn, and many other things.

Yet there was nothing unusual about the Mansfields. They were just a happy, healthy, normal family.

One day the postman brought a letter bearing a foreign postmark. It was from a cousin of Mr. Mansfield's. He wrote that his son was coming to America to study social conditions in connection with some writing he was doing, and he wondered if the Mansfields would open their home to him.

Now, as I have said, the Mansfields were clannish, and the idea of a perfect stranger coming into their home to be one of them did not appeal. As usual, the subject came up for discussion in the fireside talk. Mr. Mansfield was inclined to think that it was their duty to take him in. Mrs. Mansfield pictured Bob or Preston going away from home into a strange country, and how much it would relieve the rest of the family to know that a real home would be open to take them in.

"That's all very true," Katherine answered; "but be that as it may, a home isn't the same when a stranger comes into it. It's all very well to entertain guests for a while. I enjoy that as much as any one, but it is a different proposition when you will be called upon to entertain. It may take this cousin months before he decides that he knows enough about our social conditions."

"Katherine, you sound positively selfish!" Irene exclaimed. "I think father and mother are right. What is a home for, if you are going to keep the doors closed when there is a real service to be rendered? Let him come, I say."

"I think Irene is right," Preston answered quietly. "If we refused to let this strange cousin come, it would be the first time that the Mansfields ever closed their doors tight."

"Well, I suppose I'll have to cut down my practice for fear of disturbing his lordship when he is preparing some of those extremely scientific and dry papers which he will probably write on social conditions north, east, south and west," Katherine declared, with a toss of her head. "Somehow, music and slums don't go very well together."

"You are right there, Katherine," Bob replied. "There isn't much music in the slums. And I sometimes think we are to blame."

"That's a good one," Katherine laughed. "So we are to blame! What would you have us do, pray?"

"I don't know," Bob replied. "I am just like the rest. I can talk, but when it comes to doing anything very much, I just sit back and say it ought to be done, and don't raise a finger to do a thing."

"Well, it is settled, then, that he is to come," Mr. Mansfield gave a sigh of relief as he said the words. "I will write Cousin Will tonight and tell him that our home is open to Harry, and that he may come at any time."

About a month later Harry Clifford arrived, and he immediately fitted right into the Mansfield household. He seemed to be one of the clan. As soon as he became familiar with the city, he started right in on a keen, interested study of the social conditions. It was not long before the tall figure of the gray-eyed young man with prematurely gray hair came to be a familiar and welcome figure in the homes of the city's poor. It had started in the Settlement House. He had won his way into the hearts of the children and, through them, had gained access to the homes. There was something about his earnest, thoughtful manner that inspired confidence.

One evening Bob evinced a desire to accompany Harry on one of his trips, and Harry's face lighted up with pleasure. When Bob returned home, there was something in his manner and a look in his face that had not been there before. After that Bob was Harry's frequent companion.

At the dinner table, one evening, there was a general discussion of an item that had appeared in the newspaper that day. A young lawyer, whose name was not given, had offered his services to the poor who needed legal advice.

"Listen to what he says," Mr. Mansfield remarked, as he took up the paper and started to read aloud. "Settlement houses have their doctors and teachers, and scores of interested people, and why should they not have a lawyer, also, to be consulted, when necessary, to advise and protect the poor from unscrupulous people who are trying to defraud them of their rights? I am ready to be of service wherever possible, in interpreting the laws of our land to those who are not always sure of what they mean, and to advise them in any way I can."

"I call that a mighty fine stand for a young fellow to take," Harry cried enthusiastically.

"I do, too," Mr. Mansfield agreed. "But from a financial point of view, he is making a poor investment."

"But everything worth while nowadays is not financial," Bob responded quietly, as he pushed back his chair and rose from the table.

One Saturday afternoon, several weeks later, Katherine, dressed in one of her prettiest, fluffiest, pinkest gowns, her hair held in place by a broad band of ribbon of the same shade, strolled out on the porch and threw herself in the hammock. She looked slightly bored, and as she swayed gently to and fro, she tapped her foot impatiently. The screen door banged, and Harry and Bob, clad in white trousers, blue coats and soft Panama hats, their feet encased in low white shoes, came out.

"You two look as though you were off somewhere for a good time," Katherine drawled languidly, "while I have nothing to do to kill time. I practiced all morning, and mother told me I had better rest this afternoon. But I am bored. Won't you take me along with you?"

Bob looked at Harry. There was a quizzical look in his eyes.

"What do you say, Harry?" he asked. "Shall we take her with us?"

Harry hesitated for the fraction of a minute, but Katherine noticed it and, with a characteristic toss of her head, said:

"Oh, I wouldn't intrude for anything!"

"You would not be intruding, Katherine," he answered quietly. "I hesitated because I was uncertain as to whether you would enjoy yourself where we are going. You see—"

"Wait," Bob commanded. "If Katherine wants to come with us, let her come; but don't tell her where we are going until we get there."

"That suits me to a tee," Katherine laughed. "Wait until I put on my hat and get a parasol, and I'm with you."

They walked a few blocks, and then boarded a car. Katherine was unusually vivacious, and she kept the two men in a gale of laughter most of the way. They rode to the end of the car line, and then alighted. They walked a little distance along the road, and then Katherine gave a delighted exclamation. In front of them stretched a field radiant with wild flowers and smooth, cool grasses, filled with little children. Some of them were running happily to and fro, some were just sitting quietly, their eyes drinking in the beauty, while others were plucking the pretty flowers as fast as they could. Here and there among the little groups young men and women moved to and fro, stopping to talk here, or pat a curly head there.

Katherine turned to the two young men, a look of questioning in her eyes.

"It's the annual picnic of the children of the tenements," Harry explained. "This day has been looked forward to for weeks by them all, and at last it is here. One day for them away from the squalor and misery of their surroundings. One day absolutely theirs. See that little group over there! How happy they are! How their faces dance with the wonder of the beautiful country!"

Katherine's eyes were shining with an unusual brightness. It was the first time that she had actually come face to face with the scarcity of pleasure in the lives of the city's poor. A lump was in her throat, and her voice was slightly husky as she said:

"I am glad I came. I needed to see this." She looked around for her brother, and saw him surrounded by a group of little children, faces raised to his with childish admiration.

"Bob seems to have made quite a hit," she laughed, to hide her feelings.

"He certainly has," Harry replied. "I want to introduce you to Miss Manning, Katherine. She is in charge at the Settlement House, and is engineering this; and then I must away, for I have promised to make the lemonade, and it's a gigantic task."

"Can't I help?" Katherine asked.

"Indeed, no," Harry raised his hands in mock horror. "It is a Herculean task, and pink ribbons and white hands would suffer."

After Harry had gone, Katherine found herself listening with eagerness to Miss Manning's account of some of the work that was being done. She asked question after question, deeply interested. As they stood talking, a young man with a grave, earnest face and dignified bearing came up. Miss Manning introduced him as Dr. Wilford.

"This is Mr. Mansfield's sister, Doctor," she explained. "Tell her about your part of the work. She is deeply interested." And Miss Manning left them talking.

Dr. Wilford said: "Come with me, and I will show you some of the material I have been working with."

He led the way down a little lane, talking earnestly of his work as they walked along. When they came to a grove, he stopped. Hammocks had been swung from the trees, and in them lay little children with faces so white and drawn that Katherine felt a painful tugging at her heartstrings.

"These are some of my little patients," Dr. Wilford said. "They are getting better now, and I brought them out here in an automobile. One of the best tonics I can give them is this day in the country. Later on arrangements will be made to send some of them to the country for a few weeks."

The little faces had lighted up wonderfully as the doctor's voice was heard; and as he went from hammock to hammock and said a word to each one, their faces were eager as they replied, and questioned who the beautiful lady was.

"She is Mr. Mansfield's sister," the doctor told them.

How strange, Katherine thought, that everybody seemed to know Bob.

The lemonade all made, Harry started in search of Katherine. Miss Manning directed him to Dr. Wilford. Harry knew of the grove, and straightway turned his footsteps in that direction. When he came near, he stopped abruptly. Dr. Wilford was leaning comfortably against the broad trunk of a tree. The two nurses who had charge of the children were sitting quietly to one side, but Katherine stood in the center of the group of hammocks telling a story to the eager, intent little children, whose eyes never left her face. Harry stood still and listened until he heard her laugh.

"And they lived happy ever afterward."

There was an eager clamor for more, and Katherine laughed, and told "just one more." As Harry Clifford listened, he knew that a new Katherine stood before him.

On the way home Katherine was very quiet. Finally Harry ventured to ask how she had enjoyed the day.

"I enjoyed it so much that it hurt," Katherine replied. "I learned something, too. I learned to know my brother Bob better than I ever did before. Bob, I'm proud of you."

Bob pretended that he did not understand.

"Why, Bob!" Katherine exclaimed. "Do you think any one could spend a day in the company of those people and not learn the names of all who are good to them? I was 'Mr. Mansfield's sister' to them, that's all. Then I know that the young lawyer who was giving his services to the poor was my brother. But you are not going to be the only one, for I have promised to write a musical entertainment to be given in the Settlement House, and I am going to train the children myself."

"Katherine!" both men exclaimed at once. "You're a brick."

"No, I'm not," she laughed, "but I am the sister of one, and the cousin of another."—Ethel Owen, in "East and West."

TO OUR PASTORS AND MEMBERS.

Just a minute or two of your time to consider a matter of vital importance.

You ought to know the situation which has developed, the causes which have produced it, and the remedy which will adjust matters.

The Union Board faces a serious condition which has been brought about by the lack of funds from the missionary societies, and the churches.

This is the time of the year when receipts are insufficient for our work, but practically all foreign missionary boards have a similar period each year when they have to borrow, often large sums, to tide over. One secretary said their board could have supported six missionaries with the interest on money borrowed to use until the churches sent in their contributions.

A number of our churches have not paid anything on the budget, although a good part of their conference year has passed, and not very many have paid monthly their share of the budget, according to the plan.

In our three missions in Japan, China and India, the salaries of our missionaries, native pastors, teachers, Bible women, etc., and the expenses of the schools, medical work, chapel work, etc., must be paid monthly.

It follows that when our churches here do not pay regularly, or delay paying until near the end of the conference year on their budget, serious embarrassment, great anxiety to overburdened missionaries, to whom the natives look for their support, results.

And when the general treasurer says he cannot negotiate further loans, and the board must secure funds to relieve the embarrassment, then a crisis arises, and that is the situation today.

The Union Board is not an agency for collecting money, but has the duty of managing, developing the foreign missionary work of our church by wisely and economically using the money the pastors collect, the members and friends give for that purpose.

The Union Board, therefore, must depend upon the leadership of our pastors and the contributions of our members for carrying on the work.

If pastors and members fail to do their part, the Union Board is bound to fail, for it can only do what the churches provide for by their contributions, and such an issue means disaster to the work for which the church came into being, has its divine commission, and must continue doing, or surrender all claim to relationship to the living, working Kingdom of Jesus Christ.

The remedy is for every pastor to at once take steps to secure the largest possible amount of the budget on his charge, and forward it without delay to his conference treasurer who ought to send it promptly to the general treasurer.

Local churches would better borrow the amount of their budget on interest than to delay paying it, for delay seriously embarrasses the boards, and makes them pay interest on money the churches ought to send in.

I appeal in the name of our Lord to every pastor, every church member to at once solicit, give so as to secure the budget and relieve the situation.

This is a reasonable appeal, it is imperatively necessary to make it, it only asks that duty be done, that church membership vow be paid, and our foreign missionary work, so full of promise, will be cared for.

Fred C. Klein.

QUID PRO QUO.

Gratitude links the past with the future, the debt incurred with the duty to be performed, the service received with the service rendered. The question, "What ought we to do for others?" can not receive a proper answer until pains have been taken to weigh and value all that others have done for us. Benevolence is largely an affair of memory and of the gratitude that memory inspires.—L. P. Jacks.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

News from Randleman.

I am not the local reporter for this place but several things have taken place recently that I feel should be reported, so I am going to tell you folks about them.

First, I want to say that we are located among some of the very best people in the conference, we think.

They have showed their kindness first by trying to make us just as comfortable as they could in their nice, new parsonage. Then by giving us those things which help to eat down the grocery bills. No, we haven't been pounded as hard as some have reported, but we have been remembered by a number of our folks. Mrs. J. M. Howell started the work while we were still unpacking our property by bringing us a nice lot of pears; since then she has given us cake and turnips. Mrs. C. D. Harlin pounded with coffee, sugar, sausage and a nice cake for Christmas. Mr. Ed. Jarrett, sausage, pork ham and pumpkin. Mrs. A. J. Daniel, cornmeal, fresh meat, etc. Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Barker, sausage, ribs and fat hen for Christmas. Mrs. Bell Smith, eggs, one-half gallon pickles, fresh meats and turnips. Mrs. Walter Gray, sausage, pumpkins and butter. Mrs. Bessie Vaneannon, fruit and cake. Mrs. L. R. Hughes, butter, apples and oranges. Mill community, Randleman, by Miss Nora Hughes, a nice Christmas treat consisting of 1½ dozen apples, one dozen oranges, candy and peanuts. Mt. Lebanon Sunday school remembered each of us with nice treat. Mr. Wiley Ward, 10 yards sheeting.

Last Monday a telephone was installed in parsonage. Through the kindness of Mr. Walter Matthews our phone rent will be paid. All these kindnesses make us feel that we are appreciated and make us feel our responsibility more keenly.

We were also remembered by a number of our friends back on Vance charge. We received a number of nice Christmas cards and presents. The Willing Workers Mission Club remembered us by sending a $5 gold piece. This club was organized one day last spring at the Vance parsonage and they are true to their name. Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Davis, Mrs. T. P. Hester and Thomas S. Hester and Mrs. J. E. Pritchard also sent presents for which we are very thankful. These from Vance.

I want to say a few words in regard to our W. H. M. S. of Mt. Lebanon. We met last Sunday night at the church and had a very interesting meeting. The people seem anxious to know more about the work and we feel that when they learn more about the home mission work that we will accomplish great things. We are encouraged to go forward and try to do more for the great cause.

Seven new members were received at the last meeting. I think we have about thirty members now. Several of this number are men but their dimes are worth just as much as ours. We appreciate their interest very much.

We secured three new subscriptions to Missionary Record. We will now have four copies coming to Randleman. We hope to have more soon.

A program committee was appointed to meet and make out programs for the year. We hope this will help to create more interest in the work.

We have a live Ladies' Aid also. With Mrs. J. M. Howell president of the Aid and Miss May Parsons president of missionary society, we are expecting great things from these two organizations. Mrs. W. H. Neese.

Mt. Zion.—Last Sunday we did not have any Sunday school—it rained too hard. Our school is holding its own and improving some considering the winter period. We had a very good Christmas tree and entertainment; took offering for Near East Relief ($7.60).

We put on a contribution contest embracing five Sunday offerings of classes in school; to the teacher of class that turned in largest offering for contest period superintendent gave a prize—"Peloubet's Select Notes on International Sunday School Lessons." Mrs. Augusta Mickey, teacher of cradle roll department, was the winner. Also there were other worthy contestants in this race.

Our superintendent has offered a very worthy prize in contest for 1925. The class that gets most new members and makes highest average of attendance will get a map set composed of eight fine maps, size 36x57 inches, which cover all Bible geography in the different periods, on adjustable, folding steel stand, cost $20. This certainly is a worthy prize and I hope that every member of the school will show their appreciation of the superintendent's interest in the Sunday school by working diligently for the good of the school every day in this year 1925.

We had another official meeting at Mt. Zion Thursday night, January 8, concerning building Sunday school rooms. Nothing definite was decided on. However, we feel sure we will get started some time soon. Some seem to try to believe they are opposed to such an improvement but we will not believe other than that their heart is right and when they become awakened to the fact that a man is required to actually sacrifice to the Master, and not just give the dollar that we can find nothing else to do with, will do their part. We must make a start. No start means no Sunday school rooms. There has never been a time and never will be when we could raise four or five thousand dollars right off the reel, cash down, simply because the people that have it (and we have several of that kind) won't do it. Every member promised to do his proportionate part to church, so there is no need that any one or two, or even one dozen members do these things alone. Therefore, since this is our circumstance we must do such things as building churches, Sunday school rooms and so forth on the installment plan, thereby giving the man with little or no means time and chance to pay their just and honest debts to God. Debts? Absolutely, debts that we owe God for the precious children He has so graciously given us. The most we can do to train them religiously is too little in this day of so much temptation.

We had an interesting meeting, and we feel sure good was accomplished. It takes time and persistence. We are truly thankful for the promise, "Lo, I am always with you even unto the end of the world."

We desire the earnest prayers of the members of the true, progressive, Christian world that we may have success in this great work at Mt. Zion just as God would have us have it.

A happy and prosperous new year to every church and Sunday school in our conference is what Mt. Zion says to you.

C. W. Allen, Reporter.

Pinnacle and Mt. Zion.—It has been quite a while since we have reported to the paper, but it isn't because pastor or people have been idle. The work all seems to be making a forward move. The Sunday school in each church is doing good work and the attendance at preaching services is holding up well considering the weather. Christmas exercises were held at three of the churches, and pastor's people received presents at each of the places.

We have not received what would be termed a general pounding, but have been remembered in various ways, by many different ones, with lots of nice and useful things. Brother T. G. Barber gave us a nice turkey for Thanksgiving, and Brother W. H. Hauser another for Christmas. Brother O. F. Hauser, some nice ham, and several bushels of corn. Brother W. H. Hauser also gave us corn. Brother W. D. Wall, load of wood and shucks. Brother and Sister E. S. Stone, wood, sugar and soap. Brothers J. R. Stone, T. G. Barber and S. T. Kellam, coffee. Mrs. Sid Mickey, sugar. Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Jones, cocoa, baking powder and pumpkin. Mrs. R. W. Gordan, Mrs. R. S. Culler and Mrs. Floyd Lawson, fresh meat. Brother J. F. Whitaker, gallon of nice molasses. We greatly appreciate all these kindnesses, and hope that each one may be doubly rewarded. A. L. Hunter.

Spring Church.—Owing to rough weather, roads and sickness in the community, our attendance at Sunday school and church services has been greatly reduced. Being God's will, we hope these obstacles may soon be removed and we can continue with our regular services.

We all enjoyed the Christmas exercises and tree. The collection was for the benefit of education.

Glad to report Miss Ethel Crews' condition much improved, but not able to leave the hospital yet.

We were all glad to see our young people who are away at school, at home for the holidays. Mrs. R. R. R., Reporter.

January 12.

Letha Gray Lawrence.—On yesterday at Lev el Cross the body of Letha Gray Lawrence was laid to rest. Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk, a former pastor, conducted the service. I presume that a more extended obituary will be furnished. W. H. Neese.

January 12, 1925.

Mecklenburg Charge.—Stallings church is starting the new year with a large attendance for both Sunday school and preaching. Let us keep up the good work. Last year's record was good but we must not be satisfied unless we are improving.

Rev. Mr. Short delivered two mighty good sermons the past Sunday, January the 4th. Many points of interest were brought out and we were conscious of a very tender spot in our hearts as we inwardly determined to strive for higher and nobler things. The evening sermo

It seems from Incognito's second article that the effort to "dehorn" him was thoroughly successful, therefore we need not fear any more gorins. Sincerely, One of Us.

Stop, Look and Listen.

What is it? A pounding, of course. Who in the world ever heard tell of a little local preacher and his wife's being treated in this way? But I suppose wonders will never cease. On the night of October the 21st about 15 girls came over to our house from the little village of Cedar Falls, bringing all sorts of good things to eat and all through the Christmas holidays they have been bringing us nice fruits and candy and even a nice fat opossum and many other valuable presents and $13 in cash.

I live in the same house that I have lived in ever since I was a 13-year-old boy. I am past the 69th mile-post on life's road and the most of those folks have been born and brought up right around me and have known me all their lives. I will preach to my neighbors tonight in the Baptist church at Cedar Falls and will have a good congregation.

Wishing the editor and all who read this a bright and happy new year,

Yours in the Master's service,

G. A. Laughlin.

Cedar Falls, January 4, 1925.

Corinth. Littleton Circuit.—Brother O'Briant has filled two appointments here since conference. Today after service he administered the sacrament. His text this morning was, "It is good to be here."—the disciples' mountain-top experience. His sermon was full of good suggestions and we would be good if we would live up to them.

It is hard to keep Sunday school running this season, literature being delayed.

New teachers this year: class one, Mrs. M. J. Morris; class two, Mrs. Walter Carter; class three, Fannie Barnes.

Anywhere, or almost any time you pick up our church paper, you can see something of our preachers' being pounded. Our pastor has turned around. Brother O'Briant helped us to pound some of his flock who were less fortunate than himself. F. B., Reporter.

Thomasville.—The Ladies' Aid and Esther Finch Missionary Society held a joint meeting at the home of Mrs. Perry January 1, 1925. The meeting was conducted by Mrs. Perry. A chain of prayer by society. Reading by Mrs. Williams on Stewardship Study No. 5. Also reading by Mrs. Surratt on New Year's Greeting. Our new year's resolution is that each member should answer the questions from the "Record" and also answer with a scripture verse to the roll call. Mrs. J. E. Clodfelter.

West Forsyth Charge.—We have not written in quite a while, but we are still on the map, growing some. All of the churches are moving along very nicely, considering everything. All but one had Christmas exercise; every one was a success. We must not forget to thank the good people for the many nice presents received before and during the holidays. So many have given us fresh meat that it is almost impossible to give the names. We also received a nice blanket, handkerchiefs, a nice cut-glass dish, a towel, and beads, candy and fruit for our little girl. The Sunday schools also gave each one a nice treat. We received lots of fruit. All these tokens of love we certainly do appreciate. The people of West Forsyth charge do not forget their pastor and family not only at Christmas time, but throughout the year. We are remembered in a substantial way. May the Lord's richest blessings rest on every one this year. Let us all look to God more and live better.

D. A. Morgan and Wife.

Randleman Charge.—On January the 3d Joseph Brooks Elmore quietly passed on. Mr. Elmore was one of the oldest citizens of Randleman, having lived 86 years. He surpassed the average man not only in number of years but in the stability of his physical constitution. He was a hard worker until only a few years prior to his death. For a number of years he was affiliated with Mt. Lebanon church. On the fifth of January the funeral service was held at Mt. Lebanon, conducted by the writer. Wm. H. Neese.

Bateman.—North Carolina Keaton was born May 11, 1878. She first joined the Baptist church at the age of 13. In this church she was a faithful member for many years. She was married to Brother H. H. Bateman December 30, 1897. She became a member of Woodleys Chapel Methodist Protestant church about 10 years ago. In this church she has been a devoted Christian, and a faithful member.

Sister Bateman died December 8, 1924, at the age of 46 years, five months. She leaves her husband, three brothers, and one sister, with other kindred, and a host of friends who mourn their loss. Sister Bateman had been a sufferer for many years. But through it all her bright Christian life was a delight to all who knew her. And the sweet way in which she lived and trusted our Heavenly Father will always be a great inspiration to us all. May the great compassion of Jesus Christ enfold those whose hearts are broken. And help them to say from the heart, The Lord gave, and the Lord has taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord. R. L. Hethecox.

THIS NEW YEAR OF MINE.

This new year of mine offers me 365 priceless days, each day bringing 24 golden hours, each hour 60 precious minutes, each minute 60 fleeting, but equally precious, seconds. What shall I do with these treasures, each one a bit of eternity, sent me from the hand of my heavenly Father?

Shall I let them slip by me unused? Shall I send them back to eternity empty, or shall they return heavily laden with love and courage, with the work and the joy of a busy, happy life?

Shall each day, as it again enters eternity's gates, tell of my earnest thought, my pure speech, my honest toil? Shall it say that I have been kind to those nearest me, that I have helped some one carry a heavy burden up a steep and weary road? Or, shall it tell of careless, unkind speech, of angry, scornful looks, of an unsympathetic heart?

When this year of mine has passed, shall I be richer in the things that are pure and noble, in the things that abide? Or shall my mind and heart have grown weaker and poorer?

Shall I find myself estranged from my heavenly Father, indifferent to His word, doubtful of His wisdom and His love? Or, shall I find myself nearer to the heart of my Savior, with stronger faith, a surer trust in His guidance, more willing to leave all perplexing questions to be solved in His own good time and way?

My new year is here. Hand in hand we have already set out upon our journey. To all my questioning thoughts concerning the joys and successes, the failures and sorrows that await me, there comes the all-assuring, all-sufficient answer: "The Lord is my shepherd: I shall not want."—Evangelical Companion.

—Among the editor's Christmas gifts this year was one that he feels he should take note of here. It was a five-dollar bank note from some lady in Greensboro who failed to give her name. We judge from the handwriting that she is far advanced in years. Her gift was greatly appreciated. In fact, we felt that the money was too sacred for our use, so we sent it to the Armenian orphans in the Near East. May God abundantly bless the unknown giver.

REAL SUCCESS.

Jeremiah didn't want to speak. When God called him he objected. He felt he was too young. But God said, Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.

In the strength of this commission Jeremiah went. He spoke when it almost broke his heart to give the message he had to deliver. He spoke when he knew everybody was against him. He spoke when the certain result would be personal persecution or imprisonment. He spoke because he knew that God had put His words in his mouth.

His was a sad life; an apparent failure; a life that ended in Egypt away from the land he loved and had labored to save. But was it a failure?

His commission had closed with these words: "See, I have set thee this day . . . to root out, to pull down, to destroy, to throw down, to build and to plant.

Rooting out, pulling down, destroying, throwing down—these are not pleasant things to do, but they are necessary before building and planting are possible. Jeremiah didn't live to see the building finished or the plants come to fruitage, but the work he did made it possible; and his work was a success.

God needs Jeremiah's today. The work is hard; personal sacrifice will be needed; misunderstandings are certain; and there will be heartache a plenty. But the assurance that God needs you and has formed you for this purpose, and is calling you into the work, and will be with you in it, is more than enough to offset all the disadvantages.

Will you respond to His call?—North Avenue Presbyterian Church News.

A FUTILE DREAM.

Self-sufficiency is the canker that gnaws at the root of all religion. It is the futile dream of a small, insignificant world, of which our little self is the great person, whose mind understands everything, whose will disposes of everything, whose money governs everything and whose power carries everything before and whose power carried everything before.

Additional.

Mrs. C. W. Bralley, High Point, toys and books. McClellen, High Point, toys, games, embroidery sets, pictures and kitchen utensils. M. P. C. E. society, Hampton, Va., one box of fruits and cakes. Three persons four years old each had a hand in sending these nice cakes. Their names are as follows:—Theodore Johnson, Frances Walton, Alma Wallace, Wallace Memorial Church, Fox Hill, Va. Miss Martha Parsons, a dressed chicken and dried peaches, also a week's work in the Home, without price.

For these continued gifts and kind remembrances that come to the Home daily, we thank one and all very much. It does us good to know that we are daily remembered by so many kind friends.

Correction.

Home Missionary Society, Hickory Ridge, Forsyth, was reported in Herald dated January 1, 1925, as sending two blankets and one quilt to the Home. This should have been reported two blankets and three quilts.

E. G. Lowdermilk, Superintendent.

Correction.—Mrs. C. V. Hardin, of Tabernacle church, was recently reported to be 92 years old. Her real age is 87 years.

—Clinton A. Vickrey was buried at Moriah church last Monday, Rev. L. W. Gerringer and Rev. T. F. McCulloch officiating in the funeral service.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JAN. 18.The Lord's Supper.

Golden Text: Luke 22:19.

The Central Truth: The supreme idea conveyed by the Lord's Supper is the atonement, set forth by the sacrifice on the cross of Jesus, the Lamb of God Who thereby substitutionally and potentially, takes away the sin of the world.

Scriptural Points.

1, Peter and John are sent to make ready the passover, a feast to commemorate that display of divine mercy in passing over (or sparing) the Israelites in the destruction of the firstborn of Egypt. These two disciples were given particular direction how to find the place.

2. As the disciples assembled, thoughts of the triumphant entry were doubtless uppermost in their minds. They strongly believed that Jesus was going to set up a great kingdom, after the manner of the world. They began to quarrel over the chief places of honor in this kingdom. Jesus rebuked this spirit of selfishness by washing the feet of the disciples, thereby teaching them that real greatness in His Kingdom would be in proportion to lowly service for others.

3. Jesus had an intense longing to eat this passover with His disciples. In a profound sense it marked the dividing point of two great dispensations—the law and the gospel.

4. "Before I suffer." The paschal lamb upon which they were feasting was the most prominent type of Jesus dying on the cross. He was now about to fulfil the prophecies and types of the supreme sacrifice for sin. The dark shadow of death for lost mankind now filled his soul.

5. "Gave thanks." He thanked God for the evening meal, for the wonderful mercy of which the passover was a symbol, and for the privilege of soon dying on the cross in fulfillment of the scriptures. Supreme thanksgiving and awful agony here kissed each other.

6. "Fulfilled in the kingdom of God." The kingdom of redeeming grace came in reality by means of the crucifixion; and it came in power by means of His resurrection. Jesus meant that He would not eat again with His apostles until these two events shall have been accomplished.

7. "This is my body." The broken bread represented the mangled and pierced body of Jesus expiring on the cross.

8. "This cup is the new testament in my blood." The wine represented the new covenant of salvation through the blood of Jesus. It was likewise a pledge of the sufficiency and efficiency of this blood to cleanse from all sin.

9. Jesus pointed out the betrayer by giving Judas a sop, and by giving an affirmative answer to his hypocritical question: "Lord, is it I?" A most fearful woe of remorse and retribution awaited the betrayer. Jesus declared it would have been better for Judas if he had never been born.

10. The other disciples appeared to be thunderstruck by the information that one of their number should stoop to such a dastardly deed. They did not accuse each other. They did not inquire, "Will you?" but humbly and commendably they asked, "Lord, is it I?"

Practical Points.

1. The Lord's Supper is a memorial to perpetuate the memory of Jesus and His sacrificial work. It is also a means of keeping fresh in our memories the amazing love that prompted the sacrifice and the large blessings that flow from it.

2. It is an occasion of the highest and yet most humble thanksgiving. "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

3. It is an unequalled opportunity of feasting upon Jesus, the bread of life. The elements are not necessarily changed into the actual flesh and blood of Jesus, but the believing participant partakes of the benefits of the atonement at the same time that he partakes of the elements.

4. This supper is also a means of communion with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ. Jesus is really present, and to have fellowship with Him is one of the peculiar privileges of this holy sacrament.

5. Let Jesus come into your heart, life, and conduct.—The Word of Life.

"GOOD ENOUGH."

Nothing is "good enough" unless it is well and honestly made—as good as good can be. If a boy does not start out in life with the determination to do the best he can, he will be a "poor tool" when he reaches manhood. It matters not what kind of work that it is you undertake; the idea should ever prevail to do it well. When a boy planes a board, do it well—don't say: "Oh, it is good enough—I guess it will do. It doesn't need to be planed very smooth for the use to be made of it. Nobody will see it. I suppose I could make it smoother if I tried." The one who commences life with such ideas will never amount to much. The boy in the printing office should learn to space his lines evenly, and not say they are good enough for newspaper or even common work. He should keep his case clean and in order so that he can have a clean proof. His press and rollers should be kept in order, and good and clean impressions obtained on even the cheapest and commonest work. He cannot say, as some mechanics, that "it will not be seen," for everything that is printed is made to be seen. Therefore, if for no better reason, let every impression be clearly made, and a credit to your character and reputation as a printer. Mechanics of every kind should learn to do their work well—the best they can possibly do at all times. Let the parts that are not seen be specially well made, and thus add to the strength of the structure. The boy in the store or shop should keep everything neat and orderly, even the goods and materials in the back part of the building where they are seldom seen by the majority of the visitors to the establishment. The farmer boy should learn to make straight rows and even furrows, clean out the weeds among the growing plants, for the latter will not flourish if this is not done. Do your work thoroughly, whatever it may be. "What is worth doing at all is worth doing well," is an old and true saying. Nothing is "good enough" except the very best. If it is not good enough it will soon be bad enough, and the effect on your character as a boy or man will be serious in the end.—Advance.

UNSUSPECTED MALADIES.

Moral diseases are just as insidious as physical diseases. How often we see a man going to his business, feeling ordinarily well and acting ordinarily well. It never occurs to his mind to be greatly alarmed about him, and he is not alarmed about himself at all. And suddenly an acute attack comes, and he consults a physician and finds that for months past an insidious disease has been developing and it is nip and tuck whether he can live.

Exactly the same thing happens in the spiritual realm. The older I get the more I am cautioned by what I see in my friends. Here is a man who was formerly an incarnation of strength, freshening, dynamic moral and intellectual energy. He is still going through all the old forms and using the old words, but instead of freshening the lives of others he spends his time scolding the rest of us because we do not. Here is a man who was famous for his practical sagacity and his judicious tactfulness in handling men, but unaccountably to himself the tactfulness has degenerated into a weak acquiescence and he is only a moral windmill going as he is blown upon. Another man was formerly a strong, well poised, and resolute leader, but about everything has evaporated from him except his self-confidence.

Now these very people to whom I have referred are quite conscious how others are going down, just as we are conscious of how we are going down. But the question comes, where is a similar degeneration in our own lives? Take heed, said the apostle, lest any of you be hardened by the deceitfulness of sin. One of the results of sin is that it takes away a man's consciousness of his own shortcomings. And here comes in Jesus' exhortation, Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.

One of the ways of watching is to keep ourselves spiritually awake by a constant habit of private devotional Bible study. I do not mean to refer to the preparation of sermons and school lessons. I refer to the application of the Scripture to our own personal lives and the review of our deeds in the light of the teachings and example of Jesus Christ.

Another measure that we should enforce upon ourselves is the habit of taking to heart every gentle hint that is given to us by good men concerning our shortcomings. We need not be too much disheartened by the sneers of the censorious, but when kindly suggestions come to us from those who love us it ought to mean a quiet hour of introspection in the presence of God.

Another important means of testing whether we are still in the faith is in the observance of the results of our efforts to help others. So often men who are becoming inefficient hide the fact by delegating the harder tasks to their subordinates while they sit in the swivel chair in the inner office, and flatter themselves that they are having an executive oversight. The chief ought to go out frequently and see if under circumstances where his authority is not known and his official position unrecognized, he can accomplish things as of old. If not, he is another subject to take up very seriously in his private meditation.

At least three-fourths, or thirty-six, of the States must ratify if the amendment is to become a part of the Constitution. (Art. V.) SIDE-LIGHT ON THE MODE OF BAPTISM.

It is most satisfactory to see with our own eyes. The next thing to seeing with our own eyes is to hear, first-hand, the one who has seen with his eyes, relate, or describe, what he has seen. This was our privilege, a few years ago, to hear Rev. W. B. Godby, D. D., in a sermon, state the facts that are to follow, in this article. And to make the matter doubly sure, we had a private, personal conversation with him about the facts herein given. Dr. Godby was more than 80 years of age when we heard him and talked with him. For the benefit of those who may not know, will say that Dr. W. B. Godby in his earlier years was a pastor and presiding elder. Later, college president and author of note. Still later in life, evangelist, traveling around the world several times. Among his writings two or three books on the Holy Land and a commentary on the New Testament. He was regarded as a fine Greek scholar, theologian, and historian.

Now for the facts referred to: He said that in Damascus, on "Straight street," is the house in which Ananias baptized Paul. That at one end of this house is a statue representing this baptismal act; and it represents Paul standing, and Ananias pouring the water on Paul's head. This shows, at least, how the people of Damascus and vicinity understood the manner in which Paul was baptized. No doubt being handed down by tradition from the time it occurred. It is difficult to argue away the force of this fact.

The second fact: At the place on the "way from Jerusalem to Gaza," where Philip baptized the eunuch, he said that there was no stream nor pool at all, but at the side of the road, several feet higher than the road, was a vein, or spout of water coming out of the cliff, and that the people filled their pitchers, buckets, and jars from this spout of water, just as one would from an artesian well or pump. And, of course, the water not caught and used, fell down on the road and made a thin, shallow, watery place, and ran off. Comment is needless. No water deep enough in which to immerse, but sufficiently deep for "both Philip and the eunuch" to go down into the water, but not under the water, but deep enough for Philip to pour some water on the eunuch's head, as Ananias did on Paul in Damascus. And then they both came up out of the water—not from under the water—Philip being caught away by the Spirit, and the eunuch going on his way in his chariot, rejoicing.

The language in Acts 8:26 would not indicate anything favorable to immersion, "The way that goeth down from Jerusalem to Gaza, which is desert," but to see a man of education and intelligence far above the average, and talk with him face to face, who has been on the spot, carries a conviction that cannot be overcome. It is conclusive. There is no room left for doubt or question.

BOOKS—SAVIORS OR DESTROYERS.

It was Carlyle in his "Heroes and Hero Worship" who speaks of Heaven's most precious gift to earth, being, the soul of a man actually sent down from the skies with a God's message to us,—one whose credentials are vision—power, sympathy, sincerity, and zeal for righteousness.

Next in power to a flaming personality is a book wrought out of the forge of a soul white-hot in its convictions, a message which like the sword of Richard the Lionhearted will cut its way through the armor of indifference, apathy, injustice and oppression.

A book is a soul asleep. A library is a graveyard where intellects lie buried. Happy is he who can break through the swathing bands of a soul which lies ensnared in a book and resurrect and within himself re-encounter the majestic thought, the tremendous achievement, the dauntless spirit of some white-plumed crusader who, in his deathless passion for a great cause, left on the printed page the very essence of himself, as a precious heritage for succeeding generations.

Great books, like great personalities, are beacon lights of history. Great books throughout the centuries have indeed been the milestones by which we measure the race's progress. They have been lighthouses whose illuminating and directing rays have saved many times humanity's bark from floundering upon the reefs of failure and sin.

Great poets have ever been prophets of a new era. Great novelists like Victor Hugo and Dickens have heard the bitter cry of children and from the pages of their heart-broken volumes have thundered against injustice and oppression until nations were awakened and the common people were emancipated and granted their rights and recognition.

Who can estimate the far-reaching results of "Uncle Tom's Cabin"? Perhaps more than any other single factor this book pronounced the doom of slavery. What can you say of "Oliver Twist" in its influence in behalf of the once despised and unbaptized classes? Who of the past several generations has preached a mightier sermon concerning sin and its insidious and stealthy approach, its arrogance and defiance of all restraints, its hopelessness and despair, than has Robert Louis Stevenson in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"? Browning's "Saul" pictures to us in letters of fire, "how are the mighty fallen." Like the ruins of a Melrose Abbey or the exquisite Parthenon we behold a life, wonderful in its potentialities, wrecked by indecision and jealousy.

In Eliot's "Silas Marner," we note how love does triumph over hate and greed; in her "Romola" we see the danger of trifling with conscience; of how the little son of today, like a little furry, playful cub, may tomorrow be a full grown, blood-thirsty tiger, with savage fang and claw rending asunder that which is most beautiful and holy.

Who has shown the awful sorrow and heart-break of soul which has outraged God's law and broken his commandment in a more graphic way than Hawthorne in his "Scarlet Letter"? Verily these great life teachers have thundered anew the message of Sinai that righteousness exalteth both individual and nation but that sin is a reproach to any people. Incalculable is the debt which the rising generation owes to these clear-visioned, star-eyed souls who have given their lives to proclaim the eternal verities of the changeless God, warning transgressors, encouraging the dispirited and weak in heart, holding aloft a torch that those who are in darkness might lift up their eyes and follow the gleam of the sun-crowned heights eternal.

But if great books have been beacon lights of history, some have been also decey lights of the soul, will-o'-the-wisps, that have led into the swamp of feverish doubts, into miasma of skepticism, or have turned to a-lake from the narrow way of progress, leading to the King's mansions into the by-way whose end is oblivion and the abyss. Can we estimate the power and the far-reaching influence of the world's great books, who gauge the wreck and despair that follow the train of those volumes which have ignored the living God and his unchanging truths, have substituted for the soul's bread made hypotheses, fine-spun theories, and pretty but empty sophistries?

One of the most ominous signs of the age is the stream of printed filth which comes pouring forth in hoards from the cesspool of moral hearts, tainting and poisoning the minds of youth, leaving a film of mud on the soul and coloring with unreal vision of the rising generation so that commandments of God seem out of date or foolish things, all right perhaps for pre-vious generations, but to be set aside today as worn garments or as something which served its day.

Some one has well said it is "Sex O'clock in America and the two influences most responsible for the deplorable moral sag, lowered standards of sex and decency are motion movie and the tawny book or magazine.

It is high time that the forces of righteousness in this nation arise and cry aloud their voices cannot be denied, that this nation's want of decency and decency is being spewed out in an inky, unceasing out from greedily and conscienceless audience and that purity, righteousness and decency be proclaimed in its stead.

Let us consider the matter of the textbooks that make up the curricula of our schools. The schools of our nation hold in their hands the seed corn of our national and racial future. What shall the harvest be? If we are to have we must not only have trained leaders we must have Christian leaders. Of far greater danger than the "Red" proletariat is the danger of a trained but un-Christian "Intelligentsia."

Thoughtful men everywhere are perceiving there is only one stabilizing force that can save this reeling, tottering world from destruction.—It is Christ or chaos.

We who have made so much outcry against bolshevist propaganda, if we allow our moral and unedited books to be placed in the hands of our high school and college students can turn America, the boasted "land of the free and home of the brave" into a "red darkness" where the "Internationale" is sung instead of the "Star Spangled Banner" and where the red flag of the Communist will float where now we see the Star and Stripes.

Intellectual error is a deadly contagious thing that warps the minds and distorts viewpoints of men, who may have had training and yet having heard the siren song have yielded to its seductive but impure promises. Many thinking men are agreed that we in our schools and colleges which are the fountain-heads of intellectual and spiritual life, keep in our courses of study books which are not only sound intellectually, but spiritual in tone, commending at least to the mind of the reader the fundamental issues of life, and exalting those principles and forces which are constructive and which have promoted the material and moral progress of the race.

Asbury College was raised up of God to emphasize mental culture, bulwarked and safeguarded by spiritual training. This college teaches with no uncertain note the Bible truth of full salvation, of man's emancipation from the guilt and power of sin through the atoning efficacy of Christ's cleansing blood. She believes there are certain basic truths which should be drilled into the minds and hearts of America's youth as a foundation for the superstructure of later life. This course of procedure has met with heartiest approval from godly men and women throughout the entire country and because of it we have today a stream of the finest youth from the Christian homes of forty states and several foreign countries pouring into Asbury College for instruction in both head and heart; and with a consecrated faculty our school is endeavoring to send out from her walls a body of devout and noble-minded young men and women not at sea with doubts, but with a faith that is anchored in a mighty Redeemer and with a passion for Christian service which stamps it as a unique institution among the many schools of America. But today we are facing that of which every orthodox school of our country is aware,—an inadequate supply of text books that are sane, constructive and Christian in their content.

Try as we may, we are continually meeting in the volumes which are recommended for study in Christian schools those principles and questionable theories which tend to demoralize and to create skepticism and doubt along lines, that should be established and fixed in the heartlife of our youth.

Acting on the recommendation of apparently sound and devout scholars we have been compelled to discard more than one textbook during this semester because of the insidious and subversive attacks upon the great elemental and basic truths of the Christian religion.

If the schools of our country which emphasize the teachings and doctrines of historic Christianity are to keep the faith of our fathers living still, we must emphasize at all times untainted books in the curricula of our institutions. While we must encourage an open mind on the part of our students there are certain fundamental truths about which there should be not a scintilla of doubt, because of these cornerstones of faith the whole superstructure of Christianity rests.

Let us today make our plea and our prayer the revival of a devout and humble, but thoroughly intelligent scholarship, that with keen minds and sanctified hearts we may rightly divide the word of truth, that we may discern error and detect good, that we may send out from our presses clean, wholesome, uplifting books abreast of the times but ever exalting him who is the source of all truth.

May we teach reverently the facts of science, of education, of philosophy, holding ever in the background of all our thinking, him who is the Master of life and who sent his inspired servant with a ringing message to a perplexed and uncertain world, saying, "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Rev. L. R. Akers, D.D., Vice President Asbury College, in The Pentecostal Herald.

HOW CAN I FIND GOD'S PLAN FOR MY LIFE?

There are three distinct points of view among modern young people on the subject of God's interest in human lives.

Many young people today are convinced that there is no plan or purpose for individual lives.

Here is the famous statement of one of our modern naturalists:

"Within the visible universe the Milky Way is but a tiny fragment. Within this fragment our whole solar system is but a small speck. Within this speck our planet earth is a microscopic dot. On this dot infinitesimal atoms of a pure carbon and water stir, ever so slightly, for an instant of cosmic time before they are dissolved back into the elements from which they were originally and fortuitously compounded. You and I are two such atoms."

If you are talking with a person who holds that point of view, it is foolish to discuss God's plan for individual lives. He begins the discussion by insisting that the world is a great mechanism in which everything takes place because it has to take place, and when everything is through taking place there is no evidence of a cosmic purpose.

The second group, you will find in school or college today holds this idea: God has a plan for the human race as a whole, but no plan for the individuals who make up the human race.

Some years ago I was lecturing on this subject in a certain city, and after the lecture I walked home with a fine young fellow from Princeton. I said:

"I wish you would tell me what you think of my argument."

He answered: "I can't believe it for a minute that God has any personal interest in individuals. My study of history has convinced me that the human race is marching steadily forward toward a predetermined goal, but I can't believe that God has any interest in my life—where I go to college, what I am doing there, or what use I am going to make of my life after graduation."

He went on to say that there were too many people in the world for any such theory of interest in individuals. It would be incredible, he said, for God to have an interest in people when about 57,000 people die every year. "And consider," he said, "the size of the whole universe! Suppose I represent the orbit of the earth by this little ring in my finger. Do you know where the next fixed star is located? Somewhere on the outer side of Greenfield, twenty miles away. That is the size of the universe, reduced to a scale that you and I can grasp."

The third opinion among young people today is the opinion that I would call the Christian view of life. Let me use an analogy in the hope that it will make this point of view clearer.

Here is a man who has a small son. He makes up his mind he would like that boy to go to college, go on through college to medical school, then take a year or two of postgraduate work in some hospital in Europe, and come back and start in his work as an American surgeon. That father's plan is a plan for a particular child. It concerns that son alone, not the family as a whole, or the other children in the city. But of course such a plan and purpose for that boy's life does not mean that the father cares whether his boy wears on a particular day a khaki suit or a sailor suit. The father can leave such details to chance and circumstance and individual choice. They do not affect the great purpose he has for that boy's life. And of course, again, a great many things may happen in that boy's life which the father does not want to have happen at all. For instance, the boy may go out coasting some day, slip off his sled, and break his arm. The father did not want that accident to happen. What does the father do? He makes a second plan for his boy's life. Now that the boy is crippled and cannot be an operating surgeon, the father must fit him for some other career. The father can be trusted to do that. Any other course of action would be unworthy of a true parent.

In discussing God's plan for individual lives, try to keep in mind some such human analogy! When I am talking about God's plan for your life and mine I do not mean for a moment that I think it was predestined from all eternity that I should wear a black necktie this morning instead of a blue one. I think such small and minor contingencies of life are left open in the case of God's plan for our life, just as they are left open in the plan that any one of us happens to have for his child. Do not think that when you discuss God's plan for your life you are involved in all the intricacies and difficulties of predestination! You are not, practically. Neither does God's plan for your life mean that everything that happens is just what God wants. The world is full of things that God hates, and struggles against, and works to overcome.

I think we can also say this: If human parents, finding that their first plan for their children has been blocked either by circumstance or the blunders of the children themselves, would promptly devise a second plan for the children, we can surely expect God to do as much. God, finding that you and I, either because of tragic circumstances or our own sin or folly, wreck His first plan for us, in His infinite mercy and love will find another use to which He can put our shattered lives, and eventually make something splendid out of us, even though there has been a necessary redirection of our whole career.

God's Plan.

Against that background I can make clear what I think about God's plan for your life and mine.

I firmly believe that God has a definite purpose for your life and for mine—a work that He wants each one of us to do, a particular city in which He wants each one of us to live, a group of friends to whom each one of us ought to give our friendship and help. I believe, however, that in that plan God leaves a great many details to circumstance. I also believe that if either through sin or tragedy God's first plan for your life or mine is interrupted, we can trust Him to find a second use for use somewhere else.

If you want a verse in the Bible that suggests this idea you will find it in the book of Jonah, the third chapter and the first verse: "The word of the Lord came to Jonah a second time." If you ever come to a moment in your life when you think you have missed God's plan for your career and you grow utterly discouraged, turn to that verse. "The word of the Lord came a second time." That is what happens to many of us: we find second chances.

Can I give reasons for accepting this view of life? I have two reasons.

The first is this: I believe in God's plan for my individual life and yours because it is the obvious conviction of Jesus Christ.

Turn to Matt. 10:29: "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? Not one of them shall fall to the ground without your Father." Now turn to Luke 12:6: "Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings? And not one of them is forgotten before God." One Gospel reads that five sparrows were sold for two farthings, and the other that two were sold for one farthing. In Jesus' day one of the common articles of food for the poorer people was sparrows. These birds were so cheap that they were sold two for a denarius; or, if you wanted to spend two denarii, you could get not four but five, for the storekeeper would toss in an extra one. What does Jesus say? He says that even creatures as insignificant as that have their place in the thought and love of God. Nothing that happens to them is overlooked. "Fear not! Ye are of more value than many sparrows." "The very hairs of your head are numbered." Jesus obviously believed in God's individual interest in individuals.

The second reason for believing in God's purpose for individual lives is this: Individual lives are the most valuable things in the whole universe. If God cares for anything, He must care for individuals.

The most precious thing is not some object of the physical world, a mountain or a hill, a tree or a lake. There is something finer and stronger than any such object. Do you remember the little jingle that somebody wrote about General Goethals, who superintended the building of the Panama Canal?

A man went down to Panama,
Where many a man had died,
To slit the sliding mountain,
And lift the eternal tide.

A man went down to Panama,
And the mountain stood aside.

There is something in the world greater than any object of the physical universe. What is it? It is human personality. When you admit that obvious fact, that human personality is the greatest thing we know, you are face to face with this interesting corollary: Human personality always comes in highly individualized portions. If personality is the greatest thing in the world, that means individual personality, because personality always exists in the varying forms of individuals.

When I say that God's interest must be in the greatest thing in life, namely, personality, I am committed to the proposition that God's interest in personality means God's interest in individuals, in you and me and every one else. Jesus' belief is not something that runs counter to common sense. It is something that is backed up by the best and most intelligent thought of intelligent people.

How Find It?

Assuming that God has a plan for my life, how can I find what it is?

There are four concrete ways by which earnest and sincere people can discover what God wants to with them and through them.

First, if you want to find God's plan for your life, study your endowment!

What is the thing you can do? Where do your abilities lie? What is the kind of work you can do best? There is the first suggestion or indication of the work God wants you to do.

Here is an interesting verse which has been a profound help to me, Luke 11:33: "No man lighteth a candle and putteth it under a bushel, but putteth it on a candlestick, that those who enter the house may see the light." All of you realize that that record of Jesus' teaching has come down to us largely through a process of oral transmission. Jesus died about the year 30 or 33 A. D. The first extant Gospel was written about the year 70. Therefore there was a whole generation in which the record of Jesus' teaching was passed on by word of mouth. During that period of oral transmission the account of the exact circumstances under which Jesus spoke many of the parables and the matchless sentences of the Sermon on the Mount disappeared, and we have only the record of the actual words. No one has any idea of the circumstances in which Jesus spoke those words about the candle and the candlestick. My guess is that Jesus was discussing the relationship between a person's ability and his life work. What does He say? No human being will light a candle, then take that candle, all aglow with radiance, and put it under a box, where it is sure to be wasted. "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father!" If people will not waste candles, God certainly will not waste personalities. If God has given you some particular ability, the power to bring a certain radiance into life, you can count it absolutely sure that in your life work, somewhere, God will provide a use for that particular power.

The second suggestion is: Study the actual needs all about you!

It is queer that some people, face to face with a real human need, and asking themselves where God's plan for their life lies, will resolutely shut their eyes to the work right in front of them, and go off looking elsewhere for the work God wants them to do.

Here is a story out of the experience of many a minister.

A young girl comes home from boarding school, saying: "I want to find God's plan for my life." She comes back to a town where there is a church that is making a tremendous effort to reinstate itself in the life and thought of the rising generation. On Sunday this girl says:

"The minister's sermons are pretty dull three times out of four, so I think I will skip the next three Sundays. His Sunday school is not very good. They are losing all the children in the community. I don't want to have anything to do with a losing venture, so every one must excuse me from helping out in the Sunday school. The club for working girls is in need of help, but I have a good many social obligations just now. Please find some one else for local church work."

And then, when the minister says in discouragement, "All right, I will see if we can get some of the people over fifty to do this work," she has great consolation in his departure!

The other day one of the finest women in my church said to me: "The thing that puzzles me is this: What is going to happen to the church when the older generation drops out? We are the only ones, apparently, who have a deep sense of loyalty to the institution. These young people you talk to at schools and colleges and conferences will come to church just as long as they get something out of it, but the minute they feel that the return is less than the investment, they stay away. Only a few of them have any sense of loyalty to the church as an institution."

If you want to find God's plan for your life, do not think that it is necessarily in another city, or another church, or somebody else's Sunday school! I wonder if you realize how much of an opportunity there is in the work that is now being undertaken by churches like your own, right at home.

Here is the third suggestion: Study the actual opportunities open before you!

It would be a very interesting thing if we could look ten years into the future and see the personal problems some of us will be facing. Let me describe them in a kind of prophetic way.

Ten years from now some of you will be saying: "If I could only break free from my family, my home connections, the town in which I have to live, the church in which I was born and which I ought to support, the family tradition that lays a great responsibility on me! If I could only go somewhere else! Then I would find God's plan for my life!"

Three or four years ago I was talking with one of the most successful social workers in New York. We were discussing this very problem, and finally this lady said:

"My life has been a strange failure. What God wanted me to do was to complete a piece of social service work in the Near East, but I never could get there. My sister fell sick, and I could not leave home. Now it is too late to go, and here I have been ever since." Then her voice broke as she added: "I am afraid I have missed God's plan."

Then I thought of the families on the East Side that I know—families that rise up and call her blessed because of what her life and friendship have meant to them. Did she miss God's plan for her life? I cannot believe it. Many of us have felt she was just where God wanted her to be.

If God puts you in a place where there is a wall around you too high to climb, too wide to pass around, too thick to burrow through, and you are a prisoner there, do not think God's will for your life is somewhere else! If you find barriers about your life that you cannot possibly climb, then you can say quietly and confidently, "Here is God's will for me!"

And fourth: Remember that no matter what happens to you and to me, God can always be trusted to make some use out of our lives, if we will let him.

This is the experience of ten thousand times ten thousand—men and women for whom God has made second plans when sin or circumstance has wrecked the first. Make the most of yourself for the sake of those who love you and need you, then let what will happen, happen! God can be trusted to make the most out of you just as long and just as often as you try to make the most out of yourself.—Rev. James Gordon Gilkey, pastor of South Congregational Church, Springfield, in the Record of Christian Work, Northfield.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Among the Churches.

Wednesday night, January 14, I spent with our people on the Weaverville charge. We met at Clarke's Chapel and discussed the work at length. As a result of that meeting Rev. C. W. Bates, chairman of that district, has been asked to co-operate with me in securing some one, or ones, to preach regularly at Weaverville and Mt. Zion; and Rev. Fred R. Love will serve the Clarke's Chapel people until such time as we are able to find a pastor who will be satisfactory to the entire charge. We ask the co-operation of all who are specially interested in that charge in helping us to find such a pastor.

Calvary Church Opening.

Sunday, January 18, was a rainy day, but in many ways it was a bright day for our Calvary church people. The pastor, Rev. L. W. Gerringer, preached a very appropriate sermon at the morning service, after which the Lord's supper was administered. A large majority of those present communed. The afternoon service was designated as the formal opening service for this new church. The Methodist Protestant people from the surrounding churches were present in goodly numbers, as well as the people of other denominations in South Greensboro.

The pastor made a brief, but very timely address, and Dr. J. F. McCulloch, in well chosen words, expressed appreciation for the large help given in the erection of this church.

Calvary church is well located on a beautiful lot with all the room they will need through the coming years. They have plenty of room on which to build a parsonage and Sunday school rooms.

They are a happy people, both pastor and people are busily at work for the Master, and we predict great success for them in the coming days.

At the evening service we had the privilege of sitting at the feet of Dr. Spahr at Grace church, and listening to him as he so gently and yet so strongly presented the gospel truth. Dr. Spahr is a wonderful preacher of the old-time Gospel.

Group Meetings and Mass Meetings.

With the help of others who are volunteering their services, and who may be pressed into service, Dr. R. M. Andrews and I are putting on a series of group meetings and mass meetings in the interest of Christian education.

We are endeavoring to plan these meetings so that all our people can easily reach them if they will. Please watch the Herald for announcements, and then be sure to attend the meeting nearest you. Meet with us and hear about the good work our College is doing, and join the forces that are making it go.

February.

Please remember that February is Stewardship Month, and that the annual conference asked each pastor to preach to each one of his congregations on this important theme during February. For a means of securing good literature on this great theme see article by Dr. T. M. Johnson in last week's Herald, page six.

Pastors' Reports.

Just as soon as Sunday, January 25, is past, please fill out the blank I mailed you some time ago and mail to me. To save me writing to you for the report please do this not later than January 30. Thank you for this co-operation.

Budgets.

In another column you will find a statement of your standing as a charge on the budgets. This statement was furnished me by the conference treasurer. Some money has been sent to Mr. F. R. Stout and this has not yet been forwarded to Brother Taylor, but will be soon, and then it will be added to the list as it appears in the Herald.

This list will stand in the Herald from week to week. Watch it grow. Help to make it grow.

Evangelism.

We will soon be approaching Easter. Every pastor and every Sunday school superintendent, and all Sunday school teachers should be planning and praying and working to the end that a goodly number of members may be added to each church on confession of faith about Easter time.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

AMOUNTS PAID ON OUR BUDGETS.

31. Roberta	3.50
32. Gibsonville and Fountain Place	3.30
Whitakers also leads on the amount sent G. C. B.		20.00

Watch this space next week to see who is leading and who has headed the Honor Roll. By next week we expect enough in on the G. C. B. to make it worth while to arrange the amounts in order. There are several charges so nearly out on the A. C. B. that we are expecting quite a number to transfer to the "Paid in Full" column. Who will head the Honor Roll? This means to have paid in full both budgets. Whitakers has the lead at present. If there is honor in doing a thing there is greater honor in being first to do it.

YOKOHAMA—ONE YEAR AFTER.

I left Yokohama on a beautiful day in August, 1923. It was then a city of nearly 500,000 people, and the most prosperous port in the Far East. On the first day of September, 1923, a tornado fanned the flames which reduced to ashes the heaps of wreckage to which Yokohama had been reduced by the greatest earthquake ever experienced by Japan. In a few hours, the inhabitants of Yokohama did not number 100 people.

Just about one year later, I returned to Japan, and found Yokohama again a city of 350,000 people, and still the chief port of Japan despite the efforts of Kobe, its rival, in the exporting of silks.

I wonder if there are many instances in history of cities coming back as quickly as Yokohama has done.

It is true that the number of people that have come back does not accurately tell the tale. Neither does the character of the buildings that have been erected tell it all. But it is a fact that "business seems as usual" in Yokohama.

It had never been my unhappy lot before to approach a beloved spot on which nature had visited her severest displeasure. So it was with a sad heart and on a most dismal day that we crept into harbor.

We had been told that the wharf had been rebuilt, and that sheds, at least with roofs, made landing comfortable..

Well, words simply fail to describe our feelings, as we saw what awaited us. Most of the concrete piles on which the former dock had rested were sticking up out of the water. But not a vestige of what had been one of the finest docks in the world, was to be seen. Instead, the debris from the stricken city had been dumped into the bay, and much of it had been used to build a mud road into the bay, at which the steamers might dock. No wharf; no houses; no sheds; no roofs; nothing but this earthen roadway, made up of the bricks and stones and crushed concrete of what had once been the pride of the city, and, no doubt, mingled with it all, the bones and ashes of some of its former inhabitants. I felt like I was walking over unmarked graves in a deserted cemetery.

The effect produced by the dismal weather, and the thought produced by the sight of the landing place, were in a measure counteracted by the unfailing courtesy, kindness and patience of the Custom House officers. They were huddled together in a small room, purely temporary quarters, and had to meet the insistent demands of hundreds of foreigners, as they tried to rush their effects through the customs, all of us wet and impatient. But not they. Neither wet nor impatient, but treating all alike, and with that courtesy, kindness and patience which made them indomitable.

I will not attempt to describe the buildings that have been erected. Some of them are permanent, and are imposing. But the most of them are of a temporary nature, and 99 in a hundred roofed with galvanized iron. If one could keep his eyes off the buildings, and simply look into the stores and into the faces of the people, the catastrophe of last year might be forgotten. As you walk along certain of the principal streets it is impossible to visualize the calamity of a year ago. This is chiefly true in what is, or was known as the Japanese part of the town. But when you get into what was known as the foreign part of the city, then you begin to realize something of the disaster.

Practically, nothing of this part has been rebuilt. Not more than a half-dozen foreign firms have rebuilt. There are reasons for this apart from the effects of the earthquake. Many foreign firms were leaving Yokohama before the earthquake. They were removing to Tokio.

For years there has been a dispute over taxes. There is a doubt about Yokohama ever, at least for many decades, having as many foreign firms as before the disaster.

I tried to find out just what buildings had been undamaged by quake or fire. Out of those thousands of fine buildings, only two actually went through it undamaged. Then I tried to find out how many were still standing, the walls of which could again be used. And I found that only seven buildings, though shaken by the earthquake and gutted by the fire, still had their walls in such shape as to be usable. And the lesson taught is, that, so far, nothing has been found to stand such a test better than re-enforced concrete. The same was true in Tokio.

There was one thing that I was determined to find out. It was, how severe was the earthquake itself. Did the buildings immediately fall, or did the fire following so weaken the walls, that many fell later. Knowing this city as I did, and having seen many of these buildings built, it seemed to me impossible that even an earthquake could level them all to the ground. I have felt many hundreds of earthquakes. I have been in them when the swaying of the houses would make one seasick. But I had never seen modern houses thrown to the ground. I was fortunate enough to meet with a man who claimed that he was in a position to actually see the effect of the earthquake upon these best buildings of Yokohama. And he answered me, that in the short space of a few seconds, he saw the biggest and best buildings in Yokohama lying in heaps. This simply means that, because these buildings were built on reclaimed ground, as is most of Yokohama, the foundations simply slipped from under the buildings. Parts of Yokohama actually moved both down and to the side. The buildings could not follow the foundations.

But the most distressing sight that met my eyes was the condition of what is known as "The Bluff." Yokohama lies in a valley. The range of hills next to the ocean is called "The Bluff," and it was upon these "seven hills" that most of the foreigners lived. Here were situated some of the most palatial residences to be found in the Far East. Many of them were surrounded with large lawns and gardens, which seemed to make the houses safe from outside fires.

We approached this residential section by the middle road leading up the bluff. This road comes out just at the side of what was Union church. From this point, one can see nearly a mile to the right and left, and directly in front. There was but one of the original houses standing. And this was not standing, for its roof was caved in, and the house was leaning at such an angle that it seemed ready to fall.. Never have I looked upon such a scene of desolation. It was the memory of what it once was that made it so sad. "The Bluff" was to me the most beautiful place I had ever seen. Palatial residences, public gardens, churches, theaters, foreign hospitals, mission schools, foreign consulates, all, with beautiful lawns and gardens, made it a veritable Eden, as for beauty. In the midst of this desolation, one lone foreign house had been newly erected. Personal interest caused us to walk along the Bluff road as far as the foreign cemetery. One of the first things done, after the earthquake, was to erect a new fence around this cemetery. The graves are still there. But most of the stones lie in heaps where Mother Earth piled them a year ago.

ATTENTION, SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASSES AND MISSIONARY AUXILIARIES.

In planning your missionary work for the remainder of the year won't you kindly remember that there are some native workers in Japan whose salaries range from $130 to $300 who have not been assigned. This would be a splendid way to raise your budget. If your auxiliary or class does not feel equal to supporting one perhaps two or three or an entire circuit could assume the support of one.

Please let me know if you can take up this work and how much you can pay. I hope to hear from a number of you.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Young People's Work at the College the plan of a joint conference with the pastors was heartily endorsed. A committee was appointed to confer with a like committee from the Pastors' Conference appointed last year to take up the matter of the advisability of a joint conference of the pastors and young people. This committee met and decided that it would be advantageous to both groups to hold such a joint conference.

While we say it is a joint conference it is not entirely a joint conference. Many of the speakers and leaders will be used in both conferences, but the pastors will stay at the Children's Home and have their day sessions there, while the young people will live in the College dormitories, and have their day sessions in Roberts Hall. The night sessions will be held jointly in the College auditorium.

While the programs of both conferences are in the making as yet, some of the speakers have been secured, and efforts are being made to secure other outstanding men. Our beloved Dr. C. E. Forlines will be in both conferences. Efforts are being made to secure Dr. Charles Goodell of New York, Secretary of the Department of Evangelism of the Federal Churches of Christ in America, Dr. Howard E. Rondthaler, president of Salem College, and others.

We are expecting the largest attendance at both conferences of any year, because the seat of the Young People's Conference is in the central part of the State, and therefore more accessible to our membership; because it old in our own institution; because it is a conference with the Pastor's Conference. Because we are going to have the best year we have ever had; and because our people are realizing more than ever their obligations to the church.

We feel that this should be the best conference from every standpoint ever held in our history. Let us all unite in prayer and effort to make it just such a conference.

The dates of the conference are June 16 to 20. We will have more to say later in detail in the conference. N. M. Harris, Jr.

NOW CAN IT BE DONE?

Did you read the article in this column last week? It was addressed "To Our Pastors and Members," and, of course, that included you, if you belong to the Methodist Protestant Church.

That was one of the most important articles ever written, because it dealt with a condition the like of which our board has never known, because it plainly showed that we are in a serious crisis in the conduct of our foreign missionary work.

Not that the missionaries have lacked loyalty, zeal, efficient service, not that the board has adopted unwise measures, or mismanaged the interests entrusted to them, but that there is no money in the general treasurer's hands for the payment of the board's expenses, including salaries of the missionaries, of pastors, teachers, etc., in our three missions, nor any expenses here in America.

What has caused this lamentable situation? It cannot be held responsible, because the General Conference did not create it to be a agency to collect money, but to manage the foreign missionary work of the church and its agencies any board in America to show a competent administration.

To whom was given the duty of raising, contributing, the money for all the needs of our denomination? One answer if not the chief is and in the ordination vow of our pastors and in the church membership vow of our members. The former promised to "diligently strive to promote an active interest in behalf of all the general and local interests of the church among the people committed to their care," and the latter promised "to contribute as God gives an ability for the support of the gospel ministry and the benevolent enterprises of the church."

The budget is the plan the General Conference adopted for securing from the local churches the money needed for the entire work, and if the churches would contribute each month one-twelfth of their budget there would be no difficulty for any board.

The board is in a more serious situation than the fact that the general church treasurer has written that "it will be impossible for us to issue checks against these—vouchers for salaries and expenses, etc., for the present month—until the matter of the overdraft is taken care of." That means he will not send checks to the foreign field, etc., until the $9,000 overdraft on his books is paid, and he expects the board to get the money.

The General Conference authorized the church treasurer to borrow for the work of the board, but he says, with what he has secured before, he cannot borrow at the bank for us. The first thing other banks ask, when we approach them for a loan, is, Why does not the bank where you do business comply with your request? The board does not do any business at any bank, and has no collateral to put up for a loan, except "moral security."

We therefore appeal to all our pastors to send to their conference treasurer without delay as much of their budget as possible. The checks ought to be on their way to Japan, China and India, hence the great need of haste.

We are now negotiating a loan, at six per cent interest, for six months, for a part of the overdraft, and one of us will have to borrow personally to take over the difficulty, unless the churches meet their contributions promptly.

Our good people gave something over $12,000 for Earthquake Relief Work last year. This involves the very safety of the work of the church in the three countries. Let pastors urge their people to give the full amount of the budget and they will respond.

Fred C. Klein.

PREPARATION FOR A SUCCESSFUL CANVASSE.

Last week we called attention to the importance of carefully selecting the canvassers. Haphazard selection here will almost certainly assure the failure of the plan. We also noted the necessity of providing the canvassers with a correct list showing the members and contributing friends of the church, with confidential information as to the amounts paid last year. The envelopes were also discussed, and it is assumed that they have now been prepared, and that scribble pledge cards and record books have been secured.

Fixing the Amount of the Budget.

This part of the discussion might just as well have come at any other place, as to be presented here. It is necessary, however, that this subject have very careful consideration, and that proper decisions be reached. It is the judgment of the present writer that there should be two budgets to correspond with the duplex envelope, the use of which has been now provided. After careful consideration of the amount needed for local church support. This should include the salary of the pastor, the janitor, the musicians (if they are on salaries in your church), fuel, light, repairs, insurance, taxes, and other local expenses. Extensive repairs and new buildings should be provided for by a special canvass and not included in this annual budget. It will pay the church well to be just as liberal as possible in the salaries of all of its employees, including the pastor. Use correct business methods here as well as elsewhere. And all incidental bills should be paid just as soon as they have been approved by the proper board or committee.

Next, ascertain or estimate the apportionment to the church for annual and General Conference budgets. The church, however, should not allow itself to be limited to the amount of these apportionments. The great question is not, how much of my money shall I give to the Lord, but how much of the Lord's money can I keep for myself. These apportionments to the local church are fixed by the proper annual conference committee and are usually not far from a fair assessment when membership, ability, and willingness are considered as per our church law. These apportionment committees are usually chosen from among the most capable men of the conference and their judgment is the best available for this purpose at the given time. The General Conference budget is handed down from the General Conference authorities, and has been worked out after a very careful study of all the principles involved. They represent the actual demands of the various lines of service which the annual conference and the General Conference has decided to render. The churches should never be willing pay less than the entire amount of these apportionments. They should be accepted as being as binding as the salary of the pastor or the bills for fuel and lights. Whenever possible the amounts should be increased so that more work can be done for the extension of the Kingdom of the Redeemer in the world. This study will be continued next week. Charles H. Beck.

"There is a time, we know not when,
A point, we know not where,
That marks the destiny of men
To glory or despair."

"There is a line, by us unseen,
That crosses every path;
The hidden boundary between God's patience and His wrath."

"How far may we go on in sin?
How long will God forbear?
Where does hope end, and where begin
The confines of despair?"

"An answer from the skies is sent—
'Ye that from God depart,
While it is today, repent,
And harden not your heart.'"

THE SECRET OF A HAPPY DAY.

Just to let thy Father do
What He will;
Just to know that He is true,
And be still.
Just to follow hour by hour
As He leadeth;
Just to draw the moment's power
As it needeth.
Just to trust Him, that is all!
Then the day will surely be Peaceful whatso'er befall,
Bright and blessed, calm and free.

To think but loving thoughts,
To say but kindly words,
To do but helpful deeds,
However small;
And know that all I do or think or say,
Is known by Him who sees and loveth all.

Help me today
To bear all patiently,
To rest all trustingly,
To wait all hopefully,
However long;
Assured that as I bear,
And rest and wait,
He plans the end to crown a victor's song.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES FOR SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 1.

Christian Endeavor as an Expression of Friendliness.

Daily Readings.

Mon. Friendly study. Acts 8:20-35.

Tues. Friendly service. Isa. 41:6.

Wed. Friendly team-work. 1 Cor. 3:5-10.

Thurs. Friendly giving. Phil. 4:9-20.

Fri. Friendly benevolence. 2 Cor. 8:1-6.

Sat. Friendly exhortation. Heb. 3:12-19.

Sunday. Topic. Phil. 2:1-11.

(Christian Endeavor Day. Decision Service.)

Suggestions.

I am hoping that every Christian Endeavor society will get for this meeting the specially prepared program from the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Christian Endeavor Building, Boston, Mass.

This meeting should be conducted as an experience meeting, since our own experiences are more impressive than anything else we can offer in a meeting. Have those present tell how "friendliness by some one at some needy time has helped them. Have others tell how they have been privileged to help some one by just showing a friendly spirit at first and how this led to opportunities of greater helpfulness. If your society has not already done so this would be a good time to place on the wall of your meeting room the Christian Endeavor motto for these two years, which is, as you know, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." This can easily be made by covering paste-board letters with cloth or tissue paper in the Christian Endeavor colors.

Friendliness.

Webster says "friendliness" is the state or quality of being friendly and this adjective comes from the noun "friend" which he defines as "One attached to another by affection, regard or esteem; a supporter or favorer of a cause; an ally." What a wonderful thing it is when you are discouraged, or are in trying circumstances, or when you are timid and not sure which way to proceed to feel that you have an ally! One who has made your cause his and one who is going to help, sympathize, stand by and back you. One who makes your success his success, your timidity his timidity, your getting acquainted his affair, your feeling at home his business. Every Christian Endeavorer may have just that degree of friendliness wherever he may be.

There was once a young girl—she must have been a Christian Endeavorer—who always greeted those she knew when she joined the street-car on her way to work with such a wholesome, hearty, friendly smile and good morning that one morning a stranger on the car, a man who was very much discouraged and tempted even until he was thinking of taking his own life noted these greetings and though they were not for him they radiated such friendliness that his heart was warmed and the next morning he went out of his way to join the street car at that same place and for several mornings until he gained encouragement and determined to try again and from that on he succeeded and later became a Christian man. Any one of us can carry with us a friendly atmosphere if we will.

Friendship of Christ.

Lucy Lareom has put this so beautifully that I quote it in full. "Any man, any soul, may have the friendship of Christ, or His words are without meaning. His heart aches with pity for our loneliness and for the poverty which we misname riches. He will listen to what we have to tell him; he will take what we have to offer him, however simple the story, however humble the fare; and he will give to us the heavenly food wherewith his earthly life was sustained—the meat that men know not of. While we talk with Him and He with us, He will unfold to us the secret of His earthly career: the blessed, open secret that He would have us share with the whole world—not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Filled with His Spirit, we shall not desire to claim Him for ourselves alone. Our hearts will unfold with His open-heartedness, and lonely souls will seek shelter with us, attracted by the light and warmth of His presence. They who have set wide the door of their being to Him have caught from the presence of this divine guest their first hint of the possible rapture of living; they had in the face of Christ their first true glimpse of God."

Friendly to Win.

This is the very center of the "Friends of Christ Campaign" we are all working in these two years. Every campaign put on has a definite certain goal, and our goal these years is to win friends for Christ. These we can win for Him only as others, or as those we come in contact with see the winning, winsome friendliness of Him in our conduct. The impatience at interruptions, the unwillingness to help if it interferes with our own pleasure, the pouty attitude when things do not go our way, the unkind criticism of others no matter how true it may be—all these and scores of other things just as trifling at first glance do much to prevent us from winning out in the things we undertake for our society and for Jesus. Others seeing these are not impressed with what He can do in human lives. "Friends of Christ" want others to know Him and to be friends with Him and the best way to win them for Him is first to win them for ourselves by the Christ-like lives we live. Without friendliness we cannot win either for ourselves or for Him for "he who would have friends must show himself friendly." Cultivate the friendship of Jesus Christ and He will teach you how to be friendly for Him and add scores of worthwhile friends to your own list. We should never look upon the ability to make friends in a selfish way but use it to make friends for Christ and the church who will become workers in His kingdom.

World Friendships.

Wherever a Christian Endeavorer sees a Christian Endeavorer he knows he has a friend. Wherever a Christian Endeavorer knows there is a Christian Endeavor society there he knows he has friends. We are friends because we are studying the same topics and talking about the same things at the same meeting time. We are friends for the same reason that different regiments in an army are friends. Our aims, purposes and goals are the same; we are working for the same ends and their success is our success; what hurts them hurts us because it hurts our common cause. The poet puts it this way.

There is a scene where spirits blend,

Where friend holds fellowship with friend,
Though sundered far by faith they meet
Around one common mercy-seat.

Then let us be friendly all the time,
Where we go, sure that some one will Cheered and helped and Christ glorified by Just to smile a little while,
And hold the handclasp tighter;
Just to think with every mile
The sky is growing brighter.
Just to feel the world is true,
And choke the sobs back faster;
Just to know that you—just you—
Are meant to serve the Master.
Just to hope and trust and love,
And help the man beside you;
Just to look for strength above,
Where God awaits to guide you.

—Clara Shipman

Community Church, Thomasville.—We have such interesting church services, appreciate greatly our pastor, Rev. O. B. Williams, and Mrs. Williams and their splendid work with us, and enjoy Mr. Williams's splendid sermons. Last Sunday morning his sermon on Faith was beautifully given, and at evening service his talk on The Old-Fashioned Home was fine and very impressive, was followed by the picture, "The Old Homestead." Old-fashioned hymns were sung, the congregation in the old-fashioned way a large number of people present.

The Sunday school is holding up very well for this winter weather. Last Sunday morning Superintendent Finch made a strong appeal for workers and for us all to get busy. We have the building and material (the boys and girls) but we do need more workers. At the recent teachers' meeting plans were discussed and offering prizes was decided on. Mr. Finch stated that prizes of $50 each would be awarded for best class attendance, most new members, for the class having the largest percentage of members staying for Sunday morning 11 o'clock service, and that each $50 would be divided into first, second, and third prizes, this to continue for six months. With this as a stimulant every class should do a better work and be more active and interested.

Miss Myrtle Perry has been sick with influenza the past week. We missed her from choir Sunday morning.

We were glad to see Miss Sybil (pastor's daughter) here for the holidays with her parents. She returned to Stetson University. Her friend from Seattle, Wash., Miss Nettie Huttenpiller, who visited here also, visited our High Point College freshman.

Report

"Old Man of the Mountain."

The "Great Stone Face" or "Old Man of the Mountain" may soon become the property of the State of New Hampshire. It is on the south side of Cannon Mountain, in the Franconia Notch of the White Mountains. It is now before the New Hampshire Legislature which proposes that the State buy the surrounding property from private owners and set it aside as a forestry reserve. Those who favor this say: "The Notch is the Yosemite of the North." "The Old Man" is the trademark of New Hampshire.

COLLEGE PAGE

EDITED BY REV. R. M. ANDREWS.

Since our last report we have received the following books from our friends: A Photographic History of the Civil War, 10 volumes, by Mrs. Rosa Crewe, Pleasant Hill, N. C., Green's Short History of the English People, six volumes, by Rev. H. S. B. Thompson; Winston's Loose Leaf Encyclopedia, 10 volumes, by Dr. T. M. Johnson. We appreciate these gifts most sincerely, and we are glad to inform you that already we have around 3,000 volumes in our library.

TWO EVENTS.

There have been two events at the College recently of more than usual importance. The first was when the Rotary, Kiwanis, and Civitan clubs of the city of High Point, together with other friends, were entertained at dinner by the president of the College, in the College dining-room. This was a most enjoyable affair. There were nearly two hundred people present, men with their wives. Brief addresses were made by the president of the College, Professor Kennett, Messrs. J. Norman Wills, John Peacock, C. C. Prince, Carter Dalton, and Dr. George R. Brown. The addresses were spicy and brief, and the whole affair was one that may be remembered with pleasure.

The next event was on the night of the 16th when the First Church, High Point, gave a reception to the students and faculty of High Point College. This was a unique reception. All were required to register, and the following courses were offered: Language, Mathematics, History, Chemistry, Forestry. There were certain required courses, and it was possible for one to repeat his course. If one failed to pass, he was able to take the course over again. I am sure that several were working for degrees, taking post-graduate work in Chemistry, which by the way was a delicious punch. After an enjoyable season with refreshments all were ushered into the auditorium where they were entertained by a humorous speech by Dr. Brown and special music by Miss Vera Idol, of the College faculty, and Mrs. R. M. Andrews. All the students and faculty appreciate this expression of interest and hospitality on the part of the First Church.

EXAMINATIONS.

Examinations begin this week, lasting through next week. On the first of February the second semester begins. We are glad to report that the students seem to be doing good work, and we believe there will be few failures in the coming examinations.

THE ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN.

As has already been advertised in the Herald and daily papers, we are now getting ready to put on a campaign to raise $15,000 a year for ten years of insurance for endowment. This amount paid in will mature $190,000 in insurance, which may be collected at the expiration of the ten years. This is a splendid opportunity the church has to increase its endowment without anyone having to deny himself or herself very much. $25, $50, or even $100 a year may be paid by our friends just as they have carried previously these amounts subscribed for buildings.

The month of February has been selected by the committee now in charge of this matter as a time to present it to our friends. It is the hope of the committee to have some one visit the churches in the central part of the state at their regular appointments some time during the month of February, when this matter will be explained and our people will be asked to respond. Previous to this time meetings are being held preparing for the February campaign, and we are hoping good results will come from them. R. M. Andrews.

RECEIPTS FOR COLLEGE.

Amount previously reported, $125,339.59
 $500, Dr. A. G. Dixon.

 $1 each: Clarice Henley, Elizabeth Henly, Grace Barnett, Katie Lee Barnett, Bessie Barnett.
 90c, Children's Club, Mebane church.
 Total, $126,663.52.

CORRECTION NUMBER THREE.

I will say to Brother S. R. H. that it was a mistake of the printer, and not my fault that the date of B. F. Norman's marriage was in 1879, as I wrote as plainly as I could, that the date was 1870.

I think he must have dreamed about the profanity he used, for I was present, and never heard it. We hate to use space that might contain something better but according to dates given to Brother Hunter our deceased friend was something over one hundred years old when he died. "Married at the age of 31. lived happily with his wife over 60 years, and she preceded him to the glory world in 1915." Thanking the editor and readers for their forbearance, Ruth Fletcher.

Bethesda, North Davidson Charge.—Brother R. S. Troxler filled his regular appointment at Bethesda Sunday, January 11. We were glad to have Brother Troxler with us, and enjoyed his preaching very much. We always look forward to his coming with pleasure, as he has something better in store for us each time.

Sunday school was reorganized the first Sunday in January, with 104 present. We hope to double this number before long. Let us try to make this the best year in the history of our Sunday school.

The report of our school for the year 1924 is as follows: three members were present 52 Sundays, nine were present 51 Sundays, three present 50, five present 49, and six present 48. A number of others failed to reach this mark only by a few Sundays. An average of 105 members per Sunday was made for the year. We regret that this number was not larger, but hope to send in a much better report by the end of another year.

E. A. Clodfelter.

Shiloh, North Davidson Charge.—In spite of rain and mud we had a good day at Shiloh last Sunday. Good Sunday school and attentive congregation to preach to. It was a joy to preach. After preaching they went into a business session and elected a committee, consisting of R. B. Sink, chairman; Harp Leonard, J. B. Leonard, Jessie Hill, and Numer Leonard to solicit funds to build a parsonage near Shiloh church. They seem to be very enthusiastic about it. There being no further business, we adjourned. Then what a surprise.

"A surprise" does not half tell it, for as I went out to the car, I saw some sacks. I wondered why I brought them along. The car seemed to be full with the lap-robe spread over it. I wondered why Mrs. Troxler brought so many things along just for one day. But upon investigation I found my car loaded with all kinds of good things to eat, such as canned corn, peanuts, sausage, soda, sweet pickled peaches, baking powder, damson preserves, sweet potatoes, canned peaches, kraut, molasses, dried fruit, peas, beans, three pecks Irish potatoes, four sacks of flour, and just listen, 79 pounds of sugar to keep us sweet, and two nice hens. I would like to give the names of all who took part in the pounding, but as I do not have all names, the Lord knows and He will richly bless you in return.

We also enjoyed the good dinner and a pleasant evening with Brother Leonard, our Sunday school superintendent.

We wish we could tell you just how much we appreciate these tokens of appreciation just at this time; we cannot in words, but pray God's richest blessings upon you.

R. S. Troxler, Pastor.

Henderson.—Because the weather has been so very bad since Christmas, not very much has been done.

Mrs. J. B. Fox has resigned as president of the Ladies' Aid and Mrs. J. E. Pritchard has been elected in her place.

The Philatheas have had their semi-annual election and Mrs. John Renn was re-elected as president. They also had a pie, cake and candy sale, realizing about $9.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JAN. 25.

Jesus Comforts His Disciples.

Lesson Text: John 11:1-17.

Golden Text: John 14:6.

The Central Truth: The conscious and ever deepest presence of the Holy Spirit is the deepest, sweetest, and most enduring comfort in times of trial and distress.

Scriptural Points.

1. Most earnestly Jesus sought to prepare His disciples for the awful tragedy that awaited Him. On three different occasions, and in a most serious manner, Jesus had told His disciples of His approaching crucifixion, with its horrible accompaniments. Each Passover and the institution of the Lord's Supper were portentous shadows of this event. And yet these followers of three years failed to grasp the real and deep significance of this tragedy so plainly set forth in every Jewish sacrifice. Possessed with the idea that Jesus must become a real, living King instead of a dying Savior accounted for their slowness to believe. They hoped against hope.

2. This consolation of Jesus is threefold. He first tries to increase their flagging faith in Him. "Believe also in me:" because I am God also, the appointed Sacrifice for sin, and the all-powerful King of kings and lords of lords.

3. He next mentions two great facts. Heaven is the many-mansioned home of the troubled souls. And Jesus Himself is the Architect and Builder of this "city that hath foundations."

4. Jesus next makes the supreme promise: "I will come again, and receive you unto myself." In the hope of a happy and everlasting reunion there is large comfort and unspeakable joy.

5. Three years of most painstaking instruction had failed to make plain to the disciples the strait way to heaven. Doubting Thomas springs the question this time. "I am the way," says Jesus. Repeatedly Jesus had said, "Follow me." To follow Jesus is the way to heaven.

6. Philip inquires, "Shew us the Father." Another instance of blindness of heart. Jesus came to manifest the Father in His personality, life and works. He was "the express image of his person." To see and know Him was to see and know the Father. The Father like Son.

7. The twelfth verse is magna charta of apostleship: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall ye do also: and greater works than these shall ye do: because I go unto my Father." The word, "greater," must be understood as meaning more extensive. More souls were saved on the day of Pentecost than during the entire ministry of Jesus on earth. The reason assigned for this larger ingathering was the giving of "signs and ministrations: "Because I go to my Father," and the Holy Spirit will come in His stead.

8. Prayer is here cited as the most powerful means of success in uplifting a lost world. The most indispensable condition of effectual prayer was to pray in Jesus' name: "If ye ask anything in my name, I will do it." The supreme purpose of prayer was to glorify God—"that the Father may be glorified in the Son."

9. The intercession of Jesus will yield most momentous results. "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter." The marvellous and far-reaching works of the Holy Spirit will be in answer to the intercessions of Jesus Christ.

Practical Points.

1. Nothing good is ever lost. The good deeds are laid up in the skies. "Their works do follow them." Death is not a loss, but a change of a large number of works and conditions. Our good deeds are not lost out of our lives, harvested in a world of sin, but a world of glory.

2. There is "a place"—a place of untold wealth,—gold, gems, and precious names—where a place of exclusive glorification—"many mansions," room enough to accommodate the population of all the ages: a place of eternal rest in sorrow, death and birth; a place of rest from all idol worship and service, and a place of immortality with Father and Son.

3. The way to heaven is by way of the cross,—faith in Jesus Christ; by way of imitation, believing and doing like Jesus; and by way of service.—Inasmuch as ye have done the least of these, ye have done much unto me."

4. God is the Father of the spirits of all flesh, the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of the great salvation, and the Father of all who believe.

5. Prayer is sending a signed check to the Father. Jesus' name is signed upon it when Jesus' name is signed to it in the blood of His Son. Every prayer that is signed with His name is accepted in Jesus' name.

6. Faith is the miracle-worker in the realms of nature, providence, and redemption. The Almighty places His entire domain of love, power, holiness, and power at the disposal of the faith of man. "All things are possible unto him that believeth."

7. In the old dispensation the Holy Spirit was given men men without number. He works in a similar manner with you, and shall be in you."

THE NEW LEAVES

"What a night!" said a dear little voice. Tommy had been sitting in bed. The fire of the hearth had been burning brightly, and the moon was shining brightly through the window. Tommy had been thinking of the New Year, and he looked straight at Tommy.

"What are you?" asked Tommy.

"I am the New Year," said the boy. "This is my day, and I have brought you your leaves."

"What leaves?" asked Tommy.

"The leaves of the New Year," said the boy. "The leaves of the New Year are the leaves of the New Year, and the leaves of the New Year are the leaves of the New Year."

"What leaves?" asked Tommy.

"N-no!" said Tommy. "Then you must stop being a horrid boy!" said the New Year. "Take your leaves!" and he held out a packet of what looked like popbook leaves, all sparkling white, like his own clothes.

"Turn over one of these leaves every day," said the New Year, "and soon you will be a good boy instead of a horrid one."

Tommy took the leaves and looked at them. On each leaf a few words were written. On one it said, "Help your mother!" On another, "Don't pull the cat's tail!" On another, "Don't eat so much!" And on still another, "Don't fight Billy Jenkins!"

"O!" cried Tommy. "I have to fight Billy Jenkins!"

"I shall fight him again when I am old to see whether you have been a good boy or a horrid one. Remember!"

"Yes, alone can change the plan."

"Horrid boy makes horrid man!"

He turned away and opened the window. A cold wind blew in and swept the leaves out of Tommy's hand. "Stop, stop!" he cried. "Tell me—" But the New Year was gone, and Tommy, staring after him, saw only his mother coming into the room. "Dear child," she said, "why, the wind is blowing everything about."

"My leaves! My leaves!" cried Tommy; and jumping out of bed he looked all over the room, but he could not find one.

"Never mind," said Tommy. "I can turn them just the same, and I mean to. I will not grow into a Horrid Man."—Selected.

CARL DAVE'S FOLKS.

One morning Carl Dave ran in front of a car. He had done it many times before, but this morning the car was nearer than he thought, or he didn't run so fast. It was one of those cases where the result can be seen, but the real facts never known. There was a bang and a sound, and when the conductor stopped the car Carl lay quite still. An ambulance and a doctor were summoned, and he was taken to the hospital. When a thorough examination was made it was found the limb was broken and must come off; that meant Carl would be a cripple for life. For three days after the operation he lay so white and still the nurse began to wonder if he would rally at all. The fifth day he was able to smile at the white-robed lady who brought some newspapers. He said that he improved rapidly, and in ten days his door could be left open.

The hospital was a wonderful place to Carl. He asked all sorts of questions about it. He wanted to know what was the matter with every sick person there. He thought it strange that he was the only little boy who had his limb taken off. "What do so many people come with beds on, and bring flowers for?" he said to the nurse one day.

"They come to see somebody who is sick here," she answered.

"Are they brothers or sisters or fathers or mothers to somebody who is sick here?" he questioned.

"No, not always; they may be just friends. They bring flowers to show they are sorry for a friend who is sick."

Carl made no response, but when the nurse returned, an hour later, he showed he had been thinking over her words. "Why don't somebody come to see me?" he asked.

"Your mother does come; she comes every evening, though she is very tired after her day's work. You have not lived here long enough to have many friends," the nurse explained.

"Mamma gets tired, now, for I used to carry all the water for her washings," he said thoughtfully. "I can't do it again 'til I get a wooden leg." There was a tinge of sadness in the voice. "The doctor said I couldn't; I asked him. I wish I had folks," he continued, "who would come and see me. I want somebody to be sorry 'cause I'm here."

"I am sorry, laddie," and the nurse brushed back the tumbled hair.

"I know, but you don't count. You have to be sorry 'cause you take care of sick folks. I want somebody who's sorry 'cause—well, just 'cause they're sorry, that's all."

That afternoon Miss Porter told Mrs. Watson all about her little patient. "I guess we will have to find him some folks," Mrs. Watson said as she turned away from the hospital door. That evening on the cozy porch she told her two little daughters about Carl Dane. When the story was finished she slipped away.

Half an hour later the two girls entered her room excitedly. "We have thought of the beautifullest plan," said Rose, who was the younger, but always the spokesman. "We want to be 'folks' to Carl Dane. We could take him some flowers and, oh, mamma, we could take some books and read to him, and play games that are easy to play on the bed. May we?" and Rose waited breathlessly for an answer.

"We could go early in the morning," put in Grace.

"I hoped you would think of this," their mother answered. "I wanted it to be your own plan, but you were going to Aunt Carry's tomorrow morning."

"We can go there the next morning. We feel sorry for the little boy," the girls agreed.

The next morning, about eight o'clock, the two little girls went to the hospital. They carried a basket of flowers and wanted to take all their games and books at once, but their mother said they must leave some for the other days. They were shown to Carl's room, and it was hard to tell who was the most delighted, Miss Porter, Carl, Rose or Grace. They stayed two hours and promised to come again soon.

It was a happy boy who greeted the doctor that morning, and he told about his visitors. Everybody who passed Carl's door for the next few days was told, "I've got folks."

Rose and Grace were faithful to their charge for two months, then Carl was taken home, and they promised to visit him there. "I'm going to appoint you two girls as my hospital assistants," said Dr. Nelson to them on their last visit to the hospital. "When I have patients who like flowers, and have no 'folks,' I can call on you. I know you would do the work well. Would that suit you?"

And the girls declared that it would.—Sarah K. McCreary, in Herald and Presbyterian.

FLUFFY'S ADVENTURES.

Mrs. Oak-Robin found great excitement in her nest, when she returned home at supper time. In Bird-Land, you know, the birds take their names from the kind of trees their nests are built in, so, as this Mrs. Robin lived in an oak tree, she was called Mrs. Oak-Robin.

Well! as I said before, when she came near her nest, she heard a great deal of excited twittering, and saw all the little heads bobbing in and out of the nest. Tippy-Tops, the oldest of them all was perched right on the very edge of the nest, looking down and in fact she just reached him in time to prevent his falling to the ground.

"Whatever is the matter," she cried.

"Oh! Mother, Mother," they all cried. "Fluffy's gone, Fluffy's fallen."

"Yes," said Tippy, sadly, "She was trying to walk around the edge of the nest, and fell down to the ground."

"Where is she, where is she," cried Mrs. Oak-Robin. "I must go and fetch her at once."

"But she isn't there any more," cried Tippy. "While I was looking, I saw a great big white giant come and carry her away."

"What!" cried poor Mrs. Oak-Robin, "I must go and look for her."

"Now, children, mind you all remain right here in the nest while I'm away. You look after them, Tippy."

So, of course, being the oldest, Tippy had to set a good example to the others, and, though she was loing to stay and see what her Mother did, she went back obediently to the nest, and tried to be good, and keep the children quiet.

Meanwhile Mrs. Oak-Robin flew all around calling Fluffy, but could find no sign of her, nor had any of her bird neighbors seen her. It was now long past the usual bed time, so she had sorrowfully to return home, and put the children to bed, though first she paid a visit to Mr. Willow-Owl, and asked him to look for her, during his night wanderings.

You may be sure she did not have much rest that night, and early next morning she and Mr. Oak-Robin started out once more. Round and round they new over the garden, in every direction, even up to the house. Mrs. Oak-Robin perched for a moment on a window sill to rest, when she thought she heard a familiar sound.

There it was again! Peep! Peep!

She knew the room well enough and had often been fed with crumbs, by the little girl, who lived in the house, and played in the garden every fine day, under the oak tree where her nest was built.

Again she called, "Fluffy," and again she heard the answering, "Peep, Peep."

Going closer to the window, she saw the little girl, sending over a box on a table, and in the box, in a cozy nest of some soft, white, woolly stuff was—FLUFFY.

Out she flew to tell the welcome news to Mr. Oak-Robin, that Fluffy was found.

The excited twittering attracted the attention of the little girl.

"Oh, Mother," she cried, "just come and look at these two little birds."

A lady in a pretty pink gown came and looked out of the window, and the anxious parents heard her say, "I do believe they are looking for our little bird visitor."

"Oh, Mother, do you really think so?" "Yes, dear, I really do. We will put the little birdie under the big oak tree, for that is where I think it came from, and see if they fetch it."

I need not tell you how eagerly Mr. and Mrs. Oak-Robin followed them, and watched as they laid dear little Fluffy carefully down under the tree, and I can assure you it did not take very long for them to get Fluffy safely back in the nest again.

"It was all so funny, Mother," she said, relating what had happened. "When I fell down, I did not hurt myself at all, and was just looking around a bit, when a great big giant, ever so much bigger than that little girl giant, came and picked me up, and carried me into the big nest where the little girl lives. They put me in a cozy nest, as cozy as this, and every time I opened my mouth they put some soft, sweet, wet stuff in it. It tasted good, but not as nice as the worms you bring us, Mammy. It was very lonely, though, all alone, and I missed you so much. I cried myself to sleep. Then when I woke up, I heard your voice, and you know the rest."

"Ah, my dear little Fluffy, I feared we had lost you," said her Mother. "Now, children," she continued, "You must promise me, all of you, never to leave the nest alone, until you have learned to fly."

"Not a teeny, weeny way?" asked Fluffy. "No, indeed. I should never have a peaceful moment, while I'm out unless you promise me."

"We promise," they all cried in chorus, and the little girl down below, hearing them, said, "How sweetly they are singing."

"Yes, dear," replied her mother, "I think it is because they are so very happy to have their little one back again. I know just how I would feel if you were lost, and found again, and I guess the bird mothers are just like little girls' mothers in that."—Selected.

DAVID CLIMBS MOUNT SHASTA.

"The smaller peak?" said father, in answer to David's question, as the two stood on the sunny porch of the old Berryvale Tavern. "That's called the Thumb. It's the crater opening. Yes, the trail to the top follows the spur of the Thumb to the top, then on to the real summit."

David's face was very sober as he looked at great, towering Mount Shasta shining white in the sunshine. "I should think I was old enough to climb it," he said. "How old were you, first time you went up, father?"

"About you age," admitted father, "but you see I was a pretty good mountaineer when I was twelve. Every summer I spent either in these mountains or in the High Sierras, you must remember. And every summer since you've been able to walk I've wanted to bring you out here and show you the Western out-of-doors that I loved as a boy, and love still. The East's all right, but when it comes to mountains"—

"I know I could climb it," said David, earnestly. "Who went up with you, first time you went up?"

"My father and a guide, and another boy of my own age. Lived hereabouts, the boy did, and a hardy little mountaineer he was.

His name? Let's see—it's a long time ago—his name was. John—John Bennett—that's it."

"I know I could climb it." There was but one refrain from David.

"Next summer, maybe, if we can get out here for our summers after this; but to take a small Eastern tenderfoot and let him scale the first snow mountain he sees"—Father shook his head. "But we'll ride to the timber line—that I've promised you, and right after breakfast we'll see about mules. No, we don't need a guide for the timber line. We ought to be good enough woodsmen to make our own way. Yes, we'll take blankets and grub and stay overnight."

At dawn, two days later, Mr. Martin and David set out, both on wiry mountain mules, blankets and food and oats strapped behind their saddles.

"He goes as fast and as easily as a horse," said David, new to muleback, as his brown steed trotted nimbly along the mountain road. Through great forests of pine they rode, following brooks that came tumbling down from the great mountain whose name means to the Indian, "Father of Waters." Up wound the mountain trail through smaller-growing trees till the two mountaineers found themselves making their way through a thicket of prickly chaparral.

"We're really beyond the timber line now," said father. "But we're going to the snow line. There's a little cabin there, and we'll roll up in it for the night. At this altitude it's not so warm as it might be even on a summer night."

Toward the middle of the afternoon they reached the cabin in a tangle of chaparral which all but choked its entrance. Tired but happy, they undid their packs, fed the sleek mules, and made their cabin bunks ready for the night. The whole world, so it seemed, lay below them—dark green forests, open meadows, and far, far away a faint trail of smoke marked the passing of a train. And above them, the mountain, its sides steep and cold and unthinkably high.

"I know I could climb it," said David, undaunted, staring up at the glistening top, "but it makes me feel small as—as"—

"As an ant," said father, also looking up. "But even the taste of mountaineering we've had today isn't bad for a beginning, is it?"

"I should say not," said David, manfully, and fell to work gathering dry chaparral branches for a supper fire. "Let's get every single thing ready," he said thriftily, "and then we'll have two hours to explore before it's too dark."

Explore they did, always keeping the cabin in sight. "Here's a piece of lava," said father. "See, this light, porous, gray"—And David, running up to see, saw father suddenly lurch and lose his footing in a little landslide of rocks. Not more than twenty feet did he slide, but in some unaccountable way he failed to regain his balance and stumbling, fell, hitting his head against a boulder. Instantly David was at his side, but father lay still and quiet except for little moans.

"Father! You can't be hurt, father!" David's voice was pleading in its anxiety. Not a minute ago his father was all right—and just that little slide and tumble! But though David rubbed his head and chafed his hands and begged him to answer, father didn't answer a single word—just lay still and moaned softly.

David got to his feet. The world below looked immense and aloof; the mountain above looked cold and aloof—he himself the only person to solve a big difficulty. Even smaller than before did he feel. But hadn't father always and always told him to use his own brains, to think his own way out of difficulties? But who could ever have imagined such a big difficulty as this?

Suddenly into David's troubled eyes flashed resolution. Of course! That was his one chance to get help quickly! Hadn't he and father ridden through a whole forest that very morning—how long ago it seemed!—, ghost forest of trees left dead in the wake of a forest fire? And hadn't father said that forest fires were the greatest menace to the mountains, and that every timber area lay under the watchful eyes of a fire warden? Well, then!

In frantic haste David gathered great armfuls of dry chaparral. No cooking fire this, with a wisp of smoke which would vanish as quickly as it rose. No, if anywhere in that great expanse about him an eye watched for smoke—and David toiled and heaped on brush till a thick smoke column rose slowly and steadily. Not a minute to spare—not much daylight was there left—and somebody must come! An hour David worked, dragging brush, piling it on, till his hands were scratched and bleeding. An hour more for some one to see. But even if there were a fire warden and he saw, could he get to them after darkness fell?

"David!" It was father's voice, and David jumped in his tracks.

"Yes, father," he answered very quietly, kneeling close. "You're feeling better, father?"

"It's my head," breathed father. "Did I hit my head? What are we to do?"

"We're all right," said David, steadily. "I've built a fire that'll keep us warm—a big one, so the fire warden will see the smoke. He'll be here soon."

"That's good," said father, drowsily, and again sank into quiet, leaving David more alone than ever in the big outdoors.

Two hours passed; David still heaped on brush; father still lay quiet in the gray blankets. And then, just when David felt he could not stand it another minute, the two mules, plain in the circle of fire-light, lifted their heads, ears pointing trailward. With all his might David halloed and listened, his breath held. The answer came, faint and far away, but unmistakably a voice calling, and before long followed the sound of branches snapping along the trail and out of the chaparral blackness rode a man on a mule.

"Well, sonny," was his astonished greeting at sight of David's lone figure. "What's up? Rather small you are for a lone camper, and rather large your camp-fire. Not trying to set the old mountain ablaze? You made so much smoke I had to come and see."

A week later, father, propped up in bed in a big, sunny room of the Berryvale Tavern, gave his low, familiar whistle—his signal for David, who instantly ran upstairs. With shining eyes he ran to the bedside and said:

"Oh, father, John Bennet says he's going to the top of the mountain to-morrow! Did he tell you?"

"Yes, he has been up here talking about for an hour."

"He has? He's the nicest man I ever saw next to you, 'course. He says he has been once every year since that time you and went up together when you were boys."

"It's part of his job now as fire warden go up once a year and report conditions."

"Oh, father, I know I could climb it!"

"That's what he says. He wants to take you."

"Did he ask to take me?" David's voice was hushed with incredulity.

"Tomorrow morning you start, five sharp. Now, you're not to fuss about leaving alone, you're going. You a tenderfoot! After the way you got John Bennett on the spot and the way you help him get me back here. Some day I'll tell you what John Bennett thinks about you. Off you go tomorrow morning and don't you come near me again till you've been to the tip-top!"

With a joyous war-whoop, David was able to leap downstairs to make sure his mount friend hadn't vanished, when at the door wheeled abruptly and said, "Don't you think it's the queerest, father, that John Bennett, fire warden and saw our smoke, and that has lived right around here all these years since you and he climbed Mount Shasta together when you were as big as me?"

"Nothing's queer, and everything's queer," said father, thus disposing of the problem of the universe with one stroke.

But David, not waiting for an answer, pelting downstairs, these words echoing in his mind:

"I knew I could climb Mt. Shasta!" Rose Brooks, in Zion's Herald.

Allison Grove.—In my other report I forgot to say that Brother N. Brittain was the one to pound us since conference, bringing sausage, can fruit preserves. We thank Brother Brittain, we feel like it is good to have such a preacher near by us. We thank Brother and Sister W. P. Sherrell for a lot of nice ribs and sausage, and Brother Hines for some nice backbone and ribs.

We have been rained out for three Sundays. That seems like a long time not to have service. We thank Brother Lawrence for a nice lot of stationery with our address on it.

Brethren, we need your prayers still. Our Father continue to bless you all. Your friend,
D. A. Braswell

Burke Chapel, Connelly Springs, Chas. Last Sunday Rev. J. R. Gurtner delivered to us a very interesting message, but not many present owing to the bad weather. J. R. Gurtner will preach for us again first Sunday in February at 11 o'clock. We want to ask all Christian people to pray we may do more for the upbuilding of the kingdom than ever before. We pray that the people of this community that are making selling whiskey will see where they stand the sight of God and will turn before everlastingly too late.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Albemarle.—No, we are not dead, neither are we asleep. We are very much alive and wide-awake. The work started off fine, and the people seem to have had a mind to work, and they are certainly doing some of the best work ever saw. The attendance at the Sunday school has been held at an average of 140, and the offerings are good. The Sunday school did the Christmas expenses without having to draw from the church funds for very much, and the Christmas exercise was good.

The work of preparing the program was under the direction of Mrs. J. P. Green, assisted by Misses Virginia Hornbuckle, Ruth Green, Nettie Rollins, and Mrs. D. F. Helms. The music was under the direction of Mr. C. W. Watson and Miss Blanche Furr. The orchestra under the direction of Brother Watson is a new feature, in that all the music for the exercise with one exception was played by them, and no singing but of one song by the congregation. This was a novelty and was appreciated by pastor and people. Miss Furr and Brother Watson with the orchestra are doing some excellent work with the music. They now have nine instruments in the orchestra.

The church is more thoroughly organized than it was last year. There are seven stewards this year, whereas last year there were only three. The board is constituted as follows: J. U. Whitlock, chairman; W. M. Lowry, treasurer; D. J. Hatley, J. P. Green, D. F. Helms, C. B. Efrid; C. W. Watson, corresponding steward. Brother Efrid is also secretary of the Sunday school, Lowder choir director, Helms and Green ushers, assisted by W. Hatley. The chairman of the board of stewards was elected register of deeds at the election last November, and in addition to all this he is also secretary to the quarterly conference.

The Sunday school did some fine work last year under the direction of Brother C. L. Hatley, who has been succeeded by Brother J. E. Gantt. In fact he and Brother Hatley were reversed in office this year, Hatley superintendent last year, with Gantt assistant. Now it is just the other way. The teachers for the year are: Mrs. D. J. Hatley, Mrs. C. L. Hatley, Mrs. J. P. Green, Mrs. D. F. Harkey, who, by the way, was the wife of the late Rev. E. A. Plyler, and Brother S. R. Green. The ex-sheriff of the county is teacher of the men's Bible class. Mrs. C. S. Moton is also teacher of the Willing Workers, and superintendent of the cradle roll department. Arthur Hatley is serving his first year as sexton.

The Ladies' Aid society has started the year with a new set of officers. Mrs. J. U. Whitlock is president, succeeding Mrs. C. B. Efrid; Mrs. C. J. Helms, vice president, succeeding Mrs. O. D. Shoe; and Mrs. D. F. Helms, secretary and treasurer, succeeding Mrs. J. U. Whitlock.

The reason the people are doing so well I think might be from the start they got when they invaded the parsonage at the very first, and left more than $15 worth of good things to eat on the dining table.

Some of our folks have been having trouble, while others have been having joy. Brother J. L. Hornbuckle has just returned from the Charlotte Sanatorium where he had a goiter removed. He stayed there about five weeks, and at times the physicians despaired for his life. He says the secret of his recovery is that the Christian people prayed for him, and God answered their prayers. We think that he will soon be able to go back to his business. He holds the position of chief miller for the Albemarle Milling Company.

There are other things we would like to say, but we have not the space nor the time, and will say more next time.

J. L. Trollinger, Pastor.

January 16, 1925.

Pleasant Grove, Davidson Circuit.—Possibly this will be our first report this year, but we are hoping and praying for a good year and that great good may be accomplished, because we expect our Heavenly Father to answer our prayers. Why pray and not expect an answer? And why pray and not do anything to help make it come to pass? So, friends, I believe that if we would work just as hard to get our prayers answered as we do to get that dollar, more of our prayers would come to pass.

We are having a good Sunday school at this place, and also a good prayer meeting Sunday nights. We have only been having our prayer meeting about one year, and I think it has been a great help to the church. Now, church members, if you have not got a prayer meeting at your church, my advice is that you start one now, and see what God will do for you.

And then if you have not got a family altar in your home I would suggest that these things be looked after.

Our pastor, Rev. C. E. Ridge, preached first Sunday and the people who heard him reported a good sermon. I did not get out to hear him on account of being sick with grippe or "flu." Have been confined to my room ever since Christmas, a month, but am getting better now. I heard him preach some before I got sick, and I know he can preach the plain old-time religion. Expect to stand by you, Brother Ridge, to the finish, just like I did Brother Short. If you want to know how that was, just ask him. I think he will tell you the same.

Pray for us, brethren, that we may all reach home safely.

J. R. Surratt.

Midland.—We came here and found some old friends and a lot of new ones. We like the work here fine. We have not called on any one yet for anything that they have not responded in a kind Christian spirit. The first thing we asked for was the repairing of the garage, which was put in good shape. The next thing was the putting of columns to the parsonage and then the painting of the house and roof, which is nearly complete now, and is worth twice what it cost to have it done. Mr. D. F. McManus, our good next-door neighbor, did the painting and work.

The good brethren have been keeping us in wood these cold rainy times, for which we want to thank them. We want to thank all of the people of all of the churches and some outside of our church for the kindness they have shown us since we came here. They have brought us such things as butter, eggs, milk, chicken, and a great many other things that were very much appreciated by us. We are proud of the work here and we love the people here. We have some real Christian men and women at all of the churches.

We have missed several appointments on account of my being confined to my bed for some time. The weather has been bad, especially the last two Sundays. We hope to soon be able to be out again.

We are looking forward to a good and pleasant year here on Midland work. We are going to try to get the folks to have a good old-time camp meeting at Mill Grove this August. We want to try to get them to build some more new camp houses here.

Hoping to hear from more of the pastors,
J. M. Ridenhour, Pastor.

Mt. Carmel, Granville Circuit.—As our local reporter has not reported for some time I will take it upon myself for once. No report does not mean that we have been slothful. We are a small band, but we are one hundred per cent strong for the Master.

Our Sunday school is also young, being commenced the second Sunday in October last. I do not believe there is a Sunday school anywhere that has averaged in attendance better than ours since we started. We have 58 on roll and on the first Sunday (after the Christmas tree) we had 58 present. And I would especially mention the primary class. There have not been but two absentees in that class, I think, since our school started. A band of bright, nice little children. And shouldn't these dear little ones make us realize our responsibility? May we see to it that we do all that lies in our power that these little ones be reared for the Master, for He hath great need of them.

On account of the bad weather our pastor, Rev. W. F. Kennett, could not be with us last appointment. We were indeed sorry, for we are well pleased with him. He gave us a delightful message second Sunday in December.

We are looking forward for this to be the greatest year that Mt. Carmel has even witnessed. May we have your prayers?

C. T. Poythress.

English Street, High Point.—On January 18 the Sunday school had a large attendance, considering the weather. At 11 o'clock we had a fine preaching service. As the pastor was sick, Brother W. C. Hall delivered the message. In the afternoon the Evangelist Club held a meeting. The meeting was led by the Spirit of God. There were some good talks and fine singing.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society also held a meeting, and received two new members.

The Christian Endeavor society held their meeting at the usual hour, and also there was preaching service at 7:30. The pastor was preacher at night.

If the Lord is willing there will be prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 7:30.

We are looking to the Lord for great things this year.

Virgil Boswell, Reporter.

Mr. C. C. Kittrell's sister, Mrs. J. F. Coghill, who has been quite ill in the hospital, has recovered enough to return to her home.

Mrs. M. S. Duke is on the sick list at this writing.

Mrs. S. R. Harris is visiting her daughters in Baltimore and Philadelphia.

Halifax.—A pounding? Yes, indeed. On Monday evening, January 5, Union and Ringwood churches gave their pastor a double pounding. We want to thank every one that had any part in this. Mr. and Mrs. Neville, canned fruit, dried fruit, walnuts, and two chickens. Mrs. Stallings, canned fruit, coffee, and sugar. Mrs. Dosier, canned fruit and pickles. Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Lewis, oatmeal, cherries, corn flakes, and flour. Annie Lewis, canned fruit and sausage. J. M. Lewis, oranges. William Browning, sugar. Mamie Taylor, cornflakes and rolled oats. Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Lewis, a shoulder of meat. Daisy Aycock, canned fruit. Aycock Brothers, sugar and raisins. Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Kennedy, potatoes, dried fruit and pickled peaches. Mrs. N. W. Cousin, walnuts, canned fruit and a chicken. Mrs. J. C. Taylor, canned figs, peaches, and tomatoes. Mrs. Dora Lewis, canned fruit and pickles. These poundings always make a preacher feel glad, and at a loss for words to express his appreciation.

On that night we had a wedding at the parsonage and on last Sunday morning as we started to church we met a couple hunting a preacher, so we went back and fixed them up and sent them on their way rejoicing.

We want to thank Mrs. W. R. Neville for filling up our tank with gas. We want to thank Mrs. F. M. Taylor for fresh meat, souse and sausage.

Sunday was a very rainy day, but we had a number out for services at Bethesda. At the close of the services we administered the Lord's supper. C. L. Spencer, Pastor.

Davidson Circuit.—I began working as pastor on Davidson circuit on the 16th of November and have served as best I could since that time.

This is my first work as pastor and I hope I may have the prayers of those of you who read this and recall your first year in the ministry.

I have made great sacrifice in disposing of my farm, machinery, etc. My greatest desire is to be so consecrated to God that I may be willing to go where He wants me to go, and say what He wants me to say.

I have received a hearty welcome at all the churches on the charge, and the work is starting off fine. Sunday school at all the churches and three of the churches are having regular prayer meetings.

The Christmas spirit was fine on this work, there being an entertainment and tree at Liberty, Chapel Hill, Alleghany, Pleasant Grove. The writer attended three of those and received a number of useful presents for pastor and family, including apple, oranges, etc., for which we are truly thankful. The best of all was the programs rendered by the children. It made our hearts rejoice to hear them praise and sing so impressively about our blessed Savior. Yes! Santa Claus was there also to bestow his gifts on us all. O that we may think about our Heavenly Father as the giver of all good and precious gifts.

Our first quarterly conference passed a resolution to finish ceiling the parsonage at once. We are expecting to move as soon as it is finished.

We find we are laboring among good people every Sunday in the future, as he is a member of our church.

Calvary Church.—The readers of the Herald already know that the Methodist Protestants of South Greensboro have been building a new church on Asheboro Street. They also know that our last annual conference that met in Reidsville sent Rev. Linley W. Gerringer as the first pastor of this new congregation. Since Brother Gerringer came to us in November we have been holding services in South Buffalo school building while our church was in course of construction.

Last Sunday was a happy day for the members of this congregation. The time we had looked forward to was realized. We worshiped in our new church for the first time and you should have seen the smiles of happiness on the faces of these faithful members. At 11 A. M. Brother Gerringer preached a strong sermon from the subject: "The possibilities of small beginnings." He told us how churches starting from very small beginnings often grew into large churches. No churches start out as full grown churches. We feel that we have a large church to start with but expect to see it grow still larger. The Lord's supper was administered. We held our formal opening at three o'clock Sunday afternoon. Dr. A. C. Dixon was with us and preached a strong sermon. All the Methodist Protestant churches of Greensboro and vicinity were present as an opening, and also Rev. R. M. Alderson, D.D., Rev. H. F. Fogleman of Asheboro and Rev. N. G. Bubea of Lexington. We also had the following South Greensboro pastors of other denominations: Rev. B. K. Massey, pastor of Asheboro Street Baptist church; Rev. C. E. Hodgkin, pastor of Westminster Presbyterian church; Rev. R. G. Tuttle of Centenary M. E. church. We appreciated having these brethren with us.

The congregations of the various M. P. churches were well represented. We were specially pleased to have so many present from Grace, our mother church. We were pleased to see so many of our friends and neighbors in the community present.

Fine addresses were made by our pastor and Rev. J. F. McCulloch, D.D., chairman of our building committee. They spoke in appreciation of the earnestness of our members and also of the help we had received from other sources, especially Grace church, which had made Calvary church possible.

A. C. Dixon, Publicity Committee.

Shelby.—Services were well attended here on Sunday, considering the rain and muddy streets. The Sunday school is holding its own in regard to attendance and interest, and there is an opportunity for building up the Sunday school.

We were glad to have Brother C. G. Anthony with us in the Sunday school and church service last Sunday morning. Brother Anthony lives in South Shelby and has not been with us regularly for some time. He taught the men's class in the absence of the teacher, Mrs. J. T. Ramsey. He is expected every Sunday in the future, as he is a member of our church.

Mrs. J. T. Ramsey, the teacher of the men's class, has been in poor health for more than two weeks. Mrs. C. B. Way has been appointed teacher of the beginners' class, taking the place of Mrs. F. H. Glenn, who gave up the class recently. The junior boys' class has started a red and blue contest which will end with the last Sunday in February.

The stewards have been engaged in the every-member canvass for the past two weeks and the results obtained have been gratifying. We expect them to report the results of the canvass by next Sunday.

A meeting of the Shelby church has been called for Saturday night, January 24, at 7:30 o'clock, at which time we are expecting a speaker to present the plan of the college endowment fund.

Next Sunday will complete the first quarter of the present conference year. One-fourth of the conference year past, and it seems that we have only got started well with the work. Our quarterly report to the president will be made following next Sunday.

C. B. Way, Pastor.

Correction.

In the M. P. Herald of December 11 the offerings of Thomasville charge should have been reported as follows: Pleasant Grove thank-offering, Thomasville charge, $32; Clyde Annan Missionary Society thank-offering, First Church, $25; making a total of $57 for Thomasville charge.

We quickly find out that these wet Sundays make quite a difference in the offerings of the Home, but I feel sure when the brighter Sundays come you will not forget us, but will with the brighter days give us increased collections.

Two bright, interesting girls have recently been added to the Home.

—The labor government of Great Britain recognized Soviet Russia last February and made treaties with that country last summer. However, when the Baldwin government came into power in Great Britain it cancelled the treaties and warned Russia to stop Bolshevik propaganda in Britain.

Mason.—Cyrus Mason was born April 9, 1853, died December 19, 1924. He was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church 38 years, coming from the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he was a member for two years.

He possessed many attractive characteristics of a true Christian, kind to his neighbors, seeing the good in his fellow man. He also loved the old-time songs, and asked the people to come in and sing them to him, after he was confined to his room. One of his favorite songs was,

"Come, humble sinners, in whose breast

A thousand thoughts revolve,

Come, with your guilt and fear oppressed,
And make this last resolve."

Many times he would say—"I am old-timey—I don't like these rag songs, want something that moves my soul, not my feet." It was the writer's privilege to be in the home several times in the closing weeks of his life. He remarked several times, "I am ready to go home, I am only awaiting for the call."

His place is vacant in the home, church and community, but occupied in the heavenly kingdom. He is sadly missed, but kindly remembered by his many friends for his loving deeds, and consistent Christian life, lived in the community. He was confined to his bed for several weeks before death released him from the torture of cancer.

His sons were by his bedside when death claimed him; he took one of them by the hand and said, "Boys, I am going." Then he looked up, smiled, and was gone, home to die no more. He left to mourn his death, a widow, three sons, and a number of grandchildren, and a host of friends. The funeral was conducted at Roberta M. P. church, by his former pastor, Rev. J. T. Sisk, assisted by the writer.

Safe moored within the port of peace;

Once heir of death—immortal now,

Of pain—thy toils forever cease."

There have been many cases of typhoid fever in Illinois, especially in Chicago, and the cause has been traced to the eating of raw oysters received from Eastern beds. A typhoid epidemic in New York City is thought to have been caused by the eating of raw oysters, taken from beds where the water was impure.

tendered by the Ladies' Aid society in honor of the faculty and student body of High Point College on Friday evening, January 16. This social event was held in the Sunday school rooms of the new church, and although the weather was extremely inclement, there was a good attendance of both the church members and the College folk, and the occasion was delightful. Upon arrival the guests were greeted by Dr. and Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Rankin, Sr., Dr. and Mrs. S. S. Coe, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Gray, and others, and were asked to register at three places for the different courses of study. The Language, Botany and Chemistry courses were obligatory, and besides these there were three optional courses, Mathematics, History and Forestry. There was much curiosity as to what all this meant, but upon investigation it was found that the refreshments were to be served first, contrary to custom. The Language course proved to be tongue sandwiches (and ham), the Botany was lettuce sandwiches, Chemistry, delicious punch, History was stuffed dates, Mathematics was very properly nuts (to crack), and Forestry was tooth-picks. Many of the pupils claimed to have failed, especially in Chemistry, and wanted to take the course over again. Then they were all called to chapel service, which proved to be delightful in the extreme. Dr. Brown made a "foolish" little talk according to instructions, Miss Gardyne of the local Y. W. C. A. gave two pleasing readings, and Miss Vera Idol of the faculty gave two delightful vocal solos, followed by Mrs. R. M. Andrews, who charmed the audience with her rich, mellow voice in two pleasing numbers. They were accompanied by Miss McIntire of the music department of the College. These social affairs are a delightful means of becoming acquainted, and we are looking forward to a number of them in the new church.

We were much pleased to see Dr. and Mrs. A. G. Dixon present at the reception.

The Ladies' Aid society held its January meeting at the beautiful new home of Mrs. H. A. Moffitt on North Main street on Monday, 12th. The associate hostesses were Mrs. L. J. Diffie, Mrs. J. C. Welch, and Mrs. Clyde Cox. Delightful refreshments were served to the large number present. The annual election of officers was held, and resulted as follows: President, Mrs. S. S. Coe; vice president, Mrs. L. J. Diffie; secretary, Mrs. John H. Walker; assistant secretary, Mrs. Clyde Cox; treasurer, Mrs. C. L. Gray.

WILLS BOOK AND STATIONERY CO.

Greenville Circuit, Va.—We have been on the job since conference. We have been very busy filling the appointments, holding the first quarterly conference, business meetings, planning the work.

Our Christmas.

Christmas came. We were remembered by good old Santa. We had many tokens of love and Christmas cheer from friends in several states. Our own people here, whom we are trying to serve in our Master's name, did not forget us. We received several very useful and valuable presents. Some of them will give us service and pleasure for years to come. We are profoundly thankful to every one who thus remembered us.

There were two Christmas trees on the charge, namely, Matthews Chapel and Philadelphia. The songs and recitations were fine and carried us back in thought to the glorious night when the angels sang the Father's love and goodwill to men, when our God gave the greatest expression of His love in the gift of His dear Son to save sinful men. We all felt glad and rejoiced in the great fact. The order and reverence was as fine as I ever saw, the people said the finest they had ever seen at these two churches.

There is much blockading and bootlegging in this part. Of course, there was much drinking that we could hear of here and there. The thing that pained us most was the news that some of our members had fallen into the deceptive coils of the terrible serpent, strong drink. How strange it is that men of sense, heads of families, will be thus deceived. Some will even hold up for it and argue against Prohibition.

We have been greatly hindered by continued excessive rains. Our fine sandelay roads are all to pieces. Traffic is almost at a standstill. My engine is a sure spark, the wheels of my auto never spin, so I make the appointments with some worry and difficulty. Virginia is a great old state; here we have some of the best of people. We have been gladly received at all points. We are endeavoring to make this a banner year. We had seventy net increase in our membership last year. We hope for a hundred this year and progress on all lines of church work.

Good wishes to our editor and all the family of readers of this splendid church paper.
H. L. Powell.

IN THE RUSH OF LIFE

By Walter J. Gresham

'Tis only a half truth the poet has sung
Of the house by the side of the way;
Our Master had neither a house nor a home,
But He walked with the crowd day by day.
And I think, when I read of the poet's desire,
That a house by the road would be good,
But service is found in its tenderest form
When we walk with the crowd in the road.
So I say, let me walk with the men in the road,
Let me seek out the burdens that crush,
Let me speak a kind word of good cheer to the weak
Who are falling behind in the rush.
There are wounds to be healed, there are breaks me must mend,
There's a cup of cold water to give;
And the man in the road by the side of his friend
Is the man who has learned to live.

Then tell me no more of the house by the road,
There is only one place I can live;
It's there with the men who are toiling along,
Who are needing the cheer I can give.
It is pleasant to live in the house by the way,
And be a friend, as the poet has said;
But the Master is bidding us, "Bear ye their load,
For your rest waiteth yonder ahead."

I could not remain in the house by the road
And watch as the toilers go on;
Their faces beclouded with pain and with sin,
So burdened, their strength nearly gone.
I'll go to their side, I'll speak in good cheer,
I'll help them carry their load;
And I'll smile at the man in the house by the way
As I walk with the crowd in the road.

Out there in the road that goes by the house,
Where the poet is singing his song,
I'll walk and I'll work midst the heat of the day,

And I'll help falling brothers along.
Too busy to live in the house by the way,
Too happy for such an abode,
And my heart sings its praise to the Master of all,
Who is helping me serve in the road.

OUR COLLEGE ENTERPRISE.

I suppose every one understands that colleges are educational institutions. When one proposes the founding of a new college, he must find the reason for the undertaking in the value of education, in the efficiency of colleges as educational agencies, and in the existing need of the new institution proposed.

There is probably no interest of our life in this world unless it is the higher interest of religion that is so misconceived as the interest of education. Some expect far too much of it and some expect far too little of it. Some ignorant people have supposed that in a little book learning they would find for their children an open sesame to all places of pre-eminence and honor. Other parents do not attach enough value to the education to be gotten in schools and from books to send their children to schools even when all expense is borne by the state. There are some important things that education can do and some things that it cannot do. The true view is nearly always found between two extreme views. So it is here.

The Jewish rabbins used to say that the world is preserved by the breath of the school children and they declared that Jerusalem was destroyed because the education of the children was neglected. We have in this country little superstitions regard for schools and education, but there is a fairly general appreciation of the value of at least elementary education. All our states have their public school system, providing for elementary instruction, and most of the people believe in the public schools and would not like to see them abolished. They see that it is—

Than cells and gibbets for the man."
It is popularly supposed that education is a preventive of crime. At any rate, while the boy is in school he will not be so likely to get into mischief, or be led off into bad habits by evil companions. Then it is well known that some of the knowledge gained in the elementary schools is very necessary, in fact, indispensable, in the business affairs of life. The people know that their children could not get on in the world without the ability to read and write and make simple business computations. Then, again, since the days of Luther and the Protestant reformation, public education has been advocated as a measure of self-protection. Before the time of Luther, the masses of the people trusted in the church to do their thinking for them, but

Luther opened the eyes of people to the fact that their great friend, the Church of Rome, had been imposing on them shamefully, and ever since the days of Luther it has been thought safer and better for the individual man to do his own thinking and to make himself intelligent that he may think for himself to good purpose.

For all these reasons, elementary education is esteemed to-day and will probably be more highly esteemed in the future, when our public schools are better equipped and succeed better in their work.

It is regarding higher education that skepticism exists to-day. One has to plead harder and longer for colleges than he does for elementary schools in order to secure a hearing and a favorable consideration.

Some time ago, Mr. Schwab, the steel magnate, spoke disparagingly of higher education, and then went over to Europe and had little enough sense to try to beat a set of gamblers at their own game.

A Chicago business man thought he would demonstrate the foolishness of a college education by the testimony of college men themselves; so he prepared a circular letter and sent it to 65 business men of Chicago who had gone through college, asking them to tell him candidly out of their own experience their present estimate of the worth of a college education to one who is going to be a business man. This is what he got in reply: 69 of the 65 said they were glad they went to college. 50 of the 60 said that their business success had been increased by their college education; the other 10 said that while they did not know that their success in the business world had been any greater because of their course in college, yet they were glad they had taken a college course because of the meaning it had put into life for them. It is said that that man who sent out those 65 letters still tries to believe that for business men colleges have no value.

It is those who have a thing—not those who have it not—that can best judge as to the value of it. Those who have only the shadow of religion and not the substance of it will tell you if they speak candidly that religion is a failure and our churches an imposition on society. There are many men who go to the mourners' bench and don't get religion, and there are some who go to college and don't get a college education. If you ever hear a man who has gone to college speak slightly of a college education, you can at once put it down that he did not get at college the thing that he is supposed to have gone for. It is true that there is a great difference between colleges—there are some much better than others, but I do not believe there is any college so poor that it will not prove a permanent

MY WORK

Let me do my work from day to day,
In field or forest, at the desk or loom,
In roaring market-place, or tranquil room;
Let me but find it in my heart to say,
When vagrant wishes beckon me astray,
"This is my work: my blessing, not my doom;
Of all who live I am the one by whom
This work can best be done in my own way."
Then shall I see it, not too great nor small
To suit my spirit and arouse my powers;
Then shall I cheerfully greet the laboring hours,
And cheerfully turn when the long shadows
fall
At eventide, to play and love and rest,
Because I know for me my work is best.

TOBACCO AND CANCER.

By Will H. Brown.

One disease still baffles the brightest minds of the medical profession, and that is cancer. In spite of all that can be done, cancer is still on the increase, especially on the lips and tongue. The renowned physician, Dr. Wm. J. Mayo, says that the "arch enemy of middle age and beyond is cancer. Cancer of the lips and tongue is on the increase, as the habit of smoking is on the increase."

That this particular form of cancer is often due to smoking seems certain, for the reason that many more men than women are thus afflicted. This indicates that in time, if women do not give up smoking, cancer of the lips and throat will rapidly increase among them, also.

Dr. J. C. Bloodgood, professor of clinical surgery at Johns Hopkins Medical School, Baltimore, says: "Cancer does not start as cancer, but as something else. Smoker's burn, wart, ulcer, or other sore in the mouth, while it may be harmless in itself, may very readily lead to cancer."

The same authority further says: "Cancer of the lips and tongue is confined almost wholly to men, because smoking is confined chiefly to men." He says that of 160 cases of tongue cancer, but two of the persons afflicted in this way were non-users of tobacco.

General Nelson A. Miles, discussing the well-known fact that smoking killed General Grant, said to Dr. D. H. Kress, of Washington, D.C., that he had a conversation with Grant only two months before he died, and that during the conversation the general complained of sore throat, which his physician had told him was due to smoking. General Miles further said that six of the officers under him died of cancer of the throat from the use of tobacco.

A DAY IN THE MOUNTAINS OF SHANSI, CHINA

Miss Ethel M. Long, daughter of Rev. Luther K. Long, of Michigan, is a missionary in charge of a school for girls at Lintsing in the province of Shantung, China. Seven years ago she spent a summer vacation in the province of Shansi, and was in the same place last summer, with some sixty other missionaries of various boards. Writing to her father she describes a day's outing with four other young women in the mountains:

"Yesterday we went to the mountains, and had such a good time. We got up early but didn't start until about eight o'clock. We had two donkeys and took turns riding. The donkeys had panniers, so we could take a lot of things—rugs, cushions, and the like. The panniers are held together by curved pieces of wood which make them very uncomfortable to sit on, so we had a much-folded rug and pillow on top, lifting us so high in the world that it would not require much to wobble us off. Our feet dangled in front, and we had a piece of rope tied on one side of the animal's mouth on which to pull in case he stumbled.

"It was a lovely ride up the valley, much of the time in the shade and by the side of the stream. Each of the old flouring mills is just a little different from the others; the various sluices and waterpools are so interesting. It is such a pleasure to be for a while where water is so free and generous with itself.

"The wild flowers are lovely, especially the pink mallows which grow where the stream is deepest hid. They are fuzzy, a bit like hepaticas, and have the same delicacy, but are much larger. There are purple and yellow flowers, and some white ones, that make such lovely bouquets.

"We arrived at Shen Tou, the 'God Head,' the place where the springs are, in an hour. Here we cooled ourselves at the springs and pool under a lovely big tree. The pool has been cleaned out—and looks it—for all the ferns and moss on its edges and walls are gone, so it isn't nearly as pretty as it used to be. However, the water was wonderfully clear, and the sun shone through the trees onto the fresh green growing in the bottom and made it shiny like emeralds. After filling ourselves and the bottles with water, we started up on the canyon, riding and walking and enjoying the lovely cliffs and stones and ledges and green slopes.

"Soon we left the main road, going up a side path to reach a certain mountain the girls wanted to climb. The ascent was gradual, but the path was stony and not so easy to walk on. We continued around the sides of various hills, arriving at last at a little temple just below the top of the mountain. It was only a small shrine with a porch enclosed on two sides and open for the view down the valley—but it held us all and was a lovely place to rest.

"There was a little 'God of the Mountain' image having two attendants, a railing shutting them off from the porch part. On this railing were tacked red cloth mottoes—'He who asks shall receive'—probably referring to prayers for rain. There were little benches on each side, and quite a number of men stopped on their way up or down the mountain. One cute little pock-marked boy had come from Fenchou with a load of onions, and was going to a village thirteen miles further on—some walk on a hot day over a mountain trail!

"The view from here was splendid, over the mountain to the plain and valleys below. We could see 'our' green valley, the only one that was wide and apparently had water and trees. The mountain on the other side made such a pretty back ground.

"It was sunny at first, but we had a little breeze while eating lunch, and one of the girls read to us. Later the girls wanted to go on up to the top of the mountain, but I remained at the shrine and read and enjoyed the view. Clouds gradually formed, with lovely effects over the mountains and valleys—sometimes with sunshine in one place, rain in another, and a whirl-wind of dust in still another. It sprinkled on the mountain where we were, making the air nice and cool, so we had a good time going down—except for those slippery stones.

"We finished our lunch at Shen Tou and after a good rest, came back on the high road through the valley where we could look down onto the abandoned flour mills now used for summer houses for missionaries. We went through many villages, terraced in many places, with houses one on top of another."
Ethel M. Long.

SPIRITUAL CARNIVORA.

God has made the lower animals to spend the most of their time in seeking for food for themselves and their young ones. And this is really also the divine order for man, except that his food is much more varied. For man must not only by the sweat of his brow earn bread for the physical nourishment of himself and his family and his fellow men, but he must also, with eager and alert effort, earn the bread to feed their minds and their souls. And the chief difference between men is their willingness to labor for the higher kind of food.

The robin, as it hops about the green swales under the trees, is seeking for just one type of food. But man must not only pick up the fruit and the nuts that fall for the nourishment of his body; he must also find food for his aesthetic nature. He must have an eye for the beauty of the glint of the sun on the green grass and among the branches of the trees, and must be on his watch for the sustenance that comes from flowers and bird songs and the glory of the summer sky.

But in his physical nature man is not merely a vegetarian. He is a carnivorous animal. The structure of his teeth plainly indicates that he was intended to eat flesh as well as grains and vegetables. And his soul is likewise carnivorous. The larger an animal is, as a rule, the larger its prey. The roaring lion of the jungles must have his sheep or his ox for food. And when it comes to feeding the imperial mind and soul of a human being, his demands for nourishment are the greatest possible. Says Jesus, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have not life in yourselves. The supreme carnivorous animal of the world when it comes to feeding his higher nature makes an almost blasphemous demand. The lion eats an ox, but man eats God."

When Jesus said to his disciples, "This my body broken for you; this is my blood of the new covenant which was shed for you and for many unto the remission of sins," he expected this statement to be not merely encouragement to man in believing that God would forgive his sins, but also a mandate to a heroic life. He expected them to have, in their opposition to sin and in their capacity for heroic and fierce endeavor in a good cause.

January 29, 1925.

the qualities of the carnivorous beast, glorified, spiritualized and magnified in proportion to the superiority of the food which he had given to nourish their souls. The man who comforts his soul on the spiritual idea that he can feed upon the self-sacrificing love of God, and who does not at the same time devote himself to a kindly and wise ministry to his fellowmen that stops at no sacrifice in order to succeed, is doing the same thing in the spiritual realm that the drug fiend is doing with his body. He is seeking to get a satisfaction and a thrill at the expense of the moral law. It is blasphemous to talk about the blood of Christ unless one is willing to shed his own blood, if need be.

God gives the seeds and insects to the little birds, and as his creatures rise in the scale their food becomes more costly. When it comes to man his soul is so great and his nature is so exalted that his prey—it seems almost blasphemous to speak it—is God himself. And that being the case, we must remember that the exploits are expected in proportion to the food we eat, and that courage, abandon, and splendid unselfishness are to be as constant a manifestation of our nature as is the savage bearing of a lion or a tiger.

ent source of help to the man who faithfully employs the opportunity it gives him. And as to our best colleges, there can be no doubt in the mind of the intelligent man as to their value.

If a college education did not make a man more useful it would still be worth a great deal to him in the pure and elevating enjoyment it brings him. Sir John Lubbock said: "The very process of acquiring knowledge is a privilege and a blessing. It used to be said that there is no royal road to learning; it would be more true to say that the avenues leading to it are all royal." Most college students I believe find their college life a period of peculiar blessedness. If a rosebud could feel, what a thrill of delight I imagine it would feel when it finds itself opening and blooming out into fulness of beauty under the influence of the sunlight! A human soul can feel, and what thrills of delight one experiences as his mind opens and expands under the influence of the great new truths that are brought to him in the atmosphere of an institutions of higher education. I remember distinctly what wonder and admiration I experienced when I was first brought to contemplate the magnificent nebular hypothesis by which La Place accounted for the formation of worlds. I can see the beaming face of Dr. Franklin, as he used to stand before his classes and become almost shouting happy as he lectured on the beauty of mathematics. And what an interesting life does the student have in living over again the life of mankind in the history of the great nations and the great men of the past! Fortunate, thrice fortunate, are those young people who are permitted to bask in the sunlight of truth radiated from the world's greatest minds. It is indeed a privilege to be for years a student—to walk in the footsteps of the great thinkers whom God has given to be leaders of thought for the world. And what a great pleasure it is to come to the boundaries of human knowledge and find oneself able to step beyond—to go where human thought has never gone before, to rise a little higher toward God, the author of truth, than any predecessor has gone. What a privilege it is to make a discovery or invention which shall remain to bless the world long after its author shall have gone to his reward! These are the things that lie within the reasonable hope if not within the actual reach of every earnest college student. These are the prospects to which the college student is caught up in those few precious years which he is permitted to devote to the expanding of his mind and the enriching and enlarging of his thought.

But a college life is not simply a life of enjoyment—it is a life of preparation—it has its fruits in all the life that follows. What the self-made man (as he is called; the fact is that the college man is as truly self-made as any other)—what the self-made man gains of knowledge and power with great difficulty through many years of painful labor, the college student gains with much less difficulty in much less time, because he labors under conditions so much more favorable. It is no argument against the colleges that a few men have attained to eminence in scholarship and influence without their aid. Because a few stalks of corn under specially favorable conditions may attain to full size and fruitage without any cultivation at all, no farmer would dare to leave a whole field of corn without cultivation and expect to gather a crop. Plants show very plainly the effects of culture, and so do men. The great difference between plants and men is that plants must be cultivated by men and men must be cultivated by themselves. Whether a man is educated in college or out of college the work is mainly his own—it is a work of self-culture. The college brings together the most favorable conditions under which the work of self-culture may be carried on. A man is more likely to attain to fulness of size if placed under the conditions which a good college provides than he is under the ordinary conditions that prevail in the world, just as a stalk of corn is more likely to come to perfection in the midst of a cultivated field than in an uncultivated place.

The world must have colleges because it must have men of culture, men of knowledge, men of skill to lead in the arts of civilization. Without its higher institutions of learning, the world would cease to make progress. All nations would become stationary as some nations seem to have done already. You are familiar with the expression, "a liberal education." It is the province of our colleges and universities to bestow a liberal education—an education that frees the mind from the bondage of custom and the trammels of prejudice and confers the liberty to follow wheresoever truth may lead.

Elementary education is conservative. All it aims to do is to keep the individual from falling behind his predecessors, to hold on to that which by hard struggle past generations have slowly gained. Higher education is progressive. It aims to lead men and women to higher and better things in thought and in life than their predecessors have reached.

Without our elementary schools, our people would relapse into savagery. Without our colleges and universities society would fail to advance according to the purpose of Providence and the law of its own spiritual being.

But some one will ask, Why have church colleges? Will not the state universities meet the demands of the case? We do not think that that question is ever asked by one very much interested in higher education, but still the question must be answered. Whether the answer will satisfy you or not, will depend very much on who you are or rather what you are. We can perhaps most briefly answer the question by asking another: The people of England at one time had no churches except the state church, the Episcopalian church; why was that not sufficient? Why did the people go to the expense of maintaining other churches? Why did the Baptists and the Presbyterians and the Wesleyans start independent churches and cling to them in spite of all the persecution that came upon them? I will tell you why it was: it was because the Church of England was not exerting that influence among the people for good that the dissenters thought a church should exert. Now I believe in state universities; I believe every state ought to maintain a university; but I much more believe in church colleges because I know that the state universities cannot exert that influence for good among the young people which the church college can exert. I not only say that they do not, but I say that they cannot.

What is the state university for? To prepare men for life in this world. What is the church college for? To prepare men for life in this world and in the world to come. The church college has an infinitely grander outlook for the student than the state university has. It makes grander men than the university does make or can make.

Why, I hear proclaimed in this country educational doctrines that had their origin in heathen minds of the distant past or in the skeptical French mind of the time of the French Revolution.

Did you never hear it said that the child belongs to the state? That is an old heathen doctrine. Carried to its logical conclusion, it will lead to the taking of the children from the parents altogether and to the putting to death of weakly children, as the ancient Spartans are said to have done. It will lead to compulsory military service on the part of every young man as in Germany. It will lead to the most degrading socialism the world has ever known. The child does not belong to the state; it would be more nearly true to say that the state belongs to the child. The state is a creature of time, the child is an immortal being, its life cannot be exhausted in the service of the state. It should not be prostituted to a position of complete subordination to the state.

The true view of the purpose of education is not the old monastic idea that it should ignore man's life in this world and simply aim to prepare him for death and the world to come; nor is it the French Revolution idea that it should ignore the future life and simply aim to prepare for life in this world; but it is the Christian view that it should prepare for life here and hereafter, in this world and in the world to come.

The Christian college is the only institution that can fully meet the deep soul needs of the student at that time in his life when he comes to choose his faith and form his philosophy—that which will rule his conduct here and determine his destiny hereafter. The elementary schools cannot do it, the state universities cannot do it.

I cannot agree with that Roman Catholic bishop who said, Give me the child until he is five years old and nobody can change his faith after that. The fact is, children have no religious faith of their own, but only a borrowed faith gotten from their parents and teachers; but the time comes somewhere between fifteen and twenty-five years of age when they want a faith of their own choosing. Give me the Roman Catholic youth from the age of fifteen to the age of twenty-five and in nine cases out of ten I believe that I will make a Protestant out of him.

The young people need the influence of the denominational college at that critical time in life when the transition is made from the faith which they have accepted blindly to the faith which they must accept intelligently if they accept it at all. They need the influence of Christian nurture to save them from scepticism, agnosticism, and worse still from worldliness, mammonism, the worship of wealth and worldly power, the great danger and the great curse of our age.

Our church in North Carolina needs our college. We have begun well in building for permanence. No other college or university has better buildings. But we need and must have an adequate endowment. Our thoughtful people will see this and will we believe co-operate in the present movement to meet this need.

EDITED BY REV. R. M. ANDREWS.

IS IT TOO BIG FOR US?

For years there have been those in our denomination who wanted the church to attempt great things. We have been accused of being small and of doing only little things or nothing. It is not the purpose of this article to provoke a controversy about this subject. We have no interest in such a discussion. For if we are doing great things, then this controversy would be entirely too small a matter to engage our thoughts, and if it is true that we have done nothing worthy of being called great, then there is nothing to scrap over. But I am interested in the question I raise and I want to discuss it in a constructive way. Is the work of building and endowing a college too big a task for 26,000 people? In answering this question I want in the first place to call your attention to three distinct things, which in the past thirty years we have set out to do, and let you decide whether or not we did them.

First, we built the publishing house. This building and site costing us $8,000, has doubled ten times in valuation in thirty years. Then we set out to build an orphanage. This has grown from an old discarded building with no grounds, to two splendid buildings and over 100 acres of ground, and it has increased in valuation until today it is estimated as being worth over $200,000. Now this has happened in less than fifteen years. Next we set out to build a college. Less than four years ago we went seriously into a campaign to raise the money for this institution. We have about fifty acres of ground in High Point valued at $100,000, and four buildings valued at over $400,000. Thus in less than four years we have gotten together a property worth more than a half million dollars, and the institution has made a splendid beginning. We have a faculty of fifteen members, a student enrollment of 125 members, and splendid prospects for a large enrollment next year. Again we ask the question, is the undertaking too big for us? Are we able to do what we have set out to do?

To answer this question correctly we should take into consideration what has been done. This, we believe, is a fair criterion to form a decision upon what may be done. We have given the facts of what has been done in the erection of the publishing house and the children's home and the college buildings. Now is it fair to suppose that we can carry on the college to success? In other words is it too much to expect that 26,000 people, who are mostly rural people, can complete what they have begun to do? Are the Methodist Protestant people in North Carolina able to contribute $15,000 a year for the next ten years for insurance endowment? Are we able to do this over and above what we must do to keep our local church enterprises going? Now, if we are not able to do this, then we have started something that is too big for us; something we shall not be able to complete unless we may get help from the outside. But if we are able to do it, we should do it as a means of grace to our souls, that we may grow thereby. Until we have tried this matter thoroughly and until our people have made sacrifices that are known because they are really sacrifices, and until at least a majority of our people shall have had this matter presented to them, until then, no one should say that the project is greater than we can carry on; that the enterprise is too big for us.

But it is too big for a few of us. It is greater than a few of the pastors and the leading laymen can do of themselves. In fact it is too big for a few hundred of us, even though a few hundred might do it, it is too much for only a few hundred to be allowed to do. There ought to be responses from at least one thousand of our people in this endowment campaign. I would like to set that as a goal, that we enlist one thousand people in this campaign to secure $15,000 a year for the next ten years. I am not asking that you figure down your fifteen dollars a year and join the thousand club, but that we get one thousand people who will help us to put over the campaign for college endowment that will be worthy a great people and will inspire confidence in the rising generation to attempt and to do great things for our church.

I know not how many there are in the Methodist Protestant Church in North Carolina who believe as I do about this matter, but whether there be ten or ten thousand, as I know the church, I am confident that we are able to do this thing and likewise that we must do it, or the failure will react upon us in a most disastrous way. Therefore, let us rally to the standard, let us offer our gifts and give ourselves until this work is done.

Fraternally,

R. M. Andrews.

CAMPAIGN FOR ENDOWMENT.

After mature consideration the committee in charge of this campaign for endowment worked out the following quotas for the pastoral charges. We are asking the churches to pay this amount each year for ten years that we may have an endowment sufficient to aid worthy students who desire to go to college and who do not have sufficient funds.

We are sending out speakers to the churches to present this matter just as rapidly as we can find them. Of course you know we have great difficulty in getting speakers, and the weather conditions make it hard for us to have a hearing. But we believe in our people and we feel that when the matter is sufficiently presented that the amount needed to secure the endowment will be forthcoming. You no doubt already know that our plan is to carry so much insurance for this money so that every dollar that you pay amounts to $1.26 in cash at the end of the period, and if any person whose life has been insured should die before the expiration of the insurance, the premiums on that policy cease and the face value of the policy is paid. Trusting that we may have your most cordial cooperation in this campaign we are presenting the matter to you.

Our First Bequest.

Our good sister, Mrs. George W. Coble, remembered High Point College in her will, leaving it $1,000. We appreciate very much the confidence of this good woman expressed in this gift. It makes us feel more keenly the responsibility, that because of her confidence in the college and the confidence of others like her we must not fail. Therefore if we shall succeed the success must of necessity be yours. Let us rally to this cause and put this campaign over in good shape.

Henderson.—Our faithful reporter, Miss Katie Cook, has covered the ground so well in her reports that it seems that there is very little need for my services in this respect; however, there are a few things I might say. First, I will say that our choir had a get-together meeting last Tuesday evening and decided to furnish more music for the church services. So yesterday was a forerunner of the feast of good things which we are to have. We have an excellent choir director and organist in the person of Miss Sallie Charles Cheatham and one of the best choirs in the city.

The work on our new Sunday school building is being rushed now and we are hoping to get in it within a few more weeks. This will give us five more large rooms on the second floor and a large basement, capable of accommodating half a dozen classes. The basement will be used for social purposes as well as class rooms.

Beginning next Monday, Feb. 2, we will conduct our annual campaign for subscriptions for the church papers.

Brother W. C. Hight has been in a hospital in Richmond for the past week taking treatment. And Brother Walter Vaughan of Vaughan, N. C., who recently became agent for the Seaboard Railway here was operated on in the hospital here for appendicitis Saturday afternoon. Miss Katie Cook, our reporter, is in the hospital again, this making something more than twenty times that she has taken an anesthetic. We hope all of these will be greatly benefited by their hospital experiences.

Well, this scribe has been counting Conference journals for Brother Bates today, so guess the journals will be on sale in the churches next Sunday. J. E. Pritchard.

Monday.

Denton.—Denton charge has at last mounted a hill of great difficulties, which has been greatly impeding her religious progress for some time, and is now on the road to a successful year's work. It has been stated recently by some of the leading members that the best spirit of cooperation is prevailing throughout the charge that has for some time. We have been greatly impressed by the way many of our members have responded to the demands of duty, and by the way that many of them have fought the opposing forces to success. Our observations have not yet revealed unto us any reasons why our year's work should not be a successful one.

Our prayer is that God may let His hand of guidance be upon us, and that He may endow us with strength sufficient to enable us to carry our year's work to the highest goal of success. O. C. Loy, Jr., Pastor.

Reidsville.—Our pastor has been on the sick list for several days, but is better at this writing, we are glad to say; however, he was not able to preach Sunday and Mrs. A. G. Dixon filled the pulpit in his absence.

The C. E. meeting was led Sunday evening by Mrs. C. J. Roberts. Interesting facts about our own denomination were discussed at this time.

The Junior choir is making rapid progress under the leadership of Miss Blanche Weatherly.

Quite a number of our members are sick and they are greatly missed from the services. (With the bad weather and so many sick we have not been able to accomplish just what we would like to. We hope though that the sick ones may soon be able to attend services and we may do much that is worth while.

Mrs. H. S. Dixon.

Bethel, Alamance Ct.—Rev. G. W. Holmes filled his appointment here the 3d Sunday in January, giving us a good sermon taken from the Sunday school lesson. Only a few present as the weather was bad but we enjoyed the service very much and feel inspired to a good year's work, this the eighth year of Bro. Holmes' faithful work among us. Our Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies will meet the first Sunday in February with Mrs. L. M. McPherson. Subject—The Testing Hour. Mrs. Elizabeth Workman is quite sick. May she soon recover.

Mrs. R. L. McPherson who was operated on for appendicitis and tumor at St. Leo's Hospital, Greensboro, is home again, and Alma Foust who was operated on for appendicitis at Rainey Hospital, Burlington, is able now to enter school again. We are thankful for their recovery. Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Bivins have a fine boy.

Mrs. J. M. Foust, Reporter.

THAT GREAT ASSEMBLY.

When this is read the great Foreign Missions Convention of North America, including representatives from Europe, will be in session in the new and commodious auditorium in Washington, D. C., January 28 to February 2, 1925 (inclusive).

It will be the outstanding assembly, in the matter of importance, the interests involved, the results to issue to the churches and to mankind, which has been held in recent years.

The foremost missionary leaders of all Protestant denominations of the United States and Canada, leaders of England, Europe, Asia, Africa, etc., members of the boards and societies, pastors and laymen, representatives of young people's organizations, etc., will compose the convention.

The wealth of information from all lands occupied by the missionary forces which will be presented, the inspiration engendered by contact with workers who have wrought mightily for mankind's uplifting in the dark regions of the earth, the interchange of experiences, plans and projects of different missions will all tend to enlarge the interest and deepen the conviction of those to whom is given the task of winning the nations to the standard of Christ.

It is not to be "a deliberative or legislative assembly," but it will bring tremendous messages fresh from the conflicts over the world, bearing irresistible appeals to Christendom out of the overshadowing needs of our fellow beings afar, and the triumphs of the Gospel in these latter days, and the foreshadowings of greater achievements now possible through prayer, faith and consecration of life, talents and money to the cause.

It is expected that 5,000 delegates will attend the convention, and the effort has been made to have them come from all parts of America so that the great work of the convention may be passed on to the local churches and thereby bring to them a fuller understanding of their foreign missionary responsibility.

Our own church is entitled to 48 delegates, and at this writing I cannot report the number enrolled, but hope the full allotment will be reached, for we need to realize the full benefits of this convention.

The great need of the hour is for the Christian people of North America to "give themselves to the mighty ministry of intercession" during the meeting of the convention especially, that the leaders of the church, both men and women, may be guided of God, and "in unity of faith may lead the church to avail itself of the unclaimed wealth of His exhaustless resources," and that the various committees may be enabled to plan and carry through wisely and effectively the work of the convention, and that the results of the great assembly may be carried by delegates, the press, etc., to even the most remote churches of our continent, that all may be aroused to the need of larger liberality and more vigorous efforts to enthrone the Christ in the heart of humanity.

There never was greater need of the Gospel in all lands than now, and the spirit of the Christ displayed by faithful missionaries who minister to the needy through hospitals and infirmaries, schools of various grades, the ministry and the church's agencies is tending to break down prejudice and opposition, and resulting in a better hearing by the people.

Our own church must do its full share, and the payment of the budget will enable the Union Board to render a good account.

A GREATER WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE.

The General Education Board of New York City (The Rockefeller Foundation) has announced a conditional gift of $125,000 to Western Maryland College, to be applied to endowment. The condition attached to the gift is that the College is to raise $375,000 additional for endowment, making a total of $500,000 for endowment including the Rockefeller donation. The Maryland Legislature has also made an appropriation of $125,000 for a building, conditioned on the College's raising additional endowment. In other words, a total of $250,000 is to be given the institution provided the institution raises additional endowment to the amount of $375,000. Three years are given in which the conditions may be met.

This is a distinct challenge to the friends of the College. The Board of Trustees, at a meeting held recently, accepted the conditional gifts and authorized a campaign to be put on to raise the amount necessary to meet the conditions imposed by the Rockefeller Foundation and the Maryland Legislature. This campaign will likely be carried on in May of this year. The friends of the institution are much encouraged at the prospect of a successful campaign for funds. Western Maryland College has had a remarkable history and has done a great work in education for the citizens of Maryland and other states. The institution is making great strides along all lines, and the outcome of this campaign will place the institution in the forefront among the colleges of the country.

AT THE PARTING OF THE WAYS.

For weeks this column has been devoted almost exclusively to a discussion of the finances of the church in its various phases. When the new budget system of finance was adopted the boards and their secretaries were informed that it was no longer their business to raise money, but that they should devote their time to a development of the particular lines of work committed to their care. At the last session of the General Conference this idea was reversed in the creation of the Budget Council, and the secretaries, with the president of the General Conference, were ordered to raise the budget. See Journal, page 32. Some of us remembered former instructions, and some thought of Acts 2:2, last clause, but all have been doing as much as seemed to be possible to accomplish the new task set for us for the current quadrennium. If we say less about missions, and more about money, it must be understood that the task is that of "a money getter." It must also be understood that our efforts at money raising are at long range. We can only discuss and suggest methods, depending upon the pastors, local church, annual and General Conference treasurers, other officials, workers and members to put the plans into execution. The success attained is shown in a very definite manner by the appeals of the secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions in these columns in the last two weeks. The work of that board is in jeopardy because of the failure to collect and forward budget funds to the proper treasurers. The situation with the Board of Home Missions is also difficult. Appeals made to friends of the work have brought temporary relief, and with the prospective income from the Easter offerings from our Sunday schools and churches, we expect to meet all the obligations that we have assumed. But we are reducing our work to an income basis and are doing less than we have attempted to do in former years. We are at "The Parting of the Ways." Shall we continue the progressive program of the last two quadrenniums, or shall we fall back into the less aggressive spirit which prevailed previous to the General Conference of 1916? Money talks. What is your answer? Which way shall we take? This question is addressed to annual conference and local church treasurers, to pastors of churches, and members of congregations throughout the entire denomination. "Money talks. It expresses what its possessors actually are. Yea, money talks, and while it is true that it is not on speaking terms with every one, and to many it may only say 'Good-bye,' yet it speaks a various language which reveals the true inwardness of man." The Methodist Protestant Church will declare her character and determine his destiny at this point. She must fulfill her mission as a denomination by meeting the demands which are upon her. She cannot do less and maintain her standing among the denominations. She must do more if the promise of development is fulfilled. Let me close with this quotation. "For we preach not ourselves but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake." 2 Cor. 4:5.

(Note: The writer is a blind orphan girl now in a Near East Relief orphanage at Ghazir, Syria. Her bright mind and sunny disposition have won for her the sobriquet, "The Helen Keller of Armenia." This article, which she calls her "story for America," was translated into English by the orphanage director.)

I was nine years old when I lost my sight in a great plague of eye disease which swept through the refugee camps of Turkey. Therefore, I can remember very well what it is like to see. I try very hard all the time to remember what colors and flowers and sky looked like, so that when a thing is described to me and I have felt it with my hands, I get a mental picture of it with its real colors.

Many of our blind children have been sightless so long that they have lost this faculty of "imagining" colors. They no longer even try to "see" with their mind's eye, and I think this is very unfortunate, because I get a great deal of pleasure out of the mental pictures of things as I used to know them.

To become blind is very trying, especially at first. But it is a stimulus to the development of your other faculties. As soon as I lost my eyesight, even before I left the hospital and had discarded my eye bandages, I began to use my hands in new ways, in order replace the seeing-sense which had gone from me. It was an interesting study, trying to comprehend things from what my fingers could tell me. It took me longest to learn to read the Braille books, but now that I have thoroughly mastered finger-reading, I read much more than I ever would have done with my eyes.

People are very kind to blind folks. They give us many things for us, which saves us time and gives us leisure for study and work. Here at the big orphan school of the Near East Relief, we have now nearly a hundred blind children. We have good teachers, some of whom are themselves blind, and who, therefore, know our difficulties. We live in two small buildings of stone, one for the boys and the other for the girls. Each building consists of just one big room, so that there is no difficulty in finding one's way about. Our pallets for sleeping are on one side of the big room, while our work benches and school mats are on the other side. In front of each building is a sunny yard, where we can sit, or play quietly and undisturbed, during recreation hours.

Each day we spend about three hours at school work and about three hours in learning useful things, such as basket making, rug weaving, and music. It is curious how much music means to blind people. Almost all of our blind children are learning to play some instrument, and we have two orchestras, one of boys and one of girls. Every day they give a little concert, and we never tire of listening to them, although they do not have a great variety of musical numbers. We all think that they play very well, but of course visitors might think their efforts rather childish. Never mind, they will improve day by day, I am sure, and certainly that is the most important thing—to grow better and better at whatever you are trying to do.

In our idle moments, we amuse ourselves mostly by talking. There are some wonderful imaginations among our blind children, as you would admit if you could hear us talking about what we think America is like. You would probably say that our descriptions are very quaint. Some day, I intend to write a letter to my friends of the Near East Relief describing how America seems in the minds of a lot of blind Armenian orphans who have never seen it. My letter will be very amusing to the Americans, I think.

One curious thing about the conversation of our little Armenian blind orphans is that many of them speak in Biblical language, owing to the fact that most of our Braille books are Biblical and the children naturally talk according to what they read.

Some of our children feel that the future is rather hopeless. We hate to think that we are going to be dependent on others for many long years, even when the "others" are good and kind Americans. But I tell the children that even for blind people, there is a place in the world, if we will only try hard to learn useful things. The baskets which we make are very good ones, I am sure, for we take a great deal of pains with them. The matting rugs which we weave are bound to be useful, for we are careful to make every fiber sound and strong. As we get more proficient, we shall weave more elaborate baskets, and rugs with beautiful patterns, which people will be glad to have in their houses.

Moreover, deprived of our sight, we shall learn to think better and more carefully than those who are bothered by seeing things all the time. We have no crowd of things rushing upon our attention from the images which our eyes bring us; therefore, we can concentrate better on our inner selves. I have found that one can be very happy, even without the blessing of sight. I think, perhaps, it is even easier to be a good Christian without eyesight,—at least that is what I am trying to be.

"BLESSED"—THOSE WHOM THE LORD CALLS "BLESSED."

Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted.

Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.

Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled.

Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.

Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.

Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.—Matt. 5:3-10.

Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord.—Ps. 119:1.

Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord; that walketh in his ways.—Ps. 128:1.

Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.

Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile.—Ps. 32:1, 2.

Blessed is the man that maketh the Lord his trust, and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies.—Ps. 40:4.

Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.—Ps. 1:1.

Blessed is the man that endureth temptation, for when he is tried he shall receive a crown of life which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in the time of trouble.—Ps. 41:1.

Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and seek him with the whole heart.—Ps. 119:2.

Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.—Rev. 22:14.

Blessed are they that are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power.—Rev. 20:6.—Selected.

A FUTILE DREAM.

Self-sufficiency is the canker that gnaws at the root of all religion. It is the futile dream of a small, insignificant world, of which our little self is the great person, whose mind understands everything, whose will disposes of everything, whose money governs everything, and whose power carries everything before it.

DON'T PROCRASTINATE.

A naughty little weed one day
Poked up its tiny little head.
"Tomorrow I will pull you up,
Old Mr. Weed," I said,
But I put off the doing till,
When next I passed that way,
The ugly thing had spread abroad
And laughed at my dismay.

A naughty little thought one day
Popped right into my mind.
"Oho," I cried, "I'll put you out
Tomorrow you will find!"
But once again I put it off,
Till, like the little weed,
The ugly thing sprang up apace
And grew into a deed!

So, boys and girl, heed what I say
And learn it with your sums:
Don't put off for tomorrow, for
Tomorrow never comes,
Today pull up the little weeds,
The naughty thought subdue,
Or they may take the reins themselves,
And some day master you!

THE FAMILY ALTAR.

The following are ten reasons why a family altar should be maintained in every home:

1. Because it will send you forth to the daily task with a cheerful heart, stronger for the work, truer to duty, and determined in whatever is done, therein to glorify God.

2. Because it will give you strength to meet the discouragements, and the disappointments, the unexpected adversities, and sometimes the blighted hopes, that may fall to your lot.

3. Because it will make you conscious throughout the day of the attending presence of an unseen, Divine One, who will bring you through more than conqueror over every unholy thought or thing that rises up against you.

4. Because it will sweeten home life and enrich home relations as nothing else can do.

5. Because it will dissolve all the misunderstanding, relieve all the friction that sometimes intrudes into the sacred precincts of family life.

6. Because it will hold as nothing else the boys and the girls when they have gone out from underneath the parental roof and so determine very largely the eternal salvation of your children.

7. Because it will exert a helpful, hallowed influence over those who may at any time be guests within the home.

8. Because it will enforce as nothing else can do the work of your pastor in pulpit and pew and stimulate the life of your church in its every activity.

9. Because it will furnish an example and a stimulus to other homes, for the same kind of life and service and devotion to God.

10. Because the Word of God requires it, and in thus obeying God we honor Him who is the giver of all good and source of all blessing.—W. E. Biderwolf.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—FEB. 1.The Vine and the Branches.

Lesson Text: John 15:1-11.

Golden Text: John 15:5.

The Central Truth: The prime mission of the church is the glory of God. 'Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit.'

Scriptural Points.

1. This is a parable of the Christian church. Paul has given us two others that are quite similar,—the parable of the olive tree, Rom. 11:16-25, and the parable of the human body, 1 Cor. 12:12-27. Be sure to read these in connection.

2. "I am the true vine." Jesus is both "the root and offspring of David," the source and substance of the Christian church.

3. "My Father is the husbandman," the sovereign Author of redemption and the efficient progenitor of the body of believers. The tender love He has for His Son, He has also for His followers. He cultivates the Vine and the branches by the operation of the Holy Spirit. "Be filled with the Spirit."

4. "Ye are the branches." Christians must be like Jesus, for the branch has the same tissue as the vine, must be united to Jesus in a living way, the way of faith. Paul says the believer is "grafted" into Christ by the supernatural operation of the Husbandman. In another place he says that they are baptized into Jesus Christ by the Holy Spirit.

5. The lifeless or fruitless believer is separated from Christ and assigned to the fires of retribution.

6. The fruitful believer receives the pruning of testing and the rich inflow of spiritual graces, in order to bear more fruit.

7. The word or truth of Jesus is the instrumental means of salvation, cleansing, renewal, and infilling. It corresponds to the sap in the vine.

8. "Abide in me," by continual exercise of faith in unceasing prayer and by the fellowship of private and public worship and works.

9. "And I in you,"—"Christ in you the hope of glory," the Source of life, and the means and measure of fruitfulness. Jesus says, "I will come in unto him, and will sup with him, and he with me."

10. As the branch, its life, leaves and fruit, grow out of the vine, so all that the believer is, has, or does proceeds from Christ. He is totally helpless without Christ. "Without me ye can do nothing." Without Christ ye are nothing.

11. "The same bringeth forth much fruit." There is no limit placed to the possibility of Christian usefulness. Spurgeon once said that God has not yet fully demonstrated what He can do with a man of large faith and entire consecration.

12. Verse 7 sets forth the method of bearing fruit, and that method is prayer. "Ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

13. "So shall ye be my disciples." Fruit-bearing is the final and judicial test of discipleship. Fruit presupposes all that go before it, union, communion, life, profession, activity.

14. The fruit mentioned in this parable is the subjective sort—"the fruit of the Spirit," and not the objective kind spoken of in the account of the judgment of the nations, such as feeding the hungry, and clothing the naked.

15. Jesus mentions three of these fruits in this connection.

The first is of course love. "Continue in my love," the love that proceeds from me by the exercise of the Holy Spirit. The next fruit is obedience—"If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love." The third fruit is joy, "that your joy might be full," or complete.

Practical Points.

1. A sense of utter dependence upon God, coupled with simple reliance, will open the way for the grace of humility. None of us are sufficient of ourselves; our sufficiency is of God. "Christ is all and in all."

2. And Christ is dependent upon human instrumentality for the success of the plan of salvation. The vine bears no fruit; the branches bear all the fruit. He has no other plan. If the church fails Him, His cause is lost. Are you doing your part to carry out His plan of saving a world?

rest unto your souls." This is the yoke of serian graces must precede any efficiency of Christian service. There must be steam in the engine before the train can move: The powers of faith, love, and spiritual endowment are indispensable to real usefulness in the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

4. From a humble, grateful, trusting heart let the cry go forth, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do." The Word of Life.

REAL SUCCESS.

Jeremiah didn't want to speak. When God called him he objected. He felt he was too young. But God said, Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.

In the strength of this commission Jeremiah went. He spoke when it almost broke his heart to give the message he had to deliver. He spoke when he knew everybody was against him. He spoke when the certain result would be personal persecution or imprisonment. He spoke because he knew that God had put His words in his mouth.

His was a sad life; an apparent failure; a life that ended in Egypt away from the land he loved and had labored to save. But was it a failure?

His commission had closed with these words: "See, I have set thee this day . . . to root out, to pull down, to destroy, to throw down, to build and to plant.

Rooting out, pulling down, destroying, throwing down—these are not pleasant things to do, but they are necessary before building and planting are possible. Jeremiah didn't live to see the building finished or the plants come to fruitage, but the work he did made it possible; and his work was a success.

God needs Jeremiah's today. The work is hard; personal sacrifice will be needed; misunderstandings are certain; and there will be heartache a plenty. But the assurance that God needs you and has formed you for this purpose, and is calling you into the work, and will be with you in it, is more than enough to offset all the disadvantages.

Will you respond to His call?—North Avenue Presbyterian Church News.

There are many books and papers written on "things worth remembering," but it sometimes seems as if we needed many more on "things worth forgetting." The small boy who modestly boasted that though his memory was poor, he had a "first rate forgettory," has served as a joke for many orators and newspapers, but he was really laying claim to a valuable possession. It may be humiliating to think how much of our daily lives—the things we hear and see, do and feel—are only worth forgetting; but the art of forgetting is one that should be cultivated.

The little slight that annoys us is sure, if remembered, to grow in importance; the careless word takes on deeper meaning if it is pondered; the momentary feeling of provocation becomes hot anger if it is nursed. The only thing we can afford to do with all these small jare and frets is to forget them. The same is true of the little service we render, the kindness we bestow. If we count them over too often they grow like snow balls, by merely rolling over, and our sense of the appreciation we deserve and the gratitude due us becomes exaggerated. Our small deeds of helpfulness, whatever they may be for others, are for ourselves only worth forgetting. Still more should we let pass into oblivion the whispered ill about others. If we remember the story we shall be almost certain in some unguarded moment to speed it on its way again; it is only safe when forgotten.—Exchange.

It is with Christ as with music. Some are deaf and hear it not at all. Others hear a noise only and cannot tell the tune. They are not deaf but only tone deaf. Others again can tell the tune, but are unable to write it into notes. They are like the Christians who worship Christ, but have no use for dogmas. And there are a few who can distinguish concurrent melodies and analyze harmonies, finding in them not music alone, but language, and these again are the mystics and saints who can put the Christ into words. It is no use arguing with a man who is blind or deaf. It is absurd to persecute him. If he has neither sight nor hearing, there is surely a language that he will understand and that language is touch. When words fail, try deeds. In the mediaeval era the deed was persecution. The heretic was tortured and burned. When Jesus was arrested and Peter with his sword smote on the ear of the high priest's servant, Malchus, our Lord's touch healed the ear and His saying as they bound Him, "Suffer ye thus far," was in its exquisite irony perhaps the most unanswerable proof of the authentic miracle. For no one could have invented at once that human word and that divine deed. Our neighbors may seem to be unable to hear what, as we think, Christ is saying, or to see what, as we think, He is doing, but they can feel; they have sinned and need pardon; in sympathy, in service, in sacrifice, we can still show them the Christ.—N. THE PERFECT MANFour Simple Rules for Attaining Perfect Manhood

"And Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and men."—Luke 2:52.

These fourteen words tell us that Jesus grew into well-rounded perfect manhood, for He grew in all four important ways.

He grew mentally.

He grew physically.

He grew spiritually.

He grew socially.

When Jesus said, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me" (John 4:34), and "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. 4:4), He told us that He grew into perfect manhood because He did God's will in all things.

So to grow into perfect manhood it is only necessary to follow God's directions.

Rule I. Doing the will of God in my physical life.

"Know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which ye have from God? and ye are not your own: For ye were bought with a price: glorify God therefore in your body."—Cor. 6:19,20.

When I disobey the laws of health, I am disobeying the will of God.

Rule II. Doing the will of God in my mental life.

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report: if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, THINK on these things."—Philippians 4:8. "Set your mind on the things that are above, not on the things that are upon the earth."—Colossians 3:2.

When I fill my mind with dirty jokes, foul words and impure and evil thoughts, I am disobeying the will of God.

Rule III. Doing the will of God in my social life.

"A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; even as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."—John 13:34. "And if I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries, and all knowledge; and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing."—1 Corinthians 13:2.

Love in its best, purest, truest meaning. Not only must I love my fellow-men, the dumb beasts and the beauties of nature, but I must so live as to have all things love me. It is a well known fact that flowers bloom better for one who really loves them than for those who do not. Even they repay the love given them.

Rule IV. Doing the will of God in my spiritual life.

"Teacher, which is the greatest commandment in the law? and He said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind."—Matt. 22:36,37.

When I let anything, either business or pleasure, interfere with my worship of God, I am disobeying the will of God.

"But seek ye first His kingdom, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matthew 6:33.

Seek in the right spirit and read the fourteen verses preceding this to see what shall be added. All I can desire.

"But abide thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; and that from a babe thou hast known the sacred writings which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."—2 Timothy 3:14,15.—J. Adger Smyth.

DANGEROUS FLIPPANCY.

The Scriptures speak of those who "handle the Word of God deceitfully." Equally, though not in so many words, they warn those who handle it flippantly. Irreverence disqualifies a man from either translating or interpreting the sacred record. We have noted the fact that a certain professor is putting out a translation of the New Testament, and that the translation is in "good Americanese" and that the intention is "to make it understandable to the flapper or the bricklayer as well as the student, so that it would be thumb worn instead of shelf worn."

Such an advertisement should hinder rather than help the sale of the work. Several of our exchanges comment on the flippant and strange style of the translation as compared with the classic English of the King James version. One says: "The notion that the Bible needs a rendering more in accord with the common speech of the present is scholarly nonsense. The language of the Bible is still the well of English undefiled. Fundamentally it is the best English of today. Setting aside archaic words and grammatical forms, it is yet the supreme model of vigorous, forceful, eloquent, and poetic English. Every attempt at revision has shown a lamentable deterioration in literary qualities. Every attempt to make it more understandable has made it less so."

Another says: "Scholarship has done vastly for our understanding of the Bible, but those of the scholars who descend to trivial language and undertake to put sublime revelations into 'street talk' not only fail to improve reverence on the part of the reader, but also betray a lack of it in themselves."—Exchange.

A CHILD'S FAITH

Ruth's mother was thankful when those in authority at the hospital told her that she might stay with her little daughter when after a long illness the little girl had to be taken there for an operation. Ruth was quiet and patient; she seldom complained, and never said anything to show how she felt about the operation through which she was to pass. She did not seem frightened, and she met every one with a brave smile.

Being with her night and day, her mother noticed that she was careful to keep her handkerchief in a place where she could get it easily. There was nothing strange about that. But her mother also observed that whenever the nurse brought her a clean handkerchief, Ruth would transfer to it something that was tied into the corner of the one she had. Her mother was naturally curious about the mysterious something of which the child was so careful, and one day she gently asked her what it was she guarded with so much solicitude.

Ruth looked up with tears in her eyes. "I found it," she answered, "in the drawer when we left home, and I wanted that much with me." She let her mother untie the knot in the corner of the handkerchief, and there in a tight little roll was a leaf from the Bible.

She wanted "that much" with her; she could take "that much" to the operating room; she could keep "that much" in her hand when the dressings were made. She had it when the stitches were taken out, and it meant so much to her! On the scrap was this verse: "Fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God."—The Youth's Companion.

"BECAUSE THERE WAS NO ROOM."

The blasts of winter are fierce and cold,
The snow lies deep over hill and wold;
But a star shines bright through the deepening gloom—

Room for the Christchild, room!

Where man's distrust and his greed for gain
Have frozen the floods of tender rain,
Till never a flower of hope can bloom—

Room for the Christchild, room!

In homes that deepest griefs have borne,
'Mid silent forms of those that mourn,
In the shadows that gather around the tomb

Room for the Christchild, room!

Where nations are warring, life for life,
And a cry rings out from the fearful strife
As a dying people sinks to its doom—

Room for the Christchild, room!

Room for the shepherds of Bethlehem,
Room for the angels who sang for them,
Room for the Light in the wintry gloom—

Room for the Christchild, room!

AN ENCOURAGEMENT.

Rev. Harry J. Bright, pastor at Eastport, N. Y., writes:

"Your appeal moved me to speak to two young men members of this congregation, but not members of our church, and this is the result—$100 from the Tuttle Brothers. When they started in their present business they promised the Lord they would tithe their income, and they have kept their promise, and God has wonderfully prospered them.

"This is for you and your great work only"—to help meet the overdraft which I have explained in the foreign missionary column of the church papers. If a number of our pastors would follow Brother Bright's splendid example the Board would soon be out of its financial difficulties.

OUR BUSINESS.

MOLLY'S MISTAKE.

Molly was such a little girl that she didn't seem big enough to have a party all her own with truly ice cream in it. But she had asked for one so many times that at last Mother decided to give her one. And the party was to be a surprise to Molly herself.

Early that afternoon Molly wanted to go for a little visit to Miss Eleanor. Miss Eleanor lived up Molly's street, in a white house with apple-green blinds. Molly often went all alone.

Miss Eleanor was always so sunny and full of songs and stories and games that Molly loved her next best to Father and Mother and Baby.

"You may go, dear," said Mother, "if you will come home exactly at three o'clock."

"You always say exactly three o'clock, Mother," said Molly.

"Well, five minutes after three, then," laughed Mother. "And, Molly, so that you won't forget this time, all the way to Miss Eleanor's say over and over, 'Five minutes after three.' Then, just as soon as you get there, say the words quickly to Miss Eleanor, 'Five minutes after three.'"

"Five minutes after three," said Molly; "I can remember that."

"That will give plenty of time to get ready for the party," thought Mother.

Up the street with her white parasol flew Molly. "Five minutes after three," she said over and over in a whisper until she began to sing it. "Five minutes after three," she sang until she stopped for a moment on the bridge to see some boys fishing. Just about there, a big dog who was a friend of Molly's ran out to say, "Good afternoon."

"Oh, Fritzie," cried Molly, "I'm going to Miss Eleanor's to make her a visit. Want to come?"

But Fritzie had the house to look after. So Molly gave him a hug and ran along.

"Three minutes after five," sang Molly; "three minutes after five," over and over until she ran into Miss Eleanor's sunny little sitting-room.

"Three minutes after five," cried Molly; "that's how long I can stay. Won't that be nice?"

"Why, it's little Molly!" cried Miss Eleanor. "I'm all alone and so glad to have company! We'll hear the clock strike five. Then, if you put on your wraps, you'll be all ready to start home at three minutes past."

It seemed a very, very short time to Molly before the little clock struck five.

"There, deary," said Miss Eleanor. "Put on your things and hurry right along!"

Molly put on her hat and coat. Then she kissed Miss Eleanor and hurried down the street.

When she reached the corner, she saw that the parlor at home was all lighted. And out of it came such a hubbub of little voices all laughing and talking that Molly ran faster than ever.

At the door she met Mother.

"Oh, Molly, where have you been?" cried Mother. "I couldn't go after you because I couldn't leave Baby. And I couldn't take him."

Molly scarcely heard. "Oh, Mother, Mother," she cried, "it looks like a party. And it sounds like one. Is it a party, Mother?"

"Yes," said Mother, "your own little party, Molly. And you're the only one who is late. How could you forget?"

"But I didn't forget, Mother," cried Molly, hurrying out of her coat, "truly I didn't. Every step of the way I said it, and I said it to Miss Eleanor the very first thing."

"What did you say?" asked Mother.

"Three minutes after five," said Molly.

Mother laughed. "Why, Molly dear, you got the hour and minutes turned around. I said five minutes after three. Well, never mind. Run along just as you are. It's a lovely party, dear, with truly ice cream in it."—St. Nicholas.

A CRACKED NEW YEAR RESOLUTION.

"Make me one, too, Will." Ned watched his brother while he lettered a large card with New Year resolutions. They were written in gold, with a great many ornamental flourishes.

Will held it up admiringly.

"Make me one, please," Ned repeated.

"You don't need any. You don't have to get up at six o'clock every morning and study an hour before breakfast; you can cuddle down and snooze till mother calls you. Besides, you'd break them all to smash before night," he added.

"No, I wouldn't. You try me, and see if I do," Ned said. He brought a card and gave it to his brother.

"What shall I put on it?" asked Will.

"O, something about remembering. I want to remember that I promised to shovel off Aunt Tyson's porch and make her a path to the gate every time it snows this winter. I wish it would hurry up and snow again, for she gives me ten cents every time. I've got thirty already."

"That's a lot. What are you going to do with it—buy an automobile?" Will asked teasingly.

"I'm going to buy Tommy Dixon a sled, so he and his sister can coast."

"There! How does that suit you?" Will asked, holding up the card on which was printed in large golden letters, with an elaborate border of holly leaves and berries: "Resolved, That I will not forget to shovel off Aunt Tyson's porch and make her a nice path to the gate every time it snows this winter, because I promised. New Daring."

"O, that is just grand! Now there isn't any danger of my forgetting," Ned said, gleefully.

"Shan't I put on anything more—something about putting your sled away nights and hanging up your cap, for instance?"

But Ned shook his head.

"I'd better not try to remember too much at once," he said.

It snowed again Friday night, and next morning the snow lay in great heaps and drifts. Ned ran for the snow-shovel, but Will was ready using us to make a path about the house. While he was waiting Charlie came along with his new sled.

"Get your sled and come on down to the hill, Ned; the big boys have got it all cleared off already," he said. And Ned ran for his sled. It was fine coasting, and the sled flew down the hill like the wind. The time flew by, too, and presently a bell rang.

"Twelve o'clock!" called Charlie Logan, starting for home.

"Hello, Ned! Seems to me I heard something crack, didn't I?" called a familiar voice, and there stood Will. Ned looked hastily at his sled and Will laughed. "No, it wasn't your sled. I guess Aunt Tyson must have heard it, too, because I saw her looking anxiously out the door as I came by!" he explained.

"O!" It was all Ned said, but he took his sled and ran hastily away. He stopped at Tommy Dixon's, and Tommy came out to meet him.

"Don't you want to take my sled this afternoon? The hill is smooth as glass," he said.

"Don't you want it?" asked Tommy, eagerly, but Ned shook his head.

"O, thank you!" cried Tommy, delightedly.

After dinner Ned took the snow shovel and went to Aunt Tyson's.

"I thought you had forgotten me, Ned," she said.

"I did, pretty near; but I'm going to make up for it," he told her.

He could hear the boys and girls over on the hill, but he kept bravely at work until the snow was cleared away and a nice, wide path made around the house.

Aunt Tyson said he had earned double wages, and gave him twenty cents.

"That resolution wasn't truly broken, Will—just cracked a little; and I've mended it 'most as good as ever. I'm going to watch it closer after this, too," he told Will that night, as he took pains to hang up the card where he would be sure to see it as soon as he woke up every morning.

Ned did not forget again, and before the new year was a month old he had earned money enough for a new sled, which Tommy accepted joyfully.—Selected.

THE REAL NEWS.

With radio equipment we "listen in" to almost every human undertaking. Great political conventions are broadcast, great platform addresses, great music concerts. But God expects every Christian to have his ear attuned to things above. The Rev. Arthur Harries of Wales recently told of an appointment he had to meet with a Christian man, a stranger to him, at a certain town to which he was journeying. It was agreed that the man should have a walking cane over his shoulder. He was thus easily identified, and his first smiling question was not, "How are you today?" or "What a lovely day?" but "What is the news from heaven today?" Are we "listening in" to heaven so as to be able to carry its news? Are we ready to hear what the news is from heaven from God's messengers? God is raising up men in an unusual way today who are burdened to see the Unreached Fields of the world evangelized. Are we listening to them? Are we listening to God in every possible way? "He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear."—Sunday School Times.

—To forget, or pretend to do so, to return a borrowed article is the meanest sort of petty theft.—Dr. Johnson.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

Where Is God?

Text: "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?" Kings 2:14.

Elisha was returning from the translation of Elijah. His supreme wish had been granted,—to be with him when he ascended. His mantle fell upon him. A double portion of his spirit now rested upon him. With this heavenly endowment he returned to the Jordan. Smiting its water with the folded mantle, he exclaimed in triumphant faith: "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?" The waters parted and he walked across on solid ground.

It is true that God is everywhere, in the expansive essence of His being. It is true that He is in heaven, sitting upon the throne of His holiness. But where is God the Redeemer, the Benefactor, and the Friend of the fallen race?

In the first place,

God Is Where There Is Need.

1. In the divine-human personality of Jesus Christ God has become identified with needy mankind. He is identified by an overpowering sympathy. He suffers along with those who suffer. He hungers and thirsts along with those who hunger and thirst. He is clothed along with those who are unclothed. He mingles His tears with those of the disconsolate. He is burdened with the burden of others. And He is mistreated along with those who are mistreated. He gets relief when the needy human gets relief. His heart leaps for joy when the widow's heart leaps for joy. He joins in with the orphan's song of gladness. Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these ye have done it unto me."

In the second place,

God Is Where There Is Faith.

Jesus said to Bartimeus, "Thy faith hath made thee whole." And to the penitent woman He said, "Thy faith hath saved thee." Faith summons God from His throne to perform deeds of mercy, deliverance, and uplift. The faith of Moses brought Him down to make a road through the Red Sea. The faith of Elijah impelled God to make rain clouds to relieve the drought of three years and six months. The faith of Elisha brought God's healing touch to the waters of Jordan, whereby Naaman was restored. The faith of Paul brought Jesus to his side amidst the storm on shipboard. The faith of Peter brought the life-giving touch to the body of Lazarus. Faith is daily working miracles of salvation, healing, and uplift. God is doing the same. They both do it together. Faith joins hands with God, and God joins hands with faith. Faith gives God the opportunity He longs for. God honors faith with the presence and power of His right hand.

In the third place,

God Is Where There Is Love.

"God is love," and His loving personality extends to every heart, life, and endeavor where love rules. In John 14:23 we have these words of Jesus: "If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." This same truth is repeated and emphasized in 1 John 4:12, 16: "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and His love is perfected in us. . . . God is love:

and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him."

Love is the holy energy whereby we may walk with God. Enoch walked with God three hundred years because he loved God. "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God?"

In the fourth place,

God Is Where There Is Worship.

"God is in his temple, let the earth keep silence before him." Jesus said, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." He sits upon the throne of grace right in the midst of those who pray in His name.

Worship is a uniting and fellowship of the human spirit with the divine Spirit. "God is a spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

And in the last place,

God Is Where There Is Service.

Jesus thus commands His followers: "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly of heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls." This is the yoke of service. The Master and the servant pull at the yoke together, and the Master pulls the greater part of the load. We do not serve alone. The omnipotent Yokefellow is always present, doing His part of the service.

Do you want to find God, and get into adorable fellowship with Him? Go and relieve a needy brother; go to the throne of grace in the exercise of a triumphant faith; go and love some loveless and unlovable person; go and worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness; and go and lift the fallen one into the love and likeness of Jesus Christ.

HER LITTLE PRAYER ANSWERED.

Alfred Day, general secretary of the Michigan Sunday School Association, tells the story of a little girl who came under his observation. This little girl was a Christian and regularly attended Sunday school though her parents did not. One day the primary teacher gave a talk in which she told her class how they might carry the Sunday school influence into their homes. As a result this little girl decided to read a verse and kneel down and say the Lord's prayer after breakfast each day.

It was a trying moment for the little girl on Monday morning, but she was true to her resolve. The father did not object, and the verse was read; neither was there objection to the little prayer, and with childish faith she prayed in the presence of her father and mother, both of whom, however, remained seated at the table. Tuesday, Wednesday and the days following it was the same. Before the next week was ended both father and mother were on their knees by the side of the little girl when prayer time came. It was not a great while after this that both father and mother were converted and joined the church.—Selected.

GOD ANSWERS PRAYER.

We would that every Sunday school teacher in the world might read the following incident, which was sent some time ago by a correspondent to the Great Commission Prayer League:

"A Sabbath school teacher, because no conversions had occurred in her class of sixteen young men, resigned, thinking herself to blame or unfitted for the great work. Seeing the unflagging interest of her pupils, neither superintendent nor pastor would consent to it. In her anxiety she prayed more earnestly for the Holy Spirit's help.

"One day while thus pleading she was so strongly moved to go and see a certain one at his home that she at once yielded, and in that home parlor she so told her anxiety that when prayer was suggested the pupil knelt with her and soon yielded to Christ and was most happily converted. Thus encouraged, she visited another, and another in turn, as opportunity opened, till she saw the whole sixteen won to Christ and added to the church.

"As vacancies occurred in her class others joined, who were often converted. These pupils, passing out into the business world, were urged by her to write annually a letter as to their Christian life, till finally she was receiving as years rolled on over two hundred letters from missionaries, lawyers, mechanics, farmers, physicians and others from various parts of the world, still busy in pulpit or Sabbath school or other church work."

What if this teacher had persisted in her determination to give up her class? Would God have held her responsible? Will he hold you responsible if you give up? "Let us not (as soul-winning Christian workers) be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not" (Galatians 6:9).—Leaflet of The Great Commission Prayer League.

THE WHITE COMRADE.

Many curious stories of the supernatural come from the different battle fronts. Most of us have heard of the Angels of Mons, that celestial company that is said to have come suddenly to the rescue of a retreating English force. Less familiar is the White Comrade, of whom a letter in the "Church News" tells us:

"The wounded have been visited by a figure in white, whom they call the 'White Comrade.' A soldier who had scoffed at the story was wounded himself one day, and as he lay helpless, the White Comrade appeared and began to bind up his wounds. The soldier noticed something wrong with the White Comrade's hand, and said, 'You are wounded in the hand.'

"'Yes,' replied the White Comrade, 'it is an old wound that has been reopened.'"

Today we have come to speak doubtfully of the supernatural; but we shall hardly find it in our hearts to grudge a wounded soldier, suffering and lone, the beautiful and comforting vision of the White Comrade. Moreover, whatever we think of the story itself, may it not lead us to ponder more deeply on the real White Comrade, the Comforter, the Christ within us, "the true light, which lighteth every man"? That Comrade, if we seek him earnestly, will come to us on every battlefield of life, will bind up more than our physical wounds, and lift our struggling lives up into an existence beautiful, joyous, filled with love and the desire to serve. The saints are those who have found the White Comrade and who have become filled with His spirit. Have they not been the wonder-workers, the conquerors, Companion.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 8.

The Conquest of Selfishness. Rom. 15:1-7
Matthew 16-22-27.

M., Feb. 2—Selfish gain. Jas. 4: 13-17.
T., Feb. 3—Unselfish service. 1 Cor. 10:23-33.
W., Feb. 4—Self-seeking. Luke 14:7-11.
Th., Feb. 5—Heart-searching. Ps. 139:23, 34.
F., Feb. 6—Deny self. Matt. 18: 7-9.
S., Feb. 7—Practice humility. Luke 18:9-14.

Suggestions.

I like the C. E. Quarterly's suggestion for a leaderless meeting. This is held by writing the entire program on a black board in the order you wish those present to take part, together with the part you expect them to take. The chairman of the prayer-meeting committee can then announce the subject and explain the nature of the meeting. This plan needs to be well thought out before the meeting time and each be ready to take the part assigned, and each one should be prompt. This will be a good practice in the conquest of selfishness.

The following songs may be announced from the black board also. (If you do not have a black board convenient take a large white paper and by wrapping a cloth tightly around a pencil point dip in ink and write the program). "Jesus, I my Cross have taken," "Others," "Empty Me of Self," "Take my life and let it be," "I surrender All."

The Quarterly also suggests the following points for prayer. These too might be written on the blackboard. Thank God (1) for the great Bible ideals of unselfishness; (2) for the spiritual power which God furnishes by which to enable his children to rid themselves of selfishness; (3) for the men and women who have conquered self sufficiently to be able to serve humanity to the utmost.

Ask God (1) to give every one present the courage to face his selfishness and to determine to vanquish it; (2) to give the Spirit in such abundant measure that the meeting will reveal the depths of consecration which the Master requires; (3) to help the Endeavorers to help each other in developing character based on unselfish service.

Questions for Debate.

Resolved that unselfishness pays in the long run.

Resolved, That a conquest of self would make one ambitionless and spineless.

Self-Denial.

This is pre-eminently the distinguishing quality in the Christian religion. (Luke 9: 23.) "The whole of the life of God is the sacrifice of self. God is love; love is sacrifice, to give rather than to receive—the blessedness of self-giving. If the life of God were not such, it would be falsehood to say God is love.—All the life of God is a flow of this divine self-giving charity."—F. W. Robertson.

"The moral progress of the race has been through sacrifice. It is the divine order of calling. The race's divinest types are always dying that the race may live."—Geo. D. Heron.

There is no road to heaven but that of sacrifice, that of cross-bearing; we must go in this narrow way or not at all. But it is also a way of joy, a path of pleasantness and peace. You must not expect to become a Christian by accident. That blessed experience must be the result of deliberate determination, of intelligent seeking, and of faithful enduring. This truth is earnestly affirmed in many parts of Christ's teaching.

Christ's honesty is worthy of commendation. He clearly lays down the conditions of discipleship; we must take up the cross and follow Him. See Matt. 16:24-26

Selfishness or Self-Control.

Selfishness is largely a lack of self-control. It is an entire surrender or a giving up to self. It is petting self, humoring self, spoiling self as some spoil children. A genuine self-control will help wonderfully toward curing this bad habit.

Unselfishness in the Home.

Unselfishness is needed no where so much as in our own homes. An unselfish home is the most beautiful home. Where the parents to each other and to the children exhibit an unselfish spirit there you will find the children learning by example to be thoughtful of their parents and of each other. In a home of this kind you will find happiness and gladness. The inmates take pride in each other and enjoy each other. But where selfishness reigns there is always quarreling, each one thinking of self and wanting the best for self, the main thought being to see what can be gotten out of life for self.

The Only Cure.

Jesus can take these selfish natures of ours and lift them above self and fill us with a desire for serving others and a desire to see to it that others have just as good time as we want for ourselves.

The C. E. Quarterly says that the C. E. Society is a good place to practise unselfishness. Don't insist on having your own way always. There is a possibility that you may be wrong. Give up occasionally to some one else; it will do you good. Remember that you are striving to do as Jesus would have you do, and not as your own selfish nature would have you do.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

These Reports.

Several pastors have already sent in their reports. This is the week for all reports of pastors for the first quarter to come in. Please be prompt so that I may have all reports by Monday of next week. Thank you for this co-operation.

Campaign for Christian Education.

Just at this time I am working with Dr. R. M. Andrews and his helpers in a campaign to arouse greater interest among our people in Christian Education, and especially in our High Point College. We have done well in establishing such a college, and we must do better running it through the coming years for the glory of God through the development of Christian character and trained minds.

We have visited Friendship, Haw River charge; Grace Church; Burlington; Lexington; and Baltimore and Pleasant Hill, West Forsythe charge. And the people seem delighted as we tell of the college and its splendid work. All of us have great reasons to be happy over the achievements up to the present. The Lord will lead us on to greater things if we will only follow His leading.

Stewardship Month.

During the month of February some thirty or more denominations in the United States are joining in the effort to lead their people into the attitude of Scriptural paying toward the church finances, and charitable causes. Ministers will be preaching on this great theme, and teachers will be teaching it, and many religious people will be praying for the direction of the Holy Spirit in the matter of paying as they should pay to righteous causes. According to Conference action every pastor in the Conference is expected to preach on this all-important theme to each of his congregations during the month of February.

One Quarter Gone.

One quarter of the Conference year is now gone, and unless something is sent to Rev. S. W. Taylor this week there are several charges that have not paid anything on budgets yet. It is not well to permit the first three months to get by without making some payment on budgets.

Many of the charges are getting a good start in this new year, four of them having paid the Annual Conference budget in full during the first quarter. Several others report that they propose paying in full within a short time.

The General Conference Budget.

Please remember that the General Conference budget is just as important as the A. C. B. This must be paid, or our general work suffers. The next "special day" is Easter. Two objects should be kept before us for Easter. 1. Decision day services should be planned wisely and well on, or near, Easter Sunday, and a goodly number of our Sunday school pupils should be led to surrender fully to Christ and to join the church. 2. Easter day services should be held by every Sunday school, and a good offering made on that day for Home Missions. Each church should plan to raise about one-fourth of the General Conference budget at that time.

Appointments.

My appointments for the next few Sundays will be in connection with the other workers in the campaign for Christian education. Let us be very much in prayer for the success of this campaign, and for all the other enterprises of our beloved Zion.

Yours in the Master's Service,
A. G. Dixon.

State Street, Lexington, is moved into the "Paid A. C. B. in Full" column where but for a mistake of the writer it would have been last week.

Enfield made a gain of one point, thus passing one competitor in the race. Look out, 2, 3, and 4. And look at Forsyth! Jumped from 30th to 7th place; and what do you think of Reidsville? Welch Memorial would have come pretty nearly holding her own if Reidsville had stayed off the list. And Mt. Pleasant came in and took the place vacated by State Street, Lexington. Charlotte picked the unfortunate 13th, while Cleveland made a gain of five and Spring Church came very nearly holding her own. Then Alamance came in and set Littleton back one and though these new ones came in Vance advanced one point.

This list looks fine. Can we add as many more new ones this coming week as this last? Let's try. Come on, everybody. Yours for a complete roll.

A. G. Dixon.

Creswell.—We are doing some very good work. We have a good Sunday school. We have both a Junior and a Senior Christian Endeavor Society, which are doing fine work. We also have the union prayer-meeting services, which are held in different churches, and enjoyed by all.

We had a nice Christmas program; those who attended enjoyed it very much.

The Ladies' Aid Society is doing splendid work. The first meeting since before Christmas was held at Mrs. Alfred Alexander's. She served candy and peanuts. We all felt sad as this was the first meeting since we lost one of our loyal members, Mrs. H. H. Bateman. She was always ready to lend a helping hand and give a word of cheer. We all feel that our loss is her gain. We were very sorry to learn that another of our members, Mrs. Julia Burrows, had fallen and hurt her arm. She is known and loved by all as "Aunt Jule."

Our missionary society at present is very weak, but we are endeavoring to make it stronger.

Our pastor, Rev. R. L. Hethcox, and family were very much pleased before Christmas when they were presented with two new mattresses. One was given by the Creswell people and the other by Rehoboth. They were also very glad to have a new little daughter, Miss Ila Rose. Mt. Hermon gave them a large pounding and the Ladies' Aid gave Mrs. Hethcox a nice dress. The people of our churches are putting a new cover on the parsonage.

We expect a good year, for our pastor has given us good service in the past and we feel sure he will in the future. He has been with us for six years and is still finding good work to do.

Reporter.

Charlotte.—Our people have been doing splendid work. Outside of the regular routine of affairs in church work we have been doing some things. Just before the coming of the new year in December the membership of the church paid a $200 note to the Board of Home Missions. After the Annual Conference the Ladies' Aid Society took up the project of finishing the basement of the church for Sunday school purposes, thus making comfortable quarters for the beginners and primary departments. They have almost paid for all of the expenses incurred, which were about $300. Then, too, out of the ordinary the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of about six months of age have raised funds and purchased a Singer Sewing Machine for the Kindergarten at Atsuta, Japan. Now the Society is preparing to present a pageant, "The Striking of America's Hour."

There has been unusual interest in the midweek prayer services besides the attendance, as different classes of the Sunday school are responsible for the attendance. We have a plan and are endeavoring to work the plan. Again, we have already secured advanced registrations for the Young People's Conference which convenes at High Point to the number of 22. And now, our Sunday school is in the race to land the attendance pennant from the Mecklenburg County S. S. Convention which is being held in the city. We have a fine showing, will let you know next week.

You have been reading about various poundings recently. But perhaps of none more unique than one we have witnessed. The pastor and wife of the Charlotte church were starned and pounded last Wednesday evening prior to prayer services. While the pastor was studying how to bring to a close a series of prayer meeting talks upon the subject of "The Ladder of the Christian Graces," the people were planning a surprise.

The specific subject was "Carity" or Love, and our people demonstrated the practical side and therefore brought the series to a good conclusion. However, the people here believe in giving at other times, but this was the unusual. The company was composed of not only our own church folk but representatives of other churches. Near fifty people in number came with their gifts, and of which were very useful, yet too numerous to mention as to the donors and their gifts. The Lord knows and will bless and we are very thankful.

H. Fred Surratt.

Asheville.—There is a steady growth and improvement here. A new heater has been placed in the Sunday school room. Yesterday the attendance was the best this conference year. Those who did attend were rewarded with Bible cross word puzzles and are quite educating and stimulating. The Ladies' Aid Society is planning further improvements in church and parsonage. They had an enthusiastic meeting at the Parsonage Friday night. They will give a birthday social on Thursday, Feb. 12.

A neat bulletin is now being used for both services each Sunday. On Tuesday, Feb. 3, the Christian Endeavor Society will give a social. During February our pastor will give a series of Sunday morning sermons on Stewardship. Tithing will be one of his subjects. The Sunday evening schedule is as follows: First, "Christian Endeavor Day"—sermon to the young people especially. Third Sunday evening: The Missionary Society will present "Thanksgiving Ann." Fourth Sunday night: "A Patriotic Song Story." We were very glad to have Miss Novella McIntyre with us last Sunday. She is spending a week with her parents here. Pastor Bates' sermon Sunday night was perhaps the most helpful of all his sermons, every one of which is "the best yet."

Next Sunday new members will be received. We were all disappointed not to be able to listen in on Doctor Lewis' sermon at Rhode Island Ave. Church, Washington, D. C., last Sunday morning. Our radios cannot get Washington in the forenoon. Miss Jennie Buckner, one of our charter members and sister to Mrs. Rev. Samuel Coe of the Maryland Conference, was able to attend our services last Sunday for the first time in months.

A CORRECTION.

State Street Church paid its superannuate claim December 30 and the full amount of its A. C. B. January 5th and should have been listed among those paying in full as reported last week. As to the order, I do not know whether fourth or not. That does not matter so the report is correct. Will thank you to make this correction.

N. G. Betha.

Married Nov. 27, 1924, at the residence of the pastor Mr. Parker H. Laughlin of Raleigh and Miss Rachel Kersey of Mitchell's Grove.

Married Dec. 24, 1924, at the residence of the pastor Mr. Pearl W. Richardson of Guilford county and Ethelyn Hoover of Fairfield.

C. H. Whitaker, Pastor.

Denton.—It has been some time since there has been a report from Denton, but that does not mean that we are in any way asleep. Our pastor preached for us Sunday at 11. His sermon was helpful and inspiring. Brother Loy has already gained the confidence and love of the people on this work. He does not rely upon his own power, but asks God for divine guidance and then gives Him the praise.

The Sunday school is getting along just fine. Brother J. U. Lanier is a splendid superintendent. There is good interest and the spirit of harmony seems to be prevalent. Although the weather has been very bad the attendance has been good. We feel that when spring comes there will be a much better attendance. The ones that miss the church services surely do not realize what they are losing.

The Christian Endeavor is very lively. The young people, especially, are taking good interest. Mrs. E. Hoke Loflin is president; Mr. C. A. Hoover, W. A. Johnson, J. U. Lanier and Mrs. Joe Hill are teachers of the different classes. We find the lessons interesting and very helpful. I believe the Christian Endeavor society is a great aid in the upbuilding of the church.

The Ladies' Aid society will meet at church the first Saturday in February at 2:30. All members are requested to be present.

The new seats in our church certainly look nice. It would make anyone think that a church must surely be progressive to afford such expensive and comfortable seats. Surely God's house is worthy of the best.

Mrs. D. M. Sexton.

Roberta.—We have been silent in some respects, while in others we have not been silent. I have been real busy since conference. There has been a lot of sickness in our community this winter. Since December the 4th I have conducted two funerals and assisted in two others, all of them men. Brother Cyrus Mason and Samuel Blackwelder both were members of Roberta M. P. church, the others were members of other churches.

Notwithstanding all the sorrow that came our way, we had a delightful Christmas. On Christmas eve a very excellent program was rendered by the children of the Sunday school, for which we are very grateful to Miss Mae Blackwelder, for the training of the children. We had a beautiful tree, and many presents were given. Old Santa was real good, he presented the superintendent of the Sunday school, Mr. W. D. Alexander, with a beautiful gold watch, which was given by the Sunday school. Mrs. Brittain and I were remembered also, with a very beautiful gift which we prize very highly, a silver sugar bowl and spoonholder combined, a dozen spoons, and silver tray. It was a great surprise to us. We want to thank each one who had a part.

The Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society have bought 40 M. P. Hymnals for the church since conference. The hymns are new to the people here, but we are hoping to have good singing in the future. There is soul food in hymns, and we are glad our people have purchased the Hymnals, and left the jazz music off.

N. Brittain, Pastor.

WHEN WILL ALL MEN BE EQUAL?

Humanity is divided into various classes in this world. We find the high and low, rich and poor, slave and free, each pulling and striving for what he thinks is his just rights. Each views things from his own standpoint of observation and for the most part seems to forget that there are always two sides to a question. The consequence of this is that the world is filled with confusion and strife. On every hand we see manifested a spirit of rivalry, jealousy, anger, and of other like natures.

In life, men do not appear to be equal, but the time is coming when all are to be equal once at least. Death is coming sooner or later to all, and every one must answer his summons, no matter how busy he may be or what might be his profession. Here all must meet equally. Death has no regard for one's business or profession, whether he be king or slave, for he comes to each and all and carries them away from the palace, the mansion, the office, the store, the farm, from business, from pleasure, and from everything which life contains, to the great and endless eternity. The bodies of all then return to dust, equality.

Yes, death makes all men equal and brings all through the same narrow channel, regardless of their own decision in the matter. The question is, Are we prepared whenever the call might be and are we ready for the solemn event to come, which will usher us out into the beyond from which there is no returning? Let us get ready and keep ready.—Selected.

THE OLD PENSIONER'S GIFT.

The minister of an English village sat in his vestry receiving gifts of thanksgiving from the members of his church and congregation. His ministry had been searching and sound, fit to awaken in his people the right spirit of consecration.

The fund was mounting steadily when one of the most prosperous men of the community—a wealthy merchant—entered the vestry. After shaking hands, the merchant drew his check book somewhat ostentatiously from his pocket and proceeded to write a check for fifty pounds. The minister just glimpsed the figure as he was turning to speak to a newcomer, an old-age pensioner, wrinkled and bent with fourscore years of hard toil. The minister greeted him cordially. Laboriously the old man fumbled in his waistcoat pocket and coin by coin put ten shillings down on the table.

"I really ought not to take this from you, my dear friend," said the minister. "You cannot afford it."

"But you must," replied the old man in excited, quivering tones. "You must, sir; I've been saving this up all the year, and I don't want to give God what costs me nothing."

So the minister accepted the old man's gift and wrote a receipt for him. When he had finished, he glanced round for his wealthy friend. But the man had vanished. The minister wondered whether the attention that he had given to the old pensioner had offended the merchant prince. He took an affectionate farewell of his aged friend and in his heart thanked God for such noble self-sacrifice.

Later that afternoon his wealthy visitor of the morning burst into the vestry. He shook hands with the minister and placed a check face downward upon the table. "Did you see the amount of the check that I wrote this morning?" he asked.

"Why, yes," replied the minister; "I could not help seeing that it was for fifty pounds."

"And do you remember that old pensioner's gift?" the man continued.

"I do indeed," said the minister.

"Well, look at this," and the man turned the check face upward; it was for two hundred and fifty pounds. "I felt ashamed of myself beside that brave old boy," said the merchant. "All the afternoon I've been fighting my love of money, and at last I, too, have decided that I must not give God what costs me nothing."

Later that day the minister sought out his old pensioner friend and said to him: "John, do you know how much you gave to our fund today?"

"Yes, sir," replied the old fellow; "ten shillings."

"Not a bit of it," replied the minister. "your gift amounted exactly to two hundred and fifty pounds plus ten shillings." And he told him the story.—Selected.

THIS NEW YEAR OF MINE.

This new year of mine offers me 365 price less days, each day bringing 24 golden hours, each hour 60 precious minutes, each minute 60 fleeting, but equally precious, seconds. What shall I do with these treasures, each one a bit of eternity, sent me from the hand of my heavenly Father?

Shall I let them slip by me unused? Shall I send them back to eternity empty, or shall they return heavily laden with love and courage, with the work and the joy of a busy, happy life?

Shall each day, as it again enters eternity gates, tell of my earnest thought, my pure speech, my honest toil? Shall it say that have been kind to those nearest me, that I have helped some one carry a heavy burden up steep and weary road? Or, shall it tell of careless, unkind speech, of angry, scornful looks, of an unsympathetic heart?

When this year of mine has passed, shall I be richer in the things that are pure and noble, in the things that abide? Or shall my mind and heart have grown weaker and poorer?

Shall I find myself estranged from my heavenly Father, indifferent to His word, doubtful of His wisdom and His love? Or, shall I find myself nearer to the heart of my Savior with stronger faith, a surer trust in His guidance, more willing to leave all perplexing questions to be solved in His own good time and way?

My new year is here. Hand in hand have already set out upon our journey. All my questioning thoughts concerning joys and successes, the failures and sorrows that await me, there comes the all-assuring, sufficient answer: "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want."—Evangelical Companion.

The secret of happiness is to appreciate what we have and to form the habit of pressing our thankfulness.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Smith.—We never know when God will say, "It is enough; come up higher." On January 1, 1925, about three-thirty in the afternoon, Mrs. Ida Cooke Smith was called to her reward. She prepared dinner and she and her family were eating when she was taken ill. Her pastor, having heard of her critical illness, went to her home, but just as he walked into her room she breathed her last and her soul made its flight to realms of day.

Mrs. Smith was the wife of Brother Benjamin Smith and for 37 years they had lived together. To this union there were given three children, all of whom are living. So the husband and children survive the death of a good wife and mother. The children are Messrs. Marion and Raymond Smith; and Mrs. Lily Stallings, all of Whitakers, N. C. Mrs. Smith was a wife and mother who was kind, thoughtful and considerate of her family. She was a Christian woman and ever upheld and taught Christian principles and standards in her home. She was sweet and gentle in her manner and clothed with the spirit of humility. Her character was sterling and her influence will not soon be forgotten by those who knew her.

Mrs. Smith united with our church several years ago and until her death she was an interested and faithful member. She was especially active in the Ladies' Aid and Foreign Missionary societies of the church. Whenever she was asked to do anything she gladly did it and was always prompt with her work. As has already been said of her, "she did what she could" for her church and the writer thinks those other words apply also, she "went about doing good." To do good was her aim in life. She had a kind word for everyone. She was always ready to lend a helping hand. She was considerate of others, always looking to their comfort and happiness. In short, she lived to bless mankind.

The funeral service was held from the home on January 2, by her pastor.

May God bless and comfort the bereaved and give to each heart His peace.

"Thy sun hath set to us, but shines elsewhere
In heavenly light.

"The encircling gloom" is gone, and all is fair
In heavenly light.

Thy home is reached, thou dost 'not ask to see
The distant scene,' for it is near to thee.

And thou art 'ever thus'; no need to pray
In heavenly light

For guidance on a dark and rugged way;
In heavenly light

The day of sorrow and of doubt is gone,
Thy love remembered and thy haven won.

'And now thy faith is sight, and thou dost know

That God is light;
And over 'moor' and 'torrent' we must go,
Through the dark night,
Till in the glorious morning light we see
The 'angel faces' of the blest and thee."

Cutchin.—On January 1, 1925, about four o'clock in the morning, Brother J. M. Cutchin, Sr., was called to his reward. He had lived to the ripe old age of nearly eighty-four years. For this world a year had just begun, for Brother Cutchin life in a new world had also begun—in a world where the sun never sets; where no clouds bedim the sky and where the beloved children of God enjoy an eternity of peace, the peace that passeth all understanding.

Brother Cutchin was born on May the 30th, 1841. His father lived in Edgecombe county about six miles from Whitakers and was a prosperous farmer. Brother Cutchin lived with his father until early manhood. In those days it was customary to have private tutors for children. Brother Cutchin's father provided for his education by this method. When he had received sufficient training at home, he went to the old Horner Military school, then located at Oxford, N. C. He was graduated from this school and was making preparations to enter the University at Chapel Hill. He had already visited the University, but at this time his plans were decidedly altered. About this time the North and South were just beginning that dreadful conflict known as the Civil War. Brother Cutchin gave up his plan for further education and voluntarily joined an Edgecombe company. In his later years he wrote a very interesting description of his life as a soldier and from this article we learn the following facts. He served for a time as Orderly Sergeant. Later he became a lieutenant, which position he held through the remaining years of the war. He was in nearly every battle in which his company had a part. Near Petersburg he was severely wounded and bled into unconsciousness. But he recovered and continued to serve faithfully until the war ended.

After the war Brother Cutchin married Miss Cornelia Wheelless and to this union eleven children were given. The remarkable thing is that all eleven lived to manhood and womanhood. However, in the last few years two children have died, so the good wife and nine children survive Brother Cutchin's death. The children are: Mrs. Linda Killebrew, Mrs. Isla Gorham, Mrs. Minnie Gorham, and Mr. Henry Cutchin of Rocky Mount, N. C.; Mrs. Mamie Braswell, Mrs. Jessie Braswell, Mrs. Nannie Cutchin, Mrs. Lena Bradley, and Mr. J. M. Cutchin, Jr., of Whitakers, N. C. Brother Cutchin and his wife had lived together for almost 59 years. They were thoroughly devoted to each other and were so happy together.

Brother Cutchin was a good husband and father. He was active and alert. He was well read and kept himself posted on current events. He stood for uprightness, justice and truth. He was a leading citizen of the town and community, always upholding those principles which were for the betterment and edification of man. He was a loyal and faithful follower of Christ Jesus. He was faithful even unto death. As long as he could walk he came to church and when he was not able to walk quite so far he would get some one to bring him. It was always an inspiration to the writer to see Brother Cutchin, feeble and leaning on a cane, walk down the aisle. Surely a good man has been taken from us. However, his influence yet remains and long will it be cherished.

The funeral was held from the home on January 2, by the writer, assisted by Rev. R. C. Stubbins, of Enfield.

May the peace of God comfort and cheer the good wife, the children and loved ones and may they find great peace in this fact, that there is a home where separation never comes.

"It is not death to die,—

To leave this weary road,
And, 'mid the brotherhood on high,
To be at home with God.

"It is not death to close

The eye long dimmed by tears,
And wake, in glorious repose
To spend eternal years.

"Jesus, Thou Prince of life,

Thy chosen cannot die!
Like Thee, they conquer in the strife,
To reign with Thee on high."

THE BIBLE IN THE LIFE OF A NATION.

No nation is better than its sacred book. In that book are expressed its highest ideals of life, and no nation ever rises above those ideals; neither does any individual rise above the level of his ideals. The fact is, the great lack is that none of us ever comes up to the level of his ideals. Each one of us—and I can appeal with safety to you all—in the morning of life, and today in the quiet hours, has bright visions of a life noble, pure and useful, which we would wish to live, and yet how far short we all come of those ideals.

Men take the pure ideals of their souls and lock them fast away, and never dream that things so beautiful are fit for every day. So counterfeits pass current, and stones men use for bread, and strivingly and fearfully they walk through life among the dead, though never yet so pure ideal bade fair for man to reach his goal, an the best ideals that any nation has found in its sacred book all stand above his life.

Take the Turks, for instance. The Koran is their sacred book, and there are many precepts inculcated therein for highest living, but how far do the Turks come of realizing those ideals?

So in China. The writings of Confucius may be called the sacred book of the Chinese, and surely in those writings there are many things which we can read with profit. His Golden Rule is not like ours. His is negative while ours is affirmative. "Do not do to others that which you would not have them do to you." Ours is, "Do unto others that which you would have them do unto you." The great Chinese leader, whom General Grant declared to be one of the three greatest men he met in his travels around the world, is accredited with having said he did not see there was much difference between the Golden Rule and that of Confucius, but there is a world-wide difference. You may live up to the demands of Confucius and pass unnoticed all suffering and sorrow. You can live, as Dr. White said about the man in the pit—"if you pass by you are not doing him any direct injury, yet you are avoiding doing what you would have him do to you. The Golden Rule steps in and says: Do what you would have done to you. You must help wherever there is sorrow.—David J. Brewer, Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Debt is a bottomless sea.—Carlyle.

BIRTHDAY SURPRISE.

On Sunday, Dec. 28, 1924, a surprise birthday dinner was given in the home of Mr. J. C. Reynolds, Climax, N. C. That date was chosen by the children to give him a surprise birthday dinner, as they thought there could not be any more appropriate way to celebrate his sixtieth year. I am sure he could not have obtained any more pleasure out of it than by that kind of a surprise.

His children were all present except one who is in the western part of the state. His sister and brothers were also present to help make the occasion a more joyful one to him. Each one present brought a basket filled with good things things to eat.

At noon we were invited into the dining room. We found the most attractive dish holding the birthday cake. Across the center was the word F A T H E R, and this was surrounded by 60 candles.

After dining we returned to the reception room and others took our places in the dining room to enjoy themselves as we had done.

Later we were entertained by music which was enjoyed by all.

As the evening drew near we bade father farewell, assuring him that we had had great pleasure in spending the day with him.

THE WARD PENNY.

Well, the Ward Penny has caused some of us to find out how economical some of our good folks are. That is fine. Glad you told us about it. But did you stop to think how many of us are not doing that well, and that such an illustration as that causes many of us to stop and think how much we are wasting and that the little amounts if conserved would amount to a great deal if put into the right place. But it may be with little sums as with big sums if not used to the right purpose.

I want to apologize for not keeping this thing before you more than I have that you may turn some of your pennies over to this fund. Have you forgotten that amount that you said to me and in your mind that you were going to contribute to this fund?

Now here is what I want you to do if you please: Sit right down now and write me a line and tell me how many pennies you are going to save for the Ward Penny Fund; and if you want to advance the money on your savings send it along also but at any rate let me know what you are going to do. This is important, so we may know whether to keep this up or not.

We are going to give those in other parts of our church a chance to thus honor a great man while helping a great cause.

You said so, now do so. N. G. Bethea.

WHAT AILS THE CHURCH?

Most people know that the church is accomplishing only a small part of what it should do. Many people believe, and rightly, that if the church had done its full duty the recent great world war would never have been. We believe that it was Lloyd George who said that if we have another great war it will be the fault of the church. Likewise, many people believe now that our present industrial and social troubles, our poverty and our crime are with us only because the church has fallen down on its job.

Someone once asked Phillips Brooks if he did not think Christianity had failed; this great man replied: "Why bless you, man, it has never been tried." Chesterton said much the same thing when he declared—"Christianity has not been tried and found wanting; it has been found difficult and not tried."

Graham Wallas made this severe statement: "If a religion which has existed for two thousand years and has been held officially by most powerful nations in the world for fifteen hundred years has not been tried, it has failed."

What is the truth?

Frank Crane, the most widely read and one of the most brilliant newspaper writers of the day, said in a recent speech in Des Moines that the church has too many idols and taboos. It pays too much attention to creeds and has, in a large part, forgotten that Jesus Christ taught and lived a life of service. True Christianity means seven days a week service to one's fellow men, love of God and one's fellows, and all the rest doesn't much matter.

The fact is that most nations and most church members say, "Lord, Lord," and think that is Christianity. They have forgotten that lip praise is an abomination to a loving God unless accompanied by sacrifice and service.

One trouble today with the church is that many church members who claim to be Christians do not know what the gospel is. The real gospel of Jesus Christ works every time. It has accomplished wonders for individuals and peoples when actually followed. It would solve all our troubles and do away with all crime and poverty and personal and national troubles if followed all the way.

No other force that the world has ever known has done so much for humanity. Diplomacy and force have both failed.

Published weekly in the Protestant Church and North Carolina Annual Conference.

PRICE.—$1.50 a year, payable in advance.

Papers are discontinued on expiration of the term of subscription. However, subscribers who request it will be marked on our books as "regular," their papers to be continued and payment to be made as near the beginning of the year as convenient.

Subscribers can remit directly or hand their money to pastors who act as our agents in the field.

In directing change of address, give the old address as well as the new. In renewing, give the same initials as before.

We cannot often supply back numbers.

We acknowledge receipt of money on subscription accounts by changing the date on the label. If this is not changed within two weeks after your money is forwarded, write us.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Greensboro, N. C.

—The Herald has been issued many times under the stress of difficulties. Never before did the week's issue look so impossible as last Monday morning. The linotype operator had been out a week with the "flu," and the work was far behind, and it was doubtful whether she had recovered sufficiently for work. Then the editor found himself in the toils of the same or some similar insidious disease and knew not whether he would be able to lend a hand. As to calling in capable help on short notice, that is simply out of the question. But we have done the best we could under the conditions, and we ask our readers to excuse all short-comings.

—Leon Trotsky is no longer powerful in the Soviet government of Russia. He has been deposed as Russian Minister of War and has been warned that he will be expelled from the Communist Party if he does not follow the orders of the party leaders. He is charged with working against the principles of the Soviet as laid down by Nikolai Lenin.

—Emile Daeschner, the new French Ambassador to the United States, with his wife and daughters, sailed for this country January 17 to take up his duties at Washington.

—A new Italian Ambassador to the United States has been named by Premier Mussolini to take the place of Prince Gelasio Caetani, resigned. He is Giacome de Martino. The new Ambassador is said to be the ablest member of Italy's diplomatic service. He has already served Italy as Ambassador to Great Britain, Germany and Japan.

—The sarcophagus, or stone coffin, in which the body of President Woodrow Wilson will rest permanently, has been erected in Bethlehem Chapel of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral at Washington, D. C. The body, now in the vault under the main floor of the chapel, probably will not be placed in the sarcophagus until the cathedral is completed.

—Lassen Peak, in California, is the only active volcano within the borders of the United States proper.

—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has made a gift of $1,600,000 to help restore the buildings and books of the library of the Imperial University of Tokio. The building was destroyed and nearly a million books lost in the terrible Japanese earthquake of September, 1923.

—A letter addressed to the "Christian & Devil World, Philadelphia, Pa.," was safely delivered at the office of the Christian Endeavor World in Boston, where it was intended to go.

RULES FOR NEW CITIZENS.

More than one hundred foreign men and women were admitted to American citizenship at Albany, N. Y., the other day, by a Judge of the Supreme Court of that State. The Judge gave nine "commandments" to guide the new citizens. These rules are:

"Employ and devote yourself to your own improvement and advancement in mind, morals, understanding of things and affairs and in efficient performance of the duties of your labor and employment.

"Found a family, and have peace, love and good-will among the family.

"Be neighborly with neighbors.

"Have friends and friendships.

"Respect your father and mother.

"Provide for and be loyal to your wife.

"Maintain, educate and rear your children as useful citizens who will be a pride in your old age and declining years.

"Be thrifty, acquire the saving habit and guard your savings with great care.

"Beware of the man who wants to sell you a gold brick."

—The Ford Motor Company sold 1,873,581 cars and trucks during the twelve months from October 1, 1923, to October 1, 1924. That is at the rate of 260 an hour twenty-four hours a day for the three hundred working days of the year. This is the greatest sales record in the history of the company—nearly 100,000 more than were sold in the previous year.

—Mr. I, a Chinese student at Johns Hopkins University, in Baltimore, Md., makes the claim that he has the shortest name in the world. He pronounces it as if it were spelled "E."

—Germany at last has a new government, headed by Dr. Hans Luther as Chancellor.

"Oh, Emma!" exclaimed the weary mother, "don't ask so many questions."

"But, mamma," queried the little girl, "if I don't ask questions what can I ask?"—New Orleans Times-Picayune.

THE JOURNAL IS OUT.

At last! I was about to decide we were not going to have a Conference Journal this year. But there wasn't anything I could do about it. The copy was in the hands of the printer about as soon after conference as I usually get it there. What delayed it I am unable to say. The printer has been profuse in his apologies for not getting it out within the time specified. And I do not know that he is to be blamed. Certainly he had a good deal of money tied up in it, and I would suppose he would be as anxious to get it out so he could get his money as we were to have him get it out.

I haven't had time to examine a copy of it, but a rapid glance makes me believe the printer did a fine job. There are probably some errors in it. If any are serious, I would be glad if the brethren will call my attention to them so we can make corrections through the Herald.

If by the time you see this you have failed to get copies for your charge, let me know, and I will try to trace them for you.

It will be well if you will send me the money you collect as soon as all copies are sold. It will save me a good deal of extra work—and some worry when conference comes.

I greatly regret the delay in getting the Journal to you promptly. Better luck next time.

C. W. Bates, Secretary.

A NOTE OF APPRECIATION.

Perhaps it should have been said in my announcement that the Journals were out. But I omitted it purposely in order that I might emphasize it. My very great thanks to Brother Pritchard for looking after mailing the Journals. It saved me the time to go down to Henderson, conference the expenses of the trip, my mind the uncertainty of wondering whether the Journals would get out properly, and the brethren the likelihood of the packages going astray. I knew Brother Pritchard would see that it was done right. I thank him for his kindness.

C. W. Bates, Secretary.

CORRECTION.

The Journal report gives $34 as the amount paid to the Children's Home last year by the Burlington church. A three was lost somewhere; the amount should have been $34.

BIRTHDAY SURPRISE

On Sunday, Dec. 28, 1924, a day dinner was given in the American Club. C. Reynolds, Climax, Ark. the poet has sung chosen by the club by the side of the way: birthday surprise had neither a house nor a home. But he walked with the crowd day by day. And I think, when I read of the poet's desire. That a house by the road would be good. But service is found in its tenderest form. When we walk with the crowd in the road. So I say, let me walk with the men in the road. Let me seek out the burdens that crush. Let me speak a kind word of good cheer to the weak. Who are falling behind in the rush. There are wounds to be healed, there are breaks we must mend. There's a cup of cold water to give. And the man in the road by the side of his friend. Is the man who has learned to live.

Then tell me no more of the house by the road, There is only one place I can live; Let me walk with the men who are toiling along. Who are needing the cheer I can give. It is pleasant to live in the house by the way. And be a friend, as the poet has said; But the Master is bidding us, "Bear ye their load. For your rest waiteth yonder ahead."

I could not remain in the house by the road And watch as the toilers go on; Their faces beclouded with pain and with sin, So burdened, their strength nearly gone. I'll go to their side, I'll speak in good cheer, I'll help them carry their load; And I'll smile at the man in the house by the way. As I walk with the crowd in the road.

Out there in the road that goes by the house, Where the poet is singing his song. I'll walk and I'll work midst the heat of the day, And I'll help falling brothers along. Too busy to live in the house by the way, Too happy for such an abode, And my heart sings its praise to the Master of all, Who is helping me serve in the road.

THE SOUTHERN MOCKING BIRD.

(Extract from a speech of Hon. John E. Rankin, member of Congress from Mississippi, delivered before the Mississippi Society, in Washington, D. C., on December 11, 1924.)

It has indeed been a pleasure to me to listen to your excellent musical program, and especially to the imitations of bird songs as illustrated by that celebrated writer and naturalist, Schuyler Mathews, in his delightful book on "Wild Birds and Their Music."

The only suggestion I have to offer is that before he puts out another edition of his wonderful work that distinguished gentleman should take a post-graduate course in his chosen field of study by going down into Mississippi and reveling in the songs of the southern mocking bird—the greatest singer of them all.

I can understand how one who has never heard him can extol in superlative terms the songs of other birds, for as Shakespeare has wisely stated, "The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark when both are unattended."

And if, as the poet Burton has said, "A nightingale dies for shame if another bird in's better," then one melodious trill of Dixie's matchless songster would put a world of nightingales to instant and shameful death.

He is the master of them all!

The Caruso of field and forest, the Mozart of wild music, the grand opera of nature, he seems to embrace within his boundless repertoire the songs of all the birds that have ever lived and those that are yet to come.

As courageous as the eagle, he guards with valor and with vigilance his nestlings and his mate, repelling the invasion of the dreaded hawk, and scolding a flock of intruding crows in ignominious flight. As gentle as the dove, he manifests attributes of civilization as prescribed by the golden rule by reflecting in his daily life the sentiments of his song.

It has been said that musical expression is confined to the highest natures, and that therefore birds of prey never sing.

The eagle, the vulture that waits his way in gothic figures over the sunny landscape, investing with his fleeting shadow these double circles which meet only at the bedside of death, or on the field of carnage, never sings a song. The weird owl, the nightly terror of all the feathered tribe, the most gloomy and striking emblem of desolation and despair, never warbles a note. The bat, the vampire that circulates plague in the tropics, that reputed pest to human life, never breaches a note.

I would rather be the mocking bird which General Grant has declared as "swinging about on a yellow spray" and shaking from his little throat "such floods of daffin us music" that all the world would seem to pause and listen, to live for no longer hour, than to be the venomous toad and exist throughout a century, or to be the bathysmic reptile and live a thousand years.

We dignify as a national emblem the American eagle that swooshes and shrieks his screams of defiance from the conclusion of the contest we perpetrate in verse and story the imaginary song of the mythical dying swan; we make the inferior songs of other birds—but, in my humble judgment, there is none that deserves more praise, credit, or commendation than the hands of enlightened humanity than the peerless mocking bird, America's singer who embodies the spirit of springtime with his endless refrain, and thrills every heart with his inspiring note of gladness as he touches the golden harp of nature's sweetest song and "sings with love and hope the languid souls of listening men."

WOMEN—VS.—PRIZE FIGHTERS.

By E. E. Anderson.

The nation's champion of law against prize fighting is a wonderful stimulus, raising the force of argument to a highly lucrative profession.

All women accept the challenge of detractors who claim that her enfranchisement is a critical increase in evils without any compensating benefits; and as a first proof of her powers force respect for anti-prize fight laws, thus saving the splendid art of boxing from discredit?

Wholesome sport is one of the best blessings of a nation. Boxing develops an alertness that brings into play all the angles of the body, quickens and clarifies the mind, induces correct living, thus promoting good fellowship and aiding morality. Boxing is practical safety with soft padded gloves, while the gloves used in prize fighting enable a more solid blow to be struck than with the naked fist.

Prize fighters are servants who render no useful service still they receive greater remuneration for the efforts of a few minutes (or months if the period of training is considered) than skilled workers, professional or business men will earn in a life time; this contrast is affecting the morale of all workers and is one of the causes of the great unrest of our times.

"Where the purse is there lies the power." The purchasing power of dollars makes it difficult to enforce laws where invasion of personal rights is suggested. Intuitively the fight of womanhood struggling to express the higher ideals can create sentiment that will result in obedience to the anti-prize fighting laws.

That prize fighters typify the spirit of unconquerable manhood is a delusion the world's war dissipated. For a consideration in money, to delight a mob by shedding the blood of a fellow being, is paying scant homage to the memory of the sturdy pioneers who reclaimed the wilderness for civilization. The spirit of blooded manhood in the cause of justice excludes the prize fighter, who sells his body to be maltreated for the money it brings.

The Roman amphitheater, in the times when Christians were fed to wild beasts for the amusement of the mob never held more blood lust spectators than the prize fight arena of our times. The picture of a helplessly beaten creature staggering blindly with body and face gashed and bloody followed relentlessly by his opponent turns a mob of prize fight fans into madmen, clamoring for the knockout, cheering wildly as added punishment is inflicted, with a vicious enthusiasm unmatched in wild animals. Instinctively a beaten fighter, unable to defend himself, will fall on the ropes,—while technically on his feet the rules of the game entitle him to no mercy, he must be beaten until he falls to the floor unconscious.

The referee, a paid arbiter, may stop the contest if in his judgment a fighter cannot safely take more punishment.

It is, however, considered good business policy to give the fans their money's worth; anything short of a "knock out" is a disappointment and hurts the game.

A flower of the prize ring sums up his experience in these words.

I followed the pugs (pugilists) for nearly 40 years. It's a gamble. You never can tell when you're going to get your money's worth. For six bits (75 cents) I've seen "Kid Herman," with both jaws broken and bleeding like a stuck pig rally and win by a knock out on "Kid Abel." (This fight took place at Chicago). And again, I've traveled from coast to coast (approximately 4,000 miles) and seen any man (his favorite) knocked cold in a punch. (Nearly nine per cent of prize fighters are killed in the ring or die subsequently from the punishment. Joe Miske died on January 1, 1924, from a blow received in his fight with the present champion Jack Dempsey on September 6, 1920). I pay my money to see men fight not fiddle (box). It makes me feel young to see the claret (blood) flow.

Civilization frowns on the man whose sole aim in life is the garnering of dollars. History only mentions him mythologically to emphasize the futility. Our present-day existence is largely the measure of life in comforts—to create the things that make for bodily comfort is the only way we have of helping each other to the mental poise that tends to spiritual ascendancy. Civilized man strives for two things—remuneration and recognition. Recognition is the social instinct that inspires us to render useful service. What social status is woman, the world's social arbiter, prepared to give to the prize fighter?

SUNDAY SCHOOL ARCHITECT'S SERVICE FREE.

A number of Methodist Protestant churches in North Carolina are rebuilding or remodeling their church buildings. A goodly number of our churches are turning their attention particularly to the Sunday school department of the church. If it is not the most important department it is certainly one of the most important departments of the church work. The Sunday school has a large part to play in determining the future leadership of the church. In order for it to play the part which it should there must be adequate and proper Sunday school space and facilities.

Because the Sunday school concerns itself with the youth and the future Methodist Protestant Church, and because the housing arrangement of the Sunday school departments determines, to some extent at least, the effectiveness of the Sunday school, the Board of Young People's Work is concerning itself with the improvement of Sunday school quarters. For several years this board has had a department of Sunday school architecture with an architect. We are fortunate in having the man we have to head this department. He is a capable architect, a loyal Methodist Protestant, a consecrated Christian who offers his services free of charge to any church in the State. Of course the church using him will pay his traveling expenses. It is hoped that the churches planning to build or remodel, if they have not employed an architect, will confer with our architect, Mr. James G. Sullivan, 1281 Randolph Avenue, Greensboro, N. C.

Mr. Sullivan has this to say in accepting the position as head of this department: "I humbly accept the position and will gladly assist in whatever way I can in helping to plan or assist in planning Sunday school rooms or buildings. I am always willing to do what I can for the extension of the Kingdom, and our heavenly Father."

If you forget his name or address I shall be glad to send it to you.

THE GREAT CONVENTION.

The great foreign missions convention started off yesterday afternoon, January 23, at three P. M., under very favorable conditions. The large auditorium was filled with interested, expectant people, and it is an immense hall with large gallery at the back, and a basement, called the "lower level," under the whole structure.

Special song books and programs were distributed, and loud applause in the gallery announced the entrance there of the Secretary of State, Mr. Charles H. Hughes, who took a seat on the front row, in pure democratic style.

Then upon the stage entered the President of the United States, Calvin Coolidge, and Mrs. Coolidge, and the presiding officer, the speakers, etc.

It was regretted that the chairman of the committee, Rev. James L. Burton, D.D., was unable, by reason of a sore throat, to preside or to deliver his address, but his place was well filled by the vice-chairman, Dr. Joseph C. Robbins.

President Coolidge delivered one of his strong addresses characterized by clearness of thought, strength of argument, and force of conviction, and gave the vast audience the key-note for the convention in the outstanding fact that foreign missions is the greatest enterprise in the world, doing more for humanity than aught else.

Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon of Nashville, Tenn., delivered an uplifting address on "The Compulsion of the Gospel for the Whole World" which comes from the personality of the Christ, and, above all else he set forth in masterly style, "the Cross," and his adherence to the old faith in strong language and telling effect brought forth applause.

Miss Jean K. MacKenzie, formerly of Africa, won the attention of the audience from the start, and her illustrations from life and service in the Dark Continent went home to the hearts of all, for she, from the Word and from life and experience, showed that "The Promise" was real in that always and everywhere the Christ was Companion, Helper, and Savior.

Masterly addresses in the evening by Bishop Herbert Welch of Korea and Bishop Charles H. Brent of Buffalo, N. Y., closed the exercises of the day.

The great crowds were taken care of by special arrangements of the traction company with cars of different lines made to run to the door of the auditorium at the close of the exercises, and the thousands were soon sheltered from the excessive cold in the many hotels and homes of the city.

The Methodist Protestant delegation is not filled, but a goodly number are here, the large majority being ladies of Maryland, Pennsylvania and other states, and, of course, residents of the city have, doubtless, enrolled, but at this writing we have been unable to learn how many of our people are delegates.

We expect to divide to take in the special conferences dealing with problems of work, etc., in different lands, and most valuable information of conditions, methods of work, paths to extension and plans to achieve greater results will be secured, and make it of great profit to the missionary leaders of our church, and for the church in the world, and for their labors hereafter.

This convention has been a grand success. I have seen many of the church leaders of the world, and I have seen the officers of the world, and I have seen the people of the world, and I have seen the world in human hands and in the nation, the world over.

—Fred. K. Koon.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

We are now into the campaign for a better endowment through the channel of life insurance. We have gone and presented the plan it appeals to the people, and we believe our people are going to do it. See the Herald of January 29, page five, for the allurement to your charge. We believe each charge will respond to this modest allurement when you fully understand the plan. It is a business proposition to raise our endowment, and it is the easiest way we can possibly do it.

The Budgets.

Watch the Herald each week to see how well many of the charges are trying up on the budgets. We are undertaking greater things for the Lord both in the annual conference and in the general church, and to meet our obligations in both these fields our budgets must be paid regularly.

We are hoping that within the month of February every charge will be listed as having made a marking on budgets. Is your charge in the list? If it is then keep it as near the top as possible. If it is not, please see that it gets in the list real soon.

An S. O. B. Call.

The Board of Foreign Missions is in severe straits for funds, as you know if you read the church papers. Our Budget Council is sending out an appeal to all pastors to raise some amount immediately for foreign missions, and send it to Rev. S. W. Taylor, Burlington, N. C., as a special for foreign missions. You will get credit for it on your G. C. B. and the Board will get your help immediately. Suppose your son or your brother or your sister were in China, India, or Japan and had no prospect of driving the regular salary, what would you do? Our brothers and sisters in Christ Jesus are here under just these conditions, and they are our representatives, doing our work. Let us act accordingly.

District Meetings.

We are looking forward to and planning toward our District Rallies on Saturday and Sunday, March 28 and 29. Let all pastors plan their work accordingly, and let us plan for a large attendance at these meetings such themes as,—Church and Sunday School Organization, Church Music, Stewardship, Evangelism, Missions, and the High Point College will be discussed in these meetings. We are asking your most hearty co-operation for these meetings.

Perhaps two or three of the outlying districts will not hold their District Rallies on these dates, but in most of the districts that will be the time. Help us to make them a great success.

Pastors' Reports.

At this writing, February 5, I have in hand reports from 63 pastoral charges, leaving 15 yet to be heard from. The greater number of the reports are good, making a fine showing on the early part of the year's work. But a few of them show a great lack somewhere. Several pastors have received less than $100 on salary for the quarter. A few of them report amounts paid on salary as follows: $.50, $10.86, $11, $13, $24.32, $32.35, $55.26, $76, $77.11, $78, $80, $89.34, $99.25. I cannot quite understand how pastors and their families have lived for three months on these amounts. They have not lived on these amounts. They could not. So, they have either gone in debt for supplies, or they have had to work at something else to make a living. People often complain that preachers are slow in meeting their obligations, but it is fair to say that in most cases preachers are only slow because their people are slow. All church obligations should be met monthly, and then preachers and missionaries would live on a par with other people. We are now beginning on the second quarter of the year's work, and we should plan to make it count for our Master.

Easter Sunday.

Easter Sunday is just ahead. Lay your plans well for Decision Day near the Easter tide, also for the observance of the Easter Day program prepared by the Board of Home Missions, with a good offering for that board. Write Rev. C. H. Beck, D.D., 613 West Diamond street, N. S., Pittsburgh, Pa., for programs. This will help your school and you will be helping a great cause.

Appointments.

My appointments for a few Sunday now are in connection with the campaign in the interest of Christian education, and the High Point College.

Yours in the Master's service,
A. G. Dixon.

Hebron, Orange Circuit.—On the fourth Sunday in January we had preaching and Sunday school. Brother Williams gave us another of his good, plain sermons, which we enjoyed very much. The weather has been so bad that we could hardly get to church or Sunday school, but a few of us are there each meeting. Our Sunday school is doing fairly well, considering the roads, snow and ice. Today, the first Sunday in February, with snow and hail on the ground, we had a very good attendance; do hope the attendance will be lots better soon. May we wake up in the early part of 1925 and work for the church and Sunday school as never before.

And our Home Missionary Society, it just seems like it is going under. Now we want to have a meeting the first Sunday in March, immediately after Sunday school. We are asking all members to be present if possible, as we want to straighten out what we have missed, and take a new start and see if we can't make it go better. It must be the failure in doing our duty in the several places that has caused the society to lag. Please pray for our success at Hebron. Reporter.

GOOD ADVICE.

On every occasion of uneasiness, we should retire in prayer, that we may give place to the light and grace of God, and then form our resolutions, without being in any pain about what success we may have.—John Wesley.

COLLEGE PAGE

EDITED BY REV. R. M. ANDREWS.

WE CANNOT FAIL IF WE TRY.

Before reading this article, please turn to the College Page of the Herald last week and read the article entitled, "Is It Too Big For Us," provided you have not already read that article. Our object in writing that article was to remind our people of what we have done when we tried. This week we begin by saying, "We Cannot Fail If We Try." This is a part of our creed. Our failures are more often traceable to our not trying than to anything else. And the writer believes that if only we could enlist half of our people in the North Carolina Conference in the local and general activities of our church, we could get everything done we are asked to do with a great big plus besides. That is, if 13,000 people would worship God and work for His kingdom as true children of God should, the tasks which have been set before us would seem so small that we would be almost ashamed to publish it abroad. For instance, take our endowment campaign. If 13,000 people would join us heartily in this campaign instead of raising $150,000 for endowment I believe we could easily secure $500,000. That is, if 13,000 people would respond to our call, it would mean that they would each have to pay just $1.15 a year for ten years to put this endowment campaign over. Or, if all of our people would respond, it would mean less than fifty-six cents per member would do it. So you can see by this calculation that we are not proposing an unreasonable task for our people. The burden of the task is not to raise $15,000 a year for ten years in the North Carolina Conference, but it is to enlist the members of the Methodist Protestant Church in this matter. If only we all could become interested in Christian education and the High Point College there would be no further problem to solve. I know that this sounds trite, but it is so true that we cannot resist the temptation to repeat it again. The problem is to interest our people in Christian education and the High Point College.

And now shifting from the 13,000 members, Gideon-like, to 1,000, allowing those who are fearful and afraid to turn back, you can see at once that even 1,000 of our people can do this thing and do it so quickly and so easily that it would not by them be considered a task. 1,000 people paying on an average of $15 a year could secure for us the amount we have set out to raise. Now, is it too much to expect of the Methodist Protestant Church if 1,000 people can be found who are interested in higher education? Is it too much to expect that this 1,000 people, when they are found, would be satisfied to average only $15 a year? Is it fair to our church to conclude from what has been done up to date that only $150,000 can be gotten in this campaign? Remember, please, that we are calling only for $15,000 a year for ten years. Again, let us remember the activities of the past and decide whether or not we can do this thing which we are called upon to do. I repeat, we cannot fail if we try.

If the churches that have been asked to raise certain quotas would undertake these quotas, and appoint some interested person or persons to find subscriptions to cover these quotas, the whole task would be at once solved and the campaign would be over. It is impossible for Dr. Dixon and the writer to visit the charges in the interest of this campaign in the near future. It will be necessary for us to take the charges at their regular appointments, and we are willing to do this, still we do not believe it is absolutely necessary. We would be glad to have volunteers from every charge, or at least from a majority of the charges, who are willing and ready to put the campaign across at once. Let us make this our slogan, We Cannot Fail If We Try. Therefore, We Will Try.

Fraternally yours, R. M. Andrews.

CAMPAIGN FOR ENDOWMENT.

After mature consideration the committee in charge of this campaign for endowment worked out the following quotas for the pastoral charges. We are asking the churches to pay this amount each year for ten years that we may have an endowment sufficient to aid worthy students who desire to go to college and who do not have sufficient funds.

We are sending out speakers to the churches to present this matter just as rapidly as we can find them. Of course you know we have great difficulty in getting speakers, and the weather conditions make it hard for us to have a hearing. But we believe in our people and we feel that when the matter is sufficiently presented that the amount needed to secure the endowment will be forthcoming. You no doubt already know that our plan is to carry so much insurance for this money so that every dollar that you pay amounts to $1.26 in cash at the end of the period, and if any person whose life has been insured should die before the expiration of the insurance, the premiums on that policy cease and the face value of the policy is paid. Trusting that we may have your most cordial cooperation in this campaign we are presenting the matter to you.

R. M. Andrews.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR ENDOWMENT.

Last Sunday, as well as the Sunday before, there were speakers in the field in the interest of the endowment campaign. While the weather conditions and the condition of the roads have interfered with the work very greatly, still we are making a start and we are getting responses that are encouraging us. However, we are aware of the fact that a great deal of publicity and instructional work remains to be done. Owing to the fact that there are only a few who can go into this campaign on Sunday, the work of presenting it is going more slowly than we had first planned.

Next Sunday we hope to have speakers at Shady Grove and Moriah churches on Tabernacle charge, Pleasant Union church on Mt. Pleasant charge, Worthville and Level Cross on Randleman charge, Bethany and Flat Rock on Flat Rock charge, Friendship on Mt. Hermon charge, and Burlington and Graham Sunday night, Chestnut and Hebron on Orange charge, Mebane Sunday night, two speakers on Haw River charge at the regular appointments, one speaker on North Davidson charge, and Thomasville Community Church at night. We have written to the pastors of these churches and we sincerely hope that the membership will give these speakers a favorable hearing. In case the quota for the charge is not gotten up at this time, we want some one at the church visited to undertake to get the quota and notify us at this office.

Please co-operate, please pray, please help in every way, for this work must be done.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WINS BANNER.

The High Point College Christian Endeavor society won the High Point City Union banner at the meeting held last Tuesday night. This banner was given for the most efficient work done by any society. The College Endevorers are doing good work and we are proud of them.

FUND FOR REV. D. M. LOY.

Since my last report to Herald I have received for Brother Loy—

Carl S. Moton	$2.00
West End Sunday school, per Rev. E. Lester Ballard	5.00

And I learn that our Burlington church gave Mr. and Mrs. Loy a nice pounding. We thank all who have helped.

Yours in the Master's service,
A. G. Dixon.

I have traveled a good deal, but I never found a happy backslider in my life. I never knew a man who was really born of God that ever could find the world satisfy him afterward. Do you think the prodigal son was satisfied in that foreign country? Ask the prodigals today if they are truly happy. You know they are not. "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked."—Moody.

MY WORK

Let me do my work from day to day,
In field or forest, at the desk or loom,
In bustling market-place, or tranquil room;
Let me but find it in my heart to say,
When variant wishes beckon me astray,
"This is my work: my blessing, not my doom;

Of all who live I am the one by whom
This work can best be done in my own way."
Then shall I see it, not too great nor small
To suit my spirit and arouse my powers:
Then shall I cheerfully greet the laboring
hours,
And cheerfully turn when the long shadows
fall

At eventide, to play and love and rest,
Because I know for me my work is best.

—Henry Van Dyke.

MORE ABOUT THE EVERY-MEMBER CANVAAS.

The ultimate aim of every church should be to have every member of the church set aside a definite proportion of his income for the Lord's work. Some think that this proportion should be at least a tenth, but that is not a part of this discussion. Each member should willingly assume his full share of all the expense involved, both in local church support, and in the support of the various denominational enterprises, both in the annual and General conferences. More and more the people are coming to believe that we ought to give at least as much for the missionary and educational work of the church at large as we give for local church support. All of these ideals should be in the mind of the pastors in charge, and as far as possible should be developed in connection with the every-member canvass. However, it is not always possible to attain the ideal, and it is better to begin where it is possible to secure the support of the workers, than to jeopardize the movement by fixing goals beyond the consecration of the leaders of the local church.

In preparation to the canvass in a large congregation it is often found wise to send personal letters by mail to each family, announcing the time of the canvass, and requesting all to be at home at that hour, and appealing to them to respond generously to these representatives of the church. If this is the first canvass a more complete statement should be made. On several Sabbaths preceding the canvass, if this method is just being installed in your church, the pastor might deliver a series of sermons on themes such as the following: "The Unfinished Enterprises of the Methodist Protestant Church"; "Christ's Program for the World as Committed to the Methodist Protestant Church"; "The Place Which This Church Occupies in the Life of This Community"; "Stewardship"; "The Every-Member Plan"; "How Much Owest Thou?"

Other themes will readily suggest themselves to the pastor seeking for inspiration in the development of those committed to his care, and will be carefully prepared and tactfully and judiciously presented.

Gifts of all kinds should be accepted from the whole church, and all departments should be represented in it. The visitors should go in ones and twos. Better results will be secured with teams of two than with either a larger or smaller number. The call should be lifted above the personal and social, and made officially as representing the church.

The best time is usually Sunday afternoon, though in some instances other hours are better. It is the Lord's business, and no apology should be made for taking up matters of this character on the Lord's Day.

Not too many calls should be assigned to the respective teams. Ten or twelve is all that one team can make profitably within the time usually allotted, and they must not be so scattered.

The canvassers should begin at home, subscribing for themselves and for each member of their own families before they approach others on this subject. Send out no solicitor who has not already made his own pledge. When the canvassers themselves are known to have entered into this plan in the sacrificial spirit, success is well nigh assured. But unless they have acknowledged personal obligations they cannot lead others to do so.

Report on every case. Every name given to a canvasser should be reported to the board of finance, with every criticism, complaint, change of address, sickness, misfortune or other information which the canvasser may have secured. Canvassers often discover cases where personal service is required. This series will probably be concluded next week.

WHAT FINGER-TIPS TELL.

By the Blind Samaritan.

(Note: The writer is a blind orphan girl now in a Near East Relief orphanage at Hama, Syria. Her bright mind and sunny disposition have won for her the sobriquet, "The Helen Keller of Armenia." This article, which she calls her "story for America," was translated into English by the orphanage director.)

I was nine years old when I lost my sight to a great plague of eye disease which swept through the refugee camps of Turkey. Therefore, I can remember very well what it is like to see. I try very hard all the time to remember what colors and flowers and sky look like, so that when a thing is described to me and I have felt it with my hands, I get a mental picture of it with its real colors.

Many of our blind children have been sightless so long that they have lost this faculty of "imagining" colors. They no longer even try to "see" with their mind's eye, and I think this is very unfortunate, because I get a great deal of pleasure out of the mental pictures of things as I used to know them.

To become blind is very trying, especially at first. But it is a stimulus to the development of your other faculties. As soon as I lost my eyesight, even before I left the hospital and had discarded my eye bandages, I began to use my hands in new ways, in order to replace the seeing-sense which had gone from me. It was an interesting study, trying to comprehend things from what my finger tips could tell me. It took me longest to learn to read the Braille books, but now that I have thoroughly mastered finger-reading, I read much more than I ever would have done with my eyes.

People are very kind to blind folks. They do many things for us, which saves us time and gives us leisure for study and work. Here in the big orphan school of the Near East Relief, we have now nearly a hundred blind children. We have good teachers, some of whom are themselves blind, and who, therefore, know our difficulties. We live in two small buildings of stone, one for the boys and the other for the girls. Each building consists of just one big room, so that there is no difficulty in finding one's way about. Our pallets for sleeping are on one side of the big room, while our work benches and school mats are on the other side. In front of each building is a sunny yard, where we can sit, or play quietly and undisturbed, during recreation hours.

Each day we spend about three hours at school work and about three hours in learning useful things, such as basket making, rug weaving, and music. It is curious how much music means to blind people. Almost all of our blind children are learning to play some instrument, and we have two orchestras, one of boys and one of girls. Every day they give us a little concert, and we never tire of listening to them, although they do not have a great variety of musical numbers. We all think that they play very well, but of course visitors might think their efforts rather childish. Never mind, they will improve day by day, I am sure, and certainly that is the most important thing—to grow better and better at whatever you are trying to do.

In our idle moments, we amuse ourselves mostly by talking. There are some wonderful imaginations among our blind children, as you would admit if you could hear us talking about what we think America is like. You would probably say that our descriptions are very quaint. Some day, I intend to write a letter to my friends of the Near East Relief, describing how America seems in the minds of a lot of blind Armenian orphans who have never seen it. My letter will be very amusing to the Americans, I think.

One curious thing about the conversation of our little Armenian blind orphans is that many of them speak in Biblical language, owing to the fact that most of our Braille books are Biblical and the children naturally talk according to what they read.

Some of our children feel that the future is rather hopeless. We hate to think that we are going to be dependent on others for many long years, even when the "others" are good and kind Americans. But I tell the children that even for blind people, there is a place in the world, if we will only try hard to learn useful things. The baskets which we make are very good ones, I am sure, for we take a great deal of pains with them. The matting rugs which we weave are bound to be useful for we are careful to make every fiber sound and strong. As we get more proficient, we shall weave more elaborate baskets, and rugs with beautiful patterns, which people will be glad to have in their houses.

Moreover, deprived of our sight, we shall learn to think better and more carefully than those who are bothered by seeing things all the time. We have no crowd of things rushing upon our attention from the images which our eyes bring us; therefore, we can concentrate better on our inner selves. I have found that one can be very happy, even without the blessing of sight. I think, perhaps, it is even easier to be a good Christian without eyesight,—at least that is what I am trying to be.

THE BIBLE IN THE LIFE OF A NATION.

No nation is better than its sacred book. In that book are expressed its highest ideals of life, and no nation ever rises above those ideals; neither does any individual rise above the level of his ideals. The fact is, the great lack is that none of us ever comes up to the level of his ideals. Each one of us—and I can appeal with safety to you all—in the morning of life, and today in the quiet hours, has bright visions of a life noble, pure and useful, which we would wish to live, and yet how far short we all come of those ideals.

Men take the pure ideals of their souls and lock them fast away, and never dream that things so beautiful are fit for every day. So counterfeits pass current, and stonemasons use for bread, and strivingly and fearfully they walk through life among the dead, though never yet so pure ideal bade fair for man, to reach his goal, as the best ideals that any nation has found in its sacred book all stand above his life.

Take the Turks, for instance. The Koran is their sacred book, and there are many precepts inculcated therein for highest living, but how far do the Turks come of realizing those ideals?

So in China. The writings of Confucius may be called the sacred book of the Chinese, and surely in those writings there are many things which we can read with profit. His Golden Rule is not like ours. His is negative while ours is affirmative. "Do not do to others that which you would not have them do to you." Ours is, "Do unto others that which you would have them do unto you." The great Chinese leader, whom General Grant declared to be one of the three greatest men he met in his travels around the world, is accredited with having said he did not see there was much difference between the Golden Rule and that of Confucius, but there is a world-wide difference. You may live up to the demands of Confucius and pass unnoticed all suffering and sorrow. You can live, as Dr. White said about the man in the pit—"if you pass by you are not doing him any direct injury, yet you are avoiding doing what you would have him do to you. The Golden Rule steps in and says: Do what you would have done to you. You must help wherever there is sorrow.—David J. Brewer, Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

"BLESSED"—THOSE WHOM THE LORD CALLS "BLESSED."

Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted.

Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.

Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled.

Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.

Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.

Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.—Matt. 5:3-10.

Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord.—Ps. 119:1.

Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord; that walketh in his ways.—Ps. 128:1.

Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.

Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile.—Ps. 32:1, 2.

Blessed is the man that maketh the Lord his trust, and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies.—Ps. 40:4.

Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.—Ps. 1:1.

Blessed is the man that endureth temptation, for when he is tried he shall receive a crown of life which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in the time of trouble.—Ps. 41:1.

Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and seek him with the whole heart.—Ps. 119:2.

Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.—Rev. 22:14.

Blessed are they that are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power.—Rev. 20:6.—Selected.

DON'T PROCRASTINATE.

A naughty little weed one day
Poked up its tiny little head.

"Tomorrow I will pull you up,
Old Mr. Weed," I said,

But I put off the doing till,

When next I passed that way,
The ugly thing had spread abroad
And laughed at my dismay.

A naughty little thought one day
Popped right into my mind.

"Oho," I cried, "I'll put you out
Tomorrow you will find!"

But once again I put it off,
Till, like the little weed,

The ugly thing sprang up apace
And grew into a deed!

So, boys and girl, heed what I say
And learn it with your sums:

Don't put off for tomorrow, for
Tomorrow never comes.

Today pull up the little weeds,
The naughty thought subdue,

Or they may take the reins themselves,
And some day master you!

"BECAUSE THERE WAS NO ROOM."

The blasts of winter are fierce and cold,
The snow lies deep over hill and wold;
But a star shines bright through the deepening gloom—

Room for the Christchild, room!

Where man's distrust and his greed for gain
Have frozen the floods of tender rain,
Till never a flower of hope can bloom—

Room for the Christchild, room!

In homes that deepest griefs have borne,
Mid silent forms of those that mourn,
And the children that gather around the tomb—

Room for the Christchild, room!

Where nations are warring, life for life,
And every man from the fearful strife
Is sinking people sinks to its doom—

Room for the Christchild, room!

Room for the shepherds of Bethlehem,
For the angels who sang for them,
And the light in the wintry gloom—

Room for the Christchild, room!

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES FOR SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 15.

Striking Instances of the Friendliness of Jesus.

Daily Readings.

Mon. In the temple. Luke 2:43-52.

Tues. Friendliness for John the Baptist. Matt. 11:7-11.

Wed. For those in need. Luke 14:1-6.

Fri. Friendly service. John 13:1-11.

Sat. Jesus' teaching on friendliness. Luke 6:27-38.

Sunday. Topic. John 11:1-11; Luke 19:1-10.

Christian Endeavorers will do well to take the Scripture references in the lesson for today, and those for the daily readings for the week and study them carefully. In these you will find that Jesus was a friend to others under almost all the conditions that may arise in life.

The naturalness of His friendship shows clearly in all these references. He never allowed anybody, rich or poor, to feel that He was making a special effort to be friendly toward him. He knew how to be tactful in His friendliness.

Our friendliness, likewise, should be shown because we want to be friendly toward others, and not because we force ourselves to be so.

To study the various incidents where Jesus proved Himself a true friend, as recorded in the Gospels, should be inspiring to every one of us. We think of these beautiful scenes in His life with but one purpose in mind—to discover how He proved Himself a true friend to men, women and children under all sorts of circumstances, so that we may do likewise.

The closer we get to Jesus, the closer we get to our fellowmen. The kingdom grows through friendliness. People are attracted to Jesus by the attractiveness of His life made manifest through His disciples.

This meeting should be one of the very best Christian Endeavor meetings, and it will be if the Endeavorers make full use of their opportunities in connection with this splendid topic.

John 11:1-11.

This passage shows Jesus best-known friendship, with Martha and Mary and Lazarus. He was more often within their home than any other. He was a real true friend to all three of them, and they were His friends. They proved their friendship to Him by their hospitality. Whatever they had was His, without reserve, and no wonder He felt free to go and to come as He chose.

He was their friend when He needed their hospitality. Now they need Him, and He is not there. Lazarus was sick. Jesus was sent for, but at first He seemed indifferent. He took His time, but He did it to the glory of God. When He did come He wonderfully showed His friendliness by raising Lazarus from the dead and in restoring happiness to the home. There will come a time when we need Him in our homes to banish sorrow and bring joy. Will He feel welcome to enter and help us because He is a frequent guest there?

Luke 19:1-10.

Zacchaeus was a social outcast with his own people, the Jews. He was a hated tax-collector who gained riches through collecting for the despised Roman government. He had very few friends, and no doubt expected Jesus to pass him by as did the rest of the Jews. And Jesus would have done so had he cared anything for man's opinion but He quietly faced their opposition. He dared to do what His heart prompted. Christ's friendliness to Zacchaeus got big results. It brought about righteousness in Zacchaeus' business relations. It awakened in his heart a desire for the best things in life. It brought salvation to his heart and to his home. We have no right to allow poverty, wealth, social position or sin to interfere with our friendliness to the last and the least of God's children.

The Daily Readings.

These daily readings are as rich in thought-producing illustrations as are the two discussed above.

Luke 2:43-52.—In the very early boyhood life of Jesus we find Him tarrying in the temple in Jerusalem in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions. Does anyone for a moment imagine that there was not ever afterwards a tender spot in the hearts of these men for Jesus, because of His attitude toward them.

Matt. 11:7-11.—In this we find a most wonderful testimony to the worth of one who was so soon to pass on, because his work was done. It takes a friend indeed to be just, to say nothing of being generous, to those who have gone before and who have made his work possible. Jesus was friendly enough, honest enough, and generous enough, to give John his just dues to the world. The world would be much poorer if it lacked this splendid eulogy to John the Baptist.

Matt. 19:13-15.—One has only to read this to be drawn with love toward the Christ because of His love and tenderness for little children.

Luke 14:1-6.—And this shows His wonderful tenderness and sympathy toward those in need. The true Christ-like spirit always goes out in helpfulness to needy ones.

John 13:1-7.—This shows how the Master was ready and willing to show His friendliness toward His disciples in doing for them the services of a most menial servant, that of washing their feet.

Luke 6:27-38.—And in this our last reference we have our Master suggesting to us that which seems almost impossible. It is impossible without the Christ-spirit. Read it and see, and remember that He did what He asks us to do here.

Points for Purposeful Prayer.

Thank God (1) for leading the world forward to the meaning of true friendliness; (2) for the many examples of friendliness recorded in His Word; (3) for the best friend of all, Jesus, His Son, the perfect example for all.

Ask God (1) to help the leader and all present to enter completely into the spirit of this topic; (2) to help you all to make your society friendly to all, especially to newcomers and strangers; (3) to open your hearts to understand the meaning of friendliness and to the courage to practice it.

Some Questions for Discussion.

1. Why was Jesus so friendly to everybody?
2. Give a striking instance of Jesus friendliness.
3. Is it possible for us to be friendly to all classes of people as was Jesus?

4. Has the world a right to expect a Christian to be more friendly than others?

5. What are some of the ways in which Christian Endeavor may promote friendliness?

High Point.—The Home Missionary Society held a food sale last Friday at High Point Hardware Company's store, and sold chicken salad, chess pies, cakes and candy. The sum of $38.50 was realized.

The Lord's Supper was celebrated last Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock service, and an unusually large number, almost the entire congregation, joined in this solemn service. Dr. Brown took occasion to remark on the very large number who always communed in this church.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies held a delightful meeting in Woman's Hall, High Point College, on Monday afternoon, the hostesses being Mrs. C. L. Whitaker and Miss Mary Young. There was an attendance of 32 members. It was the time for the annual election of officers of both societies, which resulted as follows: For the foreign society, president, Mrs. George R. Brown; vice president, Mrs. L. J. Diffie; secretary, Mrs. Jones Burns; treasurer, Mrs. W. P. Pickett; assistant treasurer, Mrs. C. F. Barton; secretary of young people's work, Mrs. Jones Burns; and assistants, Mrs. J. D. Johnston and Miss Johnnie Oakes; secretary of perpetual and memorial members, Mrs. J. A. Gray; secretary of league of tithers and intercessors, Mrs. J. H. Pritchard; secretary of literature, Mrs. R. T. Pickens; Record agent, Mrs. W. L. Kivett; secretary of thank-offering, Mrs. S. C. Vuncannon; secretary of Bible women and native workers, Mrs. John H. Walker. For the home society, Mrs. J. A. Gray was re-elected president, Mrs. H. A. Moffitt vice president, and Mrs. R. T. Pickens, secretary-treasurer. The names of Mrs. E. G. Lowdermilk and Mrs. Paul S. Kennett were added to the list of membership.

Mrs. W. P. Pickett has gone to Tampa, Fla., to spend several weeks with her daughter, Mrs. H. S. Meredith.

Mrs. H. C. Fogleman, who has been quite ill, is much improved.

Congratulations are being extended to Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Rankin, Jr., upon the arrival in their home of a fine son on January 31. This young gentleman will bear the name of Frank Alexander Rankin.

Mr. D. A. Neese has commenced building a new home on Montlieu Avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Bowman and children, who have been living in the Boys' Dormitory at the Children's Home, have moved away, and Mr. Dixon, a brother of Dr. Dixon, will take his place. He, Mrs. Dixon, and son will move shortly.

After an illness of several weeks, we are glad to see Mr. J. A. Tussey at church services again.

Mr. and Mrs. Weaver M. Marr and children left last week for Jacksonville, Fla., where they will make their home. Reporter.

February 2.

Henderson.—We were glad to receive into our church last Sunday Mrs. Edison T. Hicks from the M. E. Church, South, at Kershaw, S. C. Before her marriage to Brother Hicks a few weeks ago Mrs. Hicks was Miss Beulah Demster and was one of the teachers in the city schools here. She did a fine thing by joining the church here soon after making this her home.

Our sympathy is extended to Mrs. C. F. Tankersley, Sr., who had a message this morning telling her that her sister, Mrs. Councilman of Frederica, Del., had just passed away. Mrs. Tankersley will leave this afternoon for the funeral.

Several of our people are on the sick list but we hope they will soon be better.

J. E. Pritchard.

Tuesday morning.

Fountain Place, Burlington.—We have been very much handicapped since our last report, having to call off two services on account of the rains. Our present building was flooded on these days, and it was decided unsafe to hold services in a wet building. We did manage, however, to find a space large enough that we could hold our Sunday school by just forming two large classes. This is a great handicap to us; however, we have a movement on foot to complete the present structure, which will assure us of at least two dry floors. We have held two very enthusiastic meetings on this subject, and have called a meeting for tomorrow night, and hope to thrash out the details, and get something started. We hope that the summer will find us in better and larger quarters. We ask the prayers of the conference that we may be able to put our project across. We not only need the dry quarters, but we need more room. Our Sunday school continues to grow.

Last Sunday our pastor delivered a very splendid sermon at 11 o'clock. At this service a large number from First Church worshiped with us; due to the illness of Brother Taylor there was no service there. We enjoyed having our friends from First Church with us, and hope they will come again. We say to all: "come and worship with us. The latch string is always on the outside."

An adjourned session of our first quarterly conference was held at the Gibbonsville church on Wednesday, 28th, at 7:30 P. M. Three from Fountain Place braved the cold and went up. We found several from Gibsonville there. We were sorry that Dr. Dixon could not be with us as had been planned; however, we had a very good conference with the small number present, our pastor presiding. Reports from both churches showed progress during the quarter. Our report showed that pastor's salary had been paid in full for the first quarter, $325 on plant, equipment, and interest on debt, $25 on General Conference budget, and $28.30 on A. C. B., which is approximately our quota for the first quarter. Our receipts showed that we had raised approximately 25 per cent of our annual budget. This was very gratifying; however, we still have some bills that need attention.

Our Sunday school attendance was off today, due to the weather of the past week. We hope that next Sunday will find it up to normal again.

At three P. M. our pastor conducted a service at the County Home. Quite a number of our people attended, and a splendid service was held. The inmates seemed to appreciate it, especially one old brother. His soul could not contain the good things he had experienced, he had to tell it.

Our service tonight was well attended, and our pastor delivered a very fine sermon. His subject was "Silk Sails and Feather Anchors."

Yours in His work, Reporter.

South Davidson Charge.—Sunday, January 25, seemed to be a hard day, as I preached at Cid at 11 A. M., stopped at Brother Lanier's long enough to eat my dinner and get a few good breaths, then we drove to Jerusalem where I conducted the funeral of Mrs. Wilson—not a member of our church; then I jumped into my machine and hastened to Mt. Carmel where I conducted the funeral of one of our best members, whose obituary will appear in the Herald. Then without one minute's delay we hastened back to West Lexington where we were met by a large audience. West Lexington is coming to the front. By the aid of the Divine Spirit we want to put West Lexington on the map. Watch us grow.

It was the privilege of the pastor to be at Jerusalem on the afternoon before Christmas, where an excellent program was rendered by the children, after which many hearts were made glad by the presents taken from the nicely decorated Christmas tree. The pastor was remembered in these presents.

From there I went to Cid church, where I was surprised to see so many children who rendered an excellent program. Then came the joy-time, when the children got their many presents from the loaded down Christmas tree. The pastor and family were remembered in the good things.

The pastor has been remembered at Cid church by a great many good things to eat. Just wait a minute. I as pastor wish to thank Mrs. N. W. Lanier for training the children for Christmas exercises. Sister Lanier showed the grit and grace of an old soldier of the cross by going out the evening of the entertainment to put the program over the top, as she was sick and the weather was very bad.

Stop! Look! Listen! Two big poundings must be reported next week.

W. L. Carson, Pastor.

The amounts sent in on the G. C. B. were more than double this last week what they were up until then. Though a number have done well, Concord takes first place on the G. C. B. and Forsyth is a close second. The numbers show the order in which the charges stand on the G. C. B. Let us double it again this week. Our boards need it so badly.

On the A. C. B. there was some fine work done. Eleven charges made gains and one new charge was added to the list. Fallston sent the largest amount in during the week and Forsyth the second largest with Mt. Pleasant running them a close race for the place. In points gained, Graham leads, jumping from 46 to 21, Gibsonville and Fountain Place comes second in this and jumped from 44 to 26, Fallston from 14 to 4, Cleveland 23 to 14, Saxapahaw from 39 to 32, Alamance from 18 to 10, Mt. Pleasant and Davidson tie on points gained, each gaining six

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—FEB. 8.

Christ's Intercessory Prayer.

Lesson Text: John 17: 1-13.

Golden Text: John 17: 11.

The Central Truth: The ultimate purpose of the plan of salvation is the glory of the Father and of His Son Jesus Christ.

Scriptural Points.

1. "The hour is come,"—the hour of sacrifice, to make atonement for the sins of mankind.

2. "Glorify thy Son." The glory that Jesus craved at this trying hour was not the physical glory, such as came to Him at His transfiguration, nor the glory of praise such as the Father bestowed upon Him at His baptism, nor the glory of spotless character which He had already, nor the glory of achievement which He had won by His miracles and teaching. It was the glory of fellowship with the Father that He desired most of all to strengthen Him for the agony of the garden and the tragedy on the cross. This was such a sweet reciprocal glory that He had had with the Father "before the world was," and which He gave up to become manifest in the flesh. See verse 5.

3. "Power over all flesh,"—power to create, to enlighten, to save, and reward.

4. Eternal life is to know God experimentally. The believer has the experience of God's love, purity, power and fellowship, and therefore has eternal life. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." John 3: 36.

5. "I have glorified thee on the earth." This is the glory of faithful service.

6. "Thine they were, and thou gavest them me." The Father is the Sovereign of salvation. He exercises the pardoning power, or prerogative. He delivers all those redeemed to His Son, to constitute His prospective bride.

7. "The words which thou gavest me." Jesus came not only to set forth the personality and love of the Father, but also to deliver a most wholesome message of enlightenment, uplift, fellowship, service, and anticipation. He handed mankind a love-letter from God.

8. "I pray for them,"—that they may be kept, be faithful, be fruitful, and be glorified with Himself.

9. "I am glorified in them." Jesus derives peculiar joy and honor from the Christly living and loyal service of those who profess His name.

10. "That they may be one, as we are." This is "the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace," love and fellowship. All believers are one body in Christ, and the various sects are designed to be so many divisions of the one great army enlisted to rescue a perishing world.

11. "I kept them in thy name." Jesus keeps His followers by the rod and staff of His word, by the magnetic force of His personality, and by the efficacy of His intercession.

12. "That they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves." This is the joy of holiness, triumph, and everlasting reward. "Who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the same, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

Practical Points.

1. Crucial moments come into every man's life. They bear a mystery of ruthless cunning and terror that tries men's souls. They rend the soul to its depths. It is a time when all hell seems turned loose to defy, to confound, and to torture.

2. To an extreme extent such an ordeal had come to the Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. The unspeakable agony of bearing upon His innocent soul the world's sin, guilt, and penalty was the crushing burden that was laid upon Him.

3. Prayer is the only recourse in an hour like this. The soul craves the comfort and strength of the higher powers. It longs to lean upon the arm of the Eternal.

4. It is a marvellous relief to be like the Man of Galilee—forget self and think of others. You forget your own sorrow in recalling another's woe.

5. Pray for the brother whose path is dark, thorny and deadly. Impart to him strength by way of the throne of grace. "Carry your brother's burdens, and God will carry yours."

WHAT MAKES A MAN?

Denny curled one of his little legs underneath his small body and dropped his rosy cheek into his hand.

"Course," he said, "there's the old box to fill. Always is an old wood-box to fill when Saturday comes. If ma only thought so, she could fill it herself and let me do something that'll make a man. Ben Lee says it's doing stunts and going fishin', and like that, makes you a man."

Then, suddenly Denny straightened his shoulders. "I'm going to do something toward being a man," he said. "I'd like to ask pa the best thing to do, 'cause he'd know. I s'pose I might's well go fill that old box."

When he reached the kitchen, he found his mother and Aunt Sue there. The very first words that his mother said were: "Denny, I wish you'd hurry with that wood, and then Aunt Sue wants some peas. You'll have to get them for her, dear."

So, when the wood-box was full, Denny gathered the peas and started back to the house. Aunt Sue started to meet him and smiled, as she said: "Mother's half-sick, Denny boy. Try to help her as much as you can today."

Denny looked this way and that. Across the field the boys were doing stunts. Beyond the hill Ben and the other boys were fishing. Then he swallowed twice very hard. But, of course, if she is sick—then he marched up the path to the house.

After the peas were shelled there was a stack of baking dishes to be wiped. He noticed how white his mother was, and he said: "I can wash those dishes as well as wipe 'em, if I am a boy. You go and lie down. I'll stay around and answer the door."

When he caught sight of the look that came into her eyes, it seemed at once as if he was at least two inches taller. The dishes done, he wandered into the garden and weeded awhile. "Might as well," he said, "as long as I've got to stay around; then I won't have it to do tonight."

Before he knew it he was whistling. It seemed to him that he never felt so good. He had no idea it was five o'clock until he heard some one say, "Mother's been telling me our boy is the best thing ever." Looking up, he saw his father holding out his hand. "Denny," said he, and something in his voice made Denny wink very fast, "here's my hand to the lad who's on the straight, sure road to becoming a man."—Child's Gem.

REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN IS ON!
FALL IN LINE!

Several calls have been sounded in the campaign for registrations for our Young People's Conference to be held in High Point College in June. We are listing below the names of those who have registered to date. Your name ought to be in the list. The fees are 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children. The fees go toward paying the expenses of our "greatest ever" summer conference. Fall in line, won't you, by sending your registration to the undersigned by return mail? Thank you!

Charlotte Is Leading.

Under the splendid leadership of Mrs. Surratt, the Charlotte church is leading the list. Concord comes second with several churches coming close up in front. What about your church? We would like to see it listed next time.

Preachers Head the List!

The following ministers have sent in their fees. All honor to the pastors. It has been a delight to see the way they have responded to our request for registration fees. We want every preacher in the conference within the next few days. Fifty cents, please!

Concord, N. C.

HER LITTLE PRAYER ANSWERED.

Alfred Day, general secretary of the Michigan Sunday School Association, tells the story of a little girl who came under his observation. This little girl was a Christian and regularly attended Sunday school though her parents did not. One day the primary teacher gave a talk in which she told her class how they might carry the Sunday school influence into their homes. As a result this little girl decided to read a verse and kneel down and say the Lord's prayer after breakfast each day.

It was a trying moment for the little girl on Monday morning, but she was true to her resolve. The father did not object, and the verse was read; neither was there objection to the little prayer, and with childish faith she prayed in the presence of her father and mother, both of whom, however, remained seated at the table. Tuesday, Wednesday and the days following it was the same. Before the next week was ended both father and mother were on their knees by the side of the little girl when prayer time came. It was not a great while after this that both father and mother were converted and joined the church.—Selected.

GOD ANSWERS PRAYER.

We would that every Sunday school teacher in the world might read the following incident, which was sent some time ago by a correspondent to the Great Commission Prayer League:

"A Sabbath school teacher, because no conversions had occurred in her class of sixteen young men, resigned, thinking herself to blame or unfitted for the great work. Seeing the unflagging interest of her pupils, neither superintendent nor pastor would consent to it. In her anxiety she prayed more earnestly for the Holy Spirit's help.

"One day while thus pleading she was so strongly moved to go and see a certain one at his home that she at once yielded, and in that home parlor she so told her anxiety that when prayer was suggested the pupil kneeled with her and soon yielded to Christ and was most happily converted. Thus encouraged, she visited another, and another in turn, as opportunity opened, till she saw the whole sixteen won to Christ and added to the church.

"As vacancies occurred in her class others joined, who were often converted. These pupils, passing out into the business world, were urged by her to write annually a letter as to their Christian life, till finally she was receiving as years rolled on over two hundred letters from missionaries, lawyers, mechanics, farmers, physicians and others from various parts of the world, still busy in pulpit or Sabbath school or other church work."

What if this teacher had persisted in her determination to give up her class? Would God have held her responsible? Will he hold you responsible if you give up? "Let us not (as soul-winning Christian workers) be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not" (Galatians 6:9).—Leaflet of The Great Commission Prayer League.

REAL SUCCESS.

Jeremiah didn't want to speak. When God called him he objected. He felt he was too young. But God said, Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.

In the strength of this commission Jeremiah went. He spoke when it almost broke his heart to give the message he had to deliver. He spoke when he knew everybody was against him. He spoke when the certain result would be personal persecution or imprisonment. He spoke because he knew that God had put His words in his mouth.

His was a sad life; an apparent failure; a life that ended in Egypt away from the land he loved and had labored to save. But was it a failure?

His commission had closed with these words: "See, I have set thee this day . . . to root out, to pull down, to destroy, to throw down, to build and to plant.

Rooting out, pulling down, destroying, throwing down—these are not pleasant things to do, but they are necessary before building and planting are possible. Jeremiah didn't live to see the building finished or the plants come to fruitage, but the work he did made it possible; and his work was a success.

God needs Jeremiah's today. The work is hard; personal sacrifice will be needed; misunderstandings are certain; and there will be heartache a plenty. But the assurance that God needs you and has formed you for this purpose, and is calling you into the work, and will be with you in it, is more than enough to offset all the disadvantages.

Will you respond to His call?—North Avenue Presbyterian Church News.

There are many books and papers written on "things worth remembering," but it sometimes seems as if we needed many more on "things worth forgetting." The small boy who modestly boasted that though his memory was poor, he had a "first rate forgettery," has served as a joke for many orators and newspapers, but he was really laying claim to a valuable possession. It may be humiliating to think how much of our daily lives—the things we hear and see, do and feel—are only worth forgetting; but the art of forgetting is one that should be cultivated.

The little slight that annoys us is sure, if remembered, to grow in importance; the careless word takes on deeper meaning if it is pondered; the momentary feeling of provocation becomes hot anger if it is nursed. The only thing we can afford to do with all these small jare and frets is to forget them. The same is true of the little service we render, the kindness we bestow. If we count them over too often they grow like snow balls, by merely rolling over, and our sense of the appreciation we deserve and the gratitude due us becomes exaggerated. Our small deeds of helpfulness, whatever they may be for others, are for ourselves only worth forgetting. Still more should we let pass into oblivion the whispered ill about others. If we remember the story we shall be almost certain in some unguarded moment to speed it on its way again; it is only safe when forgotten.—Exchange.

It is with Christ as with music. Some are deaf and hear it not at all. Others hear a noise only and cannot tell the tune. They are not deaf but only tone deaf. Others again can tell the tune, but are unable to write it into notes. They are like the Christians who worship Christ, but have no use for dogmas. And there are a few who can distinguish concurrent melodies and analyze harmonies, finding in them not music alone, but language, and these again are the mystics and saints who can put the Christ into words. It is no use arguing with a man who is blind or deaf. It is absurd to persecute him. If he has neither sight nor hearing, there is surely a language that he will understand and that language is touch. When words fail, try deeds. In the mediaeval era the deed was persecution. The heretic was tortured and burned. When Jesus was arrested and Peter with his sword smote on the ear of the high priest's servant, Malchus, our Lord's touch healed the ear and His saying as they bound Him, "Suffer ye thus far," was in its exquisite irony perhaps the most unanswerable proof of the authentic miracle. For no one could have invented at once that human word and that divine deed. Our neighbors may seem to be unable to hear what, as we think, Christ is saying, or to see what, as we think, He is doing, but they can feel; they have sinned and need pardon; in sympathy, in service, in sacrifice, we can still show them the Christ.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

AN ENCOURAGEMENT.

Rev. Harry J. Bright, pastor at Eastport, N. Y., writes:

"Your appeal moved me to speak to two young men members of this congregation, but not members of our church, and this is the result—$1.00 from the Tuttle Brothers. When they started in their present business they promised the Lord they would tithe their income, and they have kept their promise, and God has wonderfully prospered them.

"This is for you and your great work only" to help meet the overdraft which I have explained in the foreign missionary column of the church papers. If a number of our pastors would follow Brother Bright's splendid example the Board would soon be out of its financial difficulties.

Fred C. Klein, Executive Secretary.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

I Am Sore.

Yea, even unto stiffness. And it came about thusly: Last night, unsuspecting and guileless as a newborn babe, I went calling on one of my shut-ins. I came back from the call about eight o'clock to find the lower floor of parsonage, from the parlor even unto the kitchen, full of folks; folks big and little; folks one and all with mischief in their eyes. Looking in and seeing this horde of folks, I bet-thought me I would climb up the other way, and get in unobserved, and, perhaps, unmolested. But they discovered my perfidy, and when I came in at the kitchen door they fell upon me, and beat me and wounded me, and left me half-dead with surprise and shock. Indeed they completely knocked the breath out of me.

And then certain stealthy whisperings, passing of notes, mysterious telephonings, vague hints, became clear to me. I did begin to put two and two together and found they made four. But I know the arch conspirator of this event, and I shall have it out with her. And those who helped waylay me—they, all of them, are known. None of them shall escape.

But I am still worried about it. There must be an ulterior motive in all this. I have about made up my mind they are giving me a strong hint to quit preaching and go into the grocery business; or else perchance they propose I shall be a butcher. Or maybe they are telling me gently I am too sour.

Whatever may be the motive, one thing is certain. It was discovered some time ago that the kitchen floor needed bracing. Brother and Sister Gerringer walked over it so much while they were here they caused it to sag. If it needed bracing before, as it did, Brother Hyatt, our carpenter member, will have to come on the run and put in an extra brace. But my mind is easy on that point, I shall charge the lumber bill to the folks. They caused it. It would never have given way with what I put in the pantry.

But enough of pleasantries. The parsonage folks are profoundly grateful for the good things the Asheville church folks, and their friends and ours, brought to the parsonage last night. It relieves the strain on the pocket book, which in itself is no small cause for gratitude. But a pounding means much more than that to me. It is an expression of interest and friendship toward the inmates of the parsonage, to be valued far above dollars and cents. We shall eat up the stuff after a while, the relief to our pocket book will be only temporary. The memory of the act of kindness will abide as long as life.

West End, Greensboro.—Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Waynick delightfully entertained the members of the Foust Bible Class at a Valentine party Thursday evening at their home on Spring Garden Street. Officers for the ensuing six months were elected as follows: President, Mr. P. A. Burns; vice president, Mr. M. H. Waynick; secretary, Mrs. M. H. Waynick; assistant secretary, Mr. W. O. Bull; treasurer, Mr. J. C. Edwards; teacher, Mr. L. M. Foust; assistant teacher, Miss Lena Martin; reporter, Mrs. L. B. Clemmans; usher, Mr. J. A. Campbell; librarian, Mr. W. O.

Bull. The class set as a goal one hundred members by May first. After the business session games and contests were engaged in, and the hostess, assisted by Mrs. Roy Begin, served refreshments.

Misses Laura Thompson and Annie Liven-good, of High Point College, spent Sunday at their respective homes and attended the Sunday morning services.

Miss Cordia Thompson, a member of the junior class at Guilford College, recently won the oratorical contest for the Philomathean Literary Society of that college. The prize was a set of books by the best American authors.

Dean N. M. Harrison, Jr., of High Point College, was one of the speakers at the senior Christian Endeavor prayer meeting last Sunday evening. His subject was, "The Aims of Our Denomination." Mr. Harrison pointed out that the main purpose of the church is the winning of souls for Christ and this is done by two methods, evangelism and Christian education. Other interesting speakers on various phases of the work of our denomination were Rev. E. L. Ballard, Mr. L. M. Foust, and Miss Hazel Bull.

Mrs. C. A. Cooper was hostess to the Ladies' Aid society at her home on Silver Run Avenue Monday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Staples have returned from their wedding trip to Asheville, N. C. Mrs. Staples was, before her marriage, Miss Mildred Curtis.

The senior Christian Endeavor society will give a play entitled, "Living Pictures," in the Pomona High School auditorium, Friday evening, February 6, at eight o'clock. The public is invited.

We are delighted to have in our midst again Dr. Joy Glascock, who has moved back from High Point to her old home on Asheboro street. We are glad she can again attend the church services regularly and can resume her active work in all departments of the church work.

Shelby.—The work here continues to move along fairly well. Services last Sunday were well attended, there being a slight increase in the Sunday school attendance. In the absence of the superintendent, Bro. S. C. Tate, Bro. Joe Kennedy, the assistant, presided over the Sunday school. Mrs. J. T. Ramsey, the teacher of the men's class, is still unable to attend Sunday school, but her condition is improved.

The Lord's Supper was observed at the morning service last Sunday and the usual number of our people participated in the service.

The night services are largely attended, and each Sunday night people are present who have not been present at any previous service during the present pastorate.

The stewards held a brief meeting after the service last Sunday night and made their reports of the every-member canvass. They elected Bro. E. O. Eaker as chairman of the board of stewards.

Next Sunday the people of the Shelby congregation will hear sermons by Rev. W. H. Wall, a Baptist minister of Shelby. He will preach at both services in the absence of the pastor who will be at Liberty Hill church of Anderson charge to preach for Bro. Pike.

C. B. Way, Pastor.

Alleghany, Davidson Circuit.—Brother Ridge was with us again the fourth Sunday and preached us another good sermon. It seems that he gets better every time. Everybody seems to like his preaching and I hope that we all will practice it. He preached from Hebrews 3:4: "For every house is built by some man, but he that built all things is God." He told us that we can not do anything without the help of God. If we do right ourselves it is not so hard to see good in others. If we are not right ourselves it is easy to see wrong in others.

Our Sunday school is doing fairly well considering the long bad weather. The sun is shining bright today; 45 present at Sunday school. We are expecting a good Sunday school when the weather gets good. Brother Carl Cash, our superintendent, seems to be doing his best.

We still keep up the prayer meeting every Saturday night when the weather is fit.

We are looking forward for a good year's work; let us try to have the best Sunday school this year that we ever had, for that is the church's best help. I think that we have a good preacher: we can help him with our prayers and works.

Abigail Coggin,
Reporter.

Spring Church.—The weather being so pretty yesterday 40 were able to get out to Sunday school and preaching services, if some did have to walk on account of rough roads. The collection for Sunday school amounted to $1.63, which will be sent to the Children's Home.

Brother Thompson preached another good sermon. He is so anxious to get to Lebanon on time for Sunday school that he fasts every second and fourth Sunday.

We are glad to be able to report that Miss Ethel Crews' condition is much improved. She is expected home this week.

Hope to have a fuller report next time.

January 26.

Cid, South Davidson.—We had a Christmas tree accompanied by exercises of the Sunday school. The children were complimented very much. Rev. W. L. Carson gave us a good lecture and complimented very highly the teacher who trained. There was a large crowd out, church nearly full regardless of the rain and sleet. Brother Carson was well remembered with apples and oranges.

Brother Carson has been bringing us some good gospel messages. He delivered a most excellent sermon at Cid this morning.

Mrs. Cicero Wilson died Friday morning of pneumonia and was buried at Jerusalem this afternoon at 1:30. Brother Carson conducted the funeral; a very large crowd was in attendance. Mrs. Wilson was the daughter of "Tone" Cody. She leaves a husband, five children, father, and several sisters and brothers. She was 52 years old.

Mrs. George Hughes of near Asheboro died suddenly Thursday night and was brought to Jerusalem on yesterday and buried. She was 74 years old. There was a right large crowd of relatives and friends. She leaves a husband and several children to mourn their loss. Mrs. Hughes was an aunt of Mrs. Wilson. Sympathy to the bereaved families.

Mrs. Walter Hughes is right feeble.

Mr. C. O. Leonard has moved to Thomasville. We regret so much to lose them, but Brother Leonard says he is coming back to help us out. He and children were back with us today. He remarked today, no place like his old home church.

I have been reading some good reports about the ones that I know that have changed their place of abode. I believe I will say that old "standby" friends are soon forgotten by some people; not even a Christmas card of remembrance.

Mrs. Arthur Dorsett has had pneumonia. Mrs. C. M. Craver is sick with muscular neuralgia. Mrs. Daisy Cody is right sick.

The cottage prayer meetings have been going on but the last two Saturday nights it was to have been at Albert Hunt's but was not held on account of rain and bad roads. It will be there next Saturday night. We have had good spiritual interest all the time.

Mrs. William Hughes is very low indeed, not expected to recover. She is in an unconscious condition.

The second quarterly meeting will be at Mt. Carmel on Saturday before the second Sunday in February at two P. M.

Mrs. Diana Harris, widow of the late Daniel Harris, was buried at Canaan last Thursday. She was up in the eighties. She leaves one son and several other relatives. Much sympathy.

Mr. Ed Tysinger preaches for us on the first Sunday in each month, Mr. Avery Wooddell on third Sundays.

A well wishes to the Herald and its many readers,

January 24.

Mrs. John F. Baity.—On January 1, when the world was rejoicing because of the coming of the new year the home of Brother John F. Baity was a place of mourning. The good wife and mother, so pure and so lovable, who had made possible that home, so happy and so comfortable, was now silent in death. The husband, the children, the neighbors and the many friends who, because of her sterling qualities loved her so much, were all so sad and their hearts were bleeding. Instead of its being a day of rejoicing with us it was a day of deep sorrow.

Lillie Elizabeth Fulk Baity, the daughter of F. A. and Mary Livengood Fulk, was born in Forsyth county January 15, 1874, and died January 1, 1925. At an early age she became a Christian and joined Mt. Tabor Methodist Episcopal church, South. At a later date she joined Maple Springs Methodist Protestant church, in which church she remained a true and consistent member until she died. She was married to John F. Baity on February 12, 1893. The home of Brother and Sister Baity was blessed with seven children, six of whom are living, one dying in infancy. Sister Baity is survived by her husband and their six living children, Ira W., Roby A., John F., Jr., Ernest T., Miss Annie May, Mrs. Clyde C. Coble and one stepdaughter, Miss Elsie Baity, all of who live in Forsyth county except Mr. Roby A. Baity, who at present lives in Cuba. Mrs. C. F. Ashburn of Cara, N. C., an only sister, also survives. Besides these relatives there are a host of loving friends who are sad, because of the going of this good woman.

Sister Baity possessed great qualities as a home-maker. She was industrious and knew how to keep her home in order and cleanliness was ever a watchword. She was a devoted wife and a sweet loving mother. The good homes of the world could not be the places so dear and the places so much loved were it not for the good wives and mothers. This good woman succeeded in making her home a home indeed.

She was a neighbor that will ever be remembered for her many good deeds of kindness. While she had many cares of her own, yet she was never too busy to minister with strong yet tender hands to the needs of others. Where there was sorrow or distress of any kind she, like her Master, was ready to speak the word of love and sympathy. As a neighbor she will ever be remembered and will be greatly missed.

As a Christian she was true and consistent and most faithful to the church she loved so dearly. When Sister Baity was not at a church service of whatever nature, we knew she was providentially hindered. The people expected her presence and help and they were rarely ever disappointed. She attended services when her physical condition was such that her friends were surprised at her being able to be away from home. She was a good woman and she loved her church. She believed in promptness and punctuality. She had many cares of her own but with all these cares she would almost always manage that her household would be able to attend church services as well as any other engagement with punctuality. Seldom indeed was she ever late attending an engagement. This was one of her fine qualities.

At Maple Springs church on January 3 in the presence of a large attendance of sympathetic friends the funeral was conducted by the pastor being assisted by Rev. R. A. Hunter of the First Methodist Protestant Church of Winston-Salem, Rev. Mr. Bruner of the Moravian Church, and Rev. Mr. Cline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, were also present and conducted prayers. One of these visiting brethren said it was the saddest funeral he ever attended. After the funeral the body was laid to rest in the church cemetery under a bank of most beautiful flowers, which floral tribute was an expression of the esteem, love and sympathy of the many friends.

Geo. L. Curry, Pastor.

Haw River Circuit, Notice.—We will hold our first quarterly conference at Fair Grove church on Saturday before the second Sunday in February, beginning at 1:30 P. M. Please let all indifferent officials forget this notice, that you may have an excuse for your absence.

W. D. Reed.

Shiloh, Connelly Springs Charge.—We are still living and carrying on the Master's work as best we can. The Sunday school for the past week read 1086 chapters. We were glad to have our secretary and treasurer with us after a serious spell of sickness. Our superintendent was absent owing to a case of blood poisoning. Our pastor, Rev. J. R. Gurtner, delivered a touching sermon on the "Ten Commandments." If every one would read, study and obey them there would be less murder and other crimes. I ask all the readers of the Herald to pray for the steady growth of this charge.

Pauline Martin.

English Street Church.—We are wide awake and feel the Spirit of God leading in every service. We had a glorious day Sunday. Observed the Lord's Supper at the 11 o'clock service Sunday morning, and Rev. A. M. Hamilton baptized the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hall at 7:30 service, and it was a good service.

On January 30 there was a good old-time singing at the parsonage, as it was Mrs. A. M. Hamilton's birthday, and she was given a few presents. All had a good time. They reported between 75 and 100 there.

We are glad that the weather is getting so we can get out. We are looking for great things this year. As we are talking Sunday school room and raising money for the up-building of God's kingdom, we need and ask the prayers of other good people that we may do God's bidding.

Concord.—How quickly dreams can be shattered! I was sitting quietly in my study Monday night, planning and dreaming of the possibilities of the work here in Concord, when suddenly the back door flew open and fifty or more of our good folks came bursting in with their arms full of good things. A pound-ing is hardly the name for it. I should call it rather a ton-ning. And then someone was unkind (?) enough to suggest that the preacher looked rather long, and lean, and hungry in the pulpit last night and they were going to fill him up for once! Well, they surely brought enough provisions to fill him up for quite a number of times—meat, eggs, flour, breakfast foods, potatoes, beans, coffee, peaches, peas, pickles, cabbage, money—well, everything! I might have guessed, if I had had my wits about me, that something was up when the wagon of a grocery with which we had never traded drove up and the driver wanted to know "where to unload this feedstuff." I tried to convince him that he was trying to feed the wrong cow—that we had ordered no feedstuff. But he insisted that he had been ordered to unload it at the parsonage. He was bigger than I, so he unloaded it. In just a few minutes, the crowd came in with loads of "feedstuff" for the preacher and his family. Needless to say, that preacher is thankful for all the abundant store left him by so many kind friends, but he appreciates much more the kindly spirit that prompted such generosity.

Lawrence Little, Pastor.

Matthews Chapel Greenville Circuit.—Brother Powell preached for us yesterday as usual. We always look forward to the days when we can expect him we are so proud to have him with us. We are not having as good attendance as usual at our preaching services and Sunday school as our roads are almost impassable. But we hope when the roads get better and the weather gets warmer that our church may take on new life again and we can have a good school, as we have had in the past. Hope our work may go forward so as to have more to report in the future.

Melton's Grove.—Our pastor filled his regular appointment last Sunday and preached a good sermon as usual.

Our Sunday school is not growing as we would like to see it. Bad weather and failure to get literature on time have kept us back some. Pray for us that we may have courage and faith to push on.

The church needs a new floor and other work inside very badly. Although we are few in number I believe if we try to do our part as well as Brother Ridge we will accomplish something.
Glena M. Lane.

English Street Church, High Point.—Our Sunday school is growing better, much interest being shown recently. The Baraca class has elected Rev. W. C. Hall as teacher. It already being a large class, it will now take on more interest with such a worthy teacher. We have nine classes in our Sunday school and nine splendid teachers with the interest of their classes at heart, so they just have to grow—they can't help it.

We had two splendid services last Sunday, the church being filled at both morning and evening services, and every one there received a blessing. We have received fourteen new members since the last annual conference. We must soon have more room, our church is not large enough to take care of the congregation that attend.

We are all very glad to have our pastor and family living in the nice seven-room parsonage recently bought adjoining the church. The many friends of our pastor presented him a beautiful book-case as a token of love, which he appreciates very much.

Mt. Zion.—Sunday was the most beautiful day we have had in a long time. Our Sunday school was not what one might hope for, considering the pretty day, but we feel encouraged. We have enrolled several new scholars already this year and we are looking forward to a very good year in our Sunday school's work.

Sunday at seven P. M. Dr. Andrews was with us and read a beautiful lesson from the Holy Word and explained it in his own very interesting way. We all enjoyed it so much. After the lesson Dr. Andrews talked on the ways and means of starting an endowment fund for our College at High Point. Mt. Zion failed to take any immediate steps in this great work other than the appointment of a committee to work with our members. Brother R. S. Barber and our pastor are the committee. I feel sure that these two will get results.

Mt. Zion, suppose your boy or girl should have the will power and determination to go through college and go to High Point to work his or her way through, then the college have to say, "No work, no endowment fund. You'll have to go back home." Let us consider our own ignorance of education and do all we can to establish an endowment fund at our own College, thereby preparing for those of our children that are so determined that they may have a real religious education.

May God add His blessings to every honest effort put forth in behalf of the College.

Matthews Chapel.—The Woman's Home Missionary Society held its regular monthly meeting at the home of Mr. J. B. Edwards on Saturday evening at 7:30 o'clock, January 24, with nine members present, 11 visitors. The crowd was small on account of bad roads and mumps.

The president, Mrs. J. R. Shell, being sick with "flu," was unable to attend; meeting was called to order by the vice president, Miss Odell Bowen. Song, "Sweet Hour of Prayer," by society; Scripture reading by Miss Odell Bowen; prayer by J. B. Edwards. "The Gift of Gold" was read by Miss Grace Bowen. "New Year's Greeting" was read by Miss Dora Edwards. Solo, "Whispering Hope," was rendered on phonograph. "Farewell" was then read by Miss Gertrude Bowen. Song, "He Leadeth Me," by society. Benediction by J. B. Edwards. Time and place for our next meeting, Saturday evening, February 21, at 7:30 o'clock, at the home of Mr. A. W. Moore.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Friendship, Haw River Circuit.—It does seem, I suppose, that we are asleep or not very energetic people. Though we are not doing conspicuous work I feel that our simple everyday work is strengthening to those of the neighborhood. Our Sunday school and preaching services are being conducted at the usual hours. The first Sunday of the new year we had an unusually large crowd at Sunday school, which seemed a symbol of new strength for the beginning work of our Sunday school.

Our Sunday school has been re-organized, some retaining their old officers, while changes were made in others. New literature—the graded—has been secured recently, which is being put to use already. A division has been made in the young people's class; instead of the one we have the young men's class and the young ladies' class. Because of these last mentioned changes, we feel that better work can be accomplished.

The junior class, under the leadership of Miss Fannie Gordon, during Christmas raised something like $5 or more in that little class and sent it to the poor and needy of the community. Furthermore, on Christmas eve they visited a home with many gifts from old Santa.

Last Wednesday, January 21, the first group and mass meeting in the interest of Christian education was held here, as you perhaps know. This meeting was somewhat a disappointment, because the news of the occasion did not reach the neighboring churches of the circuit. But we who were there thoroughly enjoyed the interesting and beneficial talks by Dr. A. G. Dixon and our College president. We were much benefited, and I hope and believe that in the end this little meeting will prove more successful for our College than it seems.

fine sermon. There was a fairly good congrega-

This has been rather an unfavorable season for church work. The Sundays have been among the rainiest days. Sunday schools have run down in attendance.

The fourth quarterly conference of last year appointed a committee to apportion the financial amounts. This they did, and also recommended the every-member canvass. The report was adopted.

Brother D. A. Braswell came during the holidays to be in a few days' meeting at Fairfield. But rain and sickness made it necessary to close after two and a half days. Those who heard him seemed greatly impressed.

Had a letter some days ago from Bro. W. F. Grabbs the apple man. He is very much interested in the radio. Told us about hearing from Cuba and France, and hearing the children in Canada sing "Little Jack Horner sat in a corner."

Thanks to Mrs. Pentecost for back-bone and spare ribs; W. A. Lamb, beans and chicken-feed; J. L. Cashatt, fresh meat, sausage and wood; Mrs. Lamb, butter; Mrs. W. P. Bowman, cracknels; J. A. Suits, wood.

C. H. Whitaker, Pastor.

Little Star Church, Lexington.

The attendance at Sunday school last Sunday was the largest we have ever had. New members are being added every Sunday and visitors come frequently. The sacrament was administered last Sunday at the 11 o'clock hour. Almost the entire membership was present and every member present communed, also some from other denominations.

A Christian Endeavor Society will be organized soon. The young people of the Sunday school are so enthusiastic and so eager to help in any way that we feel sure the society will do much good.

All of us are very grateful to the Conference for giving us such a pastor as we have. One of his sermons is worth his salary for a year. It is not hard to follow a leader like him. The numbers are increasing and interest is growing all the time.

Weaverville Church.

On the night following Christmas we had a very interesting Christmas program, considering the time given in practice. The tree was beautifully decorated. The Sunday school children rendered their part well in songs and recitations. A pageant was given by older ones. Thanks to Mrs. Guy Edwards, Mrs. Fred Edwards, and Miss Estie Swain, also Rev. C. W. Bates for the program rendered.

In conclusion: While we were waiting for Santa Claus to appear (as he was a little late) a splendid talk was given by Rev. C. W. Bates of Asheville.

Then Santa appeared with Christmas greetings and a treat for the Sunday school.

Our Sunday school is keeping up very well, considering the weather and some of our folks not being able to attend makes fewer in number, but we "never give up."

Our Ladies' Aid gave their annual entertainment December 11, at the home of Mrs. Hamett and Miss Estie Swain. We had a delightful time; many thanks to them for the privilege of convening at their home. There were 26 in number. We were expecting about 50 as we ladies have the privilege of entertaining our husbands and friends at this time, but sorry several of our people were kept away on account of sickness. We have our regular monthly business meetings and social hour following.

We also have a Ladies' Home Missionary Society. We want to get into the real heart of this organization and do some mission work. Last year just before Conference we made and presented to Mr. Caste a quilt and also raised a fund of about $50 which went to the Bethel Home also. Mrs. B. M. Williams was our former president. She was a good one, and we miss her very much in the work.

We feel at a loss without a pastor, and we hope to have one soon. We sincerely ask the prayers of all Christian people. Reporter.

The Sunday school is getting along very well considering the weather.

We held first quarterly conference Jan. 20; had a good conference; pastor's salary paid up to date. Plan of appointments stands as last year.

The Christmas entertainment was splendid with a large crowd in attendance. All received presents and were well pleased with them. The superintendent, Mr. I. C. Teague, received a nice watch from the Sunday school.

Brother Reynolds preached a splendid sermon last Sunday night. We all love Brother Reynolds and his family. They give splendid service on the work. Walter Burton, Reporter.

We have with us this year Bro. Ridge and are glad to have him. He preached an excellent sermon Sunday evening. We are having a good Sunday school considering the cold weather. We pray that every member may co-operate with our pastor this year and may great good be done. Mr. Ridge will preach for us again the second Sunday. Reporter.

Fairfield, Guilford Ct.

This being the beginning of a new year, why should we not tune our wishes to work and make our Sunday school more successful? The average attendance for 1923 was 62. We can't say for 1924 that the average attendance was even 50. Who are the slackers? Last Sunday our attendance was 40. Why can't we make it 100? It would be just as easy. Collection last Sunday amounted to $1.18, good for the number present.

Next Sunday at 11 o'clock Rev. C. H. Whitaker will fill his regular appointment. Suppose we go over the top in attendance next Sunday. It will be a great help to Brother Whitaker in delivering his message to see that we are trying to work and do our part for the upbuilding of God's Kingdom and His Church.

We want every one present next Sunday morning and have in our minds the intention of making 1925 the best year in our record.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Lawrence.—Leafy Gray Lawrence, daughter of A. W. and Emma R. Gray, was born November 25, 1891, died January 9, 1925. In her earlier days she professed faith in Christ and joined the Methodist Protestant Church, the church of her choice, at Level Cross, and proved by her life her interest and devotion to both church and Sunday school. She was equally kind and faithful to the sick, as many will testify. In the last four years of her life she suffered much and many times would have welcomed death in order to be relieved of the same. Leafy will be much missed, as a kind neighbor, good friend, faithful church and Sunday school member, and last, but not least, in the home from which she has departed. May God greatly bless the bereaved mother, sister, brother and the many other relatives and friends.

Her funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. H. Neese, her pastor, Sunday, January 11, at Level Cross at 2:30 P. M., and the body was quietly laid away in the cemetery of the above named church, the grave being beautifully decorated by her friends and loved ones. In this grave she will lie until One who said, "I am the resurrection and the life," shall call for her.

E. G. Lowdermilk.

Coble.—For the second time death has invaded the ranks of the membership of the new Calvary Methodist Protestant Church, Greensboro. Lelah V. Coble was born May 19, 1875, and on January 15, 1925, she suddenly and quietly passed from her earthly to her eternal home. Since her return from the hospital where she had gone for an operation several weeks ago it was thought that her health was steadily improving until on the morning of January 15 she went away almost without warning to her loved ones.

In 1892, under the pastorate of Rev. J. R. Ball, she professed faith in Christ and united with the Tabernacle Methodist Protestant church. Some years later she transferred her membership to Grace Methodist Protestant church, Greensboro. Just recently, when the Calvary Methodist Protestant church was organized in South Greensboro, she transferred her membership to that church.

I knew her not but those who knew her well tell me that she was a consistent Christian and member of the church, and that she was a devoted daughter and mother. She was widely known and loved and is mourned by her relatives and friends throughout the county and especially in the Tabernacle community where she was born and where she lived until she came to live in Greensboro in 1906. She is survived by a son by a former marriage, Gordon C. Hunter of Greensboro; by her mother, Mrs. J. H. Coble; two sisters, Mrs. W. G. Starr, and Mrs. J. H. Denny; three brothers, Grady W. Coble, H. Floyd Coble, and G. O. Coble; and two grandchildren, Rebecca and Rachel Hunter, all of Greensboro.

The funeral service was conducted at the residence, 421 Adlington Street, at three o'clock on January 16 by the pastor and Dr.

S. K. Spahr, her former pastor at Grace church. Interment was made in the family plot at Tabernacle church.

The pastor attempted to comfort the bereaved ones with the thought that they "sorrow not as others who have no hope." She is not dead but entered into life. At the funeral we quoted a poem, copies of which have been asked for. If the editor will kindly give the space we will give it here.

"Entered Into Life."

Not dead, but "entered into life," it ran,
The message that was sent to me;
And with those words my stricken heart began
To feel the solace they were meant to be.

No time allowed for heartbreak or for moan!
How could I grieve that she had gone away?
The life I loved more dearly than my own
Hath only journeyed to Eternal Day.

Could I be selfish if I truly loved?

"Love seeketh not its own," we feel and know

In that affliction was I tried and proved,
That I might find if I was worthy so.

I thought of all her struggles, all her gain,
The joy of victory; the conflict past;
No longer dying daily, racked with pain,
But safe and happy, free and strong at last.

The body sown in weakness, raised in power,
The mortal clothed with immortality.

Sure, if I loved her, this would be the hour
When I, forgetting self, would thankful be.

Oh, blessed words with hope and comfort rife,
If only we can feel the thing they mean,
Our loved ones have but "entered into life,"
And "more abundantly" than we can dream. —Dominion Presbyterian.

A FUTILE DREAM.

Self-sufficiency is the canker that gnaws at the root of all religion. It is the futile dream of a small, insignificant world, of which our little self is the great person, whose mind understands everything, whose will disposes of everything, whose money governs everything, and whose power carries everything before it.

BIOGRAPHY OF WILSON.

Ray Stannard Baker of Amherst, Mass., the noted American author, is to write the life story of President Woodrow Wilson. Mrs. Wilson has named him as the "authorized biographer" of the War President and has placed in his hands thousands of letters and documents relating to the two Wilson Administrations (1913-1921). Probably several years will be required to complete the biography. Mr. Baker's best-known books have been written under the name "David Grayson." Among them are "Adventures in Contentment," "Adventures in Friendship," "The Friendly Road" and "Hempfield."

Gibsonville-Fountain Place, Burlington.—The reporters of the two churches have been fairly faithful, but as we have just closed our first quarter's records I will make a sort of summary report.

We came immediately from conference to enter upon the work, but there being no parsonage were not permitted to do so fully, until the last days of November. A house had to be rented, and not only so, had to be renovated before we could move in, but the Gibsonville people immediately set about to effect an arrangement of this kind, so as stated we have been home since about the 25th of November. We are now located in a home "with room and to spare," and it is well furnished.

Soon after we moved they that "turn the world upside down" in order to feed well, came thither also, and after a parking of cars the last of which was but a trifle closer than some of their homes, began to descend and thence to ascend up to and into the house to the number of a hundred strong (representing the two churches) and what else? Pork, sausage, bacon, ham, coffee, tea, potatoes, sweet and Irish, rice, sugar, meal, flour, preserves, figs, peaches, pears, corn, peas, beans, syrup, salt, macaroni, corn flakes, jellies, jams,

Apples green, apples dried,
Apples dark, apples bright,
Apples good, apples best,
Think long, guess the rest.

Such a lot could not be bought for less than $50. No one will therefore be surprised to know that I have gained one pound per week since coming into the tarheel region. The fact is, I feel as though I am a confirmed tarheel, even now, notwithstanding I have not felt the necessity of the tar (hot tar) until the snow began melting just recently.

Home Missionary Society has been organized and is starting well, with Mrs. W. J. Jennings as president. The Ladies' Aid society under the presidency of Mrs. D. M. Davidson continues to do well, having made some $75 during the quarter. The Sunday school, under the superintendency of D. M. Davidson is growing and doing well; just recently an inter-class movement was started that pledges the school to a ten per cent monthly increase in enrollment and attendance. Christian Endeavor societies, of which there are three, are all in a thriving condition. A school of methods to be held during March, nightly for a week, is being planned. The young ladies' class of the Sunday school is especially active under the leadership of their teacher, Miss Georgia Clapp; during the quarter they bought a splendid heater and presented it to the church for use in the hut. When the parsonage was being furnished they bought a handsome mahogany bedroom suit and presented it, together with draperies for the room, to the committee furnishing the house. Other classes in the school have each made a month's payment or more on the new piano.

The work at this point has been carried on at a great disadvantage for some time; the mill people have had only part-time work. We are looking, however, for better times financially, the mill now having begun to operate on full time again. Thus far but $10 has been paid on our A. C. B. and nothing on our G. C. B., but we are organizing for our Easter season and expect to make a life on the G. C. B. at that time. Current expenses are, for the most part, being met promptly. Despite the financial depression the apparent need of a parsonage at this point led our people to contribute $200 in cash and pledges, as well as to have a lot contributed by one of our men. The parsonage is in sight.

We expect to hold a few days' evangelistic meeting as soon as spring opens up a bit. Our church and Sunday school attendance is growing and with the coming of spring we have no doubt but we will need more room to take care of us. We have the largest Sunday school in the town and there is no good reason why, proper care and program, we should not have by far the best all-around church of the town. In fact we confidently look for this very thing. Look for a report later.

Fountain Place, Burlington.

This is one of the babies of the conference according to birth. But notwithstanding it is only about six months old it is crawling, pulling, climbing and its voice is heard all over town as the voice of a robust child.

This church faced the new year with a deficit of about $1200 in the form of debt for improvements incurred last year. This, together with this year's claims and expenses was lumped into the budget for this year, making a total budget of about $2,500; and while that amount is large for so small a membership they are doing fine, being able to close the first quarter with all claims paid in full to date and with $250 pledged toward the plant fund, some of which is paid in cash.

We Make a Specialty of

LOOSE LEAF BOOKS FOR MINISTERS' USE.

WILLS BOOK AND STATIONERY CO.

Sunday school is growing, church is thriving, and all is going well. More room must be had, however, a Sunday school of around a hundred in attendance with an enrollment well over a hundred, all in one, one-room basement, does not offer further Sunday school opportunity; besides this, this basement is cold and not infrequently damp and sometimes even wet. Three Sundays we have been sadly interrupted by these conditions, conditions that ought not to be and conditions that must not be, and that by God's help the church has already said will not very long be. This they said just one week ago in an enthusiastic meeting held for the purpose of trying to devise ways and means for the completion of the Sunday school department. This will mean the putting on of the two stories over the basement we now have.

It has been decided also to have an evangelistic meeting as early in the spring as it can be arranged for. Adieu—"the swimming is fine."

G. H. Hendry, Pastor.

points. Forsyth and Charlotte each gained five points and Asheville made a gain of three. This week we have fifty charges heard from so far on one or the other of the budgets. That is fine. Come on, you other 32, let us have a full front and a completed army. Everybody help on that appeal from Dr. Klein and see the G. C. B. run up this week. This is our task. Our joy will be in a completed task.

Yours in His service, A. G. Dixon.

FAITH.

Lord, give me faith!—to live from day to day,
With tranquil heart to do my simple part,
And, with my hand in Thine, just go Thy way.

Lord, give me faith!—to trust, if not to know;

And, child-like, go where Thou wouldst have me go.

Lord, give me faith!—to leave it all to Thee,

The veil Thy love has hung 'twixt it and me.

AFTER THE SERMON.

"A candle is my God to me,
A little candle in my hand,
A little light by which I see
Which way to step and where to stand."

These words I heard the other day,
They pierced my heart and entered there;
Whatever else he had to say,
I did not hear; I did not care.

I carried home that lovely thought,
I made it mine, for mine own need,
And out of it I quickly wrought
A living truth for me to heed.

I am not strong, I am not wise,
The road is difficult and dark;
A little candle for dim eyes,
And for my feet a God-lit spark!

"A candle is my God to me."
I thank the preacher for this phrase.
A Candle, too, my God shall be—Sufficient Light for darksome ways!

THE DEVELOPMENT YOU NEED.

When you first visited a gymnasium and looked about you, you perhaps found it hard to understand some of the things you saw. They seemed to you to be without any useful purpose. And if you saw a class going through a drill, you may have had the same feeling of bewilderment. What was the use of that queer device over in the corner? What were the uses of all those exercises those young folks were undergoing? It was hard work, you could see by their flushed faces, and the perspiration on their foreheads, and yet it accomplished nothing. It seemed to you a pity.

But it did not take you very long to realize that this hasty judgment of yours was mistaken. You found out after a time, that every piece of apparatus in the gymnasium had its use, that every exercise strengthened some group of muscles. And you saw, too, how the young folks who regularly practiced these exercises developed more symmetrically than they could have done without them.

The very same thing is true of your difficulties and disappointments. You do not understand them any more than you understood the gymnasium apparatus when you first saw it, but they, too, have a use. In overcoming them, you gain the development you need. Without them you could not possess the symmetry which consciously or unconsciously, is your aim. Though many things come to us in this life which we cannot understand, there is not one which may not be made to help and serve us. No one ever reached greatness without overcoming difficulties, and often these difficulties and their conquest help to explain the greatness.—Selected.

A PRAYER 103 YEARS OLD.

Agnes Scott College has recently come into possession of a prayer which was written in 1821 by Mrs. Agnes Scott. It illustrates the spiritual atmosphere which the founders of the college had for their ideal and which is still the chief purpose of the institution.

Mrs. Scott was the mother of Col. George W. Scott, who gave the original sum of $112,500 to start the school. She came to America from Ireland when a young girl, and through a long life she set an example of faith, love and service which any girl today may well imitate.

"Oh, Almighty and most merciful God, I desire to draw near to Thee. I confess and lament before Thee the many transgressions of my life; I have indeed left undone the things I ought to have done. Oh, give me true and deep repentance; oh give me faith to believe Thy Holy Word and to accept Thy gracious invitations and to rely upon Thy precious promises. For the sake of Thy dear Son, pardon all my sins and receive me graciously as Thy child, and may Thy Holy Spirit renew and sanctify my heart.

"Oh Lord be with me, and guide me and help and strengthen me now and always. Though I am sinful and unworthy, yet let me hope in the Lord with whom there is mercy. May I be enabled prudently to steer my course through all difficulties in my way; give me patience and courage to withstand all assaults and opposition which I have to encounter. And the children, oh my God, which Thou hast given me and those that ought to be under my direction, I return unto Thee. May they know Thee and be known by Thee; and I pray Thee, oh Lord, to grant unto them the continued help of Thy Holy Spirit, that they may be preserved from sin and may become faithful in any good work. May they be temperate, sober, and diligent; may they learn to command their tempers and restrain their tongues; may they be kind and merciful to each other even as they hope that God for Christ's sake will forgive them. Let my imperfect prayer be answered. Hear these my petitions, or grant, Father, for Thy mercy's sake in Christ Jesus our Savior, to whom with the Holy Spirit I ascribe all praise forever. Amen."—Selected.

THE BEAUTIFUL SNOW.

This morning when I rose from a peaceful night's rest, I looked out of my window on a new world. Yes, a new world, for all the mud, tin cans, waste paper and numerous other trash was all covered up with a beautiful white carpet, for God during the night sent the beautiful snow and laid a covering of whiteness over all that was ugly. And what a wonderful truth this will teach us if we will consider how pure everything looks under the snow, but the snow only covered up the trash.

This is what I am trying to tell in my own words. There are people, yes, thousands of them, that have a life covered up with beautiful clothes and furs, that if we could see into the heart and soul we would see nothing but a heap of rubbish. They act like children of God. But they do things and they keep them covered up by their pleasant face, sweet, inviting conversation and beautiful, stylish clothes and to the world they are perfect, but beneath that cover is rubbish. If we, the best of us, could have our lives uncovered to the world, oh, the rubbish we would see! We would be shocked at the amount of unkind things said and unkind things done. There are numbers of churches that are in our land standing out as a fort for God. They are called the house of God. But they have been made in many instances amusement halls. Moving pictures and many other things come in at the front door with the pastor and members of the church and crowd God out the back way. But that church has a beautiful cover over it. Oh! how fine the architecture. All is beautiful to the world, and many of our ministers are hid behind a beautiful covering of style. What wonderful sermons they preach about about the modern improvements and art—so beautiful to a sinful world.

The awfulness of hell must not be told for fear of hurting the feelings of some one with a fat pocket-book. All must be covered with beauty. But listen! all too soon the clouds pass from the sky and the beautiful sun comes out and melts the clean white carpet and our eyes fall on scenes of ugliness. All the trash is there, all that was beautiful is gone. And listen; all too soon, when we are not thinking, Jesus will burst through the clouds with his angels and the covering of the beautiful will be torn from our bodies and the ugliness of our misspent lives will be seen: all things will be seen and judged at their worth, there will be no covering in that wonderful day—all that we have covered up will be revealed—our covering will all melt away as a beautiful snow.

THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD.

1 Cor. 13: 1.

To prove the mighty transforming and building power of religion, or Christian influences in the school room, as well as in other organizations and phases of life, let me relate to you a true story of how a child's heart responded to the nobility of a Christian teacher's love and influence.

Some years ago in the Piedmont section of our State, there was a little country school-house which a crippled child attended very irregularly. During rainy seasons or when the cold was severe she was kept from school because of physical inability and long distance to walk. By and by, however, as the days came and went, the nobility of that teacher's soul struck a chord in the heart of the child which tuned in with her gentle and kindly spirit. The teacher happened to be a real teacher whose soul was charged and surcharged with a great love for nobility, truth, justice and righteousness; a teacher who could see in the heart of every child something of God's own image; with possibilities of being led out into channels of usefulness. She loved her pupils with a love akin to God's love, and worked for them with an untiring and unselfish spirit, ever ready and willing to show the meaning and value of efforts well spent. Words of praise were always given for tasks well done, sympathy and regret akin to pain for failures made; chastisements seldom came, but when such was necessary it was always given in a firm, even, positive tone, never harsh or commanding. Needless for me to say, her pupils loved her; needless for me to say they obeyed; needless for me to say, she gave them ideals high and holy.

Now in the heart of this crippled child the teacher's image was engraved, burned there by a pure love never to be effaced. Time passed away, the teacher was gone, but her inspiration stayed. Her ideals had become the child's ideals, and oh! how she longed to be like her great teacher, to look like her; to speak and live like her. Sometimes the hot tears coursed down her cheeks and her heart throbbed with a mighty longing to be a teacher like her. But this seemed to her child mind now impossible. One must know so much, as she thought, to become a teacher, and would she ever know so much? Once the teacher had told her that she thought she could get her a scholarship to one of the big schools of the State, but since she was not strong no one encouraged her to accept the offer.

As the years came and went a terrible longing filled the heart of the woman, now grown, to do something in the world worth while. She must do something—a restless, dissatisfied desire for self-expression and service urged her on. But what must she try to do? was the question. Teach? No, she was not prepared. Then the question, Why not prepare to teach? To work she went with courage undaunted and in a short time, still feeling very much unprepared, she took up the work of teaching, following as nearly as possible the steps of her ideal teacher, trusting God to lead and guide. Day by day, in the school-room, she too has seen the image of God in the lives of her pupils; day by day she has tried to show them the most beautiful way to live, ever striving to uphold the principles of God's teaching, ever striving to be true to the highest and best visions life had unfolded before her. And let me say to you, success will surely follow such efforts. Trials may come, as they always will; people may not understand, as they all cannot always do. Shadows may come and the heart may grow faint and weary of it all, and one may often think, it is not worth while. But the message, "Be not weary in well doing, for in due season you shall reap if you faint not" cheers one on to renewed effort. Then the great words—"Lo, I am with you always," and "If God be for us who can be against us." All these great thoughts give strength and help us to win.

Today, in one of the new and beautiful schools of our state this teacher of whom I write is now teaching, hoping, trusting, praying that great ideals may be burned upon the souls of her pupils, planted there with such force of love and power that time with all its destructive forces may not efface, that temptations, however great, may be overcome by a well-instilled knowledge of the tremendous cost of yielding; that the visions of the heights may be so alluring as to lead them on to complete victory o'er self and o'er sin. To be truly great, one must catch visions of greatness; one must learn to love the highest and best, and there is no better place to sow such seed or to paint such pictures than in the school-room.

The world offers no greater place of real service than is offered to the teachers of the land in the school room. Theirs is the big job of character-building. And if they fail to build character, let them be ever so well versed in the higher sciences as subjects of today, let them be ever so able to impart such knowledge, I say to you, they have failed, and the failure is a deplorable one.

The teacher referred to who began teaching with no preparation as the world would term it, has succeeded in her efforts for advancement until she now has met the state's requirements for graduation from a Standard A college. This has been accomplished as a result no doubt of the inspiration planted in her soul through the love and ideals of her childhood teacher, wrought out by an unseen force we call God.

The greatest thing, I say with Paul, is love, and nowhere do we find the result of it more inspiring and building than in the school-room—"God is love."

Planted in the souls of men there is a spark of divinity, calling us through aspirations and desires to the heights, and such beautiful calls, however faint, may be fanned into flame by right influences to light the way for man's ascendancy over temptations and blinding powers. Heights all glorious and full of beauty are his. Then why not look up to the heights from whence cometh our help?

The Heights.

There is surely a place somewhere on the heights

For the children of men today,
The place of beauty is yours to claim,
If you are willing the price to pay.

In caskets you may not see,
The gifts, though locked, are yours, I say,
For you in truth hold the key.

The keys which unlock the vaults of fame
Or the doors where the great have trod,
Are the keys of knowledge, truth and love,
And they are yours from the hand of God.

Each boy or girl, whether small or great,
Can these beautiful gifts possess,
The price you must pay as all have paid
Before Christ will own and bless.

Be true to the highest and best that you know,

Be faithful, be honest, and kind,
Be eager to serve in the greatest way,
And the way to the heights you will find.

"SWEET WILL OF GOD."

I worship thee, sweet Will of God!
And all thy ways adore,
And every day I live I seem
To love thee more and more.

When obstacles and trials seem Like prison walls to be,
I do the little I can do,
And leave the rest to thee.

I know not what it is to doubt;
My heart is ever gay,
I run no risk, for, come what will,
Thou always hast thy way!

I have no cares, O blessed Will,
For all my cares are thine;
I live in triumph, Lord, for thou
Hast made thy triumphs mine.

AFTER I SURRENDERED.

What Happened When a Man Stopped Robbing God, and Dared to Trust Him.

By a Layman.

One night in September of 1915 I was very suddenly awakened from my slumbers by a dream. It was so vivid before me that I could not sleep, and for several days afterward it was uppermost in my mind constantly. I dreamed that God spoke to me and said, "Take up thy cross and follow me and I will greatly bless thee" (Job 33:14-17). I could not get that thought off my mind until one night, when I was alone with God, I got on my knees and told him that with his help I would do it if he would just forgive me my many sins, and I would do my best the rest of my life to do his will. I felt a sweet peace from that time on, and God began then to bless me in many and new ways.

About this time my wife suggested that we tithe (Mal. 3:8-12) and so we stopped robbing God of the money we owed him, and at the same time we began to prosper. Our income may have been greater at times; but it never seemed to go as far.

When we began to prosper I saw how plainly God was blessing us, in both spiritual and temporal things, as he has said he would, and my faith began to increase, and I began to pray as I had never prayed before. I was most positive that God would do just what he promises to do. Among his many promises is one that seems most dear to me. It is found in Psalm 55:22, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee; he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved." Then again in Proverbs 3:6, God says that if we acknowledge him in all our ways he will direct our paths. I cast my burdens on him and ceased to worry over our affairs, and I began to acknowledge him as the giver of every good and perfect gift (Jos. 1:17), and oh, his blessings have been most wonderful to me!

I recall the first financial cramp (which had been a chronic affair with me) that occurred after my complete surrender. I had promised a creditor that on the first day of December I would pay him $84.50. On the last day of November I found that I had only half that amount of cash on hand. The visible prospect I had of collecting the amount that day was very slim. I was "up against it." Then I thought of Psalm 55:22, and I put it up to the Lord to help me out. I told him of one fellow who had been owing me forty dollars for a couple of months, and asked him to get this man in my office with a check that day for the full amount; and I told the Lord that there were several others who ought to "pay up," and asked the Lord to prod them a little and get them to cash in. Well, the first thing after luncheon that day the fellow who owed me the forty dollars came in and gave me a check in full, and several others came in, and before I left my place of business I had collected over seventy dollars! I did not ask any debtor for the money, either. I asked God. He heard me and sustained me.

On the twentieth of this same month my taxes came due, and I was about thirty dollars short of the amount of cash I needed, and again I called upon the Lord and told him of a certain man who had owed me thirty-six dollars for some little time and who had made several promises to pay and had broken all of them, and that I would be thankful to Him if He, the Lord, would get this fellow to bring to me a check in full as soon as possible. After that I gave the matter no more worry. About nine or ten o'clock the next morning who should walk into my office but this same man with a check in full for the thirty-six dollars!

On another occasion I had a financial obligation to meet, and needed about twenty-five dollars more than I had. I had no visible prospect of procuring the needed money, so that night I asked God to send it to me the next day from some source. I told him that I had lots of outstanding accounts that were long past due, and that while I was unable to make them pay up, I knew he could if he would. I just felt that the Lord would do it, and he did (Matt. 21:22). The next day collections came into my office until they amounted to twenty-six dollars and fifty cents.

One time I had been sick for about three weeks and out of the office most of the time; the first of the month was at hand; there were monthly bills to pay and only a small bank account to meet them. I had a good many outstanding accounts owing me, but they were slow in coming in, so I again called upon the Lord to help me out. I asked him to send collections in as fast as bills came in, so that I could meet them. Every day I collected a few dollars more than I had to pay out. This continued for three days; but on the third day I had not collected any cash. I could not understand it, because I knew my faith had not been lacking that day. I was somewhat disappointed, but I did not lose faith.—I thought God saw some other way out. Closing my office I started home, having an errand in a grocery store on the way. I had my hand on the door of this store, but as I started to open it a still voice seemed to tell me to go across the street and enter another grocery. This I did. While I was making my purchase a man came up to me and said: "I have been trying all day to get up and see you and settle up my account with you, but I have not had the time." Then he handed me a check that more than amounted to all that I needed. I believe that God was trying my faith that day.

A few months later I had been invited to occupy a pulpit for a certain Sabbath evening. The Friday morning previous I awoke with a severe headache and sore throat. The other members of my family had all been having severe colds, and it seemed that my turn had come. My first thought was this: "How can I do my best for the Master, while I am afflicted with a cold? Perhaps he does not want me to go and is taking this way to prevent it." Then I thought that if he wanted me to go and do my best for him he would cure the cold. This I asked him to do. About an hour afterward my headache had all vanished and my throat was not in the least sore. I did not have any further symptoms of a cold, and I went and talked to this congregation, never feeling better in my life. One young man was led to Christ, I was afterward told, as a result of the message I bore of the Master.

Another instance of how God keeps his promise that "if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father who is in heaven" (Matt 18:19) was one morning when my wife suggested that I ask the Lord to give me more business, as it had been quite dull for some little time. At our family altar that morning I did so. That was about six weeks ago, and from that time on I have had, most of the time, all the business I could handle, and part of the time more.

I could mention many other instances showing how God answers prayers directly, just as he says he will do if we comply with his requests and commands. Study his promises, obey his commands, and take him at his word; and he will do for you exactly as he promises to do. He will give you greater joy and sweeter peace than you have ever realized it is possible for mortal man to know. There is no sacrifice that you may make for Jesus' sake but that God will give you a greater joy than was all that you sacrificed.—Sunday School Times.

THE JOY OF CHRIST.

The Savior was "a man of sorrows," but every thoughtful mind has discovered the fact that down deep in his innermost soul he carried an inexhaustible treasury of refined and heavenly joy. Of all the human race, there was never a man who had a deeper, purer or more abiding peace than our Lord Jesus Christ. "He was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows." His vast benevolence must have afforded him the deepest possible delight, for benevolence is joy. There were a few remarkable seasons when this joy manifested itself. "At that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth."—C. H. Spurgeon.

The Son of God was terrible that day when He came into His Father's house and found the money changers there defiling the place. The light of His eyes was as the keen edge of a Damascus blade, and His voice sounded as the crack of doom. All the majesty of a divine manhood, all the strength of a perfect holiness drove Him on to smite with withering scorn and resounding blows, those who had turned His Father's house into a den of thieves. There were times in the life of Jesus when He was as terrible as a tempest, and men fell before Him as smitten with a blow.—The Methodist Protestant.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Sunday, February 8, I had the pleasure of presenting the High Point College to congregations at Chestnut Ridge and Hebron churches on Orange, and at Mebane. Rev. B. M. Williams, pastor of Orange, was with me at his churches and he is confident now that he can soon secure the quota allotted to Orange. He proposes going from house to house until the quota is fully subscribed. Union Grove accepted its quota when it was first presented to them, Esland is well on the way, Chestnut Ridge will go out in a few days, and we expect Hebron to do likewise.

At Mebane the pastor was sick in bed with his second case of influenza, and a number of his members were also sick. However, we had a fair audience of earnest listeners and they made a good start toward subscribing their quota. We feel confident that Mebane will raise her quota.

Co-operation.

Co-operation is the word for us as Methodist Protestants when we think of the High Point College. We have a splendid plant there, a good faculty, a fine student enrollment for our first year, and an excellent piece of work is being done. It is ours. We created it, by the help of the Lord, and now we must co-operate to make it just what it ought to be. Think of it, more than ten thousand of our people in the North Carolina Conference have actually contributed of their money to make our present High Point College a possibility. Now all of that ten thousand and more, must co-operate, and keep paying out of their tithe, to make our High Point College a bigger and a better college. Loyalty to our own with a spirit of co-operation in the paying of a portion of our tithe to the College each year will work wonders there in helping to finish the plant and in helping to raise the endowment.

This thing must be done, and we Methodist Protestants are the folks to do it. Our friends may help us, and will help us; but we must lead on.

Those Quotas.

Look up the quota for your charge in either one of the last two copies of the Herald, and you and your pastor plan to raise it at an early date. The quotas are so reasonably small that it ought to be easy for every church to raise theirs in a short time. This is the easiest way and the most common-sense way for us to raise our endowment. This College is ours and we must nurture and care for our own.

That S. O. S. Call.

Each pastor received a letter last week calling his attention to the pressing need of our Foreign Mission Board. Salaries are due, and there is no money in hand with which to pay them.

One-fourth of our General Conference Budget is now past due, so this appeal is not for something extra. It is a call for you to pay at this time a part of your G. C. B. and send it in to Brother Taylor as a special on foreign missions so it will give immediate relief.

Fifth Sunday in March.

Don't forget that we are planning for the District Rallies for March 28 and 29. Let all pastors plan accordingly and not make other plans that will conflict with these.

Easter Sunday April 15.

Begin in good time to lay your plans for the Easter services. 1. A Decision Day should be held in behalf of each Sunday school in the conference. This should be planned well and worked wisely.

2. Certainly each church and Sunday school should plan together to hold the Easter Day services, using the program prepared by our Board of Home Missions. Dr. C. H. Beck will be glad to send samples. His address is 613 West Diamond Street, N. S., Pittsburgh, Pa. This will help you to raise your budget, and you will be directly helping with our Home Missionary work. Be sure to plan it.

An Increase in Membership.

Brethren, we are in the work to help win the world for Christ. To do this we must add to our number day by day such as are being saved. We have before us a strange situation from the last annual conference. It is said that figures will not lie, but something happened to figures that I cannot understand.

Pastors' fourth quarterly reports to the president of the conference showed that there was a net gain in members of 1,166. That would give us at present a total enrollment of 27,615. But the figures in pastors' reports to conference, which were placed in the hands of our conference statistician, showed a loss of 356 members, giving us a present total membership of 26,083.

No one can explain this, but we have to accept the figures of our statistician because they are the figures reported at conference.

We had splendid meetings last year, and it seemed that a goodly number were being added to our ranks. Let us work with a will, and look to God in faith, believing that each church in the conference will be strengthened and quickened this year by the addition of new members, and by the increased diligence and the loyal co-operation of those who are already in the church.

Let Us Pray.

Please let every earnest Christian in the conference pray most earnestly for all the enterprises of our conference, especially the Children's Home, and the High Point College. And also pray especially for a great spiritual revival among us.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

Community Church, Thomasville.—A joint meeting of our Ladies' Aid and Esther Foreign Mission Society was held last Monday at the home of Mr. C. F. Finch. Mrs. Williams was hostess, as she and Brother Williams are making their home there for the present.

The ladies decided to have a measuring social at the church on next Friday evening. We are to measure waists at a penny an inch. We hope all the large folks will come and be measured, but all will be heartily welcomed.

On last Monday evening our third quarterly conference was held and the business was transacted in a most agreeable manner. Also the Sunday school teachers were asked to be present for a business meeting with Superintendent Finch. Several teachers were present, much interested in the growth and work of the Sunday school and church. Hot chocolate and wafers were served. We are making use of the nice kitchen and electric range and its equipment at every opportunity.

Last Sunday Brother Williams was not feeling so well, but gave us a splendid message; in the evening he preached on God/Revelation to Man," and was surely at his best. Many expressions concerning the splendid sermon were heard, and it was appreciated by a full house. The Bible picture did not come, so, that the people might not be disappointed he surely gave them a worth-while message to make up for it.

Two new cradle roll members, Nina Jane dear little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Clodfelter, born in January; also a fine son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gardner, Arthur Frank.

Miss Ruby Welborn, one of our most faithful and active church workers, was happily married at the home of her sister, Mrs. Bost to Mr. Suits of Raleigh, and will make her home there. Rev. Mr. Williams officiated. We will miss her here but wish for her every happiness in her new home. Reporter.

Brother Loy preached the fourth Sunday an interesting sermon. Our Sunday school is getting along nicely. Mr. Ernest Briles is superintendent. The juniors and primary classes received pins for regular attendance. The following officers were elected for the year: for stewards: Mr. G. F. Cashatt, Mrs. S. W. Hughes and Mr. E. M. Briles; for trustees: Mr. G. F. Cashatt, Mr. John Harrelson and Mr. Harrison Cratts; class leader, Mr. John Harrelson. Ressie Kindly, Reporter.

Stallings, Mecklenburg Charge.

—Last Sunday (February 1) we considered ourselves honored with three sermons at approximately 10:30, 11 and 7:30. This may seem a little out of the ordinary, but our pastor was called upon to make a talk on the Sunday school lesson and he did no less than deliver a splendid little sermon on "The Vine and the Branches." At the 11 o'clock service Brother Short took for his text: "Ye are the light of the world" (Matt. 5:14). He brought out many good points in comparing the Christian life to light, and showed very clearly that it is necessary for each Christian to let his light shine. He also pointed out the indispensability of clean reflectors. The text for the evening service was the parable of the ten virgins (Matt. 25:1-12). Following are a few of the many interesting points brought out with Biblical references and good illustrations. Christ is coming again. The wise will be prepared to meet him with joy. The foolish will find to their regret, bitterness and remorse, that they have neglected too long. The discourse was simple, yet it was a beautiful and pathetic description of that "great and notable day" when the wise shall enter into the joys of their Lord, while the door of doom is to close on those who have been so foolish as to neglect so great a salvation.

Mrs. P. L. Garmon.

GOOD ADVICE.

On every occasion of uneasiness, we should retire in prayer, that we may give place to the light and grace of God, and then form our resolutions, without being in any pain about what success we may have.—John Wesley.

LECTURES AT HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

The students of High Point College truly have had the privilege of hearing three very inspiring lectures since Sunday. Professor P. E. Lindley, a member of the faculty, gave an interesting lecture Sunday night at chapel time. The main thought was "Others" and he very clearly and forcibly showed how much more a life means that considers others than one that does not. His entire message was given by illustrations which made it intensely interesting and helpful.

This lecture of Professor Lindley's was followed on Monday morning by one on "Temperance." This was given by Miss Roberta Karnes, a woman of national note, being a very great worker of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Miss Karnes is of particular interest to us as she is a graduate of our sister college, Western Maryland.

Then again on Tuesday morning we had a most delightful talk by Dr. L. W. McFarline of the Friends Church. Dr. McFarline made us all realize that we are the ones who "will sell" our institution. The persons who are trying to raise money for the college can not do it with success unless the students come up to a worth-while standard. He very forcibly sent out the challenge to the students "to let their spiritual life be the leading element." Surely we all will feel the responsibility now of doing our best in order to maintain the standards and honor of our institution.

Helen Hayes.

SHALL WE DO IT?

It is not a question of whether we are able. That question finds answer in what our church has already done. Does the Methodist Protestant Church want leaders trained in our own college, or is it content to get on without them? This seems to me to be the crux of the whole matter—do we want them? If we want our leaders trained in their own college, it is evident that we must have the college. We have the college, we also have the young people who want to be trained for church service. But as it so often happens, many of these young people are not able to pay for the preparation they want and need. They come to us for help, and, although the running expenses of the average college is 61 per cent more than the income from the student funds, the colleges are helping a great number who without this aid could never get an education. Now in order that we may be sure of this assistance, we are trying to get together a fund large enough as an endowment fund to make it possible for our college to pay these bills while it is extending this help. So when you help us you thereby create a living circle that passes on this help through us to others. What you give us we give away.

WE NEED YOU.

Dr. Dixon and a few of us have gone out over bad roads and appealed to the people we found at the churches to help us in this great cause. The responses have not been spontaneous nor large, but there have been those who have said by word and deed that they are with us and intend to go with us to the end of life's journey. However, we just cannot do this work without more assistance. We need more helpers, more men and women to join in this campaign. You must help us. Surely there are a thousand of our people here in North Carolina who know and feel that they ought to have a share in this work. There are a thousand who are able to have a large share and they are intelligent enough to know that they ought to have a share, and with this thousand we could do this thing very easily. The question is, Will you help—shall we do it?

PUBLISH RESULTS.

I would like in the Herald of next week to begin to publish the results of our campaign. We want to publish the churches that have joined in this campaign, together with the amounts subscribed, and we want to give you fair warning to be ready to come in on the first report.

PAY UP OLD SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Mr. Garrett is out in the field collecting for the college and there are several thousand dollars still due us by those who made subscriptions to the building fund. We have had to borrow money to get the college started, and we are having to borrow money to keep it going. If only our friends who have subscribed would help us by paying the amounts up to date they have subscribed, it would greatly relieve our strained situation. Won't you please let us have at once any amount that you can pay on your subscription?

Asking for your sincere prayers and cordial co-operation in this the greatest and yet the hardest undertaking our church has thrown herself into, I am,

Faternally,

R. M. Andrews.

State Street Church, Lexington.—For the past few Sundays our Sunday school has been growing in a very encouraging way. New scholars are being added every Sunday and visitors are coming in.

The preaching services are always so fine and inspiring and the congregation is better each time.

Next Sunday evening at 6:30 o'clock a Christian Endeavor society will be organized. The young people are quite anxious for a society and will do their best to make it a success.

The missionary society is progressing pleasingly; almost all the ladies were present at the last meeting, which was held at Mrs. Evans' home Thursday, Mrs. Cox presiding. A very pleasant and welcome visitor at this meeting was Miss Hardy of Halifax county, who has been visiting at the parsonage the past week.

Brother Bethea has given us two such convincing and compelling talks on Stewardship that surely none of us can ever be stingy with the Lord again if we ever have been. How grateful we are for such a pastor!

Reporter.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Charge.—We were all most deeply grieved to hear of Brother Pike's accident, and we hope he will soon recover. We also appreciate Dr. Dixon's interest in us. We shall be delighted to have Rev. C. B. Way with us on the second Sunday morning and evening to preach for us. However, we must say there was a large congregation disappointed on the fourth Sunday morning and evening in January, the pulpit being vacant at these hours. We do not feel that the people of North Carolina can sympathize with us very deeply in our difficulty of getting a preacher. And we certainly appreciate any good word that any one who has visited us feels able to say for us.

Our Sunday school is moving along very nicely when the weather permits. Our Christian Endeavor society is not doing any special work, while they hold some very interesting meetings.

It seems we are having ups and downs on every side. We are looking to God for guidance, and are trusting that the course may change and this prove a successful year for us. Pray for us down here.

Mebane.—In December the Young People's Auxiliary of the Mebane Methodist Protestant church took enough money from our treasury to buy twenty-three dolls. Each member of the auxiliary dressed one or two of the dollies and we sent them to Mr. Minnis in India; but on account of various difficulties they were sent back to us, and so, on finding that the box would not reach India in time for Christmas, we sent them to the little girls at Pine Ridge Mission.

Our society met in January with Edna Cates as hostess. We were glad to welcome a new member into our group at this meeting. The dues collected amounted to $2.20. The program consisted of several talks, readings, a piano solo and the discussion of a chapter in our study book, all of which were very interesting. The meeting over, we all enjoyed delicious refreshment served by our hostess.

REPORT OF RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE.

Presented to the Anti-Saloon League Convention and Unanimously Adopted by the Convention.

We, your committee on resolutions, beg leave to submit the following:

1. After a careful review of the Supreme Court decision of this State under the Turlington Act, during the two years of its existence, we are of the opinion that the present laws will destroy the illegal liquor traffic in North Carolina, if these laws are properly enforced on the part of public officials and properly supported by the citizens of this commonwealth as they should be.

Your committee is strongly of the opinion that the real need of the hour is a revival of a campaign of education for the enforcement of the prohibition laws of this State.

3. With this end in view the Anti-Saloon League of North Carolina, in convention assembled, appeals to the press of the State which has done so much to outlaw the liquor traffic. We appeal to them to start anew, open their columns, and to lead as editors in awakening the public conscience upon this subject for respect for our liquor laws, as well as all other laws.

4. We appeal to the pulpit of this State of every name and order to start again a campaign of education in their respective churches for respect for and the enforcement of our laws. These men, who in the past have been the leaders in all those matters that pertain to the uplift of our homes and the betterment of society, must join hands and hearts to go over again the good work that was done five or ten years ago.

5. We appeal to our institutions of learning—both public and private, as they are the centers of the thought for the future of society to join in this renewed effort of creating a wholesome public sentiment for respect for all the laws of this State and Nation.

6. We appeal to the public school authorities of this State, to the fathers and mothers and all of our people to join in this educational campaign—for what will our schools, our churches, and our homes come to if we sit idly by and allow this illegal liquor traffic to undermine the very foundation upon which all government must rest—namely, the respect for the laws of the government.

(Signed) C. H. Mebane, Chairman,
Chas. S. Wallace,
Z. V. Turlington.

SOME MORE "CORRECTIONS."

Brother Garrett said that I gave six volumes of "Green's History": it should have been ten. I see in the Methodist Protestant Herald that Spring Church has credit for $40.95 on A. C. B., nothing on G. C. B. We have paid about $30 on the G. C. B. for the year 1925. We make but few reports to the paper. I did not report but very little last year. The people were very kind to us last and have been so this year. We had a good year, good meeting, good collections and good poundings all the year. The afflictions at the parsonage last year were enough to keep us humble and poor. Soon in the year we had a case of pneumonia lasting eight weeks, then a dislocated shoulder, a broken arm, and then seven cases of measles. I do not mean that I had all this—it was at the parsonage. It tried us and tried our friends. We got well as soon as we could and our friends held on to the last. We owe them a debt of gratitude that I can never pay. The people have pounded us almost all this year—well, they know that we need pounding. "The wheel that squeaks gets the grease." So come along, preachers, and tell it.

I do think there is something in "women rule." Since Ma McPherson became governor of Texas the groundhog has no control of the weather. And just see what Miss Alexander said about our divorce. It did not pass either—good. I sure did enjoy what Brother S. R. H. said—I think there must be some connection with his wife's visiting, and his writing. When he learned some time ago that he snored when he snoozed she was on a visit, and now when he is giving that account of Brother Norman's wedding she seems to be away. I sometimes think of "Incognito" One and Two and "One of Us." Could it be possible that it was "One of Us" that passed between the earth and the sun and caused the eclipse?

I have no way of knowing "Incognito" One or Two but almost know from what he said that he is one of the true and faithful—I mean Number One, and that he is a superannuate and was writing from a point of economy. I think the other is a young man and I don't think it nice to be dehorning our old brethren. In fact, I do not fancy the idea of doing a thing for a man, a man, if asked to, could not do for us. I would like to see some one dehorn "One of Us." He is not the kind of animal that has horns. If I were sent to look for him I would think I had a task similar to that of the son of Kish. I demur, I am not "One of Us."

The money question is an important one, and just now is being discussed in church and state. The governor of North Carolina has found that we will need 75 per cent more revenue in '25 than '24, and starting with a deficit of over nine millions. Our state has fallen from fifth to twelfth place this year in agriculture. All our state institutions are asking for an increased appropriation. The penitentiary is no longer self-supporting, it has been suggested that we have the state printing done in the penitentiary. Daniels, editor of "News and Observer," made an investigation and found there were not printers enough in the pen to man the job. I would suggest that when these silly modernists meet at Raleigh in a few days to tell our people that you must have Darwinism taught in our state schools for which we pay our hard-earned money, that we give them a job in the pen until they prove their theory to be a fact. No, that they would help pay the deficit, but could pay my little mite with better grace. If they could leave like Jeff's duck it will be good to me. I heard some mighty good sermons from New York some time ago; the one told us some good things about money, the church, and the good Lord. I did not hear the sermon of Dr. Lewis at Washington, D. C. I was broadcasting at the same time and did not listen. His sermon, "Make It Plain," page seven, paragraph two, tells what I want to tell, better than I can.

Now if that bill on "Darwinism" passes both houses of the North Carolina legislature, and if I live till 1928 I mean to have my birthday. And if it gets through I think I will write again.

THE CANVASSER.

Let it be remembered that the canvasser should begin at home. He is not ready to influence others until he has definitely pledged for himself and members of his own family. The lists should not be large, ten or twelve families being enough for any team in the average community. The canvasser should report on every case and this report should be given to the committee. Every case of complaint or criticism, every change of address, every case of sickness or misfortune should be noted on a separate card for each individual and turned in along with the subscription card. Canvassers often discover cases where personal service is required. In case the subscriber should prefer to have his subscription treated as confidential to the financial secretary, provide him with an envelope to enclose the card, and take it with you. Do not leave it to be sent. The canvasser is to bring back a definite report. He should make the second call only where the circumstances seem to justify so doing.

The canvasser goes forth as an ambassador of Christ, and he should go in the spirit of the Master with confidence and good cheer with tact and perseverance. He should thoroughly prepare before he starts. He should pray specifically with reference to each call. He should have a few talking points well at command covering the interests of both the local and general church. He should adapt his approach to the circumstances of each call. He should come quickly and tactfully to the point. Be ready to state clearly and quickly the number of members, the number who gave last year, the average given per week for local church support and for benevolences last year, the amount required for the local, annual and General Conference budgets for the coming year. If necessary, he should explain the use of the double pocket envelope and the subscription form being used. He should make it clear to each one that his errand is far more than money. Make it clear that it is "not yours but you." He should avoid argument. He will soon learn to distinguish between sincere and insincere objections. He should magnify his mission. He is helping to develop the character of the givers and to increase the spiritual power of the church, making it a greater blessing to the community, to the nation and to the world. The good canvasser is doing a religious service just as the minister or missionary. The canvasser should make sure that all the members become subscribers to our church literature. Members of the church who do not read our denominational papers are at a great disadvantage because of their lack of information and are more difficult to interest in matters of local and general church support.

In closing this article, let me repeat that each canvasser should report on all the names given to him. In case the person visited is absent, call again either in person or by substitute. If in a particular case the first canvasser does not succeed, he should so report and a follow-up plan made by the committee. In no case should the subscription be returned except through a canvasser. Next week we will introduce some general remarks with reference to the every-member canvass. We have had some personal commendations of this series of articles. They have been characterized as being informing and helpful so we have felt repaid for the time and effort required in their preparation. There are certain absolutely essential matters in this connection which will be discussed in the general remarks to be made next week.

THAT GREAT CONVENTION.

The Foreign Missions Convention of the United States and Canada which was held in Washington, D. C., was indeed a great assembly.

From the first address, delivered by the President of the United States, on the afternoon of Jan. 28, to the closing address on Monday evening, Feb. 2, by Dr. Robert E. Speer, "The Call of Our Unfinished Task," the interest was sustained, and the great auditorium and its immense gallery were filled.

The convention has closed, it is a part of the history of the Protestant church of North America, but its great messages, its tremendous inspiring influences, the extended vision unfolded to the Christians of America, the vivid portrayals presented of conditions and needs of other lands, the unescapable obligations of the followers of the Christ to make Him known, His blessings to be shared by all men and nations, and the great yearnings of the souls of those thousands awakened by unsurpassed spiritual devotions are the living things which will move the churches to greater loyalty to their Lord, and to larger liberality for the extension of the uplifting agencies of His kingdom.

Among the many inspiring periods of those wonderful days of high privilege and blessings were the outstanding utterances of President Ross Stevenson of Princeton, N. J. No man in that great array of notable speakers of this continent and Europe and Asia equalled his address as part of the intercession of Saturday morning.

It was not the learning of the school, not the philosophy of past ages or our own, but the quoting of passages from the Bible in the most appropriately connected manner which was a revelation to many as to how God speaks to his people.

Missionaries from many lands, native representatives from many parts of the earth, members of many denominations managing great enterprises for the bettering of mankind from afar, were all one in Christ Jesus, and gave to the American churches valuable information as to changing conditions abroad, the unrest in some lands, the awakening of self-consciousness, the outreachings for knowledge, for power to build up individual and national life.

Then too it was made very clear what sort of representatives are needed in the changing times, what sort of spirit and attitude were to be maintained towards native peoples, what sort of work was to be done, and above all else what sort of message was to be given—that the Christ, the Christ was to be presented, and those who represent him abroad were to conform their lives, conduct their work in harmony with His teachings.

The great fact was brought out in very strong contrast with human systems as to what man is to do, "Know thyself, conform thyself, annihilate thyself, enjoy thyself," etc., but Christianity says, "Give thyself," and the great applause which followed showed the speaker had touched a responsive chord in many hearts.

Unquestionably many were led to consecrate themselves anew to our Lord and His work, and no doubt many decided that they would make the best possible investment of their lives by devoting themselves to some department of foreign missionary service, and many others, doubtless, decided that in view of the great task before the Christian church their contributions would be largely increased, would have to be to be consistently loyal to Him who gave Himself for us and all men.

There were 41 or 42 delegates from the Methodist Protestant Church in attendance, out of a delegation of 48. What a mighty force they can and ought to be in the work of our church, after such experiences as they shared at the convention. Oh, that God would baptize our whole church with the missionary spirit.

HIGH POINT BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

Read by President R. M. Andrews at the Joint Meeting of the College and Seminary Presidents and the Board of Education.

We have about fifty acres in our campus. This is inside the corporate limits of the city of High Point, a town of 22,000 inhabitants, and the College buildings front on the National Highway leading to Atlanta from Washington. These grounds are appraised at $100,000 valuation. There are at present four buildings, counting the central heating plant: Roberts Hall, the administration building; Woman's Hall, the girls' dormitory; and McCulloch Hall, the boys' dormitory. The administration building could accommodate as many as three hundred students in classes. The two dormitories can accommodate about two hundred and fifty students. These buildings are thoroughly modern, fire proof, and most conveniently arranged with all the modern conveniences. The administration building is equipped with up-to-date apparatus and desks for laboratories and class rooms. These buildings are heated by a central heating plant. The pipes are run in concrete conduits to the buildings and it is giving general satisfaction. The buildings and grounds represent an expenditure or cost of about $595,000. There is a debt at present of approximately $200,000 and we are putting on a campaign to raise in life insurance, which mature in ten years, $190,000. We have unpaid subscriptions amounting to about $100,000. We have no endowment other than a building in Greensboro which yields an income of about $4,000.

We have enrolled one hundred and twenty-eight students in all departments. Eighty-two of these are in the freshman class, fifteen are in the home economics department, and fifteen are in the sophomore class. We have no higher classmen. The other students are special students pursuing studies in music or in some other department.

Our budget for this year will be about $40,000 and our income about $30,000, so there will be a deficit this year of at least $10,000. This deficit would be a great deal smaller if more of our students were rooming and boarding at the college, but at least half of them are day students. We have fifteen members in our faculty, and the course of study is worked out in ten groups, permitting a student to major in chemistry or biology, English, mathematics, etc.

High Point College is well located, it being in the best part of the State of North Carolina in what is known as the piedmont section. It has within a radius of twenty-five miles sixty per cent of the membership of our conference in this State, and within a radius of twenty miles there are approximately 200,000 people. High Point has no other educational institution, and High Point College has a fine prospect of drawing from this Piedmont section in large numbers, regardless of denominational alignment. We are expecting a large enrollment next year, and while we have a heavy indebtedness, thus making our financial problem a severe one, we believe there is a bright future for High Point College.

Foreign Missionary Societies, please to hold your Thank-Offering Service, if you have not already done so. It is less than two months till the branch meeting and we are behind with our budget. It will take us all at work to raise it by this time. This is Thank-offering Month and let us make an earnest effort each of us to have the largest thank-offering ever.

The following is a program sent by our thank-offering secretary for these services.

Hymn.

Scripture Reading.

Prayer.

Special Music.

Chinese Impersonations—"The Weavers." Music.

Reading—"The Thank-Offering Box Opened at the Master's Feet."

Offering.

Doxology. Benediction.

This is only sent to help us. What we want is for you to hold your service right away and send a large offering to the treasurer. I have a new supply of thank-offering boxes and will be glad to send to each auxiliary in order that you may be ready to start the new year. Please write me the number you can use.

Mrs. H. C. Nicholson,

Thank-Offering Secretary, N. C. Branch.

Taught in the Text.

Our Scripture lesson is a beautiful picture of practical work in our Father's name. Whatever is done in the name and in the spirit of the Master will prosper; and whatever is done otherwise will not do much real good. The prophet here felt the call to go forth in the name of Jehovah to work for the alleviation of human suffering. His message is the central theme in industrial missions today.

The industrial missionary goes forth to teach folks better methods of farming, of sanitation, of doing things, and he must never forget that he is preaching good tidings. No missionary ever made a real success who failed to keep this fact in mind.

In our own United States industrial conditions are far superior to those in non-Christian countries. Hence we do not see the oppression that exists elsewhere. But there are plenty of conditions which must be bettered before we are living up to our name as a Christian nation.

To bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and to release those who are in prison by teaching them better ways, all these things constitute the task of the industrial missionary. And he is giving a good account of himself everywhere.

The year of Jehovah's favor comes to any soul, to any people, when conditions are made better, when the way is opened to an understanding of Jesus. The industrial missionary brings the benighted soul to realize that God is smiling upon him, that He wants him to do good work, and to enjoy the fruits of his labor; and by so doing he gives him a new grip upon God, upon himself, and upon life.

No wonder there has been mourning in countries where primitive methods have barely sufficed to furnish enough to eat, with every member of the family working, regardless of age or condition. No wonder that thousands of helpless children have died, from working them too young, under unsanitary and dangerous conditions, and for too long hours. No wonder it has made the people of these countries almost hopeless.

To build again the souls of a people is the object of missions; to bring happiness where sorrow has prevailed is the aim of the missionary; and to develop lives and hearts into a full knowledge of Jesus as the Savior of mankind is the purpose of every follower of Jesus. Industrial missions constitute the practical outworking of these principles.

The Lesson in Life.

A life that is living up to its possibilities, by doing the best in any line of which it is capable, is a success. What has broken down countless lives in non-Christian lands is the fact that the people do not know how to do good and efficient work. This condition had killed off ambition. Today, industrial missionary work is reviving mankind's shattered hopes.

James T. Nichols writes of his visit to the famous leper colony of Molokai, Hawaiian Islands. He says that the lepers, of whom there are about four hundred, are not obliged to work; yet nearly every one of them is engaged in some kind of employment. Some catch fish, some work on the farm, some care for stock, and all are paid for their efforts. This is good; and when they are sent away cured, as many are, they will be in shape for efficient work.

Perhaps the most famous industrial missionary is Sam Higginbottom. He went to Allahabad as a common missionary; and it did not take him long to discover that India's greatest need was for better farming methods. He came back to the States and took a two-year course in agriculture and animal husbandry. Then he went back to India. He took with him funds and all sorts of machinery with which to equip the model farm he had in mind. It has been estimated that one hundred million farmers have been benefited by his work. And he is a Christian missionary.

China was famine-ridden because of floods, yet nobody took the trouble to find out what caused the land to be so ruined by the floods. Professor Bailie, of Nanking University, discovered that the best soil was washed away because there were no trees to hold it in place. So he started a school of forestry. Conditions in China are being rapidly bettered, and all in the name of the Christ.

We are told that a beneficial campaign is the study of citrus-fruit diseases which is carried on by the missionaries in the Christian college at Canton, China. Here American experts—sent to China as farm missionaries—are busy teaching modern methods to the Chinese—in the name that is above every name.

In May, 1922, there met in Shanghai, China, the National Christian Conference. They adopted a standard for industrial workers in China: 1. No employment of children under 12. 2. One day's rest in seven. 3. Safeguarding the health of workers, by limiting working-hours, by improving sanitary conditions, by installing safety devices, etc. This is gradually proving of some effect. Note again that it is a Christian pronouncement.

Industrial conditions in Russia are almost unbelievable, and those Christians who have visited there come back telling us that is all due to the lack of Christianity, on the part of all classes, but especially the land-owners. When the people there learn how to treat each other, in the spirit of Christ, they will be willing to make some attempt to practice His Golden Rule.

Frank B. Lenz tells in Association Men about being awakened at 3:30 in the morning by the cries of a child, a little girl, not more than eight or ten. She was refusing to go to work in the factory, at this unearthly hour, because she was afraid and tired out; but her mother was trying to compel her to go. She insisted that it took every cent she and the child could both earn to buy their simple food. What a tragedy! Only Christ can change such conditions, as they exist in China.

In altogether too many foreign countries there are no laws to prevent unprincipled employers from using child labor or from exacting excessive hours of labor from all workers. And some of these factories in various countries are owned and controlled by United States capital! Some folks will do anything for the almighty dollar. But, thank goodness, all men of means and all employers are not of this sort.

Industrial missions have proved the solution of the problem of the colored people in the United States. Booker Washington proved the soundness of the principle in his work at Tuskegee Institute. Disciples of Christ have a number of such missions the best known of which is perhaps the first one inaugurated, Southern Christian Institute, Edwards, Miss. Here the young colored people are taught how to do things in the most effective manner, and yet in the spirit of the Master.

The American Indian is being wonderfully helped through Christian industrial missions. Churches of Christ have reason for pride in the mission at White Swan, Wash., for the red men. Here proper methods of farming, fruit-growing, stock-raising, and all the things that go with industrial missionary work, are being used. And the results are proved eminently satisfactory. Christian teaching goes along with the other things taught these Yakima Indian youths.

The world is bad enough yet, so far as industrial conditions go; but a person can not help wondering how bad it would be now, if Christianity had not begun years ago to leaven the lump. Christianity furnishes the incentive for all uplift work; industrial effectiveness and independence constitute the greatest uplift which can be brought to any people. So we must keep right on in this most practical phase of mission work.

Anything that serves to bring people nearer to Jesus is worth while. When people are taught to do things in the most effective manner, to support themselves wholly, and to develop their abilities, they are being advanced wonderfully. And when there is added to this a real Christian motive, a real Christian teaching, and a real Christian teacher, the results are beyond computation.

The social and industrial problems now facing Japan are enough to make a giant quail. Never before did a nation jump from a feudal system hoary with age into all the complex problems of a great industrial nation. Japan has done this, and the war has speeded up the process, so that today there are many "narikin"—new-rich—drawing big dividends from corporations which have no souls. Men and women work from twelve to sixteen hours a day, seven days a week, for small wages, and live in conditions which to the western mind are beyond imagination.—D. M. Gandier.

Industrial conditions here (Tientsin, China) are almost unbelievable. We have just come in from a visit to a number of factories, the first a match factory said to be the best in the city. We found here 1,100 employees, mostly boys from nine to 15 years of age, working from 4:00 A. M. to 8:30 P. M., with a few minutes intermission at noon. They work on an average of fifteen hours a day, seven days a week, with no Sunday of rest. The boys receive from six to ten cents and the men about twenty-five cents a day. The poisonous fumes of phosphorus and sulphur and the dust from the other chemicals burned our lungs even in the short half-hour we were in the factory. Eighty men and boys in this plant have to visit the hospital every day for treatment.—Sherwood Eddy.

If the Government and missions are justified in any kind of education, are they not justified in that kind of education which most directly concerns the most Indians? Should we not teach these people to get more out of their soil?—Sam Higginbottom.

Our Christian missions have for their object, not only the saving of souls, but the imparting of a life that makes possible the kingdom of God on the earth."—Theodore Roosevelt.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—FEB. 15.

Jesus in Gethsemane.

Lesson Text: Mark 14:32-42.

Golden Text: Mark 14:36.

The Central Truth: Prayer will surely bring strength to do or suffer the will of God; which is the very best under all conditions and circumstances of life.

Scriptural Points.

1. From the upper room of type and shadow, of promise and fellowship, Jesus descends to the stern realities of Gethsemane. It was a secluded spot, to which He and His disciples often resorted, doubtless for meditation and prayer.

2. A most amazing, terrifying, and crushing experience awaited Him there. It was there He began to suffer the dreadful penalty of man's sins. It was there the hand of justice "laid upon him the iniquity of us all." It was there He endured the weight and guilt, as well as the penalty of the sins of all mankind. It was a most heavy, sorrowful and agonizing load that He bore.

3. In this darkest hour of history His sensitive soul craved the strength and courage of His friends to sustain Him. The favored three were asked to watch while He prayed. They failed Him in stupefying sleep.

4. Would His Father fail Him too? Three times He entreated His Father that if it were possible this cup of unspeakable agony might pass from Him. For three times He submitted, "Thy will, not mine, be done." For three times He besought help from above. The Father did not leave Him to tread the winepress of divine wrath entirely alone. He sent an angel to strengthen Him.

5. "Lest ye enter into temptation." Temptation, either in the form of trial or inducement to sin, may be escaped through intelligent watchfulness and earnest prayer. He is forearmed who is forewarned. "And Satan trembles when he sees the weakest saint upon his knees."

6. "The flesh is weak." The evil inclinations of the fleshly nature so often defeat the good purposes of the heart. Conscience has to give way so often to the carnal mind. This enemy within so often cowers the will into submission. Men know better and do worse.

7. "Sleep on now." The opportunity to help is now past. The curtain of the dreadful tragedy is lifted. The traitor and his mob are at the gate. The sleep of neglect makes the disciples cowardly afraid. They flee pell-mell and leave Jesus alone.

8. Though left alone, Jesus was more than a match for this crowd sent to arrest Him. At His rebuke they all went backward and fell to the ground. He thus showed His ability to save Himself if He chose. But He chose to die on the cross and submitted to arrest and the fearful indignity, shame, and suffering that followed.

Practical Points.

1. There is the sorrow for sin, which is repentance toward God; there is the sorrow of tribulation, which is so often the needful testing of faith and character; there is the sorrow of sympathy with another's woe; there is the sorrow of anxiety for another's safety; and there is the sorrow of loss of loved ones gone on before.

2. An imperfect world makes sorrow and suffering inevitable. But sorrow has its compensations. It promotes humility, unworldliness, and trustfulness. And "it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them who are exercised thereby."

3. And sorrow creates a dark background for a brighter Christian hope. It is a most valuable school of training for service beyond the grave.

4. And sorrow drives the recreant soul back upon God. It crowds the throne of grace with humble, earnest, and victorious suppliants. Prayer becomes the universal language of sorrow.

5. Sorrow so often prepares the way for abounding joy. "Weeping may endure for the night, but joy cometh in the morning."

6. Deep gratitude for sorrowful experiences is very becoming. They work together for good. "We glory in tribulations also." "In everything give thanks."

Denton Charge.—The pastor of Denton church was requested to meet the members of Denton church at 4:00 o'clock P. M. on the first Sunday in February. He responded to the request and went, supposedly for the purpose of attending to some business matters of the church. Soon after his arrival a brother announced the purpose of the meeting. What do you think it was? A pounding. The pastor was presented with all the good things to eat you can think of. The people of Denton surely know just what is needed in the pantry. The pastor can never thank them enough for their kindness. It is true that the articles of food were much appreciated, but the thing appreciated most by the receiver was the spirit that was manifested through the giving. If there is any better people in the North Carolina Conference than we have on Denton charge, I certainly would like to be associated with them.

May God bless them in their efforts, and prosper them in their undertakings.

Efland.—Pastor Williams filled his appointments February 1 despite the mud. After going about ten miles, four of them bad, muddy road, he presented the college proposition to the Union Grove church Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, and at 7:00 o'clock P. M. Rev. T. M. Johnson of Mebane presented the same subject to the Efland church. All present enjoyed Mr. Johnson. His address was instructive and entertaining. We are always glad to have him come.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely and is growing in number in mid-winter.

A Teacher-Training Class will be conducted beginning next week. We hope much good will be accomplished. The Sunday school has just bought a nice lot of new books for the choir.

KIN.

"How's this, Phemy?"

Uncle Harrison, bent, gray, wizened, straightened up painfully from the hard kitchen chair in which he sat. He carefully put the stopper back in the ink bottle—Aunt Phemy could not abide spots on her tablecloths—and cleared his throat.

Aunt Phemy, her needles flashing in and out of a gray wristlet, paused. She pushed her glasses across her forehead, seamed with tiny furrows, and let them rest across the part that divided the waves of her gray hair. The part, broad and clearly defined, seemed to suggest the clean-cut path between the pent-up waves of an ancient sea. Having assumed a listening attitude, she waited.

"Kind and esteemed friends," began Uncle Harrison, reading with ponderous solemnity from the sheet of paper he had written. "Kind and esteemed friends"—

"I dunno as I'd say that, Harrison," objected Aunt Phemy. "It don't sound businesslike, the way a want ad ought to."

Uncle Harrison looked a bit dashed. He had labored the whole evening over the writing of this masterpiece, spoiling five sheets of foolscap paper. Privately, he considered it a triumph of letters. And now, to have a correction the first thing!

"Well, well, Phemy," he returned testily, "mebbe 'tain't. But then I dunno as what we're askin' is business-like." Clearing his throat again impressively, he read on:

"Kind and Esteemed Friends:

"The undersigned parties, being alone in the world, and facing a long winter, respectfully request that anyone so desiring remember their birthdays, which come in January and February, with a postcard. It would give them entertainment during the winter evenings. They have five angel children who are now in their graves, sleeping in their dusty beds"—

Aunt Phemy threw out a protesting hand, the wristlet dangling from it, and the needles clicking together.

"I wouldn't say that, Harrison."

"Wouldn't say what?" Uncle Harrison let his steel-rimmed glasses drop across the bridge of his nose, while he regarded with his mild blue eyes the alert little figure in the sway-backed rocker. "What's wrong with it, Phemy?"

Aunt Phemy's voice softened the caressing cadence it always held when she spoke of the children, whose graves were in the cemetery on the hill. "It don't seem right, somehow, to say they're sleeping in dusty beds, Harrison."

"But they are dusty," maintained Uncle Harrison mildly.

"It don't make good sense," declared Aunt Phemy. "It—well, it's like as if their graves were neglected. I can't bear to think of it, Harrison."

"All right, then, Phemy," Uncle Harrison resumed his glasses, settling into place the one broken bow, tied with a string. He picked up the sheet of paper and ran a horny finger over it to find the place. "Let's see, where was I at? 'Dusty beds.'" He sighed at the thought of having to expurgate this triumph of epistolary art. "Thanking you one and all for your past, present, and extreme kindness"—

"What was their past kindness?" demanded Aunt Phemy literally. "Wait till we see if we get the cards before we thank 'em."

"But a body must word it polite," expostulated Uncle Harrison. He repeated the phrase with unction—"past, present, and extreme kindness. May God's blessing rest upon you. Signed, Uncle Harrison and Aunt Phemy."

He removed his glasses with a flourish, and looked at his wife in pleased expectation. Aunt Phemy took the paper from his warped and knotted fingers and scanned it critically.

"You've misspelled some of the words, Harrison," she said, not without a touch of pride in her voice. Aunt Phemy was in the late seventies, but she still thrilled at the recollection that back in the old log school house at Oak Grove, Indiana, as Euphemia Wheeler, she had spelled down the whole countryside.

"What air they?" inquired Uncle Harrison, disappointedly. "I asked you how to spell most of 'em, Phemy."

"Signed' is one. You've got it 'singed,' Harrison."

"You don't say!" Uncle Harrison reached for the paper. "I'll scratch it out, Phemy."

"You've got 'angel' wrong," went on Aunt Phemy ruthlessly. "You've got it 'angle.'"

"Angle," ruminated Uncle Harrison. "Well, well!"

"Tell you what you'd better do, Harrison—write it over. I'd do it myself if my hands wasn't all knotted up with rheumatiz. But I'll scratch out them things you've got wrong, and spell the words right."

"Well, well, give it here, Phemy." Uncle Harrison took it unwillingly back to the table. Carefully leaning over The Weekly Clarion he had spread over the red-checked cloth, he uncorked the ink.

"Mebbe not, mebbe not."

The pen scratched over the paper, making a rasping sound in the still room. The only other noises were the click of Aunt Phemy's needles and the tick of the big clock on the mantel draped with its valance of crepe paper gay with pink cabbage roses. It was an old room, and Aunt Phemy had lived in it since she had come out from Indiana in '73. Sometimes she heard other noises—the clatter of children's shoes on the stairs that ended at the foot in a drab-painted door with an old-fashioned latch. Sometimes she fancied she heard the latch lifted, and Robbie calling "Mother!" as he always did when he ran downstairs in the morning.

Robbie had been the baby, the last one to go. "Killed in action," the word had come to them. That was all. But Aunt Phemy, knitting placidly night after night in the old kitchen, knew that he had called her before he died, over there in the Argonne—had cried out in the old way, with his hand on the latch.

Aunt Phemy's gaze went past Uncle Harrison, scratching away laboriously, and rested, in turn, on the five memorial tablets that hung on the wall of the sitting room beyond. Each tablet bore a pair of hands, clasped above a tombstone. The small one was for Lollie, who had died with croup that first hard winter.

"How do you spell 'angel'?" Uncle Harrison paused suddenly, pen in air.

"A-n, an, g-e-l, gel, angel," spelled Aunt Phemy, as perkily, as if she were standing in line in the Oak Grove school house. Her thoughts went on. If Lollie had lived, she would be almost fifty, with grandchildren of her own. Her eyes sought the next tablet. Across the intervening space she read the inscription—she knew each of them by heart:

"Sacred to the memory of Willie Bunday Died

August 12, 1879"

Its companion piece hung beside it. That was Danny's. They were six when they died, within two days of each other, of spinal meningitis. It had been hard to let them go. Aunt Phemy passed the gray wristlet absently across her eyes.

"How would this do, Phemy? Thanking you kindly, one and all."

"That sounds better, Harrison."

The pen scratched and spluttered over the paper. It reminded Aunt Phemy of the nights when Lydia used to study at the kitchen table. Lydia was always so studious. She could fairly see her rushing in from school all snowy and smiling. Lydia had been next to Robbie. She would have been thirty-eight now—born in eighty-six. Thirty-eight! Aunt Phemy smiled incredulously. Little Lydia, bursting in with a rush, all snow, and calling, "Mommie, mommie!" Aunt Phemy started!—her thoughts were so real. It sounded as if somebody were outside, stamping the snow. That was the way Lydia used to do.

"Pshaw, it give me a turn!" she murmured, resuming her knitting. Just as if Lydia hadn't died of diphtheria that winter. Her eyes sought the memorial tablet mechanically, but she knew the date by heart. It was back in 'ninety-nine, twenty-five years ago.

A loud knock sounded, causing Uncle Harrison to blot the word he was writing. Aunt Phemy, a little startled, jumped up and hobbled to the door.

"I've went and made a blot," lamented Uncle Harrison, "all along of that knock. Sounded like a batterin' ram. We ain't deaf."

"Come in!" called Aunt Phemy hospitably. "Who is it?" She flung the door wide open and peered out. "Is it you, Idelly?"

"It's me," corroborated the looming personage outside, swathed in a woolen comforter. "Have you got a startin' o' yeast, Phemy? Here I was settin' bread to bake tomorrow, and if mine hadn't went and worked!"

"I'll divide with you," said Aunt Phemy. "Draw your chair up to the fire, Idelly."

But Mrs. Wick, the buxom neighbor, stood rooted, staring at the unaccustomed sight of Uncle Harrison pushing a pen across a sheet of paper.

"What's he doing?" she inquired bluntly.

"I'm writin' one of them there want ads," answered Uncle Harrison, glad of a brief respite. He let his glasses fall and eyed Mrs. Wick with bland complacency.

"What for?" Mrs. Wick never wasted words.

"We're askin' folks to send us post cards," put in Aunt Phemy timidly—"birthday post cards. Seein' as we ain't no kin of our own, we thought folks might be willin' to send us some."

"What do you want 'em for?" interrogated Mrs. Wick blankly.

Uncle Harrison responded literally, "To read."

"Humph!" Mrs. Wick's single word was expressive. It denoted pity, skepticism, scant sympathy. "You won't ketch 'em doin' anything so downright foolish. Think they're goin' to send cards to rank strangers? Not much they won't!"

Uncle Harrison's face fell. "I was lottin' on 'em to read of evenings. By a Tuesday we get the paper read, and there's the rest of the week!"

Mrs. Wick cut in briefly. "No use gettin' your mind set on it. Nobody goes out of their way for folks they ain't no kin to. Now me, I got a darter in Idaho. She writes onct a month." She paused irresolutely. "If you want I should, I could ask Brother Hammond to have the church send you a shower."

"Don't you do it, Idelly." Aunt Phemy stood erect, her soft brown eyes hard and bright. "We ain't askin' it of folks we know. But we thought mebbe there might, there must be a few lonely folks like us that would feel to write."

"Folks ain't that way," cut in Mrs. Wick. "No, not so as anybody could notice: all's lookin' out for theirselves, they are. I wouldn't put in no such ad. Folks will just make light of it, and you'll waste a good stamp. If you've got that startin' for me, Aunt Phemy, I'll be going. It's gettin' towards bedtime."

"Here 'tis," said Aunt Phemy. She handed Mrs. Wick a pint jar of foaming liquid. "Good-night, Idelly."

"Good night to ye," wheezed Mrs. Wick from the folds of the comforter. "Best chuck that wart ad in the wood box."

After the door had shut behind her visitor, Aunt Phemy went to the stove and opened the draft: It was as if a chill had fallen on the room.

"Mebbe we better not send it, Phemy," Uncle Harrison's voice had a dull sound.

"I guess we will send it," declared Aunt Phemy. "No harm done, anyway, Harrison. We might get a few cards, mebbe five or six." She ferreted out an envelope from the bureau drawer. "Here, address it to The Weekly Clarion, Henderson, Nebraska." She spread the paper out before him so that he might spell it correctly. And once more the scratching of the pen filled the room.

"There!" exulted Uncle Harrison drawing a long breath, as he dried the last flourish with a blotter. "I kalkalate we'll get two or three answers. What say, Phemy?"

"Don't set too much stock on it, Harrison." Aunt Phemy resumed her knitting calmly. "If I get one card, I'll be satisfied."

"I'll take it down to the post office in the morning," mused Uncle Harrison. "Jim Schleaf will be some surprised when your card comes, and mine, Phemy. He's always jokin' me about gettin' seed catalogues and mail-order circulars."

Aunt Phemy nodded. Not since Robbie had died overseas had any letters come to the little post office for them. She pictured the delight of telling Mrs. Wick, who heard once a month from her daughter in Idaho. She would say casually, "Oh, I got a post card this morning, Idelly, a birthday picture post card." Her thoughts raced on, visualizing Mrs.

Wick's incredulous stare, when she should make this amazing statement. In a week they might hear. That would be Harrison's birthday. If only the card would be addressed to Uncle Harrison!

Early the next morning Uncle Harrison mailed the letter, slipping it half guiltily into the slot. Jim Schleaf, the postmaster, stooping, picked it up, and read aloud the inscription.

"Who you writin' to?" he demanded.

"It's a want ad, Jim. Phemy and I 'lowed we'd ask folks to send us some birthday cards to read of evenin's."

The rotund postmaster laughed. "Of all the everlastin' foolishness! Don't you know," he demanded, "that nobody is going to stop to write cards to a couple of old codgers they ain't no kin to? The milk of human kindness is goin' to seed like a milk-week pod. Yes, sir, goin' to seed," repeated the postmaster, pleased with the neat phrasing of his metaphor. "People are too busy rakin' in cold cash these days to go out of their way to do a kindness. They don't bother with their own kin, let alone strangers. Kindness has gone to seed."

Uncle Harrison went out, his bent shoulders a little more stooped than usual. Although the January sunshine was warm, he felt chilled. Jim Schleaf was probably right: so was Mrs. Wick. He and Phemy were childish from living alone so long. Well, anyway, Phemy shouldn't be disappointed. A daring resolve shot through his mind. He stopped at the drug store and bought a picture post card. After Aunt Phemy went to bed that night he would address it to her, print it, so that she wouldn't know his handwriting. Of course she would know that it came from Henderson, but she wouldn't guess who had sent it. Uncle Harrison rubbed his hands together gleefully. The ad would bring one post card, anyway.

"What did Jim Schleaf say?" asked Aunt Phemy, as Uncle Harrison unwound his big striped comforter. She had rightly guessed that the postmaster had not let the letter pass unnoticed.

"He said it was plum foolishness," related Uncle Harrison, "and that we wouldn't get no answer. But don't you be cast down, Phemy. I 'low—I'm 'most certain you'll get one post card." He tried to control the knowing smile on his lips.

"Humph!" said Aunt Phemy. She could read Uncle Harrison like a book. A slow smile hovered around her mouth. Only that morning she had asked Mrs. Wick to address a card to Uncle Harrison. She had bought it of a little girl who was selling post cards.

It was a week later that Uncle Harrison went to the office to call for the mail. There was nothing in the general-delivery box for him. From the window he saw that it was empty. He had given them a week, and no one had answered. He hoped that Jim Schleaf would not see him, but he did. He crooked his thumb in the direction of the office.

"Your mail's back here, Uncle Harrison," he vouchsafed briefly. "There's a b'iler full and two tubs runnin' over. Looks to me like common sense had went to seed." But his own was genial.

Uncle Harrison, admitted at the rear through the sacred portals marked Keep Out, stood speechless. Picture post cards, letters, packages, all addressed to Uncle Harrison and Aunt Phemy, lay in a great pile. Never had the little post office been taxed to such a capacity. Jess Kirby, the drayman, offered, chuckling, to haul them home. A curious crowd had gathered out in front, and the open doorway was jammed with faces. Uncle Harrison, meeting the friendly gaze of his townspeople, threw back his shoulders. Reaching down, he stuffed his pockets until they were bulging. It gave him a curious sense of intimacy with the whole world. He had not been so happy since the old days before word had come about Robbie. He followed behind the dray dazedly. What would Phemy say?

As a matter of fact, she said little. She sat down in the sway-backed rocker, and filled her lap, and wiped her eyes. It was like having a letter come from Robbie. They were still reading them that evening when Mrs. Wick came over.

"I got a letter today from my darter in Idaho," she began, staring around the room, which looked not unlike a miniature post office. "What's this I hear about you folks putting the Henderson post office on the map? My darter says she seen your want ad in a New York paper."

"Seven hundred and sixty-three letters," gloated Uncle Harrison, letting fall the portcullis, as it were, of his spectacles, across the bridge of his nose, "and fifteen hundred picture postals."

"And none of 'em any kin to ye!" ejaculated Mrs. Wick. "No kin at all," she repeated solemnly. "And me with a darter!"—Her words trailed off in a soundless whisper.

"They air kin," insisted Uncle Harrison.

That was only the beginning. For weeks Uncle Harrison walked home behind his mail, on Jess Kirby's dray. By the end of the fifth week the correspondence had dwindled to a scattering few. He and Aunt Phemy kept a list, and by that time, according to actual count over the red-checked tablecloth, Aunt Phemy and Uncle Harrison had received eight thousand and five letters, four thousand and fifteen cards, and numerous gifts.

They filled every corner of the little lean-to bedroom that had been Robbie's. The bed, with its patchwork quilt, was piled high; the bureau overflowed—the chairs were heaped, the floor littered. Aunt Phemy and Uncle Harrison, sitting there even until a late hour night after night—letters from young, letters from old, letters from every corner of the globe—marveled that the world would step aside for two old people whom it did not know.

But one night, when Aunt Phemy read from a silver-edged card in delicate script, the simple message, "I am a gold-star mother, too," she understood. Her thoughts flew back to a log school house, and a little girl bending over a copy from a dog-eared book, which said, "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin."—Annie Brownell Dunaway, in Forward.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Henderson.—Our church paper canvass has been quite a success and when it is finished I am hoping that almost all of our families will be reading at least one of our papers.

It now seems that we will be able to use at least two of our new Sunday school class rooms next Sunday. We have waited patiently for them and will perhaps enjoy them more.

The annual Thank-Offering Service for missions will be held next Sunday evening at 7:30. The Young Ladies' League took the initiative and has planned to have "The Mansion" by Henry VanDyke. This beautiful story accompanied by appropriate music will be read by Mrs. L. R. Gooch with Mrs. J. B. Martin at the pipe organ and Mrs. F. R. Harris at the piano. This same reading was given instead of the Wednesday evening prayer meeting some time ago and it is so beautiful we are repeating it.

We had fine attendance at all the services yesterday.

Brother W. C. Hight, who has been in a hospital in Richmond, has returned home.

J. E. Pritchard.

Monday.

Spring Valley, Vance Circuit.—Sunday was like a spring day, the most beautiful one we have had in a long time. We had a fine congregation for Sunday school, 66 members present, including two new members. We hope next Sunday to get a good many of the thirty-one absent that we had today to be present. We have added fifteen new members to the Sunday school this year, and our aim is to add lots more before the end of the year. We feel very grateful for this.

Brother Chambliss was with us Sunday night, and was greeted with a still larger congregation than we had at Sunday school. He gave us a splendid sermon on Heaven, which was enjoyed by all. We are looking forward to his coming again the second Sunday in next month. We wish we could have him to work with us more often, but of course we know the circumstances, and with God's help we are striving to carry the work on the very best we can.

One of the young ladies of the Sunday school is planning a patriotic program for the 22d of February. The proceeds will go for the benefit of the church.

We will hold mid-week prayer service on Wednesday night.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society was to have held its regular monthly meeting on January 21, 1925, at the home of Mrs. J. B. Wiggins, but on account of the snow and ice it was postponed until February 18. The ladies hope to have a good attendance because there is a lot of work to be done.

A good many of our people are sick, but we wish for each of them a speedy recovery.

Fountain Place.—At a meeting held last evening further plans were laid for the completion of the Sunday school building of the new Fountain Place Church at Burlington. A finance committee was created with power to formulate and arrange sub-committees to set dates and otherwise arrange for a financial campaign to raise the $5,000 needed for the completion of the Sunday school building. The plans will be voted on by the congregation next Sunday morning and if approved the committee will proceed at once with the drive for the finance.

G. H. Hendry,
Pastor.

Bethesda, Halifax Circuit.—We have been having such a great deal of weather recently that there have been very small congregations out to hear Mr. Spencer. However, these conditions have not affected the sermons, which have been clear—good, gospel messages. One of the best of these was on the origin and meaning of the Passover, second Sunday in January, when the sacrament was administered.

Yesterday, there being less weather, we had a good congregation out to hear the sermon on Stewardship. We were glad to see a number of our good Baptist friends from a neighboring church in the audience.

Mr. Spencer strikes us as being a very sincere, whole-souled, earnest man. He is taking hold of the work here with a will, and we believe that the people will co-operate with him for a successful year's work.

It has been decided to have some very necessary repair work done on the parsonage, and the circuit is being canvassed for funds for this purpose.

Our Sunday school has dwindled considerably, and a good many have moved away from the neighborhood, but we hope for better attendance when spring opens up. Our superintendent, Mr. N. M. Harrison, is faithful and earnest in doing his part, which he feels, however, should be taken over by a younger person. It seems rather an imposition on him, but we are glad to have a man of his character and influence as our head.

We are sorry to report the continued indisposition of Mrs. Harrison, who has been absent from church services for some time.

Willie Spencer has been in for several days with influenza, which has been epidemic in the school near here.

Brinkleyville, February 9.

Mebane.—Dr. A. G. Dixon was with us last night and made a strong appeal for our College. We all enjoyed Dr. Dixon and hope this congregation will still do more for this great institution.

Our town is now having an epidemic of "flu." Quite a number of our people have it. Among them is our pastor. Dr. Johnson is being cared for at the Martha Elizabeth Hospital, recently opened by Mrs. T. O. Pender. We expect for him a speedy recovery.

Our church work is going about in the usual way.

The missionary societies gave a pageant, "Lux Benigna," on last Friday evening. It was well rendered and a nice sum given for thank-offering. There were about 125 characters with Mrs. H. C. Nicholson as director.

The missionary societies met in their regular monthly meeting Monday night with Miss Agnes McAdams.

Laurel Hill, Fallston Circuit.—Pastor Morgan filled his appointment February 8, giving us a wonderful message. We were glad to hear Brother Morgan say that he is going to give us two services a month. There was a large congregation out yesterday, several visitors from different places: Brother D. C. Willis and family, also two young ladies from Maiden, Mr. Carlo Yoney and family from Gastonia, and some others from Morganton. We are always glad to welcome any visitors to our church at any time. Would be glad to see the church packed full every Sunday.

On Friday, February 6, Sister Adeline Sain was laid in her resting place to await the resurrection morning. She was the wife of Daniel Sain who died some years ago. She was 83 years old, dying on her birthday—something unusual. She left two brothers, Mr. Burton and Frank McClurd, and several children and grandchildren to mourn their loss.

Our Sunday school is doing very well considering the rainy weather, but we are hoping it will be much better when the weather gets better. Come on, church folks, and let us get busy if we expect a good year. Our pastor has given us good service, but how about ourselves? If we fail to do our part, what shall our answer be?

Reporter.

Stanly Circuit.—It is rather late to say anything now about Christmas holidays. I have been waiting for some one to send in a report, but as no one has, I thought I would better send one in.

Our Christmas.

We were remembered by many of our friends. We had many tokens of love and Christmas cheer from friends from other places. Our own people here, whom we are trying to serve in our Master's name, did not forget us. We received several very useful and valuable presents. We are profoundly thankful to every one who thus remembered us.

There were two Christmas trees on the charge, at Friendship and Porter. The songs and recitations were fine and carried us back in thought to the glorious night when the angels sang the Father's love and goodwill to men, when our God gave the greatest expression of His love in the gift of His dear Son to save sinful men. We all felt glad and rejoiced in the great fact.

Friendship Church: After the gifts had been taken off the tree, they began to pull sacks of wheat and corn, oats and flour out from under the tree, calling out the name of Mr. Frink Mason, Brother Mason is the oldest member of Friendship church living, and a good old Christian man. When he was called to come and sit on the front pew, when they began to call out his name, and lay sacks of wheat, corn, oats and flour around him, it was almost more than he could stand. He cried like a baby. He got so much he had to leave it there all night. Next day he brought his wagon and hauled it home.

Jesus said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me." May we all live up to what our Lord and our great church expects of us.

Sincerely,

A. Ridge.

South Davilson Charge.—We have not been making much fuss through the paper but we are trying to be on the job.

We are proud of God's people at this place because there are tithers here and every tither must have the spirit of God in him. What is a tither? He is one that gives one-tenth before he holds the dollar until the eagle squawks itself to death and he has to fumigate his hand and pay the eagle's burying expenses.

You may be listening for our pounding report: On Christmas eve there was rendered at West Lexington a very excellent program, after which the heavily loaded Christmas tree was unloaded to make glad the hearts of young and old, also pastor and family. After the exercises were rendered the pastor and family were surprised to find that behind the tree was a load of good things for our pantry and as there were no names on the many things we are not able to give any names, but God knows who they are and we trust and pray for them that God may greatly bless them.

At Yadkin College, Sunday, January 1, the pastor was greatly shocked when he preached and was preparing to go home; they led him around to a car where were many good things for our pantry. The pastor would be so glad to give the name of each one who contributed to this good cause but our space is limited in the Herald. God knows who gave and He will reward them just the same as if the names were given. Many thanks to the lady who suggested this pounding and also Brother Vance Garrett for putting it over the top, for it did make the pastor's wife and the little Carsons glad. People, whether you know it or not, the preacher can preach better when people help him with a handshake, smile, congratulation, and things to eat. Some people think that the preacher does not eat anything and can run his Ford on dishwater.

Old Henry was lame in one foot so the West Lexington Sunday school got up the funds and purchased a tire to remedy the deficiency; many thanks.

Last evening the revival broke out at West Lexington. I preached at Jerusalem at 11 o'clock and at Cid at 2:30 and came to West Lexington and preached on The General Judgment and the power came down and took hold of the sinner as well as the saint and the altar call was made and three young men came down and knelt at the altar until they found Christ as their personal Savior. We had an old-time revival. This was to my great surprise. The meeting will go on and we earnestly solicit the prayers of God's people that we may have a gracious revival and many souls saved.

I will begin my tent meetings as soon as the weather gets favorable. My tent will hold 900 or 1,000 people and there are already appointments out.

Brother Rud Newsome will be the singing leader at the West Lexington meeting and at the tent meetings. Brother Newsome is known far and wide and if you do not know him come around and take a tip of his music: it will do you good. W. L. Carson, Pastor.

Bessemer City.—We are still moving along very well. Christian Endeavor society is still progressing very nicely with very good attendance. We have started cottage prayer meeting on Saturday night and hope to accomplish much and lasting good for the Master. Pray for us that we may have great success. Anna Scates, Reporter.

Winston-Salem.—The Ladies' Aid society held its February meeting at the home of Mrs. Hassell on Sixteenth Street, with Mrs. Phillips as associate hostess. Mrs. R. A. Hunter, the president, opened the meeting with Scripture reading and prayer. The following amounts were turned into the treasury: $9.20, monthly dues; $4.75, paid by Circle No. 1; $15, paid by Circle No. 2; total, $28.95. After the discussion of several business matters a pleasant social hour was spent, during which time a delicious salad course was served. Mesdames Coble and Smothers will be joint hostesses for the March meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Philathea class was held Monday evening, February 2, at the home of Mrs. H. G. Paschal on North Liberty street. This being the Valentine season, appropriate decorations were used very effectively. Miss Esther Brewer conducted the devotional exercises. After transacting the business of the class the meeting was closed with a prayer.

The class remained for the usual social hour of the meeting, which is always looked forward to with so much pleasure. This one proved especially enjoyable. A miscellaneous contest was introduced and thoroughly enjoyed by all. The time allotted for answering the questions was ten minutes, and at that time Miss Nannie Watson proved the most successful contestant and was presented with a nice box of chocolates. A delicious ice course, followed by mints, was served by the hostess. It might be said that the members of the Philathea class are like one big family—they really know each other—and every member is urged to take advantage of this further opportunity to mingle with each other.

Mrs. T. L. Speas and Mrs. R. A. Wagner have recently returned from Greensboro where they attended the state board meeting of the Methodist Protestant missionary society. Mrs. Speas, by virtue of her office as secretary of young people's work, made a very interesting report. The progress along both home and foreign mission lines was most marked this year. Plans were made to hold the North Carolina Branch meeting in Winston-Salem on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of the first week in April. The local society and the church are looking forward with pleasure to entertaining the North Carolina Branch. Every delegate and every one interested in this work will receive a cordial welcome.

The choir is doing splendid service. It is a real inspiration to listen to the singing of deeply consecrated voices. Two Sunday evenings ago, a male quartet was rendered by Messrs. Hunt, Davis, Weatherman and Hunter. This was especially enjoyed by the audience.

One of the most helpful services of the church is the midweek prayer meeting. To the members of the church who have really felt the need of a service in the middle of the week and whose spiritual lives have been quickened and deepened by regular attendance on the Wednesday night prayer meeting, it is puzzling to understand why a larger number of the members of the church do not attend. While the percentage of attendance compares favorably with that of other churches in the city, an increase would be very gratifying to the pastor who puts forth every effort to make these services worthwhile. Mr. Hunter never fails to say something that strengthens and encourages his listeners.

Calvary, Greensboro.—In our last report to the Herald we told about holding our formal opening in our new church. In this report we will attempt to let the readers of the Herald know how we are starting off.

Brother Gerringer is doing some fine preaching. On the Sunday following our opening, as we stood at the real beginning of our career as a church, he preached at this opportune time from the subject, "Go Forward." Among other good things he said, "It makes no difference what difficulties confront, if God says, Go forward, we can safely pull down our tents and move." On the first Sunday in February he preached on the subject, "Christian Stewardship," and tried to show us our responsibility to God. He said: "Our lives, all that we have and all that we are, belong to God. These things are a trust from God. Will we betray this trust?" Brother Gerringer has filled all his appointments except one. On last Sunday he was out in the interest of our College and Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk preached to us at 11 A. M. from the subject, "Following God's Plans." His sermon was greatly enjoyed by those present. Brother Gerringer was at his post at 7:30 P. M. and preached a sermon on the "The Golden Rule." His sermons all seem so appropriate.

Our Sunday school is moving forward under the leadership of Brother Hester Causey. We are making a steady increase every Sunday and have already passed the 100 mark.

On Sunday afternoon, February 1, the young people of Grace church's Christian Endeavor society met with us and organized senior and junior societies. We appreciated their interest and assistance very much.

We have bought several new church hymnals in order to have books for all who wish to sing. We are having good attendance at both morning and evening services. On last Sunday night the church was almost full. The people of the community who are not members of our church and some who are members of other churches are showing their appreciation of our church in their midst by coming out. We feel that our prospects are bright for a good year. Pray for us.

We expect to give the readers of the Herald a picture of our new church in this paper and also the names of our faithful building committee whose faithfulness and earnestness have contributed greatly in making this church possible.

CREATION.

If I, whom little noises scare,
Whose loves are far from strong,
Can find a joy so full and rare
In making of a song,
What pleasure must have been my Lord's,
Some eon long gone by,
To make a march too great for words
And star it on the sky.
—Claribel Weeks Avery.

Yadkin College.—It has been some time since the readers of our paper have seen anything from Yadkin College, due to neglect on the part of the reporter, and not because progress is not being made in our church, for the advancement of Christianity.

Yesterday was a very delightful day for us, for several reasons. The predominating factor of the day's success was a sermon on "Atonements," by our able pastor, Rev. W. L. Carson. The discourse was in plain, simple language so that there was no misunderstanding of the soul-stirring truths that were so forcefully propounded. Those who were unable to be present missed a great sermon, and we hope that the first Sunday in March at 2:30, P. M., the church will be filled, for in hearing Brother Carson you hear a good preacher, a man who loves God and who has the courage to fight the devil in a manly way.

The Sunday school was well attended, numbering nearly twice as many present as were one year ago. The collection was also above average.

The Sunday evening prayer meeting was conducted by Miss Hope Hartley. The meeting was very interesting and a large number of those present took active part.

The Ladies' Aid will meet at Mrs. Hobert Green's on Tuesday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock. All the ladies of the community, whether members or not, have a cordial invitation to attend.

Just now we are ready to figure some repair work on our church. How far we are going to be able to go with this depends upon the funds which are put in. Several letters have been written to individuals concerning contributions but for fear some one has been overlooked am asking that any one who can help in this work send your donation to M. F. Phillips, Yadkin College, and it will be greatly appreciated.

We want to thank Miss Hope Hartley and Miss Nell Brooks for their successful efforts in getting up a nice collection of eats for Mr. Carson. I also wish to express the sincere thanks of church to the members of other denominations for their liberal contributions.

Burlington.—Mrs. E. S. Pugh and Mrs. S. M. Hornaday delightfully entertained the Ladies' Aid society Monday afternoon, February 2, at the residence of Mrs. E. S. Pugh, whose home was made pretty with shaded lights and flowers for this occasion. The devotional services were conducted by the president, Mrs. J. M. Crawford, in a very pleasing manner, after which we listened to a selection on the victrola. The business session was lively and full of zeal for the new year's work, and many a useful and helpful plan was discussed and adopted.

For the social hour Mrs. Pugh and Mrs. Hornaday served a delicious salad course. They were assisted in this by little William Henry Pugh. Conversation and music made this hour one of real pleasure. Miss Annie Williams graciously invited the society to meet with her in the March meeting, at her home on North Broad street. The society adjourned with the wish that Mrs. Pugh and Mrs. Hornaday would invite them again at an early date.

First Church, Lincolnton.—It has been some time since our last report, but silence does not always mean idleness. We now have a seven-day church, services every evening. On Monday we have choir practice, which has improved the choir very much. Tuesday, Ladies' Aid society. This has just recently been organized, but is progressing rapidly, consisting of about thirteen members, and all seem very eager to work. Wednesday, mid-week prayer service. Thursday, the pastor meets the junior boys and girls and gives them a blackboard lecture, which they enjoy very much. Friday, teacher-training class. The pastor has charge of that also. The study is the Sunday school lesson for the following Sunday. We feel it is a great help, as it inspires the teachers, gives them new ideas on the lesson, so that they are prepared to stand before their classes with something really worth while. Saturday afternoon, Young Men's Rescue Club (the writer does not happen to be a member of this club, so they will have to report their work). In the evening we meet again for Bible study. It is very interesting as we study the books of the Old Testament and learn many wonderful things. Five services on Sunday. The Sunday school now is in good shape, attendance is fine, also the offerings.

The church is in good standing financially. More money has been raised in the past three months than was paid in six months in the previous years. Everything looks promising for a prosperous year.

Realizing Brother Phillips has worked hard for the success of the church of Lincolnton, we are willing to give him the credit he deserves.

Best wishes to the Herald readers.

Expression of Appreciation.

We wish to express through the Herald our appreciation for the following donations from our friends in Shelby: Mrs. J. T. Ramsey for fresh pork sausage and liver pudding; Mrs. Marion Eaker, for canned peaches; Mrs. M. C. Putnam, for canned fruit; Mrs. Aster Ramsey, for pickled peaches and fresh pork sausage; Mrs. R. C. Runyan, for banana cake; Mrs. Marvin Willis, for pear preserves; Mrs. S. C. Tate, for lard.

C. B. Way and Family.

Shelby.—I presume the readers of this good paper will be surprised to read a report from me, but it is my pleasure as I am enjoying our services so much here with these good people. They have all been treating us fine since we have been here. The longer I stay here the more I love the people.

Last Sunday we had good attendance at our Sunday school and also for the church services. Rev. W. H. Will, a Baptist minister, of Shelby, preached for us in the absence of the pastor. At the morning service Rev. Mr. Vah preached a wonderful sermon. He preached again at the night service and delivered a splendid sermon. I feel sure that his sermons were of great help to me and to all who heard them. Every one seemed to be well pleased with his sermons. We shall be glad to have him with us again. I trust that our Sunday school and preaching services will continue to grow in attendance and interest.

Pray for us; we need your prayers, as we try in our feeble way to do our work and do our very best.

Some of our members are sick and I hope that they will soon be restored to their usual health again, so that they can be with us again in the services.

My two daughters, Mildred and Louise, and I were invited last Sunday to take dinner with Mrs. Thomas McFarland and family, members of church and Sunday school, and we enjoyed the good dinner that Mrs. McFarland had prepared. This family, as well as many others, have been very good to us since we have been here.

Sunday school and church services next Sunday will be held as usual with preaching by the pastor at both morning and evening services.

Mrs. C. B. Way, Reporter.

A Visit to Anderson Charge.

It was the pleasure of the writer to spend last Saturday night and Sunday with the good people of Liberty Hill church, Anderson charge. I boarded a train in Shelby at 6:40 P. M. and arrived at Greer, S. C., at 9:00 P. M. and spent the night with Brother J. D. Pool in Greer. I enjoyed the splendid hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Pool and they conveyed me to the church, five miles from Greer, Sunday morning in time for the Sunday school.

Liberty Hill church is located in a beautiful and seemingly prosperous farming section of South Carolina and the people impressed this teacher as being some of the very best people in our conference. The Sunday school was well attended, and the preaching service Sunday morning was also largely attended. The people seemed eager for the gospel and gave splendid attention to the feeble efforts of the writer in presenting the message.

After the morning service I was invited and taken to the good home of Brother J. F. Condon, a short distance from the church, where a real good dinner was enjoyed and the afternoon spent in conversation with Brother Condon. A more pleasant day has not been enjoyed by this writer in recent months.

The young people of the church and community assembled at 6:30 o'clock in the evening for their Christian Endeavor meeting and the topic, "The Conquest of Selfishness," was discussed with profit to those present. It was my pleasure to speak briefly to the young people in the meeting. There were about twenty-five or thirty young people in the meeting. They have these meetings every Sunday night.

A much larger congregation assembled for the evening church service at 7:30 o'clock and the church was almost filled. It was an inspiration to speak to such an attentive congregation, made up largely of the young people of the church and community. The singing by the choir was fine and enjoyed by this writer. After the service I was conveyed to Greer by Brother Pool (father of J. Lee and J. D. Pool), where I boarded a train at 10 P. M. and arrived in Shelby at 12:30 A. M.

The visit with those good people of Liberty Hill church was enjoyed immensely and I was invited to visit them again. They were anxious to hear from their pastor, Brother W. M. Pike, and seemed anxious for him to return to them when he recovers from the injury sustained in December.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Whitaker.—On the morning of January the 7th, 1925, Miss Olivia Hannah Whitaker, the eldest child of the late Dr. Ben F. Whitaker and Aun Olivia Whitaker, was suddenly called into the great beyond. She passed while sleeping and doubtless never knew the change was coming.

Miss "Liv," as she was affectionately called, was 70 years of age. She was born and reared in the town of Enfield in a home known for its true hospitality. At the age of 14 she joined the Enfield Methodist Protestant church and was always zealous not only for her local church, but for the entire denomination. She was a woman of strictest morals and straight convictions, but of a tender heart.

She is survived by three brothers and two sisters as follows: L. H. Whitaker and Frank Whitaker of Enfield, and J. Fletcher Whitaker of Wilmington; and Mes. C. E. McGwigan and S. T. Peirson of Enfield.

On Sunday afternoon the writer conducted the funeral and her body was tenderly laid to rest in the beautiful little cemetery of Whitakers Chapel, the oldest Methodist Protestant church in North Carolina. The large number present and the beautiful mound of flowers told of the love and esteem in which she was held by the community. R. C. Stabbins.

Resolutions.

Whereas, In the providence of God one of our members, Mrs. George W. Coble, has been called to her eternal home, therefore be it Resolved, That we, the members of the Sunday school of the First Methodist Protestant church, Burlington, N. C., will cherish the memory of her consecrated life.

Resolved, That the memory of her constant interest in the Master's work will inspire us to do better work in His name.

Resolved, That we tender our sympathy to the bereaved family.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, that a copy be placed upon the minutes of the Sunday school, and that copies be sent to the Methodist Protestant Herald and the Methodist Protestant for publication.

Miss Susie Stafford,
Mrs. John R. Hoffman,
Miss Cynthia Garrett.

Coble.—Mrs. Sarah Ann Coble, the only daughter of Balaam and Anna Hornaday, was born August 1, 1846. The Hornaday household was in the southern part of Alamance county, near Rock Creek Methodist Protestant church. It is here that the deceased was born, and where her girlhood and early married life was spent.

In her twenty-second year she became the wife of Mr. George William Coble, an industrious and promising young man reared in the same community with her. The exact date of her marriage is February 6, 1868. With happy and hopeful hearts these two young people set up housekeeping in the neighborhood where they were both reared, and lived here until the fall of 1888, when they moved to Siler City, in order that their children might have better school advantages. In March, 1899, they returned to Alamance and established themselves on a farm three miles south of Burlington. But their stay here was short. In September, 1914, Brother Coble passed to his reward, and Sister Coble then broke up her home and came to Burlington to live with her children, dividing her time between her son, Mr. M. A. Coble, and her daughter, Mrs. W. N. Thompson.

The marriage of Sister Coble was blessed with nine children, seven daughters and two sons. The first death in the home was that of her first-born child, Newton Cicero, who lived but eighteen months. And precious months they were to these fond parents, as they nestled to their hearts their first-born child. Again the death angel came in April, 1900, and claimed her oldest daughter, Annie Harriett McNiell, wife of Rev. M. D. McNiell, living then at Sanford, N. C. In December of the same year Mary Ellie was called to her reward. Again death invaded the home in September, 1906, and claimed Mattie Myrtle. Just as they were blooming into the strength and beauty of young womanhood the sun of life came, and they passed over the river and under the shade of the trees they have awaited the coming of Mother.

The surviving children are Mrs. C. A. Albright, Graham, Mrs. E. W. Fox, Newton, Mr. M. A. Coble and Mrs. W. N. Thompson, Burlington, Mrs. J. C. Lloyd, Cincinnati.

Besides her five surviving children there are fourteen grandchildren, as follows: Mrs. D. B. Teague, Sanford; Frank C. McNiell, Richmond, Va.; Mrs. Gabe Holmes, Goldsboro; Mrs. Lloyd Pritchett, Burlington; Lester, George, and McBride Albright, Graham; R. Eugene Fox, Philadelphia; Louise Fox, Newton; Margaret, William, Sarah Forrest, and Ruth Merlyn Thompson, and George William Coble, infant son of M. A. Coble, Burlington.

Mr. W. C. Hornaday of Graham, Mr. O. N. Hornaday, Liberty, and Mr. R. G. Hornaday of Burlington are the only surviving brothers. Three brothers, John Wesley, Alfred Clark, and S. Minter preceded her by several years to the spirit world.

Sister Coble was a good woman. Her life was unpretentious, but earnest and faithful to the end. She was a devoted wife, a loving mother, and a befriending neighbor.

In her early years she became a Christian and united with Rock Creek M. P. church. It was her custom to have her church home where her material home was; when she moved to Siler City to live, as soon as the Methodist Protestant church was organized there, she had her membership transferred to that place, and later to the Burlington church when she moved close to it. Her membership remained here until her death.

To her, church membership was a solemn as well as a glorious privilege. She delighted in the services of God's house, and was rarely absent when she was able to attend.

In her last will she bequeathed a substantial sum to the High Point College, thus evidencing her unflinching interest in the church with which she had been affiliated for about sixty years.

After this long period of unabated devotion and service, her work was finished, and following a brief illness, she was called to her reward. The end came on the twelfth day of January, 1925. And now she is not, for God took her.

"The pains of death are past;

Labor and sorrow cease;
And life's long warfare closed at last,
Her soul is round in peace.
Savior of Christ, well done!
Praise be thy new employ!
And while eternal ages run,
Rest in thy Savior's joy."

The funeral service was held in the Burlington church, conducted by her pastor, and attended by a large concourse of appreciative and sympathetic friends. The body was laid to rest under a covering of beautiful flowers by the side of her husband in Pine Hill Cemetery.

Our hearts go out to the bereaved loved ones, and we pray again for that sustaining grace that binds up the broken-hearted and comforts those who mourn. S. W. Taylor.

James H. Stewart.—(Gone!) How can it be! Only a week before he sat in his usual pew in the church, and appeared to be in the vigor of health. We might have allotted him another score of years, but alas, how illusive health itself it. He arose in the morning of January 24 at the usual hour, and so far as is known, well as usual. After attending to his usual morning duties about the home, he came into the house and within a few minutes had fallen a victim of some sort of heart attack and died within a few minutes, leaving behind him his wife, four sons, John W., David Harrison, Jessie Frank, Robert Lee; and one daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Hornbuckle, all of Gibsonville; one brother, Robert Stewart, of Alta Vista, Va.; two sisters, Mrs. Julia Powell of Greensboro and Mrs. Sis Hefflinger of Stocksdales, Va.

Born: December 20, 1860, a little more than sixty-four years ago, for more than twenty years he was a member of our church at Gibsonville, during which time he has graciously endeared himself to the church and community by his worthy traits of character. He was noted for his interest in and service for the sick of the community, it often occurring that he would lay aside his work to nurse the sick even when it involved a loss to himself financially.

Besides being a member of the church, he belonged to the Order of the Red Men and Junior Order of United American Mechanics, to which he proved to be loyal.

Sunday afternoon, the 25th, his funeral was conducted first with simple order in the home, and then completed in the Methodist Protestant church of Gibsonville before a congregation of relatives and friends that overflowed the church. The body was in charge of the orders to which he belonged, they all attending in a body. The sermon was delivered by the writer and at the grave after proper rites by the orders and a closing prayer by the writer the beautiful floral offerings were banked about the mound and human service was at an end.

To the sorrowing we extend our sympathy and may they "sorrow not, as those who have no hope." G. H. Hendry, Pastor.

Crutchfield.—Mrs. Bettie Crutchfield died January 29, after having lived to the ripe age of 82 years and 10 months.

Mrs. Crutchfield was one of the oldest members of Hebron church. It was not the writer's privilege to know Sister Crutchfield for a very great length of time; but from his acquaintance with her she impressed him as a kind, quiet, Christian character. Those who have known her for years say, "Truly a good woman is gone."

The funeral services were conducted by Dr. Johnson and the writer at Hebron church January 31, after which the remains were quietly laid to rest in Hebron cemetery. Notwithstanding the rough weather and bad roads a large congregation was present, thus showing the esteem in which Sister Crutchfield was held by those who knew her best.

She leaves three sons, Thos. M., Geo. F., and G. W., and six grandchildren, Rev. M. Ivey Crutchfield, Misses Pattie, Bertha, and Mary Crutchfield, James E. and Thos. Crutchfield, Jr. These with a number of other relatives and friends mourn their loss. May God comfort the bereaved ones.

B. M. Williams.

Cole.—Joe Dixon Cole, born September 8, 1920, died February 6, 1925. He was just the right size to miss in the home. While it makes the home sad it makes heaven bright. May the good Lord bless the bereaved parents and draw them nearer to God.

J. W. Hulin, Pastor.

King.—James Alvis King was born October 20, 1954, died February 4, 1925. He married Lucy Jane Tucker on December 5, 1878. Born to this union were eight children, of whom six survive and two are dead. The living are, Zara Brown, Cara Vuncannon, Elta Cox, Lonnie King, Carson King and Elsie King.

He was twice married; his second marriage was to Bettie Owen October 11, 1908.

He joined the Methodist Protestant Church in young manhood and was a faithful member to his death. The church will wonderfully miss him but good men must go. May the good Lord give us some one to fill his place.

J. W. Hulin, Pastor.

ATTENTION, FIRST DISTRICT!

Brother Harrison asked me to serve as chairman of the young people's work in this district, therefore I am calling your attention now to a matter of great importance. I especially want the young people of the district to read this and act accordingly. We want our Young People's Summer Conference in June to be the best ever. We want the largest number of registrations and the largest attendance at the conference that we have ever had. We ought to register NOW! We ought to begin now to plan, work and pray for an uplifting, inspiring and edifying conference. We, who live down East, want to prove that we can really do things. So, come on, young people of the first district and let us win a banner! A banner is promised to the district which registers the largest number in proportion to the membership of the churches in the district. A banner is promised to the church whose delegates in actual attendance at the conference travel the greatest total of miles. Free entertainment of the pastor will be awarded to the church which registers the largest percentage of its membership. Free entertainment will be given the person who registers the largest number of people prior to the conference. Free entertainment will be given any one who registers as many as one hundred persons prior to the conference. So, come on, young people of Littleton, Hantax, Greenville, Spring Church, Enfield, Creswell and Whitakers, let's go. We can do it, if we try!

Yours and His, Fred W. Pasenail.

TWENTY-ONE CHURCHES ALREADY ENTERED IN SUMMER CONFERENCE REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN! SEVENTEEN PASTORS

Twenty-one churches of the conference have already sent in registrations for our Young People's Summer Conference to be held in High Point College in June. Seventeen of these churches have their pastors leading the list. Every man now is bringing in additional registrations and without exception the young people seem to be enthusiastic.

Charlotte Sam Leaning.

Another one not from Mrs. Surratt puts First Church, Charlotte, away out ahead of everybody. Splendid work, Mrs. Surratt! Unless somebody else puts more pep into the campaign, Charlotte wins! Come on, the rest of you folks!

Haw River Registers Pastor.

Haw River church has the distinction of being the first church to send in the fee for the pastor, Rev. T. A. Williams. All of the other sixteen pastors have sent in their own fees. After all, the churches ought to take care of these extra fees for the pastor, and do honor to Miss Bullard of Haw River for her thoughtfulness and appreciation of her pastor. Some of the rest of you folks try it. You'll feel better because of it.

The list of registrations received since last notice is as follows:

50. Rev. J. E. Pritchard, Henderson.
51. Mrs. J. E. Pritchard, Henderson.
52. Rev. G. H. Hendry, Gibsonville.
53. Mrs. G. H. Hendry, Gibsonville.
54. Little Miss Hendry, Gibsonville.

MARRIED.

Smith-Lowdermilk.

A wedding of much interest in North and South Carolina was that of Lawton Edward Smith and Miss Jessie Tagg Lowdermilk at the home of the bride's mother in Greenville, S. C., Thursday, January 29, at 8:00 o'clock in the evening.

The living-room and dining-room were thrown en-suite and were artistically decorated with ivy, ferns, and baskets of white narcissus. Numerous candles and shaded lights added to the charm of the rooms.

The bride and groom entered together and stood before an altar of white. The impressive ring ceremony of the Methodist Church was used, Dr. Lindsay officiating.

The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Smith of Cowpens, and is a young man of sterling qualities. He holds a responsible position in the offices of the Southern Railway Company in Greenville.

Mrs. Smith is the daughter of the late Rev. W. R. Lowdermilk and Mrs. Jessie Lowdermilk. She has made her home in Greenville for several years and her charming personality has won for her a host of friends.

After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Smith left for an extended northern trip.

—Near Cave City, Kentucky, Floyd Collins was trapped by a falling rock while exploring a cave. The accident happened January 30, when he was about 150 feet from the entrance to the cave. The rock caught his foot in such a way that he could not release himself. The passage-way from the entrance was so small that men had to crawl on their hands and knees to reach him and carry him food. They could not move the boulder from Collins's foot. All were cut and bruised by jagged rocks and soaked by dripping water when they returned to the open air. It seems very doubtful whether Collins can be taken out of the cave alive.

—Greece and Turkey are again at swords' points. This time the trouble has been caused by Turkey. That Government has expelled Patriarch Constantinos, head of the Greek Orthodox Church, from Constantinople.

CHARLES H. SPURGEON'S DYING APPEAL.

Thirty-two years ago, about three weeks before he passed away, the great London preacher, Charles H. Spurgeon, wrote what fittingly might be termed his dying appeal to the church at large. Said he:

"The presence of God in saving power in the church will put an end to the present plague of infidelity. Men will not doubt His word when they feel His Spirit. It will be the only security for the missionary effort. If God be with His people, they will soon see crowds converted and added to the church. For a thousand reasons we need that Jehovah should come into the camp, as aforetime He visited and delivered His people from bondage in Egypt.

"Could we not all unite in prayer for this? . . . Come to thy church, O Lord, in fulness of power to save! If the Great Advent is not yet, indulge us with outpourings of grace in times of refreshing. Oh, that all Christendom would take up this pleading and continue it until the answer came!"

But alas! The eloquent speaker's plea fell on ears that were deaf. (God forbid that this should be the case today!)

A generation has passed by, and the "Great Advent is not yet;" a generation, and the church is still waiting; a generation, and a billion souls have gone on into eternity! A billion souls—"every creature" of which Christ redeemed! "Every creature" of which He commanded the church to evangelize! "Every creature" of which a revived church might have reached with the Gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, be he Jew or Gentile!

But the slumbering church slept on—and still sleeps, in self-indulgent ease—and "while men slept, an enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat," until today Christendom is fast becoming a field of abhorrent growth, the vile odors of whose apostasies are beginning to fill the universe with foulest stench.

Is the slothful bride ready for her Bridegroom's coming? Can her criminal delinquency be pleasing to her Lord? Can He hold in high esteem the one who holds in low esteem His last pleading word?

O saint of God, the harvest will soon be past, the summer is all but ended, and myriads of souls have not yet so much as heard that "Christ died for the ungodly."

Thinkest thou that He delayeth His coming that for a little longer He may spare His unready bride the shame of her unreadiness, of her empty-handedness, her nakedness, her poverty? If thou lovest His appearing, surely thou wilt travail in soul for that which will hasten His coming! Surely thou wilt pray for the church's revival.

"THEY GET BACK THEIR DEAD."

There is a true story called, "They Get Back Their Dead," by Minervo Guthapfel, that will help the class to see one reason why we should "teach all nations."

"Oh, daddy, it's getting lighter. My head don't hurt so, either. And over there it's all shiny. Daddy, would you mind if I went to see who 'twas over there?"

"No, boy, go on."

"O, daddy, it's mudder!" The four-year-old boy's voice was clear as a bell. "I want to go, daddy. I'll come back for you folks. I'll get mudder, an' we'll come back to get you all. I'm not 'fraid now. You'll get me back some day, daddy, an' then—"

The stricken father laid his child's head back upon the pillow, and folded the quiet hands. For fifteen years he had tried to do a man's work as a missionary to the land of the Hermit Kingdom. Four months before, "mudder," after an illness of ten days, had said to him, "I'll get you all back some day," and had gone to find Jesus. And now boy, the most loved and petted member of the family, had gone "to find mudder."

Riding to the cemetery in his curtained chair the father heard Koreans talking. "What are you crying about?" one Korean woman asked another.

"Why, I'm crying for the foreigner, because he lost his boy."

"Don't cry for the foreigner! He doesn't need your tears," said Kin-si in a choked voice. "Don't you know that all these foreigners have a way by which they get their dead back again after they have died? That foreigner will get his wife and boy back again some day. But how about us? I lost a boy. You lost a boy. We'll never get our boys back again. We don't know how to get our dead back. I wish we had such a hope. But it's only for the foreigners."

"She's heard but half the truth," thought the man. "O, my heavenly Father," he cried checkingly, "forgive me. Take my boy. He's yours. Take his mother. Keep them safely until the years allotted to me have passed.

'Foreigners get their dead back.' So do the Koreans, but they do not know it! Help me, Father, to tell the whole of Korea that they, too, get their dead back."

After the little casket was lowered the father picked up an Easter lily and laid it on the casket. "Thou art the resurrection and the life," his voice rang out clear and strong. "All hail, resurrection day, and this lily, the symbol of the resurrection from the dead of my 'boy.' As I give him back to thee, Father, I claim at thy hands the resurrection life for every Korean. I'll help you to bring it to pass, Lord, for so it will be good in thy sight, for thou art their resurrection and their life."

His friends wondered at the radiance of his face. "He's had a vision," they said, and they were right. His vision was of an Easless land, made joyous by the heart knowledge of Jesus, the "resurrection and the life."—Condensed.

A GOOD BOOK.

Doctor Charles E. Jefferson's book, "Quiet Hints to Growing Preachers," is a volume that every minister should read, and particularly young ministers.

The book has been off the press for some years, but there is no must on it. In fact, it is one of the books that never get out of date.

If there is any one in our conference who has not read the book, and who would like to experience the mental and spiritual exhilaration that it gives, I shall be glad to send my copy, post paid. And it may circulate through the conference as long as there is a demand for it.

S. W. Taylor.

—A township Sunday school convention was held in Calvary church last Sunday afternoon with a good attendance of several denominations. The local attendance of Methodist Protestants put them in the lead in point of numbers. A good program was rendered, including a very lively round table discussion, led by Brother J. Norman Wills. The question was how to secure a better attendance of Sunday school people at the preaching services. Brother Wills was of the opinion that little tots under six should not be expected to attend the preaching service, but the great majority of the convention, especially most of the preachers, seemed to be of the opposite opinion.

—It doesn't matter to us so much what our ancestors were ten thousand years ago as it does what we will be ten thousand years hence. We are what we are, no matter how we came to be so. Our accountability to God is a fact we must recognize, no matter how we believe about the past. What we think of us in the day of our accounting is a matter of supreme importance to us.

WHY WAS JOB AFFLICTED?

Was he afflicted because of transgressions? No. For "there was none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feared God, and eschewed evil." Job 1:8; 2:3.

Was his affliction to make him better? No. For "there was none like him in the earth, a perfect and upright man, one that feared God, and eschewed evil."

There was no real cause in Job that he should be afflicted. Hear what God says about the matter, to Satan: "Thou movedst me against him, to destroy him without cause." Job 2:3. So there was no cause, or reason, in Job, why he should be afflicted. The reason was for Job, not in him. The reason was in Satan, and for Job's vindication—to place Job forever beyond impeachment. Did you ever think about it? Here was a man about whom the eternal God testified, saying, "there was none like him in the earth." No other man like Job. Has this ever been said of any other man? But this did not prevent Satan from disputing what God said. We cannot go into details, but suffice to say, that Satan in effect said, "He's a hypocrite. He's serving you for what you have given him. Just take all these riches away and 'he'll curse thee to thy face.'" Then God in effect says, "Well, we'll see about it, 'all that he hath is in thy power; only upon himself put not forth thine hand.'" Job 1:2. What was the result? All of Job's possessions were swept away and all of his children killed. But did Job do as Satan said he would—"curse God"? No. Instead of cursing God he praised God, saying, "Blessed be the name of the Lord." Job 1:21. So this proved, demonstrated, that what God said about Job was true, and that what Satan said was false. Proving Satan to be a liar or a fool, or both.

So there was another day when the "sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, and Satan came also among them," as on the first occasion, and God says, "Satan, hast thou considered my servant Job, . . . that he holdeth fast his integrity, although thou movedst me against him, to destroy him without cause?" Satan had been met on his own ground, and defeated, shown to be either a liar or a fool. But Satan was not willing to give it up, but persisted in his lying, slanderous accusation, notwithstanding God's victory for Job, but persisted in his last, desperate charge of hypocrisy, "Skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life. But put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face." Job 2:4, 5. After Satan had said this, God in effect says, "Satan, we'll see about this also; he's in thy hand; but save his life." What was the result of this? Satan "smote Job with sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown." Job 2:7. And what was the result of all this? Did Job "curse God" this time, as Satan said he would? No. But what did he say? "What? shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?" And it is said "In all this did not Job sin with his lips." Job 2:10. But what about Satan? We hear no more of him. He's driven from the field in utter rout. He could go no further. He could say no more. God had taken him at his own word, and demonstrated forever, beyond all question, that Job was the kind of man God had said he was. And also, that Satan was a fool or a liar. And Satan had to slink away like a whipped cur and play mum about Job ever since.

So this fearful affliction that came upon Job was not because of any sin in him, but to vindicate him, and place him forever beyond impeachment. The character and reputation of Job will shine in undimmed luster to all eternity.

But Job's friends were laboring under the delusion of a false philosophy: That evil did not come upon the righteous. But as it had come upon Job, therefore Job was a hypocrite. But they were wrong, as God had said Job was "a perfect man, and none like him in the earth."

In the sequel of it all, God said to Eliphaz the Temanite, "My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends; for ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job has." Job 42:7. And also, God had Job to pray for his friends and offer sacrifice.

And Job himself seemed to be greatly perplexed because of the evil that had come upon him as he seemed to be under the spell of the same false philosophy as his friends, that evil comes only upon the wicked, and good upon the righteous. Job knew and protested his righteousness, but evil had come upon him, and this he did not understand.

Satan was the hidden cause behind it all, which God permitted for Job's vindication, as already seen. Not to punish him for his sin, nor to make him better, but to put him forever beyond the cavils, accusations, and slanders of the devil.

And so Peter says, "That the trial of your faith . . . might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." So we see from what Peter says that what the righteous endures will count in the judgment as well as what he does—will be his eternal vindication before wicked persons and devils. Having "come out of great tribulation," having "washed his robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." And "our light affliction which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

So here is the gist of the whole matter: God said that Job was a perfect man; an upright man; feared God, eschewed evil—and there was none like him in the earth. This ought to have settled it. But no, the adversary disputed it. He practically said that God was a liar and Job a hypocrite. So the only thing to do was to do as God did, and let the devil try his hand. It was fearfully severe on Job, but God sustained him, brought him through and silenced the devil and honored and vindicated Job. This being true in the case of Job, why is it not equally true in the case of all righteous persons who suffer severe trials? We believe it is. It is for their vindication—to put them forever beyond impeachment. We believe all the evils, trials that Christians endure will be brought into the account in the final judgment, and will place them forever beyond the accusations of the devil. The testimony of God will not be enough to silence the devil. It requires the suffering of the people of God to stop the devil's mouth. This is something he cannot in the very nature of things gainsay, but it will, together with God's testimony, be an uncontestable proof of the righteousness to all eternity.

Let us suppose, if the people of God were always prosperous in their worldly affairs and never suffered any of the evils of this life, what could prevent the devil from caviling and slandering them to all eternity? But this he can never do, since they suffer manifold evils in this life, and many times very great and fearful ones.

Some one may say that God rebuked Job for his philosophizing—trying to account for and explain things. Very true, but he did not accuse him of sin. Of course all the evils of this life are the result of sin, directly or indirectly, but one of the lessons taught in the case of Job was, that the evils he endured were not special "judgments" sent as a punishment for sin, but were permitted for his vindication as a righteous man.

So God lifts the veil, in the case of Job and gives us a glimpse into the otherwise inscrutable mysteries of Providence. As Jesus was "made perfect through suffering," so are his people. But after this dispensation of suffering has passed, will come the sinless, painless state, without sorrow, dying—of undimmed glory, having obtained complete and eternal victory over the devil, he not being able to ever touch the saints again to all eternity, by word or deed. J. F. Dosier.

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS.

By Mr. S. D. Gordon.
The Human God.

Men hunger for the human touch in—God. It's in us humans to want to know by the feel.

We crave the human touch, from cradle to grave. No fingers hold so tight as baby fingers. Children cling to mother and father and each other. The hand-clasp, lip touching lip—the light caress, the tightening hold of the hand as life ebbs out—the hunger for the human touch is in our blood.

That's why Jesus came, for that human touch, to get it, and to give it. The hunger itself is a bit of God.

Man is like God when he is truly human. That word "human" has two meanings. The hurt meaning has become the common meaning the weakness, the selfishness, the narrowness in man. Originally, truly, it means the distinctive traits in which man is different from the lower creation, and is like God.

God is like man, the true human, in the power to reason things out, the twin power of speech, the moral sense, and, its twin, moral choice, and, most, rarest in—love. That word "love" tells most what God is. Love is a human thing. We know it. That's God's most distinctive trait.

The difference between God and man is in the limitations found in man. God knows no limit in power or knowledge or love. It's a radical difference in degree, not kind. Thought too great for words or mental grasp.

Now, Jesus was God showing us these two things. He made plain what the true fine human is. And he made as plain what the real God is. Do you want to see the true human?

Look at Jesus. All there is of the human is in Him.

Do you want to know the real God? Look at Jesus. When you are looking at Him you are seeing the father. All there is of God, within the true human limitation, is in Him.

Jesus shared all our human experiences. He earned bread and bed by sweat and toil. He knew family ties, friendships' sweets, sorrows' pain, indignation over wrong. He loved deeply, sympathized tenderly, and wept real tears.

He was tempted as we are. Many a time His brow was knit and moist, and His hand clenched, as He felt temptation and fought it. And He overcame temptation precisely as every man can and may, by the use of His will, His choosing, and the use of His knees. Neither without the other.

Except—yes, there is an outstanding exception. One experience He never had. That which grows out of wrong choice. But—but, that's not a human experience. It's lower down. He was more truly human in this that He refused to make wrong choice.

Jesus is peculiarly the racial Man, our Fellow. All sorts are drawn to Him, little children, the aged, ruggedly strong men, fine-fibred woman, virile, eager youth, student, scholar, unlettered, both sexes, all social sorts—all alike gladly confess His pull upon their hearts.

And He alone was the Son of God in the same distinctive sense. The Father was as drawn to Jesus as we men are. There was the fullest understanding and oneness of purpose, appreciation and love, between Jesus and the Father as between Jesus and man.

Here is the Book's own story of how it happened that Jesus came. God and man used to live together in a garden. It was a wondrous garden, full of trees and birds, and all growing things good to see and to eat. They were fellows together, walking, working, together day by day.

They used to meet in the twilight for a friendly talk, sometimes without words, as only real friends can do.

One twilight God came to the usual trysting place for the touch with His friend. But the man wasn't there. God was there. God didn't go away. God has never gone away.

But the man went away. Then he went further away. Then he lost the way back. Then he didn't want to come back. And away from God he got into bad shape. His will grew strangely stubborn. He got strange ideas about God not loving him.

All this was very hard on God. He sent messengers after the man. They were all treated badly. Then God said, "What shall I do? For the sake of my own breaking heart I must do something."

And this is what He did. One day He hid away the God part of Him, and came in among us as one of ourselves. And we called his earth name Jesus. He was a real man. He lived our life.

Then one day He got down, in, under the load of our stubbornness, our selfishness to get rid of it. And the load was so heavy it broke his heart. And the blood came. And he used the blood to clean us up, and break our hearts, and bend our wills and draw us back. And He is doing it.

A little girl in bed screamed out when the storm broke. The mother, coming quickly, said, "Didn't I tell you, dear, not to be afraid? God is watching; you won't get hurt." "Yes, mother," the child said in a shaky voice, "but when it thunders like that I want somebody with skin on."

May I, with utmost reverence, use the child's child talk? Jesus was God coming with skin on. He came that we might know God by the human feel.—Selected.

THE DIFFERENCE.

The beautiful little girl of a Hindu mother died. The body was carried to the burning ghat beside the Ganges. The mother, almost heart-broken, went to the temple of many gods, to see if she could find any comfort.

"Was it a boy or a girl?" asked the priest. "She was my darling little girl."

The priest responded with a sneering laugh. "Ho," he said, "women don't have any souls anyway. The girl may live again in the form of a toad or snake."

The next morning the mother went to the river bank. She saw the heap of ashes where the funeral pyre had been. Out of the warm ashes slowly crawled a snake. She remembered what the priest had said. "Oh-h!" she shrieked, "my sweet little girl is changed into a horrible serpent!" And she fell to the ground a hopeless maniac.

The beautiful little girl of another Hindu mother died. But this mother had permitted a missionary to come to her house, and had learned of Jesus and the resurrection.

Soon after the little one's death the missionary visited the home again to talk with the mother and comfort her. The mother's face was sad, there were tears in her eyes, but they were not tears of despair, and a smile trembled upon her lips. Neither was she dressed in mourning garments, but in bright and cheerful apparel.

"Yes," she said to the missionary, "I am wearing my best today. I am doing it to honor him who has taken my darling to himself. I want him to know that I realize that she is safe and happy with him."

And this is the difference between Hinduism and the "Jesus way."—From Everyland.

WORSHIP IN TRUTH.

The Great Teacher has declared that "God is a Spirit and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." Intellectual devotion therefore comes short of true and acceptable worship. All worship must embrace the exercise of such spiritual faculties or conditions as gratitude, penitence, faith, sincerity and love. Without either of these worship becomes as ineffectual as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals.

And then all worship must be in accordance with truth. Denial or compromise of the inspiration and truth of the Holy Scriptures makes worship a mockery in the sight of God. Those who deny the virgin birth, and in so doing deny the deity of Jesus Christ reduce worship perilously near to idolatry. To worship Jesus Christ as a mere man is virtually man-worship, and altogether vain.

All worship needs to be measured by its results. The Holy Spirit never responds to worship that involves a cardinal error. This accounts for the utter failure of modernists to become real revivalists. Souls are not saved, and cannot be saved, through their ministry.

It would be better for their own souls and for the souls of those to whom they minister if they would pursue some other employment.

THE SECOND MILE.

Then Love said, "Go another mile,"

I went, and Duty spoke no more.

But Love arose and with a smile

Took all the burden that I bore.

'Tis ever thus when Duty calls;

If we spring quickly to obey,

Love comes, and whatsoever befalls,

We're glad to help another day.

The second mile we walked with joy;

Heaven's peace goes with us on the road.

So let us all our powers employ

To help our brother bear life's load.

—Stephen More, in The Watchman.

SURPRISES.

Real Christianity is always a surprise. Most of all does it surprise those who think they know what real Christianity is, but who have been deceived by a counterfeit. A Christian woman recently learned that most of the family possessions and furniture she and her husband owned had been completely destroyed in a storage warehouse fire. Some of the things were priceless family heirlooms, which no money could replace. The shock was a severe one; but she quietly committed the whole matter to the Lord, and trusted him. A friend of hers, living in the same apartment house, is a Christian Scientist, and she noticed the quietness and entire lack of worry in the face and bearing of the one who had just incurred the heavy loss. Coming up to her, the Christian Scientist said impulsively, "I didn't know any Christian could take anything this way!" Perhaps the Christian Scientist was not wholly to blame, as she had drawn her inference as to "Christianity" from her observation of most "Christians." She was seeing, in her really Christian friend, a surprising demonstration of the presence and power of the Lord Jesus Christ in a believing Christian. Are we surprising our friends who have not yet had an opportunity to see for themselves that Christians can "take things this way"?—Quoted in Sunday School Times.

PRESS ON.

Press on! Surmount the rock steep,

Climb boldly o'er the torrent's arch;

He fails alone who feebly creeps,

He wins who dares the hero's march.

Be thou a hero! Let thy might

Tramp on eternal snows its way,

And through the ebon walls of night

Hew down a passage unto day.

Press on! If once and twice thy feet

Slip back and stumble, harder try;

From him who never dreads to meet

Danger and death they're sure to fly.

To coward ranks the bullet speeds,

While on their breasts who never quail,

Gleams, guardian of chivalric deeds,

Bright courage like a coat of mail.

—Park Benjamin.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Sunday, February 15, was spent in the interest of the College on Mt. Hermon charge and at Glen Raven. Brother Ashburn and his people are interested in this move for college endowment through the channel of insurance, and we are hoping they will soon raise their quota. In our efforts to organize the three hundred club we are asking Mt. Hermon charge to find five men, or their equal, who will carry five shares. Surely on a charge such as that the equal of five men can be found to carry $50 per year for ten years.

At the services at Glen Raven we asked that church to find three men, or their equal, who would carry three shares. It was a rainy night, and not nearly all their people were out. But those present took $90 of the $150 they were asked to raise, and with this good start pastor Williams thought he could put Glen Raven over during this week. I confidently believe he will.

What Are We Doing?

Do you ask, what is it you are trying to do? Just this. We started out to find 300 men, or their equal, among our 26,000 people in the North Carolina Conference, who will pay $50 per year for ten years to carry $150,000 in life insurance with the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company of Greensboro.

This insurance has already been written on the lives of young men under thirty-five years of age. It is now in force, and must be paid for. As we thus pay into the company $15,000 per year for ten years, allowing all the accumulations to remain there, that will net us in actual cash, at the end of the ten years, about $190,000 for the endowment of our college. The college must have an endowment, and we believe this is the easiest, and the most practical way in which we can raise it.

Why Not Do It Now?

The amount allotted to each charge is so reasonably small that it does seem that it might be raised within a week on any one of the charges. See Herald, January 29, 1925, page four, for the allotments. At $50 per share Alamance is asked to take eight shares, Albemarle six, Asheboro eight, Burlington 10, Charlotte four, Denton four, Enfield eight, Forsyth eight, Flat Rock eight, Grace 12, First Church, High Point 10, Lebanon three, Haw River eight, Mebane five, Mt. Hermon five, Reidsville six, Orange seven, Henderson, 10, Granville eight, Whitakers six, Weaver-ville two, Why Not six, and Winston 10. Thus running down the list we have picked out just a few to show how lightly the matter rests upon each charge.

Look up the Herald as above, find what has been allotted to your charge and let all of us get busy and raise it soon.

This Must Be Done.

Brethren and friends, our life as a denomination depends upon the running of the High Point College. We cannot stop now and exist. We are not going to stop. We are going to push on to greater things, and we are going to grow. In order to do this we must do the thing we have started out to do. We must raise this $150,000 and more, within the ten years. If the many will not do it then the few must do it. It must be done or we will suffer in consequence.

We are offering to the Methodist Protestants of this conference such a joyful privilege that it seems to us that hundreds of individuals among us would jump at the chance to carry their share of this burden, which is light," provided every one will do his part. Come on, folks, and let's put this over quickly so we can tackle other jobs that are waiting for us in kingdom service.

This Is Your Job.

Don't forget, dear ones, that this job does not belong to Dr. Andrews and me any more than it belongs to you. We have a college now that we have a right to be proud of, and it is doing a work that even the most fastidious and the most exacting cannot complain at. The buildings and the equipments and the work being done are all even beyond what any of us dared hope for this early in the history of the High Point College. Seeing is believing. Go see for yourself. As these are facts beyond dispute, come on and come quick and help us get this endowment subscribed. Just set aside a definite portion of the Lord's tenth for this worthy cause, and promise the Lord that you will pay that much per year for ten years provided life and health and earning capacity last.

Make up your mind to do this, and then let Dr. R. M. Andrews or your pastor know about it in post haste so you may be counted in. This must be done, and we are anxious to have it done quickly. Why let it drag through the months. Come on and let's go.

Let Us Pray.

We are earnestly requesting every Christian who reads this to pray especially for the blessings of the dear Father upon our High Point College in all its undertakings. Pray that this campaign may be abundantly successful, and that it may be completed speedily.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

WHITAKERS JUMPS TO THIRD PLACE IN SUMMER CONFERENCE REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN!

Rev. Fred W. Paschall, the enthusiastic chairman of the First District, proved his faith by his works this week and sent in a splendid list of registrations from his own church. This put his church ahead of many others into third place. Charlotte still leads; Concord is second; Haw River and First Church, High Point, are tied for fourth place.

How will the list look next week?

Registrations received since last notice:

72. Miss Fannie Barnes, Littleton.
73. G. L. Barnes, Littleton.
74. Rev. J. W. Hulin, Seagrove.
75. Mrs. Fannie Sykes, Haw River.
76. Miss Clara Bullard, Haw River.
77. T. S. Coble, Haw River.
78. Guy Crutchfield, Haw River.
79. E. L. Douglas, High Point.
80. Mrs. E. L. Douglas, High Point.
81. Kent Douglas, High Point.
82. Claire Douglas, High Point.
83. Rev. Geo. B. Brown, High Point.
84. Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, High Point.
85. Miss Mamie Johnston, Whitakers.
86. Miss Sarah Johnston, Whitakers.
87. Jese Johnston, Whitakers.
88. Miss Mary Lee Johnston, Whitakers.
89. Miss Mollie Wheelless, Whitakers.
90. J. M. Cutchin, Jr., Whitakers.
91. Mrs. J. M. Cutchin, Jr., Whitakers.

92. Master J. M. Cutchin, Whitakers.
93. Miss Spencer Cutchin, Whitakers.
94. Miss Bernice Nash, Concord.
95. Miss Maggie Mann, Concord.

We just lack a hundred and five having two hundred! Help us out, please! The fees are : 50c for adults and 25c for children, and go toward paying the expenses of our Young People's Summer Conference to be held at High Point College, June 16-26. Rush registrations to

NOTICE TO SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

One of the most important things you can do in your Sunday school is to inspire and train some of your young people for future work in the church. One of the best ways to do this is to see that a large number of your most capable young people attend our Young People's Summer Conference in High Point in June.

Won't you help us to help you get them interested by appointing in your church some person who will constantly boost the conference and who will see that as many as possible register for the conference? I shall send them from time to time literature on the work of the conference and assist them in every way I can to keep the conference before your people.

Please send me the name of some person in your church who will assume this responsibility. Thank you! It would be a mighty good stunt if you inclosed in your letter your own registration fee of 50c. Try it, you'll feel good about it. Thank you!

From Brother D. M. Loy.

Dr. Dixon has sent us checks and money to the amount of $62.50 and Rev. G. H. Hendry of Gibsonville and his wife came and brought us a nice pounding, and some money, I think from Gibsonville and Fountain Place; and then Brother Taylor came up from the Burlington church and brought us a nice pounding and some money.

Brother Dixon, we fully appreciate all that has been done for us by you and all the others, and all that we can do now is to pray that God will bless you, and your works, and all the others, and say, Thank you, in our humble way, to one and all. We regret very much the fact that such a time has come in our lives that such an appeal had to be, or was made for us. And yet we are thankful to almighty God, that we have friends in the world who are willing to care for us.

My dear old mother is now in the Rainey Hospital at Burlington. She was operated on the 12th of February and is getting on fine. The operation was made for gall-stone. Pray for her, and for us. Thank you, with many good wishes for you all.

I am, fraternally, yours in the Master's service,
D. M. Loy.

THOSE INSURANCE POLICIES.

Have you thought of them, If Mr. McCulloch could give in the main the efforts of his mature life's best years, and Mr. Andrews the combined energies of his heart and soul and physical being, and Mr. Wills practically the accumulating earnings of a life for this College, can not three hundred of our representative Methodist Protestant men give one fifty-dollar bill a year for ten years? Our salaried men, merchant men and large planters, can do this.

Have you thought of the aggregate results of these sums, and the great pull? The almost inconceivable sum of $150,000, and a boundless debt of this great pillow of this present indebtedness, on to our feet again.

We would every one who reads this might behold it today, this College, in its magnificent beauty and grandeur, and, inspired, our ablest would give.

EVOLUTION.

The trouble about accepting the theory of evolution before it has been proven to be true is that it would seem to tear our Bible all to pieces—and that is what some of the most zealous evolutionists have desired. The Bible represents man as made perfect at the beginning, in the image of God, and that man fell by sin, and has continued to be a sinner. Evolution represents man as rising from a lowly condition instead of falling from a high and holy state—from the condition of a brute—even from a much lower condition than that of a monkey, but passing through the monkey up to man. According to evolution, when the Bible says, "All have sinned," it lies. We could not hold a monkey as a sinner. When the Bible represents man as inheriting a sinful nature from Adam, evolution says "No." Our ancestors, says evolution, were not sinners; in fact, had no moral nature, and were therefore incapable of sinning. Thus the Bible is given the lie, and as some evolutionists have applied their theory to religion, they tell us to cut out of the Bible all those parts that will not tally with our beautiful theory. When the Bible represents Christ as dying for our sins evolution reminds us that we have no sins and therefore that pathetic story of Jesus suffering agonies on the cross for man's sake is the product of some man's vain imagination. Therefore the church of Christ is wasting millions of money to preach this imaginary Gospel to the nations, to build splendid churches and support foreign missionaries and translates the Bible and print it, and circulate it at an immense expense.

Some one suggests the resemblance of man to lower animals in his anatomy, his blood, his embryo stage, etc. This proves nothing. There are millions of leaves on the forest tree with a close resemblance, but no two alike—myriads of flowers carpet the earth with a general likeness, but no two alike. Two eggs may seem very much alike in substance, but one produces a chicken and the other a turkey. Why? Echo answers "Why?" Common sense, instead of a so-called scientific theory, answers "Because God made them so, even as He has made one star to differ from another star in glory."

A large array of prominent persons, some of them ministers of the Gospel, claim to believe in evolution. But if one could get all the preachers of the Gospel in the world to sign a statement and then could get all the presidents of colleges in the world, and all scientists to indorse evolution—all that would prove nothing. One single demonstration of a case where a lower animal has evolved into man would do more to silence anti-evolutionists than all the array of names that could be produced of mere theorists. The so-called Neanderthal men and the Piltdown men have been exploited before the public to a nausea—cases where a few bones have been dug out of the earth and so-called scientists have supplied missing bones and other missing parts, and dressed up such a statue in human fashion and showed them off as the "missing link," reminding one of what Barnum said, that folks liked to be humbugged. All this stuff purporting to be the highest attainments of educated people of the twentieth century leads to the boldness of some who wish to have our Bible, that God has blessed so greatly to the remodeling of humanity in the world for good, revised, cutting out the true history of the origin of man, cutting out the virgin birth of Jesus, His resurrection and miracles, His deity, the inspiration of the Scriptures and the atonement of Christ whereby man may be saved and eventually exalted to a high state of eternal happiness in the world to come. Away with evolution and its accompanying corollaries! I may venture to believe that a vast number of educated people would indorse these views far more than the list of names that have been paraded before the public, or even the largest list that can be produced to indorse the evolution side.—S. F. Tenney.

BILLY SUNDAY'S BIBLE.

"Twenty-two years ago, with the Holy Spirit as my guide, I entered the wonderful temple of Christianity. I entered at the portico of Genesis, walked down through the Old Testament art galleries where the pictures of Noah, Abraham, Joseph, Isaac, Jacob and Daniel hung on the wall. I passed into the music room of Psalms, where the Spirit swept the keyboard of nature until it seemed that every reed and pipe in God's great organ responded to the tuneful harp of David, the sweet singer of Israel. I entered the chamber of Ecclesiastes, where the voice of the preacher was heard; and into the conservatory of Sharon, and the Lily of the Valley's sweet scented spices filled and perfumed my life. I entered the business office of Proverbs, and then into the observatory room of the prophets, where I saw telescopes of various sizes, pointed to far-off events, but all concentrated upon the bright and morning Star, which was to rise above the moonlit hills of Judea for our salvation.

"I entered the audience room of the King of kings, and caught a vision of His glory from the standpoint of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, passed into the Acts of the Apostles, where the Holy Spirit was doing His work in the formation of the infant church. Then into the correspondence room, where sat Paul, Peter, James and John, penning their epistles. I stepped into the throne room of Revelation, where towered the glittering peaks, and got a vision of the King sitting upon the throne in all His glory, and I cried:

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
 Let angels prostrate fall,
 Bring forth the royal diadem,
 And crown Him Lord of all!"

Selected.

True greatness, first if all, is a thing of the heart. It is alive with robust and generous sympathies. It is neither behind its age, nor too far before it. It is up with its age, and ahead of it only just so far as to be able to lead its march. It cannot slumber, for activity is a necessity of its existence. It is no reservoir, but a fountain.—Roswell D. Hitchcock.

AN INTERPRETATION OF THE WASHINGTON FOREIGN MISSIONS CONVENTION.

By Rev. J. C. Broomfield, D.D., President of the Union Board.

To the Members and Friends of the Methodist Protestant Church:

The great Foreign Missions Conference, held in Washington, D.C., January 28 to February 2, 1925, and attended by approximately 5,000 delegates, belongs now to missionary history.

The question confronting the members of your Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration is, how to pass to you the message and appeal of that great gathering.

It was truly a wonderful convention in the themes discussed, and in the personnel of the speakers.

Whole sessions were given up to the discussion of such themes as: "The Gospel for the Whole World," "The Solution of the Problems of the World," "The Church in the Mission Field," and "The Foreign Missionary Movement in Relation to Peace and Goodwill Among the Nations."

The one session we fain would pass on to you in its entirety was the session in which "The Place of Foreign Missions in the Church at Home," was discussed.

It was an illuminating and heart-searching session.

The adequate foreign missionary program for a denomination, and in a congregation, along with the responsibility of the pastor and of the men and women of our churches for the foreign missionary enterprise was eloquently discussed.

As we look back over the session we feel, and we want you to feel with us, that our foreign missionary program in the homeland is woefully inadequate. For example, we have no one in training to be used in the expansion of our work abroad, or to take the place of any of our missionaries who may be forced to drop. Our work is undermanned in China and in India, and underequipped in all the fields in which we are working.

You ask for the reason, and our answer is that we have been restrained in framing an adequate program, first, because the increasing and insistent demands from the fields have kept so far ahead of us, and second, because the financial response from the church has lagged so far behind us. We could use $50,000 tomorrow in needed equipment for work already established, whereas at this moment we have been compelled to mortgage our income for the next few months for at least $20,000.

Rev. Hugh T. Kerr, D.D., of Pittsburgh, in discussing "The Pastor's Responsibility for Foreign Missions," made it very plain that the pastor is the key man, that if he is uninformed he will be uninterested, and his congregation will be likewise.

Out of a rich experience in his own congregation he told how through giving missionary information in his sermons, "the silver cord of stinginess had been broken, and the golden bowl upturned."

High above the administrative and financial appeal, the purely spiritual notes resounded.

The convention made Jesus more real, the Word more precious, prayer more essential, and our obligation to release God in ourselves and in others more definite.

The minor strains of deep humiliation were also felt in the distinctions that were drawn between Christ and Western Christianity's interpretation of Him.

Our hearts said "Amen" to Dr. James Barton's assertion in the closing session—"No one who has attended this convention can ever be the same." And the new definition of the foreign field as "any unoccupied area in the life" will remain with us.

Our denominational conference on Monday afternoon, in our Rhode Island Avenue Church, brought together a goodly company, with an address on China by our missionary, Rev. Dr. C. S. Heininger, a statement of conditions by Secretary Klein, and a number gave what was to them "the high spots of the convention." It was a very helpful meeting. We had 41 delegates known to be registered, out of an allotted delegation of 48, and they were from nine states.

We appeal to you to pray for our foreign missionary enterprise, to plan for an adequate foreign missionary program in your church, and to pay more liberally than ever before for its support.

SOME ECHOES.

Recession from the great foreign missions convention which closed in Washington, D. C., February 2, has not lessened the impressions made, nor the force and value of the great amount of valuable information imparted of conditions in many non-Christian lands, their unrelieved needs, the triumphs of the Gospel, and the certainty of ultimate world conquest conditioned on the unreserved consecration of Christ's followers, and the dedication of God's money entrusted to their hands for the extension of the Kingdom.

Where there was so much that was illuminating and inspiring, it is difficult to make selections which will convey in any adequate manner the tremendous results produced, much less measure the after influence in local churches, etc., of all that made it one of the greatest religious assemblies ever held in America.

But a few statements made can here be presented, as a sample of what stirred the hearts of thousands, and more than once evoked great applause.

Said a prominent layman, "Every true Christian layman must dedicate his life to proclaiming, by the way he lives and serves, that all men are brothers. Christian laymen must rid themselves of race prejudice which often amounts to hatred."

Dr. Sloan of the Peking Union Medical College declared that the entire output of the medical and nursing schools of the United States would not begin to meet the medical needs of China alone.

That being so, what must be the conditions, and consequent suffering and misery in the vast population of that great land without doctors and nurses?

"Mission hospitals are regarded in the East as living symbols of the Christian message."

Said Dr. Arthur Brown, there are only 28,000 Protestant foreign missionaries in non-

Christian land, and 2,408,900 adult communicants, with an enrolled Christian community of 5,145,236 persons; 703 hospitals and 1,234 dispensaries treating over 3,000,000.

"The Christian people of Europe and America gave last year for various missionary activities $44,448,000. A movement so vast, recognized by the governments of the world as a force of the first magnitude, challenges the attention of all thoughtful people."

A strong plea was made to find a solution of the new industrial problems of Asia by laying foundations for a Christian order of society, "Women bob their hair in America, other women, making hair nets in China, starve; where 18,000 women and girls worked in the hair net factories, there are now only a few over 2,000."

Declared a prominent Japanese: "We do not like your exclusion act. But there is going to be no war."

"We will keep the Pacific blue, and not turn it red with blood. That great ocean stands for peace, and even now in Japan we are disbanding some of our military forces, and in that way saving enormous sums of money."

A representative from India, referring to loss of life in the world war, stated, "To bring about the loss of as many lives as were wiped out in the war, it would be necessary to sink a Lusitania every day for 70 years."

It is our duty to help eliminate war, and the spread of the Gospel over the world is demanded, and we will do our part when, to the extent of our resources, we give workers and money to the great foreign missionary enterprises.

"THIS GRACE ALSO"—A STUDY IN CHRISTIAN GIVING.

By Roby F. Day, Superintendent Stewardship Department of the Board of Young People's Work.

The month of February, according to our denominational program, is Stewardship Month. It is hoped that wherever practicable our people will be instructed by their pastors and teachers in the principles of Christian stewardship during this month. Too often this is neglected from the pulpit. All the instruction some congregations get on the subject of Christian giving is when a special collection is to be taken or a long-standing mortgage becomes so burdensome or threatening that the pastor feels he must lift the mortgage or be lifted from his appointment by the conference. Then he quotes a few Scripture passages on giving, tells some supposedly funny jokes, and with tears in his tones urges his "good people" to "give liberally to this very needy but worthy cause."

Christian giving is fundamental to both Christian life and Christian service. Instruction is not only needful but necessary, for giving is a fundamental part of the Christian Gospel. Not that the sinner is required to give anything for salvation. On the other hand, he is to receive; for "as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name" (John 1:12): but there is a Gospel for the saint as well as for the sinner. And giving is no small part of it.

Some years ago the writer preached a series of Sunday morning sermons on "Christian Stewardship," closing the series with a sermon on "The Stewardship of Money." The following Sunday one of the aged saints in public prayer thanked the Lord that the pastor had finished his sermons on money and the people would now have the opportunity of hearing the Gospel again.

If giving is excluded, then we have no Gospel at all. "God so loved the world that he gave." "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

"I gave my life for thee;

What hast thou given for me?"

In 2 Cor. 8 and 9 we have a remarkably lucid setting forth of the gospel of giving in its relation to money. Among other things these three are taught in these chapters:

1. Christian giving is a grace. "Therefore, as ye abound in everything, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also. As a grace it has its source in the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus on Calvary, (8:9) and it flows from a disposition in the giver created by the Holy Spirit. "For if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his" (Romans 8:9). No giving without that source and that disposition, however liberal it may be, can truly be called Christian giving.

2. In contrast with the law, which imposed the giving of the tenth as a requirement, Christian giving is voluntary and a test of sincerity and love. "I speak not by commandment but . . . to prove the sincerity of your love" (8:8).

Paul's expression in Rom. 6:14, "Ye are not under the law but under grace," that so many quote as an excuse for not giving a tenth of their income, does not mean that the law has in any sense been abrogated, and therefore, the Christian, under grace, has no obligation to keep it. It means that, dispensationally, the age of law has been succeeded by the age of grace; and as applied to the believer's conduct, what God required under the law, he freely furnishes now, through Christ, under grace. The believer's motive is no longer the requirement of the law but the privilege of grace.

Primarily, the law required righteousness. Man in his fallen condition could not furnish it. Under grace God furnished man freely the righteousness the law required. "Christ is made unto us righteousness." "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth."

Under law, every believing Jew was required to give a tenth of all. Under grace, the believer—who is properly instructed by the Word and is led by the Spirit—as a matter of privilege, of love for Christ, and as a test of sincerity, will freely give not only a tenth of all, but more, "according as God hath prospered him." The law of Moses is no longer his standard, but the law of love and privilege in Christ Jesus. This does not mean that he disregards or fails to keep the law, but "in Christ Jesus" he lives above it and more than keeps it.

A little girl had a bright silver dollar given her. She asked her father to change it into dimes. He gave her ten dimes, and the two walked to church together. The father noticed the daughter put two dimes in the collection plate. "Why," said the father, "I thought you gave a tenth to the Lord." "Yes," she replied, "that tenth belongs to him, and I can't give him what is his own. So if I give him anything I have to give him what is mine." She understood one of the foundation principles of Christian giving.

3. Christian giving always enriches the giver, and makes larger gifts possible (9:7-11). On the other hand, "There is that withholdeth more than is meet and it tendeth to poverty."

Was not Ambrose right, who in the fourth century said: "The Lord commands our tithe to be paid every year. He has given you nine parts, but he has reserved the tenth for Himself; and if you give not the tenth part to Him, He will take from you the nine parts. Whosoever is not willing to give those tithes to God which he has kept back, fears not God and knows not what true repentance and confession means."

"One-tenth of all shall be holy unto the Lord." When the one-tenth is so recognized and so used, the nine-tenths are doubly blessed. Many illustrations of this in the lives of individuals might be cited. I refer to one.

Dr. W. B. Riley, noted preacher, Bible teacher, evangelist, and president of the Northwestern Bible Institute gives this personal testimony: "Twenty-six years ago I had a salary of $600. Five people were dependent upon me for support, and two of those, myself included, at school. Tithing seemed an impossibility. But after much prayer, I could see no other way and I laid aside $60 of the $600—sacred unto the Lord. From that moment until this I think I have known no year in which less than the tenth of all possible incomes was not put into his treasury. His blessing has been beyond my desert. Under no circumstances could I be persuaded to turn back from the divine order and deny myself this blessed privilege."

The same principle holds true in churches. In 1895 a part of the membership of Wesley Chapel, Cincinnati, Ohio, adopted the tithing system for financing their church. After a few years it was revealed that the tithers in proportion to their number had given just twenty-four times as much for every one adopting it as those who contributed by other means. The church, located in the heart of the city, regarded by many as dead and ready to be deserted at the time this Scriptural plan was adopted, was suddenly and splendidly revived, and became an example for all the Methodist churches in that section.

It is well to follow any plan our Lord has given or has confirmed in His Word. This is His plan. He sanctioned it. See Matthew 23:23. He never made a mistake.

The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself. Prov. 11:25.

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble.

The Lord will preserve him and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth: and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies.

The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing: thou wilt make all his bed in sickness. Ps. 41:1-3.

WISH AND WORK.

The boy who's always wishing

That this or that might be,
But never tries his mettle,
Is the boy that's bound to see
His plans all come to failure,

His hopes end in defeat;
For that's what comes when wishing
And working fail to meet.

The boy who wishes this thing

Or that thing with a will
That spurs him on to action
And keeps him trying still
When effort meets with failure,
Will some day surely win;
For he works out what he wishes,
And that's where "luck" comes in.

The "luck" that I believe in

Is that which comes with work,
And no one ever finds it

Who's content to wish and shirk:
The man the world calls "lucky"

Will tell you, every one,
That success comes, not by wishing
But by hard work, bravely done.

I have traveled a good deal, but I never found a happy backslider in my life. I never knew a man who was really born of God that ever could find the world satisfy him afterward. Do you think the prodigal son was satisfied in that foreign country? Ask the prodigals today if they are truly happy. You know they are not. "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked."—Moody.

(Consecration meeting.)

A Consecration Meeting.

This is our Consecration Meeting. At this meeting a special effort should be made to have everybody present take a part. Indeed this effort should be made at every meeting as that is the promise we make when we join the society, and we do not keep our pledge if we do not take a part. The leader should study plans to help and make it possible for each member present to find it as easy as possible to take part. A pledge is not a light thing and should not be broken it at all avoidable. In each meeting some kind of a general exercise should be arranged in which all present could take part so that the timid members have a chance to keep their pledge and yet not be conspicuous in the meeting until they get used to hearing their own voice in public. Where this general exercise is not practical these members who find it hard to take a part in a public meeting should be sought out and parts—easy parts—given them so that they will get accustomed to taking a part without help.

These general exercises should be repeating the Scripture lesson together or having those who find it hard or who seldom take part, with a few others, stand and read consecutively, or one follow the other until the portion of Scripture is read. If there are not enough verses in the special lesson, have some of the daily readings read. Repeating the pledge together—this especially in Consecration Meetings is another good way to help all take a part. It is good also for keeping the pledge before us and reminding us of just what we have promised.

Preparing for a Christian Endeavor meeting should be given much time, thought, work and prayer, for a great deal of the responsibility for each taking a part rests with the leader as well as the responsibility for a helpful and profitable meeting does. First of all the prayer meeting committee should have these backward members in mind and help the leader to form plans to lead out in this part of the program for the meeting. This is one of the greatest opportunities for friendliness to each other that we will have in our Christian Endeavor work.

The Cost of Being a Friend.

The price of friendliness is measured only by the need of the friend. It may be only the need of encouragement in life's tasks. A great many people with even a little encouragement would undertake greater things and so make a greater life. Others are undertaking great things and failing for the lack of encouragement from those from whom they have a right to expect such encouragement. Some one has put the thought this way, "No dog is so big but that a pat on the head helps him wag his tail more briskly."

The legal tender in which the price must be paid is a part of yourself and may be named time, sacrifice, service, charity, understanding or sympathy according to the need to be met. Very seldom is cash needed but a true friend will not flinch even though his friendship touches his pocket book, if he does he is unworthy. R. P. Anderson tells of two friends in business in the same city. One failed. The other paid all his debts and started him in business again. That was a rare friendship, costing something, but worth all it cost.

The Up-Keep.

Buildings, automobiles—all useful property has a certain amount of necessary repairs in order to keep them in good condition and to have them serve the best purposes. Sometimes the upkeep of buildings is more than the buildings are worth and good business disposes of them.

There is an upkeep to friendships that is necessary; these are unselfishness, courtesy, mutual helpfulness, thoughtfulness, kindness. And sometimes there are others that cost too much and the friendliness should cease. Whenever a friendship is detrimental to character, or when it leads to those things that affect our Christian life then it should be dropped at once, the upkeep is too great.

Taught in the Text.

John 15:13. Sacrifice is the law of friendliness. The proof of our love for our fellow-men, which is the basis of our friendliness to him, is the effort we are willing to make for him, and for his sake. Jesus proved his friendliness to all mankind by laying down his life for us all. Do the most that we can, and we can pay no higher price to others, for his sake.

John 15:14. This contains the words that set the standard for true Christian friendliness. "Ye are my friends, if ye do the things which I have commanded you." This is a big contract for every one of us, but it is the one that our Master lays upon us. Our greatest difficulty lies in the fact that we only try to keep some of His commandments, while he expects us to strive to keep them all. He went all the way for us. Can we afford to do less for Him?

1 Sam. 20:1-4, 16-42. Jonathan was willing to go the limit for David, his best friend, "Whosoever thy soul desireth" was the extent to which he was willing to carry his friendship. The gauge of our friendliness is always the needs of our friends, and we must be willing to go the limit with them. Jonathan saved David's life, which was in danger from his own father, and thus proved that no price was too high for him to pay.

11 Sam. 1:26. David's tribute to Jonathan after Jonathan's death is beautiful. No finer words have ever been spoken. "Very pleasant thou hast been unto me; thy love to me was wonderful," is the outpouring of his heart in grief and thankfulness for having had such a friend. How truly do we, too, feel the passing of those who have been our friends. They will never be forgotten. Their memories will be an ever-increasing source of power in our lives.

Taught in Life.

Friendliness is costly, and it should be. That which is cheap is usually of little value; while that which comes high is of greater value. Cheap friendliness is the ruination of the world, while costly friendliness forms the very basic principle of democracy and of Christianity. As we look around us, in going about our daily tasks, we are amazed at the influence exerted by vital friendships in every relation of life.

We have been reminded time and again during the past year and a half, as we have studied our topics, that Jesus was the greatest friend humanity ever had. It would be useless for Him to expect us to be true friends, if He had not proved to us its worth-while-ness—yes, its necessity. So we have a High Priest whom we can follow, and one who will help us to open our hearts to the indwelling spirit of true friendliness.

Being a true friend to another means exerting the right influence over him, sometimes at the risk of losing his friendship. If he is going wrong, I am a poor friend, if I do not do my very best to set him right. He may misunderstand me, but usually not for long. After sober thought, he will readily see that what I did, in calling his attention to a wrongdoing, was for his own good. Then he will be a better friend than ever.

Friendliness costs Christianity—I must be a Christian in deed and in truth if I expect to be a true friend to anybody. More than that, I must never be satisfied until I have done my best to make a Christian out of my friends. This means that I must first become a true friend to them; then introduce them, in unmistakable terms, to my best friend, Jesus, the Savior of us all.

Friendliness means self-denial. There are some things I can not do if I am a true friend to others. They can not be enumerated, for they are different in various cases; but you know what they are for you, and I know what they are for me. Give them up gladly, if they are wrong; and your friendliness towards others will be multiplied many-fold. Retain them, and your influence will be for bad instead of good.

JOHN 3:16.

It was so like Him to have given all.

Men trade or sell and hope to reap a gain; His gift was poured alike on great and small—His only garner was a world of pain.

Is it because men bargain here below

They cannot grasp the message, "Stoop and take"?

'Twas spoken nineteen hundred years ago—How long, in pity, must that Great Heart break?

—Helen Frazee-Bower.

Be assured that, although men of eminent genius have been guilty of all other vices, none worthy of more than a secondary name has ever been a gamester. Either an excess of avarice or a deficiency of what, in physics, is called excitability, is the cause of it; neither of which can exist in the same bosom with genius, with patriotism, or with virtue.—Landon.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT. Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

The Executive Board of the North Carolina Branch are keenly interested in the work of the young people in our Burlington church, so at the last session Mrs. S. W. Taylor was urged to write an article for our department. We appreciate greatly the article Mrs. Taylor has prepared for us. Will you read it carefully and then ask yourself, Why isn't my church doing that much too? May we set about the task and have a good report for the annual meeting in April.

If our children and young people are not taught mission work, what can we expect of our auxiliaries in the future years?

Please read at your next meeting Mrs. Taylor's account of their work, which follows.

At the request of the Executive Committee of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies which met in Greensboro recently, I will try to tell something of the missionary activities among the young people of our church.

Starting with the babies, we have both the Precious Jewels and Buds of Hope, the latter having just recently been organized. Both bands are in charge of capable leaders.

The children between the ages of six and 12 are organized to do both home and foreign work and meet at the same time. We have a home treasurer and a foreign treasurer who collect their dues and keep their funds entirely separate. A great many of the children have their names on both rolls and pay 5c a month to each, but if they feel that they cannot belong to both, they take their choice, and are as much a member of the society if they belong to only one, as if they belonged to both. They are drilled on both home and foreign work so that they may not grow "one-sided." They have raised nearly $100 this year and their money, aside from the dues, is divided between the two causes. It is a real inspiration to attend their meetings and see how familiar they are with the names of the missionaries abroad and the work and workers at home. They pay a scholarship in India at a cost of $35 and have the name and picture of their little girl.

The Mission Band has not such a large enrollment but it has some very faithful workers and has good leadership. They, too, have the two rolls and divide their money between the two causes just as the younger children. They have raised $100 this year, which is very fine for their enrollment. They have recently completed the study book, "The Honorable Japanese Fan," and they, too, pay a scholarship in India at a cost of $35, and have the little girl's name and picture. We have so many girls in our church who ought to belong to this Mission Band but some way we can not get them.

The Young Woman's Auxiliary meets in the Hut once a month for supper and their business meeting. A committee is appointed each month to prepare supper for the next month and the cost of the supper is divided between the members. The girls come to the Hut direct from their work and have a delightful time socially before the meeting begins. They use a study book and always have a good program. They set as their goal for this year $200, and they have already gone beyond their goal and hardly know how to come. They want to work at the beginning of the year and have kept steadily at it, and that is the secret of their success. They also have the two rolls, home and foreign, and divide their funds. They pay $50 a year toward the support of a child in the Children's Home and pay a scholarship in China at a cost of $50. They are doing the kind of work that counts because they are informing themselves on missions, and information always creates interest.

Each of these young people's societies gave Miss Theresa Frank a shower before she sailed for India, consisting of handkerchiefs by the children, toilet articles by the Mission Band, and underwear by the Y. W. A. The women's societies also contributed a number of articles for this shower.

The greatest difficulty in maintaining young people's societies is in securing efficient leaders, but it pays the biggest dividends of any investment we can make for our church.

Branch meeting will soon be here. Let's see how many new young people's societies we can report at that time, not all home, not all foreign, but BOTH. Mrs. S. W. Taylor.

Burlington, N. C.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of West End church met at the home of Mrs. Ida Moore for the February meeting. Notwithstanding a downpour of rain half an hour previous to the meeting, there was a good attendance. Devotionals were conducted by Mrs. C. A. Cooper; chapter in the study book, Mrs. S. E. Ratledge; Question Box, Mrs. E. A. Pleasants. Reports were received from secretaries. The hostess served sandwiches and coffee.

District Missionary Rally.

Mrs. A. G. Dixon was present for our missionary rally Sunday afternoon, February the 15th, and presented the work in a most interesting manner. The representation was good and much interest in the work shown.

One new society for this district was reported and it was organized in a very unique way. This society is to be known as The Clyde Auman (Foreign) Missionary Society of Fair Grove Church and the charter members are Clyde Auman of Japan, a life member (this membership being contributed by relatives of his now living in High Point) and ten honorary members, people formerly living near or connected with this church but now living in other places. No doubt a number of active members will be added to the list. Prospects are good for at least one other organization at an early date.

Esther Ross, Chairman Sixth District.

Important Items for W. F. M. S.

Most of our auxiliaries will have held their Thank-Offering services by the time this is in print, but I hope if you have not you will try to do so soon. Mrs. East writes that we are behind with our pledges and must raise a large Thank-offering to make it up. The past four years it did not count on the local church budget, this year it does count.

This is the only fund we have for building purposes and we need it badly. In addition to other things we just must have a girls' school building at Dhulia, India. Now Dhulia seems very near to North Carolina the last two years and we feel like we are helping out very own when we help them.

We have so very much to be thankful for in all our fields of work. The country in and around Kalgan, China, has passed through two terrible ordeals in less than a year. Last summer the great flood ruined crops and left many people homeless and destitute and more than 3,000 lives were lost; but our mission people were all unharmed and able to reach out and help others and bring them into the shelter of our compound.

In December a small newspaper notice read, "The Chinese soldiers are looting and burning Kalgan." We did not read in those words the terror and anxiety of our missionaries and the native Christians. We did not hear the shots nor see the Bible women and school children and servants come crying into the mission house to sit in darkness nearly all night, and watch the fires of burning buildings all around and fear they would be the next. We did not see dear brave Dr. Fleagle defy the flying bullets and rush out to the Bible school to care for Mrs. Kao who was alone there—sick and almost helpless, but who was not afraid because God was with her. We can hardly realize how terrible it was. Only the name of Jesus saved our compound and next day it was again a refuge for those who were homeless and helpless and afraid. Are you not glad you helped to maintain such a refuge? Do you not want to express your gratitude by giving more to help our brave missionaries to care for refugees in times of stress, and in this way preach the gospel to many they would not otherwise reach?

We have sent out more missionaries the past year than ever before, and we are thankful they have been kept from harm during their journeys and we want to express our thanks by making it a little easier for them to do the work they are doing in the name of Christ and the Methodist Protestant church. It is my work and your work they are doing.

February 27 has been designated as a day of prayer for missions. This is to be observed throughout the United States and Canada. I hope each auxiliary in our branch will observe this day. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." We can do nothing without prayer, we can do all things through prayer.

Our branch meeting will be held in Winston-Salem, April 7-9. We have only a few weeks more in which to raise our budget of $6,000. We have a third of it yet to raise.

I am writing Miss Forrest to come to our State about the 21st of February. She can spend about three weeks here. We want her to strengthen some of our weak societies and organize some new ones. Please write me at once if you need her services and if you can use her on week-days. There will be very few Sundays. I wish she might go somewhere each day she is in our branch. Talk it over next Sunday, or before, and let me hear from you. I hope each auxiliary will send a good report to the branch meeting.

Mrs. Geo. R. Brown.

THE ELEPHANT'S KEEPER.

"Now is it time for the train?" demanded Paul. It was the tenth time that he had asked the question.

"In a few minutes now," answered his mother.

"Then I can go," Paul shouted.

"Now you may go," agreed his mother. "Don't get in daddy's way or in the animals' way either, will you?"

"I'll try not to," Paul promised. "But you can't tell when it's animals. I love animals. When I'm as big as daddy I'm going to be an elephant trainer just like him. I guess I could 'most manage an elephant now."

His mother laughed and kissed him. "Better leave it to daddy yet awhile. But I hope that you will grow into as brave and good a man as daddy."

"How can I learn to do that?" Paul asked.

"By being a brave, good boy. There's the whistle. Run!"

Without waiting for his hat, Paul dashed out of the house and down the street to the station to meet the train that was bringing the circus animals back to Bridgeport to their winter home. It was always to Paul the most exciting day of the year, not only because it brought his father back to him.

The train came in and the animal care were shunted down the track into the circus yard. No one was allowed in the yard except those that had the care of the animals, but everyone knew Paul and he skipped in without any trouble.

"Where's my daddy?" he asked of the first man he met. It happened to be old Mike, who loved to tease.

"Sure, your daddy decided not to come back," he said.

"Isn't he ever coming back?" Paul asked.

"You ask him the next time you see him," Mike laughed. He was only teasing, for Paul's father had come on the train and was busy just now with an elephant that needed his attention.

Mike went his way and Paul loitered through the yard. If his father had not come, there wasn't much fun in the animals.

One after another the beasts found their places in their homes, but there was no father for Paul. He had a queer disappointed feeling in his throat as he turned to go home. He wanted very much to cry, but he remembered what his mother had said. If he wanted to be a brave man he must be a brave boy, and brave boys never cried. He tried to whistle but did not get on very well, and then as he turned a corner he stopped.

There, close to flat car, all alone, lay Japhet, the biggest elephant, the one his father had the most trouble with. Japhet looked as if he could give trouble now, for his trunk was moving in a cross sort of a way.

Paul ran back and called but no one came. Every one was in another part of the yard.

Back to Japhet came Paul, his heart beating fast. Japhet was moving now, he was going to get up, and once on his feet without any one to control him, he would be on the rampage. He might hurt somebody.

"O daddy, daddy! where are you?" cried Paul. "It's your elephant. They'll blame you if he hurts any one. Lie down, Japhet!"

Japhet recognized Paul, for he had often seen him before, but he wasn't going to lie down for a word from a boy. If any one wanted him to lie down, let him give the proper signal by tapping his right ear. He made another move to get up.

Paul knew the signal for lying down, but Japhet's big ear was far out of his reach. There was no long stick about that would reach so far; only a tiny twig that Paul picked up.

"What can I do?" he cried. "It's daddy's elephant and daddy isn't here, so I've got to keep Japhet from going on the rampage."

Then as Paul saw how close Japhet lay to the flat car he had a sudden thought. Still holding his twig, he scrambled up on the car and with a running jump landed on the big elephant's back. Japhet paused in astonishment at this unexpected visitor, and Paul ran up the broad back as if it were a hill and came down flat astride the elephant's neck.

Then Japhet began to rise and Paul thought that he was going to have a horseback ride on a rampaging elephant. He looked out anxiously for help, but no one was near. Paul leaned forward and with his switch gently tapped the old elephant's right ear.

Old Japhet stood stockstill a moment on his knees, and then obeying the order that he knew from his master's son, he sank slowly down again. He was not going to rampage this time.

Paul sat on his high perch until some one came running. It was his father, who had just found out that no one had looked after Japhet, and who came expecting to find the old elephant doing his worst. When he saw Japhet lying like a meek lamb with Paul on his back he gave one shout of joy and held out his arms to his son. Paul slid down into them.

"How did you get up there?" he asked Paul.

"From the car," Paul said. "He was going to rampage and you weren't here, and I had to reach his ear. He minded me, didn't he? But I'm glad you came, daddy, for he's awfully high up."

His father held him very close. "You're your father's son," he said. "It's the pluckiest thing I ever heard of a kid doing."

Japhet was put in his own safe place then, and Paul and his father raced home to his mother.

"Here's the new elephant keeper," his father told her, "and I tell you what, he's the bravest man in the whole bunch of us."—The China Christian Advocate.

VIRGINIA'S SURPRISE PARTY.

"Deary me! deary me! Such a worry as I'm in!" exclaimed Granny Mullen. Virginia, who was crossing the Mullen farmyard, having waded up the brook, paused at the back door and called out anxiously:

"What kind of trouble is it, Granny Mullen?"

Starled, the little old lady slammed to her oven door, and came out on to the porch.

"Trouble enough, with the children having a party this afternoon and I promising to make the little cakes and the cream puffs. Now the hens have stolen a nest in the haymow, and I'm too stiff-jointed to climb the likes of that," she explained.

A party! Virginia loved parties, and she had not been invited to this one. She hadn't lived in the village many weeks, but why should they have left her out? She felt a lump in her throat, and she remembered that she had caught the boys and girls whispering together often that week at school. When they had seen her coming they had run away laughing.

"Well, I'm sorry, but there won't be any party today. I can't make little cakes and cream puffs without eggs!" commented Granny Mullen, the cake woman.

All the village came to Granny Mullen to have their wedding cakes and Christmas cakes made, and no one ever thought of having a party without having Granny Mullen making the sweets.

Suddenly Virginia laughed out loud. Why couldn't she climb the haymow and hunt the eggs? But it wasn't her party, and she hadn't been asked. Still it was too bad to spoil a party just because there weren't any eggs in the pantry, and plenty in the haymow.

"Give me a basket, Granny, and let me climb the haymow," offered Virginia.

"Bless your heart, honey, think you can? I was afraid I couldn't get them till grandpa came home tonight," Granny Mullen answered, taking down from a nail a little red basket.

Virginia, with the basket clutched in her fingers, skipped across the barnyard to the stable. A cackling hen flew out through the open doors as she ran across to the haymow. How could she ever get on top? Her bright eyes searched the dim barn; then catching sight of a ladder half-buried in hay, she saw that it led straight to the top.

Very slowly, one step at a time, for Virginia was not used to ladders and haymows, she crawled up rung upon rung. A little breathless, she dropped into the depths of the sweet-smelling hay. Shaking the hayseed out of her hair, she stumbled forward, searching for nests. Ah, here were two eggs! and here another nest with more, and still another nest, and another! She soon had a dozen—surely enough eggs to make cream puffs for the party. Now she must get down.

Suddenly she leaned over the edge and looked across the barn. She could not climb down the ladder and carry the basket of eggs. She had used both her hands in climbing up. Away in the opposite corner the hay was heaped in a mound on the floor, and built clear to the mow where she stood. What fun it would be to slide down. But the eggs would smash all to pieces.

Perhaps if she packed the soft hay all around them they might not break. So she took them out and, wrapping each, laid them back in the basket. Then she put more hay on top.

Squatting on the edge of the mow, with the basket held firmly in her dimpled hands, she slipped easily over the side. She felt as though she were sinking, sinking; then suddenly she came to a stop. She was on the barn floor and half buried in the mound of hay.

With a funny little shake she scrambled to her feet, and ran out of the barn to the farmhouse. Granny Mullen unpacked the eggs, laughing happily.

"Thanks, deary," she exclaimed, "and I hope they give you a good share of the little cakes at the party."

But Virginia could not even smile in response, for she had not been invited to the party.

It was late in the afternoon, as she snuggled up in the crab-apple tree, half asleep, that she heard mother calling excitedly:

"Ginnie, Ginnie, Ginnie, come quick. Somebody is here to see you."

Her eyes all starry, Virginia ran to the garden, and there, all dressed in their Sunday best, romped the boys and girls of the village. They were laughing at her surprised face, and calling for games. Mother was spreading a snowy cloth under the trees and a little girl in blue was counting out Granny Mullen's cream puffs.

"Ginney, Ginney, did we surprise you?" chorused the children. Virginia laughed aloud. The party had been for her after all, and just suppose she hadn't hunted the eggs in Granny Mullen's haymow?—Exchange.

THE HOOP RACE.

Doris was sitting on the fence, looking at her doll carriage where Rosalind's head was peeping from the covers.

"It's too bad; it's too bad!" and Doris shook her head. "I don't see how you can go to the garden party without a party dress."

Suddenly she heard three "hoo-hoos," and looking down the road, she saw three playmates. They were laughing gayly and rolling their hoops.

"All ready for the party this afternoon?" they asked.

Doris shook her head. "No," she said.

"What is the matter?"

"Something very strange has happened. I was sewing some little blue ribbons on Rosalind's party dress here in the yard when mother called me. I put down my sewing and ran into the house. When I came back the dress had disappeared."

"Oh!" they exclaimed.

"My Linda doll has two party dresses," said Elsie. "Rosalind may have her choice."

Doris looked at her doll carriage and thought how disappointed Rosalind would be if she didn't go to the party. "Thank you," she said at last, but she had to choke back a sob, for she had counted on Rosalind's wearing the new dress.

"Now come," pleaded Elsie. "Get your hoop, for we are to have a race. And to make it more exciting we are going to take different paths from the starting point back to the finish at my house. Mother has some new cookies and cold milk waiting for us. Don't you think that that will be fun?"

"But you forgot the best part of it," said Barbara. "Each of us is to take something back that has attracted her on the way. It may be an apple or a flower or anything."

"Yes, and the one that brings back the best thing gets a gingerbread man," added Elsie.

Doris ran for her hoop. "There's no use sulking about Rosalind's dress," she said to herself, and when she joined her little friends her face was as pleasant and smiling as it could be.

"Now all get in line," ordered Elsie. "You take the path that leads over the brook, Janie. You, Barbara, go down the mill road; and you, Doris, go in the direction of the saw-mill. I shall go this way," and she pointed. "Now—ready—go!"

Laughing and waving at one another, they separated.

It was pleasant to Doris to hear her hoop humming over the path. There were many pretty things to notice—the trees, with branches bent so low that she could easily have picked their leaves; pretty flowers that nodded gayly, and sparkling stones. Doris couldn't decide just what she wanted to take back.

Whir-r-r, whir-r-r went the hoop; tap, tap, went the hoopstick. Oh, what fun, and how fast Doris went! Up a hill, down a hill; then she came to the road that led near the saw-mill. She slowed down a little because there was a cart ahead filled with brush and small trees.

The cart came to a standstill; so did Doris. She had found nothing to take back from the race. Then she glanced at the cart; she stared, for there in one of the little trees was her prize. She picked it up and started on her way again.

Whir-r-r, whir-r-r, tap, tap, the hoop and Doris hurried on to Elsie's house.

The three other little girls had arrived and were waiting for her. "Hurry, hurry!" they said. "We are going to have cookies now and then show our prizes," said Elsie.

Doris threw down her hoop and danced about. She hugged each little girl in turn. "Oh, oh, I can't wait. I must show you mine right now," and she held up a little white dress with blue ribbons.

"Why, Doris!" they exclaimed.

"It is Rosalind's party dress," and Doris told the others where she had found it. "I remember now that the cart turned in at the gate just as my mother called me and some of the branches must have picked up the dress."

How they all laughed! Then they agreed that Doris had rightfully won the gingerbread man. It was the best prize found in the hoop race because it made everybody happy. —Mary A. Bowers in The Youth's Companion.

THANKFULNESS.

I'm thankful there's a golden sun
To creep across the blue,
And puffs of pearly cloud that it Comes slyly peeping through.

I'm thankful for the singing birds,
And for the flowers that fling
Their fragrance all about the world
To sweeten everything.

I'm thankful that these gifts are given
By Him who loves to bless,
And happy that I have a heart
To fill with thankfulness.

THE FIRST NEWSPAPER.

As you read your newspaper every day do you ever wonder when the first newspaper was printed?

In ancient Rome an official gazette, called Acta Diurna, was issued under the management and authority of the government and posted up daily in some prominent place in the city.

In Venice a paper of public intelligence called Gazetta was published in 1620.

In England the first weekly newspaper was published by Nathaniel Butler in 1622, and the first daily newspaper in 1709.

In France the first weekly newspaper was published in 1631 and the first daily newspaper in 1777.

In America at Boston a newspaper was published in 1690.

In Ireland the first newspaper called Pue's Occurrences appeared in 1700 and the oldest Dublin paper, The Freeman's Journal, in 1775.

In Germany the first newspaper was published in 1715.

In Turkey the first newspaper was published in 1795.

In Australia the first newspaper appeared in 1803.—Selected.

THERE IS A GOD.

The following poem was written by John Faris Smith probably about 1842, in a cousin's autograph album. He was about 20 years of age at the time. Later he entered the ministry and became pastor of the Presbyterian church at Vincennes, Indiana. He left this charge to become a chaplain in the United States Army during the Civil War. In the army he contracted camp fever, from which he never recovered. He came to the old Smith homestead, in Chanceford township, York county, Pa. There he died, and was buried among his kindred in Chanceford cemetery.

Is there a God? Yon rising sun

An answer me supplies;
And from the chambers of the earth
Proclaims it through the skies.

Is there a God? Hark! from on high
His thunder shakes the poles.

I hear His voice in every sound
And every wave that rolls.

Is there a God? With sacred fear
I upward turn my eyes.

There is—each glittering lamp of light,
There is—my soul replies.

UNSELFISH SERVICE.

Of this we may be sure: nothing brings into one's own life such a powerful lift to higher levels as the doing of individual work for others. It is bound to raise one's own standards of life and conduct. It is the most effective safeguard against personal failure that we can ever find. The best way to conquer self is to forget self in an effort to help "the other fellow."—Selected.

At this time 59 charges have been heard from on one or the other of the budgets. This is fine. You will notice that some of the charges that are on this list were not heard from at all last year. Somebody must have moved—whether in or out would be interesting to know.

This leaves only 23 not yet reporting. Now, my dear pastor and people, we are expecting to hear from you next week. The conference said these budgets should be paid and sent to the church treasurer monthly. The every-member canvass makes this possible, and if you have not yet completed that, hurry up, get it done and let us hear from you. You are law-abiding Methodist Protestants. You helped make the law. (Lost, four months of the conference year.) Our missionary work is suffering.

Some splendid gains have been made. Richland enters at 29, North Davidson at 33, Randleman at 37 and Yarboro at 42. A number moved up in the ranks to better places. We are sorry to see any one losing their places but glad for those who are forging ahead to promotion. Just here let us paraphrase a part of Rev. 3:11—"Hold fast that which thou hast, that no charge take thy place." Men, these budgets are our task for the Master. Let us do it well.

Yours for a full roll,

A. G. Dixon.

Cid, South Davidson.—Rev. W. L. Carson was at Cid last Sunday at 2:30 and delivered a most excellent sermon. There were right many out. Our Sunday school is doing fairly well, but bad weather and a lot of sickness around and several deaths have accounted for some of the absences.

Mrs. Wm. Hughes passed away gently and was buried at Pleasant Grove. Our pastor conducted the funeral. She was 74 years, eight months and seven days old. She did not belong to any church.

The cottage prayer services are still going on. It was at Mr. Ben Parrish's last Saturday night and tonight (Saturday) it will be at Mr. Carl Easter's.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Craver are now confined to their home with "flu;" hope for a speedy recovery.

Sunday evening. The prayer service at Mr. Carl Easter's was largely attended; spiritual interest real good; three penitents.

Sunday school at Cid today was very encouraging. It numbered 50 and one year ago it was 50. Brother Leonard and Brother Craver, superintendent and assistant, were both absent on account of sickness, and Mrs. N. W. Lanier acted pro tem.

Mr. Avery Woodell delivered an able sermon at Cid today. Text—"Who shall be able to stand?" There was a lot of spiritual interest manifested. Brother Woodell surely is improving in the ministerial work.

Mrs. Walter Hunt is right sick with pneumonia.

We were glad to have Mr. and Mrs. Pervey Alberson and family to worship with us at Cid today.

We have planned to have our special meeting at Cid the third Sunday in April. Brethren, pray for a revival of religion and that many may be brought to Christ.

The nominees for delegate to the annual conference are Mr. R. L. Hunt of Jerusalem and a Mr. Koontz from West Lexington.

We were glad to see in the Herald that Mt. Pleasant had got on the map once more. One of our sister churches, once was. Yours as a worker in His vineyard, Reporter.

Randleman Charge.—The general attendance at Sunday school, prayer meeting and church service at all four of the churches is encouraging. The interest also is good. Mrs. A. G. Dixon and Mr. F. R. Stout were on this charge recently, and presented the College, with gratifying results.

We are hampered and hindered exceedingly by an almost impassable detour leading to the three churches across the river. A new bridge is in process of construction, as is also a hard-surface road running by, or near to, three churches. It will be late in the year before the road will be open. Then we will have ideal roads to each church.

In the meantime we will endeavor to do our best. Wm. H. Neese.

Mt. Lebanon, Randleman Circuit.—Our Sunday school met February 1 with 89 present; collection, $6.78. Mrs. A. G. Dixon made a brief talk on Sunday school work.

Immediately after Sunday school Mrs. Dixon preached a splendid sermon on "The Crucifixion." She was in the interest of funds for the M. P. College. The Philathea class responded with a very large pledge in this. We are always glad to have Mrs. Dixon with us and a visit from her will be appreciated any time.

We are sorry to say our pastor's wife, Mrs. W. H. Neese, does not seem to improve much.

Liberty, Davidson Circuit.—Our pastor was with us at the usual time the third Sunday evening. He preached for us an interesting sermon. He will also be with us the fourth Sunday.

One of our members was happily married the second Sunday—Mr. Jasper Johnson, son of H. L. Johnson, to Miss Vera Shaw, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Shaw. The many friends wish for them a long and happy life. Death has called from us a near neighbor, Mrs. Lizzie Davis. She is survived by four children. She has been a faithful member at Liberty for some time. Also called "Aunt Mint Mason." She leaves two children, sixteen grandchildren, three great grandchildren. May the dear Lord bless all the bereaved.

With best wishes to all, Annie Hill.

Kernersville Charge.—Some time has passed since the readers have heard from this charge. I have been depending on the reporters at the different churches to report, but for some reason they have been silent for several weeks.

We are encouraged with progress we have made up to the present. There is, as we see it, a great opportunity for both pastor and people on this charge. The people are attentive to the word, and kind to the pastor. We have recently received several tokens of kindness which we appreciate very much. One good sister of Ai church gave us quite a supply of canned goods, which we appreciate more than words can express.

On February 3 our church at Kernersville was made sad. Death entered the home of Brother and Sister Whicker and claimed their infant son, Gypsie. The sympathy of the entire community goes out for the grief-stricken father and mother.

Funeral services were conducted in the home by the writer, after which the little body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Kernersville. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved. Edw. Suits.

High Point.—Next Sunday, February 22, will be foreign mission day at the First Church. At the 11 o'clock service the pastor, Dr. Geo. R. Brown, will speak on the subject of missions, and at the evening hour the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of which Mrs. Geo. R. Brown is president, will hold its annual Thank-Offering Service. It is earnestly hoped that the congregation will be large, and the collection a liberal one.

Last Sunday morning, after the close of Dr. Brown's sermon, Rev. Paul S. Kennett, in a talk of eight minutes, presented a plea in behalf of the Endowment Fund for High Point College. This question, which is of vital importance to the future growth and expansion of the College, which has a splendid plant and has made a remarkable opening, should receive the approbation and loyal co-operation of every member of the church in North Carolina. It is true that it takes men of great wealth like Mr. J. B. Duke to endow Colleges, and unfortunately there are none like him in the Methodist Protestant Church in North Carolina, but as the thrifty Scotch express it, "Many a mickle makes a muckle."

Five years ago the alumnae of Salem College, for the most part women of moderate means, made pledges to the amount of $100,000 to the Endowment Fund, and 90 per cent of those pledges were paid in the space of five years. Now if these women could contribute the sum of $100,000 to their alma mater, surely the good men of the church in North Carolina can contribute $200,000, and we are looking to them to make this campaign a grand success. The fact that the College has been built is proof of the ability of our people to do great things when they set their heads and hearts to work. Now that it has been built and is functioning properly, it must be maintained, and the members of the Methodist Protestant Church of North Carolina are the people to do it. Surely the denomination will not fail in this great undertaking.

The Ladies' Aid society was delightfully entertained on Monday afternoon, February 9, at the handsome new residence of Dr. S. S. Coe in Emerywood, a recent residential development in the northern part of the city. Mrs. S. S. Coe and Mrs. D. A. Neese were associate hostesses.

The Girls' Mission Band, composed of girls from 12 to 16 years of age, held a meeting in the Philathea room at the church on Monday at four P. M. Mrs. Geo. R. Brown and the new leader, Mrs. J. D. Johnston, met with the girls and conducted the exercises. There were 12 members present, and officers for the new year will be elected in March. The girls are much pleased with their new leader, Mrs. Johnston.

Mrs. W. P. Pickett is spending a few weeks in Tampa, Fla., as the guest of their daughter, Mrs. H. S. Meredith.

Holt McPherson, a student at the University, spent the week-end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. D. McPherson.

Friends of Wyatt A. Pickens will be interested to know that he is taking a high stand at Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., where he is doing post-graduate work. For the past semester he made a grade of "A" on all subjects, five in number, which means close application and hard work. Wyatt holds both A. B. and A. M. degrees from the State University, and was prepared in High Point High School, with class of 1918. The name of his brother, Rupert T. Pickens, Jr., a senior at the University, appears on the "Dean's List," which means a success of high grades for four years, and he can attend classes whenever fancy dictates, but we are guessing that he will be on the job regularly.

February 17.

Chestnut Ridge, Orange Circuit.—Mr. Williams filled his appointment the fourth Sunday in January. On the second Sunday morning Mr. Dixon, the president of our conference, was with us. He delivered a very interesting and impressive sermon. He also presented the College proposition, and endowment fund, which was responded to very readily. The whole amount was not raised, but a good portion was, and we feel sure the remainder will be in a short time.

Our Sunday school is not doing anything at the present but we have not lost hope, and are expecting to have a bigger and better Sunday school.

We were all sorry to hear about the death of Mrs. Betty Crutchfield. She was one of the oldest members of Hebron. She has gone to wait on that golden shore where parting will be no more and the pains of death will be past.

Reporter.

Sandy Ridge, Kernersville Circuit.—Our pastor last Sunday preached a splendid sermon. Brother Suits seems to be the right man in the right place and we are hoping for a prosperous year in the up-building of God's cause. We were also very glad to have Brother Suits's good wife and daughter to worship with us.

Sunday we were very glad indeed to have these good people with us. We feel benefited by their presence. We hope they will come real often. Our Sunday school has been dropped for a few Sundays, but we are aiming to take a new start next Sunday. We hope every one will fall right in line and help out. The superintendent can not have a Sunday school without help. Let us put our shoulder to the wheel and have a real good Sunday school. We want to especially invite the older folks as well as the young. As for myself, I don't feel like it has been Sunday unless I go to Sunday school. I enjoy working in church work. So let us old and young do our best. That is what God requires of us.

Much sickness prevails among our people. We trust they may soon be well and be with us again. We are sorry to note that the condition of Mrs. W. W. Shields does not improve. She has been very sick for several weeks at her step-son's Mr. W. P. Weare, with whom she has made her home for quite a while.

Just a little bit of sunshine
Scattered in life's dreary way,
Helps to lift so many shadows
As we pass from day to day.
Smile and help some fellow creature,
He'll not forget so soon.
God will give you grace from heaven,
Dreams of sweetest bowers that bloom.
Best wishes to the Herald. Reporter.

Mt. Zion.—We hear so many so-called good fellows say during the week days that oh! the world is going to the bad and getting worse all the time. I do not believe it; when I go to old Mt. Zion and see the interest increasing every Sunday in Sunday school work I feel sure that the world is becoming more Christianized—not by every Sunday school getting more new members every Sunday altogether, but that God's real workers are doing more than ever to make the world a better place by their having lived. We are getting new members, too. I am sure when the flowers bloom and God blankets the whole earth with beauty in the spring that we shall be a part of the largest Sunday school in this section of the country. Come out, Mt. Zion folks, and, as the Master's plan was, where is thy brother? Bring new members. Then after we get the new ones enlisted let us just think that our work is just begun. Let us work harder to make the people feel that they are really receiving a hearty welcome in His name at our church. Sometimes we are criticized but Jesus Christ Himself was criticized when He was here and would doubtless be again. Let us remember this little motto:

"Not what you were but what you are,

The busy world is viewing;

The past fades like a fallen star,

What counts is what we're doing"—and go right on earnestly working, trusting and paying. May God add His blessing to every Sunday school in our conference. Yours for a real Sunday school, C. W. Allen, Burke Chapel, Connelly Springs Charge.—Brother Gurtner was with us again the third Sunday and preached another good sermon.

The first quarterly conference will be held the 21st of this month at Shiloh church. We want to ask the readers of the Herald to pray for our pastor that he may build up our church and community.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Jessie Greenhill, Reporter.

Clarke's Chapel, Weaverville Charge.—We have been handicapped in many ways since our last report to the Herald, but under the leadership of our good pastor, Rev. Fred R. Love, we are realizing our duty as Christians and beginning to do things as never before. God knew the kind of man we needed and sent us this consecrated young man to help us to a higher plane. The Holy Spirit working through him is helping us to "plant our feet on higher ground."

Two weeks ago last Sunday night we organized a Christian Endeavor society, with a membership of 31. Officers of the society are as follows: Mr. Lester Watts, president; Miss Margaret Weaver, vice president; Rev. Fred R. Love, recording secretary; Miss Alma Black, corresponding secretary. All necessary committees were appointed. We have already had two very interesting programs. Saturday afternoon, January 31, Brother Love organized a Junior Christian Endeavor, with a membership of 17. When it comes to getting little folk interested, we have never seen his equal.

Our Sunday school is growing and showing great improvement, the attendance being double what it was this time last year.

We meet every Thursday night for prayer service and Bible class, and have some wonderful lectures from Mrs. Blankenship. Also inspiring talks from others, including our pastor.

We wish to take this opportunity of again thanking our good president, Dr. A. G. Dixon, for sending us such a consecrated leader, whose light shines so brightly that it is lighting the lives of others all over our community.

We are planning a banner year's work and want the prayers of all God's people.

In His service, Reporter.

Thomasville, First Church.—Although you have not heard from us in several weeks we are still living and growing. The attendance has been fine at all the church services, in spite of the bad weather.

Brother Reynolds preached a fine sermon Sunday morning; a very large congregation, at this service. Mr. William Harmon was received into full membership from the Community church.

Our Sunday school is getting along fine under the leadership of Mr. D. R. Connell. We feel like a flock of sheep without a shepherd, when he is away. Last Sunday morning Miss Anna Class and the Junior Philathea conducted the devotional exercises of Sunday school. Next Sunday morning Mrs. A. H. Ragan and the Junior Baracas will have charge. The Senior Baraca Class have bought a new piano for their class room. They have fine singing every Sunday morning. It is also used for Senior Christian Endeavor society Sunday evenings.

The Clyde Auman society held its regular meeting last Wednesday. The meeting was late on account of the bad weather. At this meeting the ladies decided, with the help of the men, that they would have the church painted inside and out, before the revival meeting in April. Rev. N. G. Bethea, State Street, Lexington, will be the pulpit help. The Junior and Senior Christian Endeavor societies are growing both in attendance and interest. We are getting some of the members to work who have been sitting and listening to others. Last Sunday night we had a very interesting subject, "The Conquest of Selfishness." There were several good readings and the questions were answered by good snappy talk. One question, "Why is selfishness such an enemy to our greatest usefulness. It was answered by a member who had never been known to speak a word to the Christian Endeavorers. It was such a great help to me I am passing it on to others.

Success to the Herald and its readers.

Mrs. S. R. W.

Why is Selfishness Such an Enemy to Our Greatest Usefulness?

Selfishness is undue interest in oneself. If we have a selfish spirit we retard our usefulness not only to self but to others. Men's thoughts are much according to their inclinations: their discourse and speeches according to their learning and infused opinions; but their deeds are often as they have been accustomed. The mould of a man's fortune is in his own hands. To be truly happy and successful in any undertaking in this life one must lay aside self. Self-interests are not conducive to God's wishes. In this world each and every one builds a monument either for good or evil; and be it understood that this edifice that we are building will last throughout eternity. Selfishness is one of the devil's greatest working tools.

We have a great deal more kindness than is ever spoken. Barring all the selfishness that chills like the east winds of the world, the whole human family is bathed with an element of love like a fine ether. Selfishness is always seen on the surface, it may not be with dollars and cents, but may be discovered in the little acts of kindness that are overlooked; it affects all ages, and when once it makes its appearance it is hard to eradicate. Man is placed in this world to be of help to others, and in helping others he is duly rewarded for all efforts that he puts forth in this respect. You can not build the perfect palace that God intends unless you have a desire to be of benefit to others. When you put aside selfishness you take away the bars and blocks, and set the good ship free.

"Sunset and evening star, and one clear call for me,

And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

For though from out our bourne of time and place

The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my pilot face to face,
When I have crossed the bar."

Selfishness lies only with the individual, but friendship rests with the great multitude. The happy thoughts of our friends who have stood by us in gone-by days remain with us vividly, but the selfish dispositions of some we are wont to eliminate from our memory forever. God is love, for love is fulfilling the law. Heaven and earth may pass away, but the little word "love" will never die out or become less real. Love stands under and supports everything else. We cannot cultivate a selfishness that becomes a habit and have love in our hearts.

Shelby.—Last Sunday was a fairly good day in our Sunday school and church. The attendance in Sunday school was slightly smaller than usual, but the interest in the lesson seemed good.

We were glad to have as worshipers with us at the morning service Brother Carter, a former member of our church who resides in South Shelby, and Brother Williams, a member of Macedonia Methodist Protestant church on Fallston charge. Brother Williams is now a resident of Shelby and we hope to have him with us often.

The pastor gave a brief report of his work at both services last Sunday. The report covered the activities of the pastor during the first quarter ending January 31, and is as follows:

Sermons delivered, 22; prayer meetings held, five; communion services conducted, three; additions to the church, (by letter) two; removals (by letter granted), three; visits made—to members, 84; to non-members, 27; total, 111. The financial part of the report concerned the pastor's salary, which was as follows: amount received, $132.77; amount due January 31, $142.23.

Our people here deeply sympathize with Brother W. C. Wright, a member of our church and former secretary of the Sunday school, who met with a very serious accident last week. He is now in the Shelby Hospital with a crushed leg as the result of a tractor turning over on him. His recovery without the amputation of a leg is hoped for by his many friends.

Next Sunday will complete four months of the conference year. Then one-third of the conference year will have passed with not as much work accomplished as expected. Let us rally to the work and make the remaining two-thirds of the year count for the advancement of the kingdom of God.

C. B. Way, Pastor.

Draper.—Our work here is moving on splendidly considering the bad weather and sickness.

We hold three prayer meetings each week, who seem to be doing a lot of good.

We have received four members into the church since we came.

The good people here do not forget us. We have received three nice poundings since we came here.

The children gave a nice entertainment at Christmas, after which the presents were distributed. The men gave me a nice watch and chain as a gift, for which I thank them all. The ladies presented Mrs. Riddle with a nice coat, which she highly appreciates.

We are planning to hold a tent meeting here beginning the first Sunday in June.

Our second quarterly conference will be held Saturday before the fourth Sunday in February.

Pray for us that we may do much and lasting good in this work. Yours in His service.

J. S. Riddle.

—The Daily News of Greensboro last Sunday had a good picture of the new Calvary church. We hope to have one soon in the Herald.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—FEB. 22.Good Citizenship.

Lesson Text: Rom. 13:1-10, 13, 14.

Golden Text: Rom. 13:9.

The Central Truth: The law of love compels obedience to every statute, service to every need, and the enthronement of Jesus Christ in every heart and life.

Scriptural Points.

1. The "higher powers" are the powers of organized civil government. This authority to rule is delegated from God to men. Civil government is therefore a department of divine sovereignty, just as the exercise of moral law and natural forces are departments of the same.

2. Disobedience to civil statutes is more than a crime; it is a sin against God that merits damnation.

3. Righteous rulers are a terror to evil doers and a source of commendation to the obedient. Wicked rulers who execute the laws also exercise wholesome restraints against wrongdoing.

4. All rulers are the ministers of God in that they restrain wickedness and encourage righteousness.

6. The sword of penalty, that is unshielded to protect the weak and promote human welfare, is the weapon of divine justice committed to the hands of men. Punishment for violations of civil laws is simply the inevitable retribution that proceeds from the wrath of God.

7. The fear of punishment ought not to be the only, or the chief motive to good citizenship. People ought to obey the laws because it is right and in keeping with a good conscience.

8. The payment of taxes for the support of civil government is just as mandatory as obedience to its laws.

10. "Render therefore to all their dues." This is the magna charta of civil righteousness, common honesty, Christian charity and progressive civilization.

11. "Owe no man anything," that is, pay debts promptly. Contract no debts that you can't pay.

12. Love is the principal debt that can never be fully paid. God's unceasing love to us puts us under obligation to love unceasingly our fellow mankind.

13. Love is the most powerful motive to obedience. It is quite easy to do what you love to do. A man who loves righteousness is not going to commit wickedness. He who loves his neighbor is not going to murder, defraud or slander him.

14. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Self-love is the measure of neighbor love. The instinct of self-preservation, the craving for happiness, and the aspiration for immortality ought to impel us to seek the same blessings for our neighbor in as full measure as possible.

15. "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." Be clothed with His robe of righteousness. Enthroned Him as the Master of your soul and life. Let Him be all and in all.

16. "Make no provision for the flesh." Let not the fleshly nature have the least control over your conduct. Let self be denied, mortified, crucified.

Practical Points.

1. To be a good citizen is a most worthy achievement. Rigid self-government makes ones a helpful ally of civil government. "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city."

2. Good government promotes prosperity. The arm of the law protects one's holdings and encourages industry, investment, and economy.

3. Unwise debt-making, that is, going in debt for things that could be done without, is extravagance if the worst kind, and making debts without either the intention or probable ability of paying them is downright thievery. "Provide things honest in the sight of all men."

4. Sincerity of intention is the first principle of love, intercourse, and business. "Let love be without dissimulation." "The double-minded man is unstable in all his ways."

5. Don't be a tax-dodger. "Render therefore to Caesar the things that are Caesar's and to God the things that are God's."

6. Keep the carnal mind in absolute subjection to the better nature. Let not evil inclination rule the heart and spoil the life. "For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace."—The Word of Life.

Confute with candor, where you can confute,
Reason and arrogance but poorly suit.

Yourself may fall before some abler pen,
Infallibility is not for men.

With modest diffidence new schemes indite,
Be not too positive, though in the right.

—Thomas Campbell.

MODERNISM.

The Modernists are fond of telling us that modernism is the result of intellectual progress, "The ripe fruit of present-day thinking." The Unitarians, however, say it is just what they "have been teaching all along." The Jewish writers say that it is their "ancient philosophy rehashed." The Jewish Chronicle says that its teachings are "a reaction to Judaism," and that "the place for its exponents is in the synagogue."—United Presbyterian.

"FIGS OR BRAMBLES?"

Judges 9:8-15.

Beware of letting little devout minds cheat you of your own devout life. There are those active in religious things who command none of your admiration, who excel in nothing perhaps, but whose training has led them to a zeal in things religious. Their talk may become nauseating, and it will be easy to say: "If that is religion, I am not for it." But why let them determine for you what religion is and what it is not? Have you not known a man or two, or a few women, who have adorned the idea of religion and whom you would be satisfied to follow? Let them be the standard!—Selected.

A Tribute of Love.

Whereas, our Father in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from us our dear sister and co-worker, Mrs. Ida Cooke Smith, therefore be it Resolved, First, That while we cannot always see and understand our Father's dealings with us, yet we bow in humble submission to His will, believing that "sometime, somewhere we'll understand," and we will continue to trust till He shall see fit to reveal to us why.

Second, That in the going of Mrs. Smith our Ladies' Aid and Woman's Foreign Missionary societies have lost a faithful and valuable worker, one who was always ready and willing to help carry every load.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be placed upon the minutes of our society and a copy sent to the members of her family.

—President Coolidge has nominated Emory R. Buckner of New York City to be United States attorney for the Southern District of New York. Mr. Buckner is the son of Rev. J. D. M. Buckner, the principal figure in the so-called "Buckner case" about which discussion waxed warm some two years ago.

—Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps," has resigned as editor-in-chief of The Christian Herald, and has become a contributing editor. The new arrangement will give him time for work on an autobiography and for the community evangelistic services which he has been promoting in recent years.

—The year 1932 will mark the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington. President Coolidge has appointed the following committee to arrange a fitting celebration: Mrs. Anthony Wayne Cook of Pennsylvania, president-general of the Daughters of the American Revolution; Mrs. Mary Sherman of Colorado, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Henry Ford, the automobile manufacturer; Hiram MacNider of Iowa, former commander of the American Legion; C. Bascom Slemph, retiring secretary to the president; A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard University; Edgar B. Piper, Portland, Ore., publisher, and Frank A. Munsey, New York, publisher.

—The successful use of a serum that cures scarlet fever in a day or two is reported by Dr. Francis G. Blake, professor of medicine at the Yale Medical School. In seventy-two recent cases treated, Dr. Blake is quoted as saying in an address at Hartford, only one patient died from the fever. In some apparently hopeless cases a cure was effected by the use of the serum within a period of from twenty-four to forty-eight hours, it is stated.

Martin. Landis Martin, son of S. E. and Dorcas Martin, born March 9, 1912, died February 4, 1925. He leaves father, mother, five brothers and two sisters and a host of friends and relatives to mourn their loss. Landis was sick only three days, diphtheria being the cause of his death. Everything was done that loving hands could do to save his life.

He was the joy and delight of the home. He will be missed in the home and Sunday school. He was much loved by his classmates. Landis was a good boy. He told his mother before he died he loved Jesus and was going home.

The grief-stricken family have our deepest sympathy. May the Lord who doeth all things well be a comfort to them.

The funeral was conducted at Canaan church and the body was laid to rest in the cemetery. In the absence of the pastor the service was conducted by the writer.

"Why do we mourn for dying friends,
Or shake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms."

Davis.—Mrs. Lizzie Cranford Davis, born May 1, 1851, died January 30, 1925. She leaves to mourn their loss two sons, Robert Davis of Eldorado, Roscoe Davis of Linwood; two daughters, Mrs. P. L. Walker, of Liberty, and Mrs. Lindsay Russell, of Bain, N. C.; two sisters, Mrs. Elwood Stanton, of Randleman, N. C.; Mrs. Minerva Lassiter of Ashboro, N. C.; four brothers, Calvin, Jeff, John, and Sam Cranford. Her husband preceded her several years ago.

She professed faith in Christ at an early age and joined the Methodist Protestant church at Liberty, where she lived a faithful member to the end. She was very much devoted to her children, and will be greatly missed in her church and community. Our hearts go out in deep sympathy for the bereaved family.

Funeral services were conducted at Liberty M. P. church by her pastor, assisted by Brother Charlie Cranford.

"It is not death to die—

To leave this weary road,
And 'mid the brotherhood on high,
To be at home with God.

"It is not death to close

The eye long dimmed by tears,
And wake in glorious repose,
To spend eternal years.

"Jesus, Thou Prince of life,
Thy chosen cannot die!

Like Thee, they conquer in the strife,
To reign with Thee on high."

WHAT MAKES A MAN?

Denny curled one of his little legs underneath his small body and dropped his rosy cheek into his hand.

"Course," he said, "there's the old box to fill. Always is an old wood-box to fill when Saturday comes. If ma only thought so, she could fill it herself and let me do something that'll make a man. Ben Lee says it's doing stunts and going fishin', and like that, makes you a man."

Then, suddenly Denny straightened his shoulders. "I'm going to do something toward being a man," he said. "I'd like to ask pa the best thing to do, 'cause he'd know. I s'pose I might's well go fill that old box."

When he reached the kitchen, he found his mother and Aunt Sue there. The very first words that his mother said were: "Denny, I wish you'd hurry with that wood, and then Aunt Sue wants some peas. You'll have to get them for her, dear."

So, when the wood-box was full, Denny gathered the peas and started back to the house. Aunt Sue started to meet him and smiled, as she said: "Mother's half-sick, Denny boy. Try to help her as much as you can today."

Denny looked this way and that. Across the field the boys were doing stunts. Beyond the hill Ben and the other boys were fishing. Then he swallowed twice very hard. But, of course, if she is sick—then he marched up the path to the house.

After the peas were shelled there was a stack of baking dishes to be wiped. He noticed how white his mother was, and he said: "I can wash those dishes as well as wipe 'em, if I am a boy. You go and lie down. I'll stay around and answer the door."

When he caught sight of the look that came into her eyes, it seemed at once as if he was at least two inches taller. The dishes done, he wandered into the garden and weeded awhile. "Might as well," he said, "as long as I've got to stay around; then I won't have it to do tonight."

Before he knew it he was whistling. It seemed to him that he never felt so good. He had no idea it was five o'clock until he heard some one say, "Mother's been telling me our boy is the best thing ever." Looking up, he saw his father holding out his hand. "Denny," said he, and something in his voice made Denny wink very fast, "here's my hand to the lad who's on the straight, sure road to be coming a man."—Child's Gem.

COMMUNION.

"This do in remembrance of me—"

If your mother on her dying bed requested all in health and strength and giving us this beautiful Lord's Day for our trip.

"No doubt there will be many others, also, driving over the country roads today, and the that at certain times throughout the years you would place red roses on her grave, could you fail to do it? Because of your love for her nothing could keep you from complying with such a request if it were humanly possible.

Christ has asked that we commune by partaking of the bread and wine, in remembrance of His death and resurrection, when He "gave His life a ransom for many." If we love Him can we fail to comply with this simple request? "This do in remembrance of me." Simple yet so full of meaning. It gives new life and love and sends us forth strengthened in our Christian life.

Here we attend Thy dying feast;

Thy love has spread the sacred board,

To feed the faith of every guest.

"Our faith adores Thy bleeding love,

And trusts for life in One that died;

We hope for heavenly crowns above,

From a Redeemer crucified."

Notice to Auxiliaries of W. F. M. S.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee it was decided to purchase a stereopticon lantern for the use of both societies. Will each president be responsible within the next week for one dollar from her auxiliary, and send to Mrs. Taylor, so the lantern can be purchased before March 1. I was to have written to each auxiliary, but it takes time and money, so I take this way. Remit as early as possible.

METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD.

J. F. I. [unclear] Editor and Publisher.

Published weekly, except on the first of the month, by the Methodist Protestant Church, North Carolina Annual Conference.

PRICE.—$1.50 a year, payable in advance. Papers are discontinued on expiration of the term of subscription. However, subscribers who request it will be marked on our books as "regular," their papers to be continued and payment to be made as near the beginning of the year as convenient. Subscribers can remit directly or hand their money to pastors who act as our agents in the field. In directing change of address, give the old address as well as the new. In renewing, give the same initials as before.

We cannot often supply back numbers. We acknowledge receipt of money on subscription accounts by changing the date on the label. If this is not changed within two weeks after your money is forwarded, write us. Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Greensboro, N. C.

—Terrific storms, almost like tornadoes, swept over a large part of Europe last week. Much damage was done in Italy, the Bavarian Alps, Austria, France, Spain, Portugal and Switzerland.

—Tsuneo Matsudaira, the new Japanese Ambassador to the United States, and Giacomo de Martino, the new Italian Ambassador, have sailed for this country to take up their new work.

—An international conference, to carry still further the work of the Washington Arms Conference of 1921-1922, may be called by the United States in the near future.

—A gift of half a million dollars has been made by Cleveland H. Dodge, New York merchant, to what is known as the Fund for Near East Colleges. A total of two and one-half million is being raised for the following schools: Robert College, Constantinople; the American University at Beirut, Syria; the Constantinople Women's College; the International College, at Smyrna, and the American Schools, at Sofia, Bulgaria. The five schools have a total of nearly three thousand students representing 29 nationalities.

—An international conference on radio is to be held in Washington, D. C., the coming spring, say reports from the national capital. Radio has developed so rapidly that new rules are necessary for its international use.

—Cleveland, Ohio, is to have the second highest office building in the world. It will rise above Cleveland's new sixty million dollar Union Station and will be 708 feet high. The tallest office building in the world is the Woolworth Building, in New York. That is 792 feet high.

—Three treaties were ratified by the Senate last week. One was the new commercial treaty between this country and Germany. The second, between the United States and Rumania, provides for the return of criminals who flee from the United States to Rumania and from Rumania to the United States. The third treaty approved is between the United States and the Netherlands. It provides that the question of the ownership of the island of Palmas in the Philippines be decided by arbitration. The ownership of this little island has been in dispute since the Spanish-American War. Both nations claim it.

—The United States delegation, headed by Representative Stephen G. Porter of Pennsylvania, has withdrawn from the international opium conference at Geneva, Switzerland. The conference was called by the League of Nations and has been in session nearly three months. Our delegates withdrew because their plan to do away with traffic in opium and other dangerous drugs was not accepted. The American plan would abolish at once all traffic in drugs, except for medical and scientific purposes. The nations that oppose the American plan contend that the drug traffic cannot be destroyed in that way. Their plan is to do away with it gradually over a period of years.

—Thomas Alva Edison, America's most famous inventor, who is known as the "Electrical Wizard," was seventy-eight years old February 11. Usually he celebrates his birthday working in his big laboratory at West Orange, N. J. This year, however, he is spending the winter at Fort Myers, Fla. He and Henry Ford have adjoining estates on the Caloosahatchee river near there.

—Robert Todd Lincoln, oldest son of Abraham Lincoln, lives in Washington, D. C. He is in his eighty-second year. During the Civil War he was a captain on the staff of General U. S. Grant. He was Secretary of War in the Garfield-Arthur Cabinet (1881-1885), and U. S. Ambassador to Great Britain 1889-1893.

—Secretary of State Charles E. Hughes will go to Bermuda to rest for several months after he retires from the Cabinet March 4. This will be the first real vacation he has had since he entered the Cabinet March 4, 1921.

—The fifteenth anniversary of the founding of the Boy Scouts of America was celebrated by Scouts in all parts of the country last week.

—Greece has appealed to the League of Nations to settle her dispute with Turkey over the expulsion of the Greek Patriarch from Constantinople.

—If those who write checks for the Methodist Protestant Herald would make them payable to J. F. McCulloch, it would save him some time in endorsing.

—C. J. Lambe will leave the Daily News after nine years of service and engage in insurance business with the Jefferson Standard.

—Rev. C. E. Ridge is now living in the parsonage and should be addressed at Handy, N. C.

Another North Carolina Inventor.—W. W. Pegram, an electrical engineer of Winston, has invented a radio outfit that is said to be the best yet. A company has been organized to manufacture radio sets after Mr. Pegram's plan.

—Why so many suicides these days?

—We must ask some of our reporters to mail their reports earlier in the week. We received this week several long articles all requesting publication this week. It was physically impossible to comply with these requests. Had some of them been sent earlier they would have appeared. There is a clamor for an earlier mailing of the paper. We are trying to meet the demand, and therefore must close our columns earlier than otherwise. If all will send in their communications as soon as possible, it will facilitate our work and enable us to accommodate you.

A CORRECTION.

In the list on page 66 of the Journal which is supposed to be a part of the report on Official Character the following names do not appear: A. O. Lindley, A. G. Dixon, D. M. Loy, Homer Casto, Geo. L. Reynolds, H. F. Surratt, R. S. Troxler, R. E. Andrews, D. I. Garner, T. E. Martin. The publisher evidently copied the list as found on page 69, 1923 Journal, as this list has the same omissions and the same order. The list that should have been published is found on pages 8 and 9 of the 1923 Journal. This, with a few changes, is the list that was read before the conference and the character of the brethren whose names appear in this list was passed. The committee on Official Character does not assume the responsibility for the error but there is no harm done only some one might miss these names and conclude that the character of our president and a number of the other brethren did not pass. Not so, brethren, they are all good.

UNDER THE LEAVES.

Often have I walked these woodland paths,
Without the blest foreknowing
That underneath the withered leaves
The fairest buds were growing.

Today the south wind sweeps away
The types of autumn's splendor,
And shows the sweet arbutus flowers—
Spring's children, pure and tender.

Oh, prophet souls, with lips of bloom,
Outvying in their beauty
The pearly tints of ocean shells,
Ye teach me faith and duty.

Walk life's dark ways, ye seem to say,
With love's divine foreknowing,
That where man sees but withered leaves,
God sees the sweet flowers growing.

Gifts are a token of remembrance,
Handed down from year to year,
And are tokens of love and friendship
To our friends and loved ones dear.
What pleasure is life to a selfish man,
Or a woman who is haughty and vain,
When a few kindly words, or a very small gift
Would great pleasure and joy to them bring?

Then after the struggle of life is over,
And the soul has been laid to rest,
Your friends will around your casket stand,
And say, "That is a friend I loved best."
They will gently place flowers on your grave,
And will have remembrance in their heart
For a friend in need is a friend indeed,
Until from this world we do depart.

BRETHREN DWELLING TOGETHER IN UNITY.

By Rev. Luther K. Long.

Walking is a method of locomotion by means of fall and recovery. The body begins to fall forward and the right foot is advanced under it for recovery; then the body again starts to fall forward, when the left foot is advanced to save it. A lady can move across the room or down the street with grace and beauty after she has learned to maintain a fine balance between falling and recovery.

In somewhat the same fashion the Christian church moves ahead in its thinking and living by a combination of progressive and conservative action. As Professor Buckham says: "From the progressive the church gains vigor, outlook, courage—the values of new and forthcoming truth; from the conservative, fealty, stability, wisdom—the values of the past." It is as necessary to "prove all things" as it is to "hold fast that which is good"—and it is as important to "hold fast that which is good" as to "prove all things."

A considerable and increasing number of Christian people are becoming very much concerned over the disrupting of friendships and the breaking of fellowship caused by present differences of theological opinion. The feeling grows stronger that something is seriously wrong somewhere when men who love and serve the same Savior, who are endeavoring to understand and follow the teachings of the same Bible, fail to love each other and cease to work together harmoniously in the same church.

"The Congregationalist," of Boston, did a real service to all the churches by offering prizes—first, second and third—for the best essays on the subject: "Can Fundamentalists and Liberals Live and Work Together, Harmoniously and Effectively, Both in the Local Church and in the Larger Field of Service?" The three prize essays have been published in recent numbers of The Congregationalist. It would be a fine bit of work to gather them into a small pamphlet for wide distribution among the churches. Meanwhile, I want to aid in broadcasting a portion of the thoughts so well expressed:

Rev. E. T. Root—winner of the first prize—says in part:

"Can Fundamentalist and Liberal live and work together harmoniously and effectively? Yes; they can, because they do! Liberal and orthodox congregations have in several cases merged in 'federated churches.' In many union churches both types blend happily. Numerous denominational churches, especially in our Congregational fellowship, include both wings.

"But what tie can bind together those who differ in doctrine? Purpose is the secret of unity, as it is, indeed, that of personality itself. In their search for unity, Christians have long appealed to the wrong faculties of the soul. It has been sought on the basis of the intellect, and creeds have divided; or of emotion, and rituals have separated. Not these, but the will is the sovereign faculty; and only a common purpose can unite. Christ's supreme and central command is: 'Seek first the Kingdom of God.' Acceptance of this purpose makes the individual a Christian. Acceptance by all, alone, can make His followers one. Forms of worship and definitions of truth may differ, if only we all seek this common end. We may even march apart, if we but strike together.

"God has still more light to break forth from His word and His world! We must, therefore, keep an open mind. The reformers made the mistake of assuming that every question must be settled as soon as it was raised. We agree on facts sufficient to unite us in 'seeking first the Kingdom.' Yet the unity thus manifested will help and not hinder the search for truth. One reason why, in the past, theological silence has made such slow progress, is the fact that those who found their views differing have at once cut themselves off from each other. Mutually critical if not hostile, they have made it impossible to understand and help each other. A new day has dawned. Thinkers widely divergent can now exchange views and work together to determine truth. Thus, in work, worship, and thought, conservative and liberal may live and grow together, by seeking Christ-like characters through the common purpose which Christ gave."

Professor J. W. Buckham—winner of the second prize—writes in part:

"It is perfectly evident, from the example of Christians all about us, that Christian faith can, and does, exist in vital reality in conjunction with both evolution and anti-evolution ideas of nature, with both the critical and non-critical attitude toward the Bible, with both older and newer interpretations of Christ, atonement, and eschatology. In these and other matters we may differ, and yet be one in heart and purpose. . . . Two life-giving and refreshing streams—common worship from religious experience—common worship and common service. In both of these Christians have fellowship and thus find worship hallowed and deepened and service sweetened and enlarged. We may have this fellowship and have it richly no matter whether we hold the same doctrinal interpretation of the experience or not.

"The only real cause of discord and disunion in the Christian church is not diversity of doctrinal belief but the spirit which condemns those who differ and denies them the right to think—or not to think—for themselves and to hold the truth as they see it, in freedom and honor. When either Fundamentalist or Modernist takes the attitude of condemnation he denies his Lord, reads himself out of true Christian fellowship, and pollutes the springs of Christian love and co-operation.

"If we share a common religious experience, which underlies and exceeds all efforts at interpretation and which finds its center in Jesus Christ, we can all worship together with a spirit of true and heartfelt fellowship that transcends all our differences of idea and creed and makes us one in Him. This is the indestructible bond of Christian fellowship."

A single brief paragraph from Dr. J. M. Campbell—winner of the third prize—will suffice:

"A frank recognition of the limits of Christian thought is also demanded. No statement of truth is final. The revelation that God has given in his word is progressive. There is finality only in Christ. It behoves all Christian teachers, therefore, to exercise becoming modesty and to admit that we all know in part and prophecy in part."

My own conviction becomes deeper every day that any church of Christ should be sufficiently broad-minded and loving to admit to its membership and engage in worship and service with, any person who belongs to Christ.

I have always been grateful that in the early years of my ministry I was pastor of a church which had represented in its membership fourteen different denominations—four kinds of Presbyterian, four kinds of Methodist, Baptist, Disciple, Lutheran, Friends, Roman Catholic, and Congregationalist. Time and again in the course of my ministry I have had the delightful experience of introducing into the fellowship of the church persons whose birth had been in a foreign land, whose religious training had been different from ours, but whose heart responded gladly to the opportunity of union with Christ's people in the new land they had chosen for their home.

The new alignment of forces in the so-called Fundamentalist-Modernist controversy disregards the old denominational lines. Fundamentalists of all denominations get together; progressives of all denominations have a fellow-feeling. I am persuaded that for those who love Christ this is a supreme opportunity to demonstrate the power of His love to hold together in a fellowship of common worship and common service both Fundamentalists and Progressives.

THIRTEEN YEARS OF PROHIBITION IN NORTH CAROLINA AND WHAT IT HAS WROUGHT.

By R. L. Davis, Superintendent North Carolina Anti-Saloon League.

After five years under local option the people of North Carolina in the state-wide election on May 26, 1908, voted "against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors." The majority was 44,196. The law became effective January, 1909. Under local option many towns and counties had abolished the traffic, which made possible the state-wide victory. Since then the state has had thirteen years of Prohibition. What can we learn by a study of the progress of the state through these thirteen years?

Let me remind you that only six states enjoyed state-wide Prohibition when the people of North Carolina added another; that sentiment was too weak to stand for first rate Prohibition; that the Prohibition laws of all dry states were very imperfect and defective; and that the Prohibitionists had not learned how to fight the liquor traffic to the best advantage. Yet under all these handicaps Prohibition was a success from the start. Judge George P. Pell, for some years judge on the superior Court bench, and for the past ten years one of the three corporation commissioners, writes:

"I am happy to state that Prohibition has wrought wonders for North Carolina. While it has done its greatest work in the improvement of the morals and happiness of the people, its worth to the state in material things has been wonderful. Since Prohibition became effective in this state we have grown by leaps and bounds in every way. In the mountain sections where once we could not afford to build anything but log cabins for school houses and certainly could not afford to put any windows in them because passing drunkards would shoot them out on moonlight nights, we now have splendid school buildings. Our savings bank deposits have been multiplied by eight. No state in the entire Union has made greater progress along every line of endeavor. If Prohibition was submitted to the people of North Carolina today it would carry by a majority of two hundred thousand."

How Has Prohibition Affected the Church?

From a mass of matter reported from all denominations we give you the figures collected by the Baptist State Convention and the North Carolina Conference of the M. E. Church, South, to answer this question. We have no doubt that the statistics of other churches will parallel these:

Baptist State Convention.

	1908	1921
Number of members	212,879	316,138
Number of churches ...	1,901	2,253
Value of churches and parsonages	$2,036,58	$9,623,830
Contributions for all purposes	644,735	2,959,304

North Carolina Conference.

Number of members	74,548	102,705
Number of churches	710	763
Value of churches and parsonages	$1,900,458	$5,374,650
Total contribution	455,723	1,413,025

The growth in Sunday schools has been even larger than the growth in the church.

How Has Education Been Affected?

In 1908 one of the arguments offered by the wets with fervency, fluency, and effect was that the liquor license was necessary to support the schools, and that without this, the children would grow up in ignorance. At our request, Dr. E. C. Brooks, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, furnishes these statistics:

Statistics on School Progress.

Total school expenditures: 1910—$1,178,950.50; 1921—$17,658,393.47. Expenditures for new schoolhouses: 1910—$667,695.92; 1921—$3,969,033.78. Amount for operating expenses: 1910—$2,551,251.58; 1921—$13,689,359.69. Value of school property: 1910—$5,862,969; 1921—$28,202,133. Average value for each schoolhouse: 1910—$770.53; 1921—$3,509.42. Average monthly salary paid white teachers: 1910—$37.02; 1921—$90. Average monthly salary paid negro teachers: 1910—$25.26; 1921—$55. Number of log houses: 1910—263; 1921—13. Average length of school term in days: 1910—101.9; 1921—137.6. Total school population: 1910—735,183; 1921—860,328. Total school enrollment: 1910—520,404; 1921—707,762. Average daily attendance: 1910—331,335; 1921—494,887. Number public high schools: 1910—170; 1921—592. Enrollment in public high schools: 1910—14,401; 1921—45,085. Permanent improvements: 1910—$151,350; 1921—$4,120,000. Maintenance: 1910—$267,250; 1921—$1,282,200. Percent illiteracy for state: 1910—18.5; 1921—13.5.

Can anything speak more eloquently advocating Prohibition as an aid to education and condemning the license system as the handmaid of ignorance?

Booze and Business.

In 1908 many who favored and voted for Prohibition feared the effect on business. At that time big business was taking a leap in the dark to stand for it. It required faith in God and love for fellow man to enable leaders of commerce in this state to vote dry. Have they lost by the transaction? Do men ever lose who prove their faith in God by their good works to help their fellow men? Judge Pell, our corporation commissioner, whom we quoted above, furnishes us these bank statistics:

Total number of banks: 1908—375; 1921—640. Deposits: 1908—$56,537,308.92; 1921—$269,834,655.49.

The Building and Loan Associations in 1907 were sixty, with assets of $5,000,000. In 1921, the associations were 200, with assets of $37,666,450.

After these years of experience, I believe 99 per cent of our bankers believe in Prohibition.

Growth in Industries.

In the manufacture of cotton goods North Carolina maintains her lead over the other southern states, and ranks second only among all the states of the Union.

This industry ranks first among the state's manufactures in the number of wage-earners, the amount paid in salaries and wages, in value of products, and in value added by manufacture.

Cotton manufacturing has experienced a steady growth throughout the years for which statistics are available, the value of products having increased during the past decade from $52,868,689 in 1912 to $229,670,691 in 1922.

Capital employed and authorized ten years ago was $52,108,250; for 1922, $146,804,172.

The total number of employees engaged in the industry in 1912 was 54,710; number reported June 30, 1922, 78,972.

Approximate amount of raw material used in 1912, 328,407,879 pounds; in 1921-22, 531,768,116 pounds, or 1,063,536 bales of cotton weighing 500 pounds per bale. The percentage of increase in the quantity of raw materials consumed by the industry is found to be relatively greater than that of any other state engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods.

Measured by the number of establishments, the amount of capital invested, the value of products, equipment employed, the quantity of materials used, and the number of employees, the hosiery and knit goods industry is second in importance of the textile group. In each of these particulars, establishments engaged in the manufacture of knit goods have more than doubled in the past ten years, and today there are 142 mills.

This industry is largely an outgrowth of the remarkable increase in the manufacture of cotton goods in the state. The principal products are cotton hose, half-hose, shirts, drawers, and union suits. There is a steady development toward the higher grades of these, considered now to be the equal of like articles produced in any section of the country.

The industry shows an especially gratifying progress during the past decade, the value of products having increased from $6,082,360 in 1922, or 349 per cent. The amount of capital invested and authorized in 1912 was $3,876,560; in 1922, $24,786,500, an increase of 797 per cent.

The quantity of materials used in 1912 was 13,149,423 pounds; in 1922 the amount reported is 31,038,470.

The growth in the manufacture of furniture has been steady and consistent the past decade, the percentage of increase in the yearly output during this period being 107; in capital invested, 99; in the annual payroll, 230 per cent.

In 1910 the value of yearly output of 83 factories was $11,232,000; for 1921-22, 107 establishments report the value of products at $30,288,761. Capital invested has increased during the decade from $3,283,246 to $6,525,102; the value of plants from $2,404,769 to $8,384,530; yearly payroll for 1910 was $1,618,150; for 1921-22, $5,647,614. Today, after thirteen years of Prohibition, North Carolina has the biggest knitting mill in the world; the biggest towel factory in the world, and the biggest tobacco factory in the world. In addition to its industries, it ranks fifth in the states of the Union in the value of agricultural products. In 1908, the last license year, the state taxes were $2,866,439; in 1921, they were $13,087,957. In revenue for the government, she ranks as the eighth state of the Union. Only New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan and California pay more. In 1921 it paid to the government $123,000,000, of which $33,000,000 was income tax; whereas in 1910 she paid less than $6,000,000. In the days of license the liquor revenue was never over 10 per cent of the total, so that with the liquor revenue added, less than $7,000,000 was then paid against $123,000,000 now. Prohibition in North Carolina has been weighed in the balance and found NOT wanting." It is endorsed today by at least 85 per cent of the total population, and this paper gives the reasons why.

OUR TASK AND OUR PRIVILEGE.

One new name, to which we bid a hearty welcome, this week, Fairview. This leaves only 22 now not on either of the budgets. Some are down close to the end but all, we think, are making an effort to move up. You remember why our senator thanked God for South Carolina. North Carolina has been climbing from that day to this and is rapidly reaching the top of the list.

Look where Haw River has jumped to! and Fairview joins the list at 48.

But it is the G. C. B. that challenges attention this week. There are five additional names to this list this week, and some fine gains made by other charges. Concord takes the lead. Fine, Concord. Haw River comes into the race and lands near the top. Good work, Haw River. And Alamance puts up her flag at 8. Enfield increased her amount but was defeated for place by Alamance. Whitakers maintained her place only by making a good substantial gain. Randolph made a good contribution but because of the fine work of others gained only one point. Winston-Salem came into the race at 19 and Kernersville at 23. This is fine for this week but there are greater things for us to do. God, help us to feel the need as thou dost see it. A. G. Dixon.

Hollister, Halifax Charge.—It seems it is bad luck for Hollister church to have a reporter; it had Mrs. W. A. Delbridge, they moved away. Mrs. Arthur Pullen was appointed; a few weeks ago they moved. Mr. Spencer asked if I would not report: hope this will not mean a move for us.

Mr. Spencer preached a splendid sermon yesterday, his subject being, Will a Man Rob God? So many of us do rob God, not only with our money, but with our time. Immediately after preaching the Lord's supper was administered. We were glad to see so many partake. Everybody seems to like to hear Mr. Spencer preach. In spite of bad weather and roads we have had good congregations at every service. May the Lord strengthen Brother Spencer in every way to do the work he has before him this year. May each of us do our part in making the year a success.

Our church is a little in debt for some repairing we had to have done. Let each of us work and pray until this debt is paid off. Four months of conference year have passed. Are we paying our preacher, or are we going to wait until the end of the year? He has to live as well as we do.

Our Sunday school is progressing under the leadership of Mr. Ed Ellington. We are planning for Easter service.

Sorry to report the death of one of our members, Loyd Stacks. Loyd would have been 19 in June—just in prime of life. Loyd was a good boy, loved by every one that knew him. May the good Lord who knows all things best comfort the loved ones.

On last Wednesday, February 18, about five P. M., our barn, including about $500 worth of feed was destroyed by fire. All live stock was saved. No insurance.

It is the purpose of the trustees to rebuild, but to do that, it takes money; therefore we are asking that you kindly remember us when called on to do so. E. G. Lowdermilk, Superintendent.

Lebanon Church, High Point.—Although the weather has been very unfavorable part of the time, there has been unusually good attendance at Sunday school and all church services during January and February.

Our pastor, Rev. J. R. Hutton, preached two very helpful sermons yesterday, but especially inspiring was the one at 11 o'clock, from the text: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Gal. 6:7.

The Christian Endeavor held a Sunshine Meeting for Mrs. J. R. Cook in her home on Sunday afternoon, February 15. They hold these meetings regularly for the sick and shut-ins.

Mr. Lee Hammer, a brother of Mrs. J. W. Montgomery, who has been in the West for over twenty years, has returned to be with his mother, Mrs. E. A. Hammer.

COLLEGE PAGE

EDITED BY REV. P. M. ANDREWS

The Choral Society of High Point College, assisted by local music lovers, will give a cantata, "The Rose Maiden," by F. H. Cowen, in the college auditorium Tuesday evening, March 10, at eight o'clock.

Soloists: Soprano—Miss Myrtle Perry, Thomasville. Contralto—Mrs. J. Gurney Briggs, High Point. Tenor—Mr. J. Gurney Briggs, High Point. Baritone—Mr. W. Crawford Phillips, High Point.

Director, Prof. Dan W. Smith, High Point College.

Accompanist, Miss Novella McIntire, High Point College.

Synopsis.—The Queen of the Flower Fairies, weary of a life of unbroken calm, prays of the newly returned Spring that he will bestow upon her also the gift of love that he bestows upon man. He warns her of the risk she runs, but finally yields to her entreaties by changing her while she sleeps into the form of a beautiful girl. Under the name of Roseblossom, she wanders through the world to find the love that she seeks, and meets with a girl who, having been betrayed and deserted by her lover, loses her senses and dies broken-hearted. But undeterred from her search, Roseblossom becomes the wife of a forester, with whom she lives for a time in such perfect happiness that she cannot survive his death. The elves bewail the fate of their Queen, and curse love as fatal to peace and happiness.

All of the friends of the college are cordially invited to this feast of good music.

Helen Hayes.

High Point College Christian Endeavor Society.

Although the Christian Endeavor society of High Point College is a new organization among new acquaintances, nevertheless we are beginning to do some constructive work.

Our society, which was organized last fall, has an active membership of about forty young people, all of whom show a real interest in the work of the Endeavor. Four social gatherings have been promoted by this society, each of which furnished splendid amusement and pleasure for all present.

At the City Union meeting of the Christian Endeavor society last month our society joined the Union and brought home from this meeting the "good work" banner. On last Sunday night the officers of our society went over to Lexington and organized a society at the State Street Church.

Our society has decided to clothe a child at the Children's Home until September 15. It is also considering the matter of educating a student in the foreign field to do missionary work. The need of this work is keenly felt by our members from the conditions that have been so vividly shown to us by some of the returned missionaries, and I am sure with the interest that has been manifested we can raise the necessary funds to educate this student. A way has been worked out by which we can raise money, and our College store is now selling candy and other small articles, the profit from which will go to the Christian Endeavor society. A "trip around the world" is also being planned, and we expect to raise some funds in this way. This will be given Friday night, March 6.

We have not forgotten the Young People's Board, and a pledge has been made by our society to this Board of fifteen dollars. Our members are co-operating with Rev. N. M. Harrison, president of this Board, in mailing out letters and literature to the young people throughout the state relative to the Young People's Conference which will be held here June 16-26. A special room is being equipped in Roberts Hall as a mailing headquarters, and under the direction of the president of our society each member can go there and find plenty of work to do. Until this room is equipped each one is taking it upon himself or herself, to write some personal letters to young people whom they know and might be interested in the Summer Conference.

A campaign is now on to register our society one hundred per cent for the Young People's Conference, and from the number that have already registered I see no reason why we should not reach this goal. "Are you coming to the Summer Conference?" is being heard all over the campus among the students, and it is no surprise to know that the most enthusiastic ones are the boys and girls who have attended the Weaverville conferences. They are looking forward to a bigger and better Young People's Conference this year, and we have all reasons to believe they will not be disappointed.

J. W. Holmes.

Calvary, Greensboro, News.—The pastor of Calvary church has been having some new experiences since conference. To begin with, we lived in the country, three miles from Greensboro, for about seven weeks. As we have stated in the Herald before, it was through the kindness of Rev. T. F. McCulloch's people and Mrs. W. C. Kennett that we were located in their country home until we could find a house in Greensboro. The Calvary people have a lot for a parsonage adjoining the church lot but they did not feel able to build a parsonage at this time. They proposed to furnish a house with the necessary heavy furniture if the pastor would provide the house. So it was up to us to secure the house. Since we do not believe in paying rent we decided to buy a house. So after something like two months from the time we left Asheville we located at 1113 Bellevue Street in South Greensboro. And another of our new experiences in living in our own house. Our mail address is not 1113 Bellevue Street but 401 Andrew Street. City delivery has not yet been extended to our street. Our friends are invited to call to see us.

Many of our friends and those who are interested in the new Calvary church have enquired as to the work here. For their information I am glad to say that, as I see it, we could not expect the work to start off much better than it has. As Brother A. C. Dixon, our publicity man, has told you before through the Herald, we had a fine opening the third Sunday afternoon in January. There were between three hundred and fifty and four hundred people present and that notwithstanding the very disagreeable weather. Since then our congregations have been most encouraging.

There has been a steady increase in Sunday school attendance. February the 15th there were 118 present, more than twice the average, I suppose, of what we had at the school house.

Last Sunday a week ago we read the list of charter members. The time for the admission of charter members had been extended up to the formal opening service. When the list was completed we had 110, two of these having died since the church was organized. Five new members were received on the 15th, making a total of 113 now on roll. The outlook is very encouraging. Harmony prevails in the membership. We can not think of a greater asset for any church than this. The people are appreciative of the pastor's efforts and are considerate of his and his family's welfare. Their expressions of appreciation rather than so much criticism gives us courage for the work before us. We appreciate all that has been done by the Ladies' Aid and by individuals that have remembered us with articles of food as well as furnishings for the parsonage.

Our evangelistic services will begin the 29th of March and continue for two weeks, culminating with Easter Sunday. Rev. N. G. Bethea will assist the pastor. Pray that we may win many for Christ.

If the pastors of other charges who have members living in Greensboro will let me know who they are and where they are I shall be glad to do what I can to save them to the Methodist Protestant Church. If they are not kept lined up with their own church they will do one of two things, lose interest altogether, or drift off to some other church. We believe that we have a right to make an effort to hold them. You can help by letting me know about them.

Just recently a hundred new church hymnals were purchased. These are adding considerably to our congregational singing. Because of some new parts having to be ordered for the organ the work of installing it has been delayed. We are expecting this to be completed within the next few weeks. The music committee was fortunate in securing the services of Miss Margaret Hartsell, daughter of Doctor Hartsell, as organist.

A few of our people, led on by Mrs. J. A. Cox, I believe, conducted a quiet canvass for a fund with which to purchase a bell for the church. The bell has been ordered and it is hoped that it will be ready for use by the time of our revival.

Other things are being done, but I will leave something for our efficient publicity man to tell you in his next report.

L. W. Gerringer, Pastor.

401 Andrew Street (Mail Address),

Confute with candor, where you can confute, Reason and arrogance but poorly suit. Yourself may fall before some abler pen, Infallibility is not for men. With modest diffidence new schemes indite, Be not too positive, though in the right.

—Dr. L. K. Relander has been elected President of the little republic of Finland and takes office March 1. He succeeds Dr. K. J. Stahlberg. In Finland both men and women, twenty-four years old or over, have the right to vote and hold office. The President is elected for a six-year term.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

A special contribution of $250 has been received from a good friend for the Ministerial Education Fund. It appears that this is an annual contribution and is certainly appreciated. It has been placed in the permanent fund and is already earning its part for the object for which it was given. A recent analysis of this fund shows a total invested of $51,639.31 with an annuity liability of $2,500, leaving a balance of $49,139.31. Some day, if we are patient, it will continue to grow until it reaches the much needed sum of $100,000.

Some of the young people the board expected to help this year find they can make their way without a loan. However, eighteen are depending upon us to give them the needed assistance which will require $2,650. Of this amount $1,900 has been provided for, leaving $750 for the secretary to find somewhere. He is not worried, for the free-will offerings, return payments, payments of new and old pledges will surely take care of that sum. Anything additional will be placed in the invested fund.

The suggestion that beneficiaries of the board take out insurance policies to the benefit of the Board of Education has received cordial commendation. Friends are continually writing in, commending the plan and assuring the secretary of the approval and willingness to comply with the new rule. It is a plan which safeguards the interests of all and in the case of the death of the beneficiary provides for the obligation and leaves something for his estate as well.

The entire church will watch with hopeful interest the progress of the campaign of Western Maryland College to increase their endowment $500,000. The income from such a fund is in itself sufficient inducement to call forth the most generous response from the friends of the college. But when they know that only $375,000 is necessary and that when that sum is raised the state will give in addition $125,000 for a new building and the General Education Board another $125,000 the plan should arouse real enthusiasm. The secretary has offered to Dr. Ward anything our time, strength or resources will permit to help make his campaign the greatest possible success.

The receipts to date from the Rally Day offerings by conferences are as follows: Alabama, $50; Colorado-Texas, $7.53; Eastern, $659.40; Illinois, $179.92; Indiana, $350.16; Iowa-Missouri, $163.07; Kansas, $256.64; Kentucky, $24.18; Maryland, $2,882.47; Michigan, $297.02; North Carolina, $768.81; Ohio, $3,586.61; Onondaga, $311.19; Pittsburgh, $1,558.70; West Virginia, $345.44; Washington Mission, $29.54. Grand total, $11,895.33. Ohio still keeps her place well in the lead with Maryland second and Pittsburgh third. The following conferences report an increase over their gifts last year for Education Day: Indiana, Iowa-Missouri, Kansas, Maryland, North Carolina, Ohio and Onondaga.

Over $1,200 is still needed to equal the Education Day offerings of last year. It is feared that some of our church treasurers are still holding in the local treasuries their Rally Day offering. It would be gratifying if this money could be forwarded without delay. As most of us know this is the lean time of the year for the boards. This is well understood when it is known that for the last two months the Board of Education has received less than $600. The same is true of the other boards. If it had not been for the Rally Day offerings we would have been seriously embarrassed. "A word to the wise is sufficient"! We hope that in this case it will be efficient also.

Thirty-three ministerial students are being assisted this year by the Board of Education. This requires $6,175 of which $4,819.69 has been provided for, leaving $1,355.31 which must yet be secured. The secretary is sending urgent letters to former beneficiaries in the hope that return payments will be sufficient to meet this requirement, thereby making it unnecessary to call upon the budget for help. Two-thirds of the ministerial students in our institutions are finding it possible to pay their own way through school. The board is ready to give assistance at any time when it is necessary.

Don't forget to order your Easter programs. The Board of Home Missions has provided a splendid service and it will be found adaptable to the needs of practically every church and Sunday school in the denomination. Make careful plans for the offering also and it will be of a size to delight the heart of Dr. Beck as well as for that much more of your General Conference budget. The denominational budget or program is crystallized in that budget and all the secretaries, as well as every member of the church, is deeply interested in the work and success of every board. The prosperity of one makes for the prosperity of all and the more rapid progress of the Kingdom of God. Let this Easter Day and Easter service be the greatest in the history of your church.

THE SEMINARY—ITS PRESENT AND FUTURE.

By President Hugh Latimer Elderdice.

This subject was selected by Secretary Stephenson. Had the selection been mine, there would have been included one more cycle of time—its past.

Not because an intellectual trichotomy has enslaved me to the homiletical formula, firstly, secondly and thirdly; but because the past is the realm of romance.

An immortal American statesman declared: "The past, at least, is secure."

But he was mistaken if he meant that it was safe from the lapses of memory, the mathematics of the statistician, the vagaries of imagination, and the delusive dreams of retrospection.

Not the future but the past spurs the fancy to run riot and throws a halo of glory over the "good old days." And yet no rational man in any field of thought or action would return and live out his life in "the days of his daddy."

Perhaps one reason why we idealize the past is because a merciful Creator has endowed us with memory that forgets failures, hardships, oppositions, and even the wrongs done us by our enemies; yet ever keeps fresh the recollections of triumphs, holiday reunions, and sweet counsels with friends tried and true. But this is neither the time nor the place for me to either philosophize or moralize; so I plunge into the present.

Having been delivered from the snares of the historian, by the shrewdness of our secretary, I shall describe the ETERNAL NOW.

What is the exact condition of the Westminster Theological Seminary, January 7, 1925? It is the happiest day in the forty-three years of its existence. Its happiness is due to its unprecedented prosperity in the three fields of its activity:

Numerical, Financial, Educational.

On the eve of my departure for this assembly, the secretary of the faculty placed in my hands this statement as to the number of students in the seminary: Juniors 17, Middlers 12, Seniors 12, Postgraduates 11; total, 52; and this enrollment is the largest ever made.

One feature of this registration, highly gratifying from a denominational point of view, is its wide-spread geographical distribution, representing the following conferences: Eastern, Indiana, Maryland, North Carolina, Ohio, Pittsburgh and West Virginia.

Another feature of this registration, enhancing our denominational pride, is the matriculation of students from sister denominations: the Episcopal, the Methodist Episcopal, the Presbyterian, the Reformed, and the United Brethren.

And another feature of this registration, perhaps the most significant and far-reaching of, is the presence of two women pursuing the regular course of study.

They have already demonstrated that "it is not good for man to be alone," even in the sacred halls of a theological seminary; for said man in said place is constantly improving his speech, his attire, and his conduct; so that I no longer need in the curriculum that ancient classic: "Miller, on Clerical Manners and Habits."

The present also finds the Seminary flourishing financially. The cash keeps coming constantly and cancels debts when due. Every obligation entered into, voluntarily, by the Seminary authorities is being met.

It is also a cause for congratulation that the Board of Education has arisen in its might with determination to lift the debt on the new Seminary building. On the day of its dedication, December 17, 1920, that splendid structure costing $115,000 was in debt only $30,030. $15,000 of the indebtedness was assumed by the conferences and individuals present and every dollar of that pledge has been collected and paid. The remaining $15,000 of the $30,000 deficiency was assumed by the secretary of the Board of Education in executive session on the day preceding dedication, and publicly announced by Secretary Miller on the day of dedication.

Our scholarship fund has to keep pace with our numerical growth; for, the more the students, the heavier the demands for aid. But with the coming of more claimants we are finding more friends willing to contribute to this fund, so that it is a delight to report that no worthy students will be compelled to leave this Seminary on account of the lack of money. After the Board of Education shall have made its maximum loan, the Seminary will undertake to give out enough of its scholarship fund to meet any deficiency in a student's current expenses.

The latest cause for rejoicing over our money-matters is the fund for the building of a new home for the president of the Seminary.

The building has been in process of construction all summer and ready for occupancy November 17. There is still some work to be done as finishing touches by electricians and plumbers.

February 26, 1925.

The exact cost cannot yet be stated but approximately it will be $20,000. To this $20,000 may be added about $1,500, estimated for permanent furniture and cement walks. This total of $21,500 has all been met with the exception of $2,000 which we borrowed. This loan we hope to pay within a few months. This home has the same architectural designs as those of the new Seminary building and will gladden all Methodist Protestants when they see it.

The Future.

But what of the Seminary's future?

I am inclined to say, in the language of our great denominational leader, President Lewis: "Let the unborn future weave its own swaddling clothes."

The function of the Biblical prophets was two-fold: Primarily, to meet some emergency of their day with a message from God as to the immediate duty of church, state and individual.

Secondarily, to draw the veil and reveal some coming event, near or distant. I am not prepared to perform this secondary function: for "I know not what the future hath of marvel or surprise."

But I will venture to perform the primary mission of the ancient prophet by exhorting the Board of Education to do its immediate level best to meet the needs of their only theological seminary.

This I am confident they will do, therefore I expect to see today some action which will result, during the present quadrennium in full the $15,000 subscription made by the board to the new Seminary building.

It is also my hope and my appeal that the annual appropriation of $12,000, which was agreed upon four years ago, but which never amounted to more than $7,000 annually, may, during the present quadrennium, reach the original $12,000 appropriation. This will permit us to meet current expenses and secure the services of an additional professor, thus relieving the president, who for 28 years has been doing the combined work of president, secretary, treasurer, professor and field agent.

PIVOTAL FACTORS IN OUR FINANCIAL PLAN.

There are at least seven essential factors in the successful working out of our present financial plan.

First, a Pastor Who Leads. The pastor is the "key man." He has information which the laymen do not possess, and the congregation naturally looks to him for leadership. Some pastors never fail—others never succeed. The man who succeeds gives liberally from his own purse, then teaches and preaches the joy and privilege of giving. Giving with him is an act of worship, and he leads his people to give, as well as to sing, and pray, and witness in testimony. Where there is no enthusiasm in the pulpit there can be no warmth in the pew. The pastor must have and impart vision, create conscience, give information, and inspiration, if the giving power of the congregation is to be developed.

Second, Organization. The business concerns that are winning are those which are well organized for the greatest efficiency. There is an advertising department, our educational propaganda, our various publicity enterprises, our stewardship, and mission study classes. Then there is our sales department, including the personal interview with the individual in our every-member canvass. And the fixed system of collections corresponding to the credit department of a business organization.

Third, Preparation. The every-member canvass is the backbone of the system, but this will be a failure unless proper preparation is made in advance of the canvass. The canvass should be preceded by a comprehensive, and an intensive campaign of education. Then the entire campaign must be permeated with prayer, from the pulpit, at the family altar and in all the devotional meetings of the church.

Fourth, the Canvass. This must be carefully made by a wisely selected and carefully trained group of workers. Arrange the membership rolls in groups of from ten to twenty according to the family groups. Have the canvassers in teams of two, and complete the canvass if possible in a single day. Announce the time from the pulpit, and in the bulletin of the church, requesting all the members of the church as far as possible to remain at home within certain hours of the day to receive these messengers of the church. The pastor, or some selected member of the Board of Finance should carefully explain the plan again, and urge the people to be ready to make their subscriptions. At this service the canvassers should come forward to the chancel, and by an earnest prayer be set apart for the work to which they have been assigned.

Fifth, the Canvassers. These persons should have been carefully and prayerfully selected and should enter upon the discharge of their duties as a matter of service to Jesus Christ and His church. They should be persons who are definitely interested in the campaign, who have made their own subscriptions on a liberal basis, and who are willing to work to make the plan a success.

Sixth, the Official Board. The canvass can not reach its highest standard of success without the hearty and complete co-operation of the entire official board. This board can either cause irritation, and unrest, sufficient to greatly hinder and possibly entirely defeat the plan, or it can secure its complete success.

Seventh, Keep the spiritual conception and duty well to the front. Giving is an act of worship. It means more to the individual than even prayer, or thanksgiving and song. The every-member canvass is not primarily for the sake of securing money, though this is an important factor. Underneath is the higher purpose of the extension of the Kingdom, the development of the church, and the salvation of the people.

MEETING OF THE UNION BOARD.

The Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration met in the Rhode Island Avenue church, Washington, D. C., Tuesday, February 3, with the president, Rev. Dr. J. C. Broomfield, in the chair.

The meeting was held under very favorable conditions, because the great Foreign Missions Convention had closed just the evening before, and the members of the Union Board were still under the direct influence of that wonderful assembly, the convincing power of its deliverances, the portrayal of the onward sweep of the Kingdom's forces over the earth, the unrelieved needs of millions of our fellow beings in lands afar, and the mighty uplift of its sacred hours of devotion which stood out as converging points for all hearts.

Abundant proof of the wisdom of merging into one administrative board those entrusted with the management of the foreign missionary work of our church was fully in evidence.

Although the Union Board met earlier than usual, the missionaries exerted themselves, and succeeded, in nearly every instance, in getting the annual budget, quarterly reports, etc., to the meeting; some arrived during the meeting.

The budgets for 1925-26 in every case called for an increase, but the Union Board very reluctantly voted to grant only the same amount as was granted for 1924-1925, but expressed the hope that our income would enable a larger grant to be made later in the year.

The erection of the church at Isehara, Japan, was approved on the conditions the mission presented, and which requires no new appropriation from the Union Board.

A grant for purchasing a lot for the Hamamatsu church, the lease of the present lot having expired, and owner requires the church's removal, could not be granted, and if necessary the building will be taken down, and materials stored.

Excellent reports were presented from the Girls' School, the kindergartens, evangelistic work, the Blind School, and Nagoya College, etc., and the financial reports were referred to the auditing committee.

All the missionaries assembled in Nagoya January 6-7 and formally organized the Japan Mission, elected Miss Olive I. Hodges chairman, Miss Ethel L. Hempstead secretary, and recommended Rev. E. I. Obee for treasurer, and the officers, with Rev. L. Layman and Rev. J. C. Auman, constitute the executive committee.

The business was transacted in a very creditable manner as attested by the excellent minutes and reports, and the new plan starts off with every promise of success through harmony and co-operation made possible by having one mission.

About 225 students of Nagoya College gave their names as desiring to become Christians, and a teacher made public explanation for becoming a Christian.

Gratification was expressed over the fact that Rev. S. Wada, in charge of our Tokyo Blind School, had been signally honored by the Emperor and Empress of Japan for "rendering distinguished service in social service for a long time, and they have rewarded him with a silver cup engraved with the imperial seal, and two hundred yen."

Communications, the budget, etc., from China were presented. Rev. C. G. Soderbom was warmly welcomed from his operation. Mr. M. de Lawson and Brother H. Williams were hard at work on the language in the Peking Language School. The Kalgan Boys' School had been closed, as were the government schools on a count of the scarcity of coal and coal, following the flood, etc., and Kalgan had been looted by mutinous soldiers whose pay for months had been withheld; banks, stores, houses were burned, looting was general, and general disorder, but the Christian general had arrived with troops, and order was restored. Our people and property were not disturbed.

It was unanimously decided to request the return of Rev. Dr. C. S. Heininger to Kalgan.

Letters, budget, etc., from India, were presented. Cable message was ordered sent to mission to erect the needed barn with funds in hand. The safe arrival of the missionaries, the cordial reception given, their happiness in being in India, and purpose to devote themselves earnestly to the work, and apply themselves to the language as the essentials, were noted. Some reports, etc., were delayed.

The annual meeting will be held in Indianapolis May 13, per action of the Budget Council.

THE PREACHING OF THE PIONEER CIRCUIT RIDERS.

They could preach. It is said that Bishop Coke, a Doctor of Civil Laws from Oxford, misled by their homespun suits in thinking them common men, was so surprised on hearing them preach that he exclaimed in his impetuous manner: "I can't preach a bit. I can't preach a bit."

There were few D.D.'s among the pioneer circuit riders—Brush College did not confer many honorary titles. "Why doesn't your church have doctors of divinity?" asked a clergyman of Jesse Lee. "Our divinity isn't sick and doesn't need doctors," was the witty reply. (By that test, as some one has said, our theology has grown very sick since that day.)

The pioneer circuit riders earnestly sought the baptism of the Spirit upon all their labors, and if they preached and did not have "liberty," or feel the presence of the Holy Spirit, they regarded it as a dull, dry discourse and often resorted to prayer and fasting. The result was that God greatly honored their ministry as they preached the word "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power."

They lived at a time when religion was at a low ebb in many communities. Along the frontier especially there were few churches, and middle-aged persons were sometimes found who had never heard a Gospel sermon. No wonder they would drive thirty miles or more to a camp-meeting and remain ten days to hear the Word of God proclaimed. And no wonder many were pricked in their heart and fell to the ground helpless, as they heard for the first time the law proclaimed as from Sinai, with its awful penalties, and realized how fearfully they had violated it. At some of these great camp-meetings as many as 500 have been known to fall prostrate at the altar during a single service. Sometimes the meetings were carried on all night. We are awed as we read of the marvelous displays of divine power at some of these camp-meetings. We give just one instance:

"At one of the camp-meetings there were two young men, bitter rivals, who had sworn to shoot each other on sight. There was great excitement when it was known that both of these men were on the grounds. A bloody encounter was expected. But the power of the Gospel reached their hearts, and they both went to the altar, each one not knowing the other was there. As the preacher talked to them at the altar, he took their pistols from their bosoms, and carried them to his tent. They were both powerfully converted, and when they rose from the altar they embraced each other, which greatly affected the whole congregation."

They preached the fundamental doctrines of the Bible and were not drawn off by side issues. We are told that there was once in the Virginia Conference a very strong doctrinal preacher by the name of Peter Douh. His presiding elder (later Bishop Early) had him preach to a large assembly, but requested that he "keep in the main channel and not go up the branches after little fish." After preaching very acceptably for a while, he looked at his presiding elder and said: "There are some good fish in those branches." "Never mind them, Peter, keep straight on," was the reply.

Bishop McConnell says: "The first mark of Methodism is its emphasis on Christian experience. Religion had very little life in it when Wesley came. . . . For Wesley it meant a conscious living and personal relation to God." The pioneers regarded "experimental religion" as one of the chief corner stones of Methodism. When one of these old-time preachers was asked what he did when he "Got in the brush," he replied, "I tell my experience, cry, shout and wind up by calling for mourners." When Father Taylor, the sailor-preacher of Boston, got tangled in a sentence, he cried out: "I don't know how I got into this sentence or how I shall get out, but one thing I know, I am bound for glory." They spoke from deep conviction, like the old lady who kept talking about her conversion so much that some one asked her how she knew she was converted. "Because I was there when it happened," was the instant reply.

It was well that they placed great emphasis on experimental religion, for the popular teaching that day ran somewhat on thiswise: "If you seek religion, you won't find it; if you find it, you won't know it; if you know it, you haven't got it; if you get it, you can't lose it; if you lose it, you never had it." The teaching of the Methodists ran quite the reverse: "If you seek religion, you will find it; if you find it, you will know it; if you know it, you have got it; if you get it, you may lose it; if you lose it, you must have had it."

Oh, that Methodists everywhere would make experience the "crowning evidence," as Bishop Granbery called it.

The sermons of the pioneers were not noted for their brevity. Sermonettes had not yet been invented. When one heard the Gospel only once in two or three months he was eager to drink in as much as possible. Peter Akers would sometimes hold forth from three to four hours when he warmed up on an interesting doctrinal subject. An one occasion, a man got up to leave the church and the preacher shouted after him, "Stop, sir, I'm not through yet." "Go on, sir," said the man. "I'm just going to dinner, and will be back long before you are through."

Their preaching was practical and pointed. It did not apply to "everybody in general and nobody in particular." It was Nathan-like, "Thou art the man." Here is an example of Father Axley's pointed preaching: "Now, here are a great many fat, sleek-looking professors of religion, but there is something the matter with you. You are not what you ought to be. Most of you here are farmers; you have seen wheat which was plump, round and good-looking to the eyes, but when you weighed it, it weighed only 45 to 48 pounds to the bushel, instead of from 60 to 63 pounds. Take a grain between your thumb and finger; squeeze it, and out pops a weevil. Now, you good-looking Christian people only weigh, like the wheat, 45 to 48 pounds to the bushel. What's the matter? When you are squeezed between the thumb of the law and the finger of the Gospel, out pops a whiskey bottle and a lot of other meanness."

Many sinners were awakened by these practical applications of the Gospel, through the influence of the Holy Spirit. When Hope Hull was preaching, he pointed his finger at Lorenzo Dow, who was a reckless youth, and said, "Sinner, there is a frowning Providence above your head, and a burning hell beneath your feet, and nothing but the brittle thread of life prevents your soul from falling into endless perdition. 'But,' says the sinner, what must I do?" "You must pray." "But I can't pray." "If you don't pray, then you'll be damned," and stamped his foot. Dow said, "It came like a dagger to my heart. I came near falling backwards, and caught hold of my cousin by my side for fear I would fall into hell." This led to his conviction and conversion.

The pioneers preached extempore and were not handicapped by a manuscript. When Peter Cartwright heard a young college bred preacher read a sermon, he said it reminded him of a gosling that had got the straddles by wading in the dew. Their preaching showed they were in earnest physically as well as morally, for they made use of the whole body in preaching. Sometimes they "screamed"—which Wesley forbade his preachers' doing—but even this was an evidence of their earnestness. It could not be said of them as it was said by a street preacher (Bishop Taylor), who was struck with the extraordinary earnestness of an auctioneer: "If we could get the minsters to cry aloud as earnestly over living immortal souls as this man does over spoiled cheese at two cents a pound, what a waking-up they would produce among the sleeping thousands of this land."

When the old-time Methodists met for worship, preachers and people often shouted aloud the praises of God. Perhaps they placed undue emphasis on the emotional side of religion, but have we not gone to the other extreme? I was glad to read these words by Dr. Snowden in his Notes on the Sunday School Lesson in connection with the triumphal entry into Jerusalem: "The most prominent feature of this procession was its enthusiasm. These people were not afraid to shout. They believed in Jesus with all their might and expressed their devotion in Oriental outbursts of joy. . . . This is a spirit that is evaporating out of our religious life and that we need to keep and intensify. We are growing so reserved and formal that we are afraid to speak out in religious meetings. Our boiling enthusiasm cools into fastidious speech and then freezes into silence."

What may we learn from the pioneer preachers? First, there is one thing "boy" preachers and ministerial students who are eager to leave school before their education is finished should not learn. They should not for a moment entertain the thought that, as many of the pioneer preachers had only the bare rudiments of an education and became successful preachers, therefore a thorough education is not necessary for the work of the ministry. Had the pioneers been better equipped for their work they would have accomplished more good. No one knew this better than Bishop Asbury, who was a zealous advocate of education and built the first Methodist school in America.

We should certainly learn something from the evangelistic spirit of the pioneers. It was the burden they felt for lost souls that explains their consecration and sacrificial labors. Ebenezer Newhall, stirred by the spiritual destitution of the people of Vermont, is an example of how the pioneers sought the lost.

"Often I rested my weary limbs by sitting down and reading my Bible and praying. Soon I came to a small opening, found a log cabin, stopped, read, sung, and prayed with them. Then on again I went. I found a very poor woman in a log hut. I invited her to go to the meeting. She said, 'I have no clothes.' I said, 'Don't stop for that; just wash you clean and go. God may meet you there and wash away your sins, and clothe you with salvation.' 'But I have no shoes.' 'No matter, God may put on your feet the Gospel shoes.' 'Then I have no bonnet.' 'Well, God can put on your head a crown of life.' 'Neither have I any cloak.' 'Dear woman,' said I, 'make no more excuses. Throw a sheet over your shoulders, and if you find Jesus, as you may, you will not be sorry.' Then on he went, and finally came to the meeting he had appointed. There, sure enough, was the poor woman, with rags sewed on her feet, a sheet over her head, and her children by her side.

As preachers, we should not fail to learn from the pioneers that there is a preparation of the heart as well as of the head,—a preparation they never neglected. A quotation from the diary of Bishop McKendree will, perhaps to some extent, explain the secret of their great spiritual power in preaching:

"Being already at my preaching place since eight o'clock, I have been with Jesus in this forest, in deep exercise. My Book is sweeter than common. O, what spirit I find in the Word of the Lord! I read it much and with great delight—often on my knees. I take my flight, on wings of faith and love still mounting higher to the celestial world. One-half hour humbly prostrate on my face, to converse with eternity! And such deep views and bright conceptions of eternal things I never had before in all my life. But I must go; the congregation is assembled, and my watch says eight minutes to twelve o'clock. Farewell, sweet and solemn place! Lord Jesus go with me! Amen. Amen." H. H. Smith.

—The inauguration of President Coolidge, on March 4, will set an example for the country in economy. The President has let it be known that he wishes as simple a ceremony as possible. Washington business men subscribed $60,000 for an elaborate program, but nearly all the money will be returned to the subscribers. The expenses, it is said, will amount to only a few thousand dollars.

Suggestions From the Texts.

Our Scripture lesson covers the most important teaching in the Gospels as to Jesus' methods in winning followers. We can't read it too often, and we can't ponder it too much. The oftener we read it, the fresher it will be to us; and the more we think about it, the more powerful it will become to us.

John the Baptist deserves great credit for introducing his own disciples to Jesus, as "the Lamb of God." He was wise enough to know his limitations, and to understand that Jesus had none. He was merely the one who came to prepare the way for the Master; and he encouraged his own disciples to follow Him, even though it meant that they were forsaking him for a new Master. So we must introduce our friends to the Lamb of God, who will take away their sins and make them soul-winners, in turn.

Andrew wasn't a great talker, but he was a quiet soul-winner. "He findeth first his own brother Simon, and brought him to Jesus." Jesus looked upon Simon and saw in him great possibilities for his Kingdom. And He told him that some day his name would be changed from Simon to Cephas, which means Peter, or rock. How wise Jesus was in seeing beneath the surface of all men, and in helping them to believe that they were capable of something worth while in His service. He wants us to feel that way about ourselves.

Jesus called Philip to follow Him, in the natural course of events. He called busy men, men who were earnestly doing their duty when He found them; and He challenged them to turn their abilities into the channel of service for Him. And because He encouraged them to follow Him, to learn more of Him day after day, they measured up to His expectations.

"Philip findeth Nathaniel" and told him about Jesus. But Nathaniel was skeptical, and asked: "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" This was a natural question, and Philip gave him just the right answer: "Come and see." He came, he saw and was conquered by the Man of Galilee. Jesus always courts investigation and no man has ever done so and then gone away unsatisfied.

Nathanael was convinced, and gave voice to his heartfelt convictions that Jesus was what He claimed to be. And we may be sure that he was a different man from that moment on. So we today, as the Master's disciples, are perfectly safe in introducing our friends to Him, no matter how skeptical they may be, no matter how scientific their point of approach. They will come away with their souls filled.—Christian Endeavor Quarterly.

This One Thing.

This is one of the most important lessons we have had this year, because, no matter what else we do as a Christian, if we do not win others we have lost out on one of the greatest reasons for being a Christian. We are saved that others may be saved. Jesus does not mean that His saving power shall stop with you. That you shall be a Dead Sea, but that you shall be an open channel, and that you shall be the means of opening up other channels and these others through which His love may flow until it belts the globe and reaches the last man on the last circle. There is no more important subject can come before us than the study of how we can win others and so increase the power and influence of Jesus in this world, and Jesus' own methods are the best ones and the more able we are to use them the more successful we will be in winning others.

Naturalness.

Jesus' way was the most perfectly natural way. First, He always had time. No matter where he was going, He could always stop to interview one who showed the least interest or one who would be responsive to a conversation. Second, it was His big habit to speak of His Father's business. Third, He turned all conversation to the one great need—people's realizing their responsibility to God, and of the terrific power of sin in a life. Fourth, it was so habitual with Him that it did not embarrass Him or cause Him to be awkward in conversing with any one about his lost condition and the need of a Savior. Fifth, the longing of His soul was to glorify the Father. He kept this great object in mind. This made everything in the Father's world speak so of him that it was easy for Jesus to use the most common things to illustrate the Father's love and care, His hope and expectation for His children, and His desire and ability to meet their every need.

The Need of a Human Hand.

Unless we feel the need of a person we cannot help them willingly and gladly. Jesus knew this need. We too will feel it as He did if we will allow ourselves to think of it. Jesus knew as we know that Christ and Christian living is the only thing that can meet and satisfy this need. Men and women and our young people are trying to satisfy this great longing of their hearts with things of the world—some of them right, most of them wrong, but none of them satisfy when they are substituted for Jesus in the life. It was His joy and should be ours to persuade them to become His followers.

Jesus Fills Every Need.

Man is lost, and needs a guide. He is sick with sin, and needs a physician. He is bound in the meshes of sin, and needs a redeemer. He is tempted, and needs a helper. He is bound to be a servant of somebody, so he needs a good master. Jesus meets all these needs and so is worthy of our allegiance.

The Value of a Soul.

Sin is so powerful that it nailed Jesus to the cross. A soul is so valuable that He went there a willing victim. No soul gets so low in sin, no heart so black with crime, no life so false but that there is some good in it or that Jesus does not value it. Jesus always tried

GRANDMA WHITE'S BEAR.

Before the days of automobiles and when northern Michigan was still new, something happened where Grandma White lives, something unusual. Grandma White has told the story many times to the four little sisters, Vera, Charlotte, Genie, and Baby Ruth, and it never fails as she tells it to win their smiles.

It happened that one autumn day late in the afternoon a big boy was passing the farmhouse. He saw Grandma White in the yard. (She wasn't grandmother, though, to the four little sisters at that time.) The boy leaned over the fence to talk with Grandma White about wild raspberries. He said that if he thought he would be safe he would sleep out of doors that night. He had walked many miles before he had found a place where raspberries were plentiful, and he wished to pick both his big pails full of berries before he returned home.

"There is nothing to fear in this well-settled neighborhood," Grandma White said cheerfully.

"That is what I told mother," the boy replied. "I told her not to worry about me because I might camp out tonight. She thinks there are bears in these woods."

"Of course," Grandma White admitted, "when I was a little girl bears used to be common in this vicinity; but they are back in the deep woods now. We haven't seen a bear around here for years."

The big boy thanked her and said "That's what I told mother." Then he went swinging two big empty pails and whistling cheerfully.

When Grandma White was washing the dishes after supper she said, "I wish I had thought to invite that boy to come back to supper and sleep here tonight."

Later she went to the door for a look into the gathering twilight. The farmhouse is on a hilltop. Just as Grandma White had decided that the night would be warm and that the boy could camp out without feeling cold she noticed a shadow by the farmyard gate at the foot of the hill. A minute later she believed that she plainly saw Maud at the gate below. Maud was a colt.

After Grandma White went into the house and the lamps were lighted, she forgot about Maud until she heard an animal step up on the porch.

"That is a queer thing for Maud to do!" exclaimed Grandma White. "She must have opened the gate and walked the hill, but I never knew her to climb the steps and come on the porch before."

Without stopping to think further, Grandma White opened the outside door and walked out on the dark porch to drive the colt away. The next minute she called: "Brother Isaac, bring a lamp quick! This isn't Maud! I believe it is—a bear!"

Brother Isaac instantly stepped to the door with a lighted lamp. Grandma White was just ready to back into the house when the light fell full upon a huge bear with bright and shining eyes.

Now it happened that Isaac was so startled by the sight of that bear that he forgot his sister. Instantly he slammed the door shut, leaving Grandma White outside with the bear.

Fortunately, the bear went down the steps faster than he came up, without offering to hug Grandma White or even to shake hands.

That bear ran down the hill so fast that when Brother Isaac went looking after him with a gun a few minutes later he was nowhere to be found.

Grandma White didn't sleep well that night. She didn't blame Isaac for shutting her outside with the bear, because she knew that of course he didn't intend to do such a careless thing. Grandma White didn't sleep well because she couldn't forget that big boy camping out under the shining stars while a huge bear was out for a stroll.

The next morning Grandma White saw the boy coming while he was yet far from the farmhouse. When he came nearer she invited that boy in to breakfast. He said he would be glad to come to breakfast, because he had been picking raspberries since the early dawn and had not taken time to eat a bite.

"I am in a hurry to get home," he explained.

"Well, I am so glad that you are safe and sound this morning that I can't tell you how thankful I am," Grandma White said when she helped the boy to more pancakes, "because a bear came to call on us last night."

"He called on me too," the boy remarked. "By hard work I had picked one of my two pails full of raspberries before dark. Then I wrapped up in a blanket and made myself comfortable for the night on a bed of pine boughs. I had put my pail of berries on a big stump before I made camp. I had scarcely closed my eyes when I heard an animal walking through the underbrush. Next thing I knew I saw a big bear walk up and lift down my pail of berries. The rascal ate every berry pawful after pawful. Then he put the empty pail back on the stump and walked away."

"Of course I was glad the bear didn't offer to touch me, but I was mad enough about the berries. That is why I filled my pails early this morning and started for home."

The big boy said he was glad the bear called on Grandma White the way he did, because he had feared that his story wouldn't be believed. Then how they laughed before the big boy went on his way cheerfully!—Frances Margaret Fox, in The Continent.

THE BOY WHO CHANGED.

There was no doubt about it, wee Bobbie was possessed of a very impatient disposition. He was only a tiny chap when he expressed his characteristics by lusty screams every moment of the time that his pretty young mother was preparing his bottle, even though she delivered it to him on the moment due, by the clock and by his schedule. When he awoke in the morning he was ready for the day's activities and would brook no delay.

As he grew older, the habit increased rather than lessened, and many times his impatience was so great that in the interest of peace his gifts were given to him the day or evening before his birthday or Christmas.

He was impatient to put on long trousers, and succeeded in having his way before either parent quite approved. And when as a young man his fancy was caught by a pretty face, he married in haste, to repent at leisure. Without doubt his girl-wife was entitled to considerable sympathy, for she was inexperienced, and his impatience with her frightened and worried her, and caused her to shed many tears.

He Wanted His Wants When He Wanted Them.

He never cared to tie himself to a definite meal hour yet he expected that when he did arrive, it would be ready for him to sit down to as soon as he hung up his hat. He was not satisfied to work hard and achieve his desires slowly. He wanted a nice home, luxurious fittings, an automobile and an opportunity to travel at once, for he was fond of saying: "If a fellow does not enjoy himself when he is young, when is he going to do it?"

In the course of a couple of years the small property which he had inherited was spent, and he was financially distressed. Some way or other, he had always seemed to get out of things all his life when he had got himself into a predicament, and this time was no exception to the rule; for at this juncture he contracted typhoid fever and, knowing that his young wife would not be able to take adequate care of him, he had himself taken to a most expensive, private hospital, where he enjoyed every attention until the end came.

He had lived fast and hard, and probably this was the reason he had so little to fall back on. Every available asset of the family was drawn upon, but even these were insufficient to meet the debts. The frightened little wife was obliged to go to a cheap maternity hospital until after the birth of her child.

She was rather terrified when the little bundle of red babyhood was placed in her arms, for she had small idea of what the future might hold for either of them. Besides, this man-child was so lusty and demanding, it made her think of her husband who was gone for he would tolerate no delays whatever without the wildest sort of protest.

Wild-eyed and white-faced, the little mother stared into the darkness night after night. What was to be done? She would have her own living to earn, and she was about as equal to that as a butterfly or a rabbit—but with a baby!

Then suddenly a wonderful thing happened. A fine, prosperous-looking young couple came through the ward one day and peeped at this baby and that baby with hopeful eagerness. When they reached the little new baby in the curve of his young mother's arm they gave a cry of delight, for he was an adorable child to look at. They came again and again, and though the little new mother was a bit bewildered by it all, she was as relieved as reluctant to agree to the adoption of her baby by the childless couple.

Like Father, Like Son.

When they came to take him away he was screaming lustily for his bottle, and the hospital nurse was quite red in the face. "I never saw such a child!" she declared. "He will not wait a single minute for anything or anybody. If he were my child, I would soon straighten him out or, first you know, he will rule the whole house."

The little mother looked distressed, and the baby's foster mother puzzled. "I didn't suppose," she said slowly, "that a morsel of a bay like that would kick up such a rumpus and be unwilling to wait a single minute."

It was as though a stinging blow had fallen upon the bare shoulders of the little mother. "Oh! It isn't he is to blame!" she said with quivering voice, her eyes filling with tears. "His father was just like that. He never would wait for anything or anybody or time or tide. He was the most demanding individual I ever knew!"

"Tell me all about it," the baby's foster father said quietly. "Please don't think you are disloyal, but we want to know, so that it will help us in training this little one just right."

So the little mother told, with pathetic eloquence, of the inconvenience, heartaches and failures which the baby's father had both caused and experienced because he had never learned to wait. Then she closed her tired eyes and went fast asleep like a weary child. "It is well, for you can go before she wakens. It will be easier for her that way."

A Matter for Serious Thought.

That night the baby's foster parents held a grave conference. As they looked at the rosy, sleeping cherub in his crib, it seemed quite impossible that he could make them trouble by an inherited disposition, but—but there was the story they could not forget.

They decided to be very firm and kind and wise, that there might be no bending of the human twig in the wrong direction. To begin with, they determined that his bottle should never be prepared in his presence, as the sight of it before it was ready and while he was hungry was sure to prove tantalizing. If it suddenly appeared before him, ready for his out-stretched hands, there would be no chance for the formation of that fussing habit several times a day. In the same way every cause of arousing feelings of impatience would be removed, and his life made as normal, wholesome and serene as possible.

Once upon a time when he became quite a "lump of a boy" and was able to sit up in his carriage, he took a notion that his perambulator must be wheeled to and fro on such streets only as would permit him to view the clanging and hurrying street cars. Any attempt to turn into a shaded, quiet street was met by vigorous protests in the form of a stiffening body and ear-piercing shrieks.

His foster mother studied the situation and tested him several times until she was convinced that he knew what he wanted and was determined to have his own way. That day the ride was very short. The next day she provided herself with a gay, little red balloon and a comical rubber toy that squeaked.

She wheeled him directly up the street on which the trolley line ran, and just before she was ready to turn into the side street which led to the quiet park, she handed him the rubber toy. He cooed with delight and did not notice when they left the dusty, hot street behind. A few moments later he looked around in intense indignation. How did this awful thing happen, that he had left the thoroughfare on which he liked to ride? But at that moment the red balloon appeared tied to the front of the carriage, and in the joy of watching it float and bob he forgot to scream. Once or twice later, when his foster mother turned firmly and without any diverting toy into side streets, he cried lustily, but as she wheeled right on, he found it did no good, and so he stopped.

The Boy Met Many a Test.

As he grew older he was given definite lessons in learning to wait. Once he wanted a certain toy very much, and his foster father bought it and brought it home, placing it upon the top of some book shelves where he could see but could not reach it.

"Mother tells me," said his foster father gravely, "that you do not hang up your pajama suit every morning, even though I have put a hook down low, just high enough for you to reach. You learned to count to ten the other day: when you have hung up your suit ten mornings without skipping once, the toy will be yours. If you forget, we will begin all over again."

The little fellow's lip and chin quivered and both foster parents were mightily inclined to press him to their hearts and tell him never to mind, but the memory of the little white-faced mother in the open hospital ward rose before them and the foster mother said gaily:

"Ten mornings, Sonny-Boy, and then the toy will be yours. You and I will count by putting a mark on a paper each morning."

As time went on it would have been easy to see the change that was taking place in the nature of the small boy under the wise training that he was receiving from his foster parents. In such small matters as taking his turn when swinging, or riding on the merry-go-round, or in many other ways where the old nature would display itself.

By the time he was six years of age, his foster parents rarely said, "Do this," or "Do that," for they were of the opinion that a child properly guided up to this time should have very fair ideas of his own as to what was right to do and not to do. So instead of receiving definite commands he was nearly always helped to make a wise choice of his own, thus developing rare judgment in so small a lad. At ten years he was a joy to every one who knew him, because of his thoughtful courtesy and his willingness to do the thing that seemed best.

When as a young man he brought a young girl and introduced her to his parents as the one he had chosen for his wife (although he explained frankly that they both expected to wait several years yet), his foster parents took her to their hearts and made her very happy when they said:

"To be sure, he is our adopted son; but if we could have one full grown exactly to our order today, he would be in no wise different from John, and we see no reason why you should not be very happy together when the time comes."

John and his bride began life in a modest cottage. They did not expect all the good things at once, but somehow these kept coming to the young man whose training had taught him to be self-controlled, far-sighted and considerate of others.

People who had known his own father said: "He is so different. You can never tell, can you, how babies will turn out?"—Emm Gary Wallace, in The Continent.

—Brother Bethea sees encouraging prospects in Lexington. The Sunday school attendance is increasing and a Christian Endeavor society has been organized. We believe there are substantial reasons for his hopes. Lexington is good territory for Methodist Protestantism.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—MARCH 1.

Christ Before Pilate.

Lesson Text: Matt. 27:11-26.

Golden Text: Isa. 53:5.

The Central Truth: Jesus Christ was and is "the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords."

Scriptural Points.

1. Jesus had already appeared before Annas, Caiaphas, the Jewish Sanhedrin, and Herod, a ruler of Galilee. Herod treated Jesus with contempt. The Jewish court found no testimony by which to condemn Him. But upon Jesus' asserting that He was the Son of God they judged Him guilty of blasphemy and worthy of death. They now bring Him to Pontius Pilate, the Roman governor of Judea and ask him to pass and execute the sentence of death.

2. Jesus, without the least apology or egotism, acknowledged that He was the King of the Jews. "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth."

3. "He answered nothing." Conscious of His own innocence, He made no reply to false and malicious accusations. "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth."

4. Upon careful investigation Pilate found Jesus innocent. He saw that the accusations against Him were untrue, and were prompted by envy and malice. His decision was, "I find no fault in this man."

5. But he lacked the courage to set free a man whom he had pronounced innocent. He now resorted to a shrewd plan to set Him free. To placate the Jews it was the custom to release a Jewish prisoner at each feast of the Passover. He had in custody a notorious prisoner, an insurrectionist and a murderer, named Barabbas. He allowed the Jews to select the prisoner whom they desired to be liberated. "Whom will ye that I release unto you? Barabbas, or Jesus, which is called Christ?" Imagine the surprise and even horror of Pilate when the people replied, "Barabbas."

6. In the midst of this dishonorable procedure Pilate received a strange message from his wife. In a terrifying dream she saw that Jesus was innocent. This was doubtless a message from God.

7. Pilate, disregarding every sense of justice, the voice of his own conscience and that of his wife, now weakly, cowardly, shamefully yields to the clamor of the multitude. "What shall I do then with Jesus, which is called Christ? They all say unto him, Let him be crucified." "With unanimous voice Pilate's jury have rendered their verdict, the most terrible ever rendered against an innocent man."

8. Pilate's washing his hands in declaration of his innocence was downright hypocrisy. He might fool the people, but he couldn't deceive himself.

9. "His blood be on us, and on our children." A most terrific prophecy, that has been fulfilled to the letter. The sufferings of the Jews for nineteen centuries have filled many a black page of history.

10. "And when he had scourged Jesus, he delivered him to be crucified." Pilate, not Jesus, has been on trial; and he has been found guilty of crucifying the Son of God.

Practical Points.

1. Jesus takes His stand before the tribunal of the conscience of every man, woman, and child. What will you do with Jesus? Will you enthrone Him in your heart and life, or will you crucify Him? Nail Him to the cross of your own rejection and unbelief? There is no other alternative.

2. Silence is the best answer to base slander.

"It doesn't pay to do much talking,
When you are mad enough to choke;
For the word that hurts the deepest
Is the word that is never spoke.
Let the other fellow wrangle,
Till the clouds have passed away,
And then he will do a lot of thinking
About the words you didn't say."

3. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." Shall it be the Barabbas of transgression, the Barabbas of unholy greed, the Barabbas of pleasure, the Barabbas of worldliness, the Barabbas of conscienceless ambition? or shall it be Jesus, the Friend of sinners, the Model of saints, the Savior of men, the Son of God?

4. Ceremonial water cannot wash away sin. Nor can any profession or protestation of innocence add the least whiteness to the soul. "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

"What can wash away my sin?
Nothing but the blood of Jesus."

—From The Word of Life.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Albemarle.—Some one has said that "Albemarle is in the heart of Stanly county, Stanley in the heart of North Carolina, and North Carolina in the heart of the United States." Well, if any one who does not live here happens to pass through, they better not deny his, for these are some folks I know who would resent their denial.

The church work here is progressing nicely. The Sunday school is growing by leaps and bounds. Last Sunday 171 persons were at Sunday school, and the collection was $7.58. This is the largest attendance at Sunday school at this church for more than three years.

The class taught by Mrs. J. P. Green has on a contest for attendance and new members. Every new member brought counts five points, and all old ones present count ten points. If a new member came last week and comes next week, on his second trip he counts ten points like any of the old members. This contest is causing quite a bit of enthusiasm among the teen-age. I believe this is the age Dr. Dixon and Dr. Forlines call "going over fool's hill, and through giggle hollow." This class is made up of some of the finest young people in Albemarle. Mrs. Green is doing some good work with them.

While I am talking about this class, I would not have the reader think it is the only one in the school. There are five others, and every one of them is second to none in the entire state. For teachers and pupils, organization and everything else considered, I will just stake this school against any one in the entire conference. We have a master plumber for superintendent, a grocer for secretary, an undertaker for treasurer and leader of the choir, a register of deeds for secretary of quarterly conference, a first-class musician for pianist and some of the very best folks in the county as members.

Brother Bethea was with us last week, and delivered four addresses on Stewardship. These were the fruits of much study, and were well received by the congregation. The attendance was not as good as we had hoped, but considering the cold rainy weather I think the average attendance of 51 was exceedingly good.

Some of our folks have been sick for some time. Uncle John and Aunt Cam Snotherly are rather feeble, and haven't been to church for some time. Mrs. J. E. Gantt is very ill at this time, and Miss Mary Lowder is in Tally-Brunson Hospital for appendicitis. An epidemic of mumps and colds has been on here for some time, and this has necessarily cut our attendance. If all our folks were well, I do not know whether we could take care of the Sunday school or not. I doubt it very much. The church attendance is good, we have no complaint to make, after all I guess the attendance is far better than that which the audience hears in the form of a sermon. Folks are loyal in spite of some things, aren't they, brethren. I have found it true, anyway.

The Ladies' Aid is right on the job. We see the ladies whispering and going to see each other, and methinks they are up to something, if they do not believe I'll tell on them, just let them try to pull something. I would not be surprised if they are up to something. I may be able to tell on them next time I write. I hope every one who reads will enjoy the stunt they pull, whatever it is.

J. L. Trolinger, Pastor.

Asheville.—Perhaps, as pastor, I should have written a letter to the Herald some time ago. But our reporter has been so faithful, and has covered the news so thoroughly that it seemed superfluous for me to say much if anything. However, there are a few impressions of the work that might be interesting. (The news items I shall leave to the reporter).

It isn't given to many men to repeat a pastorate. (It is quite by accident that I am repeating, so I am not as puffed-up about it as that statement makes it appear.) So I came back to this charge after seven years with mixed emotions. I have tried so far as I could to take up where I left off, and I have urged my folks to do likewise. I tell them I have been away on a vacation, a rather long one, to be sure, but just a vacation. And I have found the folks willing to take hold in that spirit. It is gratifying to see how they are taking hold.

A great many of the folks who were in the church when I left are gone, for one reason or another. This is a problem we have to face here at Asheville, this constant coming in and going out, to a degree that perhaps few of our churches are called on to meet. It is one of the reasons the membership does not grow any faster; one of the reasons why it is likely to continue to be relatively small.

But there is an encouraging side to the membership and attendance now which did not obtain when I was here before. A very large percent of the membership and of the attendance comes from a radius of half a mile around the church. A goodly number of the members live, some of them owning their own homes, within this territory. This is a hopeful sign and gives promise of still greater things.

Taking them generally, it would be hard to find a more loyal or more sacrificing people than the membership of the Asheville church. Last year, counting quite a number who joined the latter part of the year, and who therefore did not make much of a financial contribution, the per capita was something over $18. That is a remarkable showing when you consider that we have no wealthy, very few even moderately well-to-do people in the membership.

We have our problems, the greatest of which is lack of Sunday school room. I think I can speak for the other members of the board of trustees who purchased the lots and adopted the church plans, when I say that we had barely got the foundation done when we realized that we had made a mistake. We should have bought more land when we had the opportunity. The church has been suffering from the mistake all these years. And the problem is more acute now than it was then. We cannot grow until we get room to grow in. Just how we are going to get it, I do not know. But it must be got. When the folks are through making some absolutely necessary improvements on the property,—improvements that had to be delayed because of the pressing debt—we shall begin some program of enlargement.

It is encouraging to see the attendance at all the services increasing, to have a number of visitors worship with us from Sunday to Sunday, to find the societies increasingly active. If only we can line up in active service the large number of Methodist Protestants in the city, we shall feel that our work is really counting for something. Prayer is asked for us, and needed. C. W. Bates, Pastor.

Mrs. W. B. Anthony.—On Friday night, February 13, as the twilight shadows were gathering around us death once more softly and silently stole into our midst and carried away the soul of another one of Bethel's church members and our near neighbor, Mrs. W. B. Anthony. She had eaten her supper and retired as usual, apparently in as good health as she had been for some time, and in a little while she called her daughter to her bedside saying she was almost gone. Just a word or two more, a short struggle, and she was gone, leaving in the home only one son, Gordie, and one daughter, Lillie, her husband having preceded her to the great beyond nearly two years ago. Mrs. Anthony had been in failing health for some time, though she was not one to give up and so far as we know she was ready and willing to go when the messenger came. She knew she would not be here much longer, having told some of the neighbors a few days before her death. We certainly sympathize with the children left behind and especially the brother and sister left in the old home alone. Oh, how sad to go back home and mother not there, when these three were nearly always together. We hope and pray that they may all find peace and comfort from their mother's savior, for He alone can comfort us in such trying hours as these and remember, it is through sorrow alone that we are made good. Funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. B. Trogon, and she was laid to rest by the side of her husband at Bethel.

church to await the resurrection morn. Despite the downpour of rain, there was a large crowd present.

We loved her, yes, we loved her,
But angels loved her more,
And they have sweetly called her
To yonder shining shore.

One That Knew Her.

Asheboro.—The first quarterly conference was held Wednesday evening, February 11. The regular business of the quarterly conference was transacted.

Mrs. M. H. Moffett, the mother of Mrs. Elmer Rich, died in her home at Troy Wednesday, February 4. Mrs. Moffett was buried the following Sunday. Short services were held in Troy by Dr. J. W. McCracken, the pastor of the M. E. church of Troy, and continued in Asheboro at the M. P. church by Rev. H. F. Fogleman. Another sad death was that of the little four-year-old boy of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Cole.

Mrs. A. G. Dixon was present Sunday, February 15. Mrs. Dixon gave a splendid talk on foreign missions Sunday morning. In the afternoon a district meeting was held for Asheboro and the other Methodist Protestant churches near by. We are always pleased to have Mrs. Dixon with us. Her splendid talks put enthusiasm and new life into the ladies' activities.

The attendance at church and Sunday school has been very good for the last few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Ross and daughter, Miss Esther, spend Saturday and Sunday in Jackson Springs with Mr. George Ross.

English Street Church.—On February 22 we celebrated the dedication day. It was started off by a sunrise prayer meeting. All that attended felt the Spirit of God.

There was a large attendance at the Sunday school.

At the 11 o'clock preaching service the Greensboro quartet sang for us and the pastor delivered a fine sermon.

At 1:30 in the afternoon we had a singing. Singers from different churches were there and everybody enjoyed it, feeling that the Spirit of God was there.

It was one of the greatest days that our church has ever had.

At the 7:00 o'clock service we had a large attendance. The pastor delivered a fine sermon.

Virgil Boswell, Reporter.

First Church, Charlotte.—A missionary pageant, "The Striking of America's Hour," was given by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society last Sunday evening. It was well rendered and has been most highly complimented. Several requests have been made for it to be presented again. An offering was taken which amounted to $23.96.

Mrs. George E. Young delightfully entertained the Ladies' Aid society at the regular monthly meeting. All previous attendance records were broken, there being 25 present. One new member was enrolled. The devotional service conducted by the president, Mrs. Virgil Presnell, was very impressive. The business session was very interesting and many useful and helpful plans were discussed and adopted. For the social hour, Mrs. Young served delicious refreshments. The society adjourned, hoping that she would invite them again at an early date.

A Men's Brotherhood was organized at a banquet given at the church last Thursday evening. The men of the church were guests of Brother Surratt, who outlined the work of a men's club and presented the need for such an organization. Several men of the church spoke in favor of it and motion prevailed to organize a brotherhood. The following officers were elected: President, J. M. McCall; vice president, W. D. Hooper; secretary and treasurer, J. E. Hankins; program committee, C. H. Daughtry and J. M. Muse; constitution committee, L. M. Harward, E. E. Rutledge, A. F. Love, J. A. Pressley and C. P. Wooten. Meetings will be held monthly.

Mr. R. S. Garmon, our Sunday school superintendent, is very sick with influenza. We miss him in the Sunday school and other services and we pray for his speedy recovery.

Mrs. A. F. Love, Reporter.

Bessemer City.—We have had a great deal of sickness at this place and our congregations have been rather small. Our pastor preached for us Sunday morning and was also present at the mid-week prayer service. May God bless Brother Bingham in his earnest efforts to preach the gospel in all its sincerity. The average attendance at Sunday school is very good but we are hoping for a better school when the weather becomes more favorable. What we need most is a gracious revival in the hearts of our people, one that will stir them to a sense of their duty toward God. Let us not give up the battle until the victory is won, for we have the blessed assurance that God will never leave us nor forsake us if we trust and obey. We have our Christian Endeavor meetings on Sunday evening with very good attendance but we hope to make these meetings more interesting and better in the future. The society presented a very nice Bible to the church which was much appreciated. Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Lucy Blanton.

Shelby.—The Shelby church experienced the best day last Sunday that we have had this year. The weather was ideal and the people came out in increased numbers. The Sunday school attendance was the largest of any Sunday since Christmas. The offering was $5. Brother S. C. Tate, the superintendent, was absent, and Brother Joe Kennedy, the assistant, presided. The boys' class, which was re-organized last month, is now taught by Brother M. G. Willis. The class closed the membership contest last Sunday, the Blues defeating the Reds. A wiener roast will be given by the losing side to the entire class next Saturday afternoon.

The morning church service was fairly well attended, there being some people present who had not attended during the present pastorate. We were delighted to have Rev. J. B. Bivins, of Vale, worship with us and assist the pastor in the service. Brother Bivins is a local preacher and member of the Fallston quarterly conference.

The climax of the day was reached at the night service when the church was filled with people who gathered to hear a sermon by Rev. J. M. Morgan, of Fallston. Brother Morgan came to preach for us by invitation of the pastor in compliance with the plan of the annual conference in observing February as Stewardship Month. His sermon was largely on the theme, stewardship, and was an earnest appeal to the people to right living and making this life a real success from a spiritual stand point. Brother Morgan brought with him some of his able singers, designated as the Wright quartet. The singers rendered four very beautiful and inspiring selections which seemed to delight the congregation. Rev. J. D. Morris, pastor of Cleveland charge, was present and assisted in the service.

After the close of the preaching service last Sunday night, the young people of the church were called together by Brother J. D. Morris and two of the members of Oak Grove Christian Endeavor society for the purpose of considering the organization of a society for the Shelby church. The young people very readily responded to the proposition and a society was organized with about 15 members. Miss Elizabeth Tate was elected president and Mr. Orlo McFarland was chosen as recording secretary and treasurer. Brother Peeler and Grant, members of the Oak Grove society, and Brother Morris gave the young people some very helpful information concerning the organization in its work for the church and community. Their advice was greatly appreciated by the newly organized society.

Brother W. C. Wright, who remains a patient at the Shelby Public Hospital receiving treatment for a very serious injury which occurred two weeks ago, is reported improving slowly. He and Mrs. Wright have been valuable members of the Shelby church and Sunday school for some time and we hope that Brother Wright will soon be able to leave the hospital.

The Lord's supper will be observed at the morning service next Sunday and the regular preaching service at night. The Christian Endeavor society will meet at about 6:30 next Sunday evening. This will be the first meeting of the society since its organization.

The prospects for the future of the Shelby church are more encouraging than heretofore and we are hopeful of accomplishing much more in the future than we have during the first four months of the conference year.

C. B. Way, Pastor.

Henderson.—A number of our people have been confined at home with sickness. We are glad that they are well or on the improving list now.

A very successful Thank-Offering Service was given on Sunday night, February 15, by the Young Ladies' League, assisted by the Missionary Society. The following readings were given and enjoyed by all present: "Thanksgiving Anne," by Mrs. C. L. Finch; "The Thank-Offering Box Opened at the Master's Feet," by Miss Eleanor Young; "The Mansion," by Mrs. L. R. Gooch, accompanied by Mrs. Joe Martin at the organ and Mrs. F. R. Harris at the piano.

The Ladies' Aid is planning to have their annual Birthday Social March 5, in the basement of the new annex.

A part of the upper floor of our new annex was used yesterday for the first time. We hope to be able to use the whole building by next Sunday.

Reporter.

Pleasant Grove, Thomasville Circuit.—The Sunday school is progressing nicely, considering the bad weather we have had. We are going to have an Easter exercise. Brother Reynolds last Sunday gave us a splendid sermon. After services the membership decided to make some improvements on church grounds and the cemetery. Brother J. E. Cecil said he would give the concrete blocks to make a 30-foot wall around the church, filling in and fixing the yard. The Ladies' Aid is going to beautify it by planting flowers and shrubbery. We are going to build a concrete walk to the cemetery.

We have a strong Ladies' Aid society, consisting of nineteen members. Mrs. A. C. Cecil is president, Mrs. B. E. Payne treasurer, and Mrs. Ralph Kennedy secretary. They have got up a beautiful quilt which they are intending to quilt and place names upon and afterwards sell to raise money to beautify the church.

Brother N. G. Bethea was up to the church and gave a good address on the High Point College. The church voted to carry life insurance on one young person to go to the endowment fund for the College. We are always glad to have Brother Bethea with us.

The next Ladies' Aid will meet March 4, at the home of Mrs. W. T. Kennedy at High Point.

The Christian Endeavor is still holding its meeting as usual, but not having very good attendance owing to the bad weather. Hope it will be better when weather improves.

Walter Burton, Reporter.

Dulins, Mocksville Circuit.—For the past few Sundays our congregations have been decreasing in both Sunday school and preaching, owing to the rain and muddy roads. We hope when spring opens the people will take more interest in the church work.

Pastor Sisk delivered an excellent sermon yesterday on "Stewardship." I feel like when he had finished the sermon that the subject had been handled well.

We are glad to say that they think his son Hughie will be able to come home today from the Statesville hospital, where he underwent an operation for appendicitis.

Best wishes to the Herald and its many readers.

Reporter.

State Street, Lexington.—A few Sundays ago Mrs. Bethea gave the church here a pleasant surprise—25 new Church Hymnals. The congregation were asked to guess what they were before the box was opened. Quite an interesting guessing contest followed.

Sunday we had another guessing contest. Brother Bethea held up a box and said it contained a present for the church from a member of the denomination who was not a member of State Street church. So there were two guesses—what is in the box? and who gave it? Soon some one said, "Collection plates." Perhaps the thought presented itself so readily because collection plates were so much needed, for one reason, because the men were mashing their soft hats out of shape trying to collect money in them. I was then disclosed that Miss Mabel Hutton had given two nice collection plates. We are all quite grateful to Miss Hutton for this and many other acts of thoughtfulness.

Brother Bethea was called away from home Sunday in the interest of the College endowment fund and Brother Lindley of the faculty of the High Point College gave us a beautiful and helpful talk at the 11 o'clock hour. His subject was, "Why We Go to Church." Mrs. Lindley was with us too. We were so glad to have them both. Hope they will come again. Wonder why Dr. and Mrs. Whitaker do not come to see us some time. We would love to have them.

The newest organization of the church is the Christian Endeavor society. Miss Helen Hayes, Mr. Harrison and a few other leaders from the society at the High Point College came over Sunday night and helped us get organized.

We had visitors Sunday night from Pennsylvania (have forgotten the town). They were passing through on their way to Florida and inquired for the Methodist Protestant church. They were not daunted at finding that the "church" was a parsonage but came on anyway and enjoyed the service and became acquainted with the folks and had a general good time with us. I do not remember their name, but they were an elderly gentleman and his wife, members of the M. P. church in their home town in Pennsylvania.

Visitors always receive a hearty welcome at our church; Mr. and Mrs. Bethea are never strangers to any one and all the rest of us are social too. All who do not believe it, come and see.

Reporter.

Union Grove, Forsyth Circuit.—Our church has Sunday school every Sunday, preaching twice a month, first and third Sundays, Sunday school at ten o'clock except preaching Sundays; then Sunday school at two, preaching at three. We elected new officers at the beginning of the new year with S. L. Tesh as superintendent. Our Sunday school attendance is keeping up very well in spite of the epidemic of mumps. We are hoping the weather will be better soon and that everybody will be over the mumps. Then we are looking for a still better Sunday school attendance. We are planning to hold our protracted meeting in July, beginning on Monday night after the second Sunday, and on through the week over the third Sunday. Pray for our meeting.

Reporter.

Pine Bluff, Midland Charge.—Our Sunday school and church are both doing some good work. There were present last Sunday at Sunday school 130. This is a very good average for the pretty weather. During some of the rough weather, however, the attendance has been considerably less than this. But there has not been a Sunday yet this winter that we have not had Sunday school with a fairly good attendance.

Our church, as well as the Sunday school, continues to grow. Just recently we have had the following to come to Pine Bluff by letter: Brother J. F. Whitley, from Providence M. E. church in Stanly county; Mrs. W. L. Mabry from Love's Grove M. P. church; and Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Vancannon, Mr. Vancannon's father, and five children, from Why Not charge. We are glad to have all these good people with us.

On last Sunday night the Christian Endeavor society gave a pageant, Youth Dares, at the church. In spite of the rainy night there was a goodly number present. The pageant was gotten up under the leadership of the president of the Christian Endeavor society, L. E. Mabry. Brother Mabry has been doing some splendid work with the boys and girls in the community and the Christian Endeavor society is looking forward to even better things in the future.

February 17.

West Forsyth Charge.—We have not written in quite a while, but have been quite busy on our work. Everything is going at a right good rate at the present time. We are grateful for the many good things given us by the faithful members of the different churches. We received a nice box of meat and butter from Stony Knoll church, Mrs. Speas sending it; also Mrs. Sanford Doub, of Baltimore, gave us butter. The wife received a nice fruit basket and pillow cases for Christmas, which we did not report, Mrs. C. G. Hunter giving the basket and Mrs. Jean Long, pillow cases. We have been made very sad for the past couple of months as we have lost several members by death. Much sickness still is among us.

Deaths.

Audrey Speas Kirby, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Kirby, born January 24, 1924, died November 14, 1924.

Mamie Peoples, born September 2, 1912, died February 14, 1925. She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Pleasant Hill church, funeral conducted by the pastor.

Just on the other side we shall see that dear face. Jesus passed through the grave and blest the bed and said, Rest here, blest saint, till the morning breaks.

D. A. Morgan, Pastor.

Love Joy, Why Not Circuit.—We are having a good Sunday school when the weather is favorable, average attendance about 60. The young people are taking a leading part in the activities of the church, which speaks well for themselves and for the community.

We were disappointed last preaching Sunday, our pastor, Rev. J. W. Hulin, being called away to conduct a burial service at Flag Springs. However, he came Sunday night and preached for us one of the best sermons that he has ever delivered at this place. May we all as church members strive to work with our pastors more this year than ever before for the upbuilding of the church and advancement of the cause of Christ.

Brother H. A. Garrett of High Point was with us the first Sunday in this month and gave us an interesting and instructive talk about our College at High Point. I am not informed exactly how much this church has contributed to the College but I think the people are greatly interested; at least they should be, for a Christian education is the most powerful thing that a young man or young woman can have to carry them through this life.

We are contemplating having a rally day the fifth Sunday in March. Our pastor promised to be with us on this occasion. We are looking forward for a good day, hoping the whole community may come prepared to spend the day in service to God.

Some of our members are sick and I hope that they will soon be restored to their usual health again so that they may be with us again in the services.

Sunday school next Sunday as usual. Prayer service first and third Sundays in every month. Preaching second Sunday in each month.

Best wishes to the Herald readers.

Hobart Reynolds.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

In Loving Memory.

The death angel has once more invaded our ranks and removed from our midst our dear sister, Mrs. G. W. Coble.

She, who for so many years has been one of the leading, guiding spirits of our societies and other branches of the church, will live on, being remembered by what she has done. Mrs. Coble has been a member of our societies for many years and was a life member of the missionary society. Very quiet and unassuming, her beautiful Christian character exemplified the spirit of her Lord. Her faithful life will long be a beacon light to our members.

In her death we have lost a true friend and co-worker in Christ; one who was interested in all Christian activities, and she will be greatly missed in all departments of her church, especially in these societies and the Bible class of the Sunday school, and we will seek to honor her memory by a life of service.

Dear sister, we loved thee, but God in infinite love knew best and took thee to dwell with his angels above.

Resolved, That we extend our sympathy to the bereaved family and commend them to our Heavenly Father's care.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be given to the family, a copy forwarded to the Missionary Record, to the Methodist Protestant Herald, and to the Burlington Daily Times, and that they be placed on the minutes of our societies.

Goley.—Bethany Methodist Protestant church lost one of its best members on January 31, 1925, when the spirit of Sister Martha E. Moffitt Goley went home to be with God. Brother W. F. Ashburn and the writer conducted the funeral at Bethany. May God comfort the bereaved ones. A. O. Lindley.

Anthony.—Louise N. Anthony, daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth Pegram, born November 10, 1860, died February 13, 1925. She was married December, 1883 to William B. Anthony, who died March 1, 1923. She leaves behind four sisters and one brother, also the following children: Gordie L. Albert, C. W. and Jesse Anthony, Mrs. Mattie Browning and Miss Lillie Anthony, eight grandchildren, besides a host of friends, to mourn their loss.

She united with Bethel Methodist Protestant church when but a girl and has lived a consistent Christian life. For several years she never missed Sunday school or preaching service at her church unless it was impossible for her to get there.

Mrs. Anthony retired in her usual health Friday night so far as any one knew. About two hours later she called her daughter and told her to bring a light. She called her brother who brought a light, but in spite of all that could be done she died about half an hour later.

The funeral service was conducted Sunday, February 15, at Bethel M. P. church by her pastor, Rev. J. B. Trogdon. In spite of the rainy weather and bad roads there was a large crowd present to pay the last tribute of respect to their neighbor and friend.

Burrow.—Sister Martha Elizabeth Burrow lived to the ripe age of some eighty-odd years. She was the widow of the late Henderson Burrow, who preceded her to the home beyond 25 years ago. At an early age she professed faith in Christ, and joined with the Methodist Protestant church at Brower's and all these years she was faithful to her church, until her health would not permit her to go any more. But she still held on to Christ, with that loving disposition until the end. She fell asleep on January 23, 1925, was laid to rest on the 24th, in Brower's cemetery to await the resurrection morning. Her funeral was conducted by the writer.

I never had the pleasure of knowing her personally, but can say her life is still living in her children and grandchildren and on down to the great grandchildren. She leaves to mourn her loss three sons, J. M. Burrow, W. M. Burrow, Asheboro, R. 1; A. J. Burrow of Troy; a number of grandchildren and great grandchildren, one sister and two brothers, a host of other relatives and friends. May the Lord comfort them and help them to realize that their loss is her gain. The many beautiful flowers spoke of the love they all had for her. I know it is sad to part with mother, but the comforting thought comes, if we take her God for our comforter and guide we shall meet some day never to part again. Dearest mother, we loved you, but God loved you best. He said, Come up higher and be at rest. C. H. Hill, Pastor.

Devitte Newton Helsabeck, born February 12, 1847, died February 1, 1925. He joined Tabernacle church a number of years ago. He was married to Sarah Salina Reid December 19, 1868. To this union were born five children. His wife departed this life May 23, 1919. He also has three children gone before to welcome him home. He has two children living, these being Mrs. J. L. Marshall and Mr. Ernest D. Helsabeck; one granddaughter, Mrs. E. J. Kirby, and one great-grandchild, E. J. Kirby, Jr. He also has one sister living, Mrs. R. W. Boyles. He was taken Friday morning very seriously, suffering much. He was taken to the hospital Saturday and died Sunday at 10:30 o'clock. The bereaved family wish to thank their many friends and neighbors for their kindness during the illness and death of their father. He was laid to rest in the cemetery at Mt. Pleasant, funeral conducted by his pastor, D. A. Morgan.

John Wesley Whitman, born December 1, 1857, departed this life February 16, 1925. He was married to Florence Lenora Conrad November 26, 1882. Their union was blessed with eight children: Mrs. Fannie L. Holder, Willie Wesley, Henry Thomas, Elmer Luther, Rober James, Mrs. Alice L. Beroth, and Lillie Mattie—six living, two dead: viz., Henry Thomas, and one in infancy. He had 14 grandchildren living, two dead.

He professed Christ when about 25 years of age, but never joined any church, yet he tried to live the Christian life. He was a good neighbor, honest and industrious, and always cheerful. About three weeks ago he expressed a desire to attend church regularly if his health would permit. He said he was ready for death. Our loss is heaven's gain.

He was laid to rest in the cemetery at Pleasant Hill church, funeral conducted by the pastor, D. A. Morgan, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Grabs.

Hunter.—Thaddens Raymon, son of Aquilla and Rebecca Hunter, born January 23, 1869, died January 26, 1925. He professed faith in Christ early in life and joined Pleasant Hill M. P. church. He was married to Mary Belle Scott January 1, 1893. To this union were born five children, Warren, Leota, Beatrice, Worth, and Clifford. He is survived by his wife, five children, eight grandchildren, three brothers and one sister. He was an obedient son, a loyal husband, a loving and faithful father. He possessed a cheerful disposition, always kind and affectionate toward his fellowman—a man quiet, unassuming, in whom the truth was buried deep in his bosom, a man in whom all who knew him put confidence, a man who proved the great axiom, if you want friends, prove yourself a friend.

His family, relatives and neighbors mourn the loss of one who was dear to all, but the great King of kings and Lord of lords had need of him, and hath called him home to glory. We miss him, but our loss is heaven's gain.

He was laid to rest in the cemetery at Pleasant Hill, funeral conducted by the pastor, D. A. Morgan, assisted by Rev. Mr. Hauser.

Mrs. D. B. Dwigins.—On Saturday, February 7, our hearts were made sad, when death came and took from our midst one of our well known and best loved church members, Mrs. D. B. Dwigins, or, as she was lovingly called, "Grandma" Dwigins. She was sick only about a week, and her Master said, "It is enough; come up higher! Thy work on earth is finished," and her weary soul, free from all pain and trials of earth, took its flight to be forever with her Savior and her companion, who preceded her a little over a year ago. We can only imagine the joy and happiness of these souls as they were reunited where there is no pain, sorrow or death.

Mrs. Dwigins was Miss Mary Jane Ballard before her marriage to Daniel B. Dwigins November 5, 1868, and was nearing her 80th year. To this union were born six children, all of whom survive; they are as follows: Mrs. W. M. Barrow, Mrs. N. J. Dillon, Mrs. A. D. Dillon, Mr. W. S. Dwigins, all of Kernersville, R. 3; and Mrs. W. S. Jones of Greensboro, N. C., and Mr. J. A. Dwigins of Newberry, S. C. All of the children were with her during sickness except Mr. J. A. Dwigins, of South Carolina, who could not come on account of sickness in his family.

Mrs. Dwigins had a host of friends and relatives, was a good neighbor, good to the sick, a loving mother and loved her church. We shall miss her kindly face and handshake at old Bethel. Oh! how we miss so many of the good old faces that are so rapidly passing out and I wonder if we younger ones will be as able to fill their places as they were. We extend our sympathy to the ones that are left behind. While we feel that she is happier by far than we poor mortals of earth, yet we hate to give up our loved ones.

Funeral services were conducted by their pastor, Rev. J. B. Trogon, assisted by Dr. Spahr of Grace church, Greensboro. She was tenderly laid to rest beneath a mound of beautiful flowers at Bethel church. The weather was ideal and a large crowd gathered there to pay our last tribute of respect to "Grandma" Dwiggins.

Peaceful be thy silent slumber,
Peaceful in thy grave so low;
She no more will join our number,
She no more our songs will know.

Yet again we hope to meet her
When the day of life is fled,
And in heaven with joy to greet her
Where no farewell tears are shed.

A Friend.

to reach that good. And how tremendously it was multiplied in service for Him. This is the task He has left us—reaching the good in people and bringing them into the kingdom.

Not For Ourselves.

"Jesus always made folks feel that He needed them for what they could do. He did not ask people to follow Him just that He might have followers. He could get along without them for Himself. But He came to inaugurate a kingdom, to set up a new order and He led prospective followers to understand that they were to be of great service in extending that kingdom. How well they measured up to His expectations Bible history tells us. Are we measuring up?

We win souls not for our glory, but for their own sake and the extension of a kingdom.

Face to Face.

No, I have never seen Him face to face;

But I have spoken in His listening ear,
Have tasted freely of His saving grace,
Have proved His promises and have felt Him near.

I have not seen Him face to face; what need,
When day by day His tender love and care
Wrap me round; when I can with Him plead
My heart's desires, and know He answers
prayer?

Not face to face; not yet! but hand in hand!
As He has willed it, I would have it so.
But some sweet day I shall in His own land
Behold Him, and His glorious beauty see.

—Pauline Frances Camp.

In Memory of Landis Martin of Canaan.

On Thursday, February 4, death came into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Martin and took their beloved one. His loving spirit sweetly and peacefully left its abode and went to its eternal home. He held his mother that he was going home to live with Jesus. Landis was a sweet little child. He was loved by every one he came in contact with. May his gentle spirit hover over and about the parents, may they have their lamps trimmed and burning like dear little Landis when the summons shall come for them. Landis leaves father, mother, five brothers and two sisters to mourn their loss. Everything was done that loving hands could do, but God saw best to take him to Himself in glory. It seemed so hard for his parents to give him up but just think of his beautiful home in heaven and the joy that fills his soul; compare with toil and danger through which he will not have to pass, then may you be able to say, The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord. He can not come to you, but you can go to him. Landis was sick only about four days, but he suffered a great deal. Landis will be missed in the home, by his parents. We will also miss him in our little band on Sunday, but we believe that one more soul out of Canaan Sunday school is rejoicing in heaven, where he will be safe forever in the arms of Jesus.

Little Landis was laid in the cemetery at Canaan church to wait the resurrection morning.

Oh how sweet it will be in that beautiful land so free from all sorrow and pain,
With songs on our lips and harps in our hands
To meet sweet Landis again.

Funeral service was conducted by Rev. C. E. Ridge. Grace Ward.

NOTICE TO PASTORS.

The Young People's Summer Conference will be held June 16-26 at High Point College. I am requesting the pastors to please make this announcement from the pulpit of each church and urge the young people to attend the conference. I hope you will repeatedly urge this matter upon your young people.

Through the columns of the Herald I will keep you informed from week to week as to the progress being made in the plans for the conference. I am also respectfully requesting you to plan nothing in your local church for this date which will prevent the young people's attending the conference. In my estimation the conference this year will be more far-reaching in its effect in advancing the cause of the Methodist Protestant Church and the Kingdom of God than any conference we have yet had. We are building a stronger program than the program of any previous conference. This program, therefore, will call for a stronger and larger list of faculty. It will be more far-reaching in its effect, because more people are praying for the success of the conference this year than have ever prayed for it before. It has been realized, at least to some extent, what these conferences mean to our young people, and it is the earnest desire of every consecrated member of our church that these conferences grow in power for Christ from year to year.

The good which will come to the College as a result of the conference here cannot be estimated. These future leaders of our denomination will be more interested in the College when they have come and seen and lived for a few days in its atmosphere. They will go back home more loyal to it, and will no doubt go back to shoulder their portion of the responsibility in making it the success we desire for it. The prospective college students who attend the conference will likewise be impressed and will naturally turn their eyes to this institution when the times comes for choosing a college.

Realizing that the conference will be just what we make it, and realizing that the key man in the situation is the pastor, as in every situation wherein the entire conference is involved, I am calling upon you, brethren, to contribute your prayers, your moral support, and everything else that you can to its success. It is for the good of the churches at home that these conferences are held each year, therefore every local church should be concerned about the conference and urge the young people to take advantage of the great opportunities offered them in the conference.

Halifax.—The past three Sundays the weather has been fine, and the roads getting better, and our congregation have increased. Yesterday was a good day at Hollister. We had a good crowd and a very impressive service, after which we administered the Lord's Supper. We had a good congregation at Ringwood yesterday in the afternoon, and a very good crowd at Bethesda last night.

We are busy raising funds to repair the parsonage, and we are also putting on an every-member canvass at Hollister church to raise funds to relieve the debt on the church.

We want to thank W. W. Knight for canned pickles and fresh sausage, Mr. Harrison for some nice cabbage, Mrs. Edwards, pickles, Mrs. F. M. Taylor for fruit and fresh sausage, Mr. Vinson for two nice ties, and some Mrs. W. R. Neville for a nice shoulder of fresh meat and a nice lot of sausage, and Mr. Y. A. Spivey for a nice present which was very acceptable. We want to thank every one for this kind remembrance.

The Interdenominational Conference of the men's Church League will meet at Colum-

Ohio, May 8 to 11, 1925. It is expected one thousand laymen, representing all deominations in the United States and Canada gather to hear the reports prepared by the commissions and to discuss the recommendations made by these commissions.

Representatives to this conference from all denominations will be selected through and through their registration will ordinarily be made by the organized denominational agencies of men's work. This representation of one thousand laymen will be apportioned to the denominations of evangelical churches operating in North America.

During the first three days the conference will meet jointly with the delegates to a distinct convention, and together hear the reports of these commissions. Representation at this convention will be arranged through a joint committee.

Many of the most prominent laymen in America are in the list of commission members already engaged in the preparation of the reports. In connection with the presentation of these commission reports more than sixty standing laymen will give first hand testimony touching their experience in these matters.

Upon application, all interested ministers and laymen will be registered as members of the convention by following the conditions which will be given general publicity at a later date.

—An earthquake last Saturday night alarmed the people of New York. They fear that it is the forerunner of a more destructive one. It has been predicted that the earth will some day give way under the weight of skyscrapers, letting these buildings topple to the earth. An earthquake that should destroy New York would be the most terrible on record.

—Messrs. Ed York and Carl Brittain of Grace church have recently taken unto themselves wives. Mr. Brittain went to Graham for his companion while Mr. York married a lady from Alabama employed in Greensboro as a stenographer. Dr. Spahr officiated in both marriages. We recommended him highly when he came, and last week he had three weddings. If the business increases to great proportions we may send in a bill for our commission as advertising agent.

THE NATURAL AND THE SUPER-NATURAL.

The natural is God's ordinary method of doing things; the supernatural is His extraordinary method. That the Almighty is still working along natural lines is a most delightful fact and a most precious truth. The Holy Scriptures abound with assurances to this fact. God still orders the days and the seasons. Says the Psalmist: "This is the day that the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it." "Thou hast made summer and winter." "He giveth snow like wool; he scattereth the hearfrost like ashes. He casteth forth his ice like morsels; who can stand before his cold?"

And Jesus asserted that the Father of mercies is directing the natural forces to provide for the human race: "For he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." The Creator does not exist apart from the world that He has created. He personally directs this earth along with all its forces.

The natural order is the product of supernatural wisdom, love, and energy. All came into existence miraculously. The first ray of light was a miracle. The first tree, the first flower, the first rainfall, the first fruit, were miracles.

The effort of some of the modernists to place the Almighty in the straight-jacket of operating along natural lines only is pany and ridiculous to the last degree. To deny, or explain away, His supernatural performances recorded in the Scriptures and in history, is crude and wicked unbelief. The fact is, our God stands above nature and frequently works above and outside of nature. Personal salvation from sin is a miracle of grace. Miracles of healing are much rarer than they ought to be. Miracles of providence have saved human lives and shaped the destinies of nations.

Shameful unbelief has limited the holy One of Israel. It is recorded of the Miracle-worker: "And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief." Omnipotence stands ready to respond to the exercise of faith. "According to your faith, so be it unto you." "All things are possible to him that believeth."—The Word of Life.

THE GOSPEL OF NEGLECT.

Another compelling reason for carrying the gospel to the untouched world is that we may avert the perils ever incident to a failure to possess these fields. Passing by many minor examples, there is one supreme example which history furnishes of the danger of leaving any area of the world unpossessed by Christian missionary agencies. The churches of the seventh century in Egypt and Syria grew negligent of the spiritual needs of a neighboring peninsula, and out of that peninsula, bleak, barren, sparsely populated, most unpromising, out of the untouched world of Arabia and the unoccupied fields of Medina and Mecca, came that fiery propaganda and that impetuous religious movement which more nearly succeeded than any other force or movement in overthrowing the church of Christ. The price which the church has paid for the missionary negligence of those early centuries is to be reckoned in millions of martyrs and murders, in the loss of whole nations and almost whole continents, in the all but total extinction of Christianity in Africa and Asia, in the bloody price of unsuccessful crusades, in the shaming of the armies of the living Christ, in the presence of a modernism which denies the Son of God and in the present-day necessity of an immeasurable outlay of life and effort for the winning back of the ground lost through the missionary negligence of those early centuries. Whether missionary effort pays or not, history has forever proved that missionary activity does not pay. A compelling reason today for carrying the gospel to the whole untouched world is to avert the peril that is always latent in every area which is unentered by missionary forces.—Rev. Charles R. Watson, D.D., in leaflet of the Layman's Missionary Movement.

MODERNISM.

The Modernists are fond of telling us that modernism is the result of intellectual progress, "The ripe fruit of present-day thinking." The Unitarians, however, say it is just what they "have been teaching all along." The Jewish writers say that it is their "ancient philosophy rehearsed." The Jewish Chronicle says that its teachings are "a reaction to Judaism," and that "the place for its exponents is in the synagogue."—United Presbyterian.

Prayer purifies: it is a self-preached sermon.—Richter.

A ROLLING STONE.

By Russell Allen Hoke.

The day old Jacob Tolliday was found in the woods with the hole of a Burton bullet in his temple, there arose in the breast of every Tolliday a burning hate both for the man who had fired the gun and for his people.

While the Burtons came from the west slope of Fire Mountain, where the sun, setting red and fiery, gave them natures seething hot, the Tollidays dwelt on the eastern slope, where the lack of blazing colors reflected in their dispositions. They were as cold and as hard as the land they owned. They were keen, calculating men, who drove sharp bargains, worked hard, and spoke little. But they revenged all things good.

To a man they gathered at the news of old Jacob's death, and, putting aside their womenfolk, they took up their guns and crossed the divide of Fire Mountain. Down the west slope they went, silent and grim.

So the feud began and continued. Year after year went by and generations passed their feelings on to the new. Young Tollidays grew to manhood proud in their hate and passed an either to death or to old age with their passion unabated.

When young Picard Tolliday, great-great-grandson of old Jacob, felling timber on his father's tract one day, heard the crackling of twigs near him, he promptly reached for his gun and shouted the precautionary, "Who's there?"

The crackling stopped and Picard waited expectantly, rifle poised. Then came the answer, "Friend," and the sound of footsteps advancing through the underbrush.

As a woodsman appeared in the clearing, Picard lowered his gun. The man looked at him, then grinned. "Gittin' scary, Pick?" he asked quietly.

"Nope," answered the other, "but I don't take no chances, Lem. There's Burtons 'round, I've heerd." He picked up his ax and resumed his chopping.

Lem sat down on a log and watched for a moment without speaking. Then he picked up a chip that flew near him and said casually: "The old man wants to see you, Pick. He's got some news from your ma, I think."

Picard glanced quickly at his cousin and put down his ax. Then he nodded and took up his gun. Turning, he strode to the trail. Lem watched him a moment, then swung into the trail back of his cousin.

"You wanted me?" Picard asked, as he entered his father's cabin. Peter Tolliday looked up from a letter he was reading by the fire. He nodded absently and resumed reading while he motioned to a chair. "Set down, Pick."

Picard seated himself, nervously handling his rifle. His eyes roamed about the familiar room, then sought his father's face.

"Your ma's sick," the old man suddenly said. He stopped, then handed the letter to his son.

"She wants to see me," Picard observed as he finished. His father nodded and looking into the fire said: "Yep, she wants you. You'd best go." He was silent a moment, then added: "'Tis my fault. I should ha' knowed she would be more content with us than in the city. But I feared for her, son. 'Twere too many Burtons round here. Now she's sick"

That was the nearest to an outspoken expression of his feelings that old Peter ever permitted. He lapsed into silence, and only his pose by the fire told his son the worry he was feeling.

"Them Burtons!" he burst out passionately. "I wish every one of 'em was dead!"

Picard chuckled as he put up his rifle and started filling a pack. "Wait awhile," he advised. "They'll git all that's comin' to 'em."

His father shook his head and pointed to the letter. "Not if we do as ma wants," he declared heatedly. "I believe in treatin' a man square when he's square. But look at them Burtons!" He spread out his hands.

Picard nodded in agreement. "They need to larn a lesson," he said, over his shoulder. "An' it's got to come from the open end of a gun."

"O' course," Peter Tolliday agreed. "Your ma was always for turnin' a second cheek to 'em. That's one o' the reasons I didn't fetch her along. She'd probly have walked right into the Burtons empty-handed."

He turned suddenly and, tapping one palm with a long finger, said: "An' don't fergit, Pick, while ye're on yer way t' keep one eye open. The more Burtons ye can drop, the better yer trip'll be."

Picard listened until the old man had finished, then, swinging his pack to his back, he picked up his gun, and left the cabin.

He chose a trail leading up the mountain. The leaves were beginning to turn, their brilliant colors made the trail a path of beauty, but Pick's eyes saw it not. He lived the Tolliday rule—"Git yer man before he gits ye." Years of practice had accustomed his eyes to scan the woods for signs of foes. So not once did Pick realize the beauty of his surroundings, but as his long, even stride carried him up the mountain, his eyes were always shifting from side to side.

On he went until, reaching the high ridge of Fire Mountain, he turned and bore off to his right to where the little city of Matamoros lay hidden in the distance. He was on the border line of the Burton land, but though he maintained his vigilance, he saw nothing disturbing.

Eventually he came to the trail leading down to the city. Something besides the slope of the path hastened his pace. His mother's illness meant more to Pick than he would have owned. He was a Tolliday—you could tell that by the swing of his shoulders so like old Peter's—and he was proud of it, but he cherished a tenderness for his mother that he often felt was a quality unworthy in one of his race.

Now as he strode through the familiar streets of the little city his heart was beating fast. He feared what he might find when he reached his home. But when he came to the door he knocked, then strode in.

Pick found his mother in her own room. She was sitting up in bed, with pillows propped behind her. Pick went to her and, as was characteristic of him, all signs of awkwardness were gone as he gently caressed her. His mother loved her big son, and showed it by the way she clung to him. Then quickly she released him, hid all traces of emotion, and told him the things she wished him to know.

"There's nothin' wrong with me, Pick," she declared quietly. "The doctor says s It's jest my worry. I worry night and d while you an' pa are away." She would n have confessed to crying, but Pick understo "It gets me all wrought up, Pick, wonderin an' wonderin' whether you're safe. I want be with you—but pa won't let me."

She was silent a moment, while Pick rolled and unrolled his cap. "The doctor says might get pretty badly took, Pick," she went on presently, "might even somethin' happen to me 'less I quit my worryin'!" Pick's eye jumped to her face, startled, and a lump came into his throat. "But you can't come out w us, ma," he contended quickly; "there's Bur tons all over the place. Pap would half ki me if I brought you out." He stopped an his eyes pleaded for her to understand.

She read them correctly and sighed. "A right, Pick," she submitted to his wish, "the there's jest one thing I want ye to do." She motioned to him and he went over and sat o her bed. She put her hand on one of his an comparing the difference in size, said: "Prom ise me, then, Pick, that ye'll try to stop this fightin'. I don't mean ye to be a coward—nev er that, Pick," she hurried on as she felt him stiffen, "but some time ye may have a chanc to shoot or to hold yer fire. An' it's ther when ye may do no harm to yer honor or t yerself, that I want ye to try to stop all this. Ye may be the one to bring the peace, son." She stopped and her hand tightened. He saw the light in her eyes as she added, "An' I' be prouder then than if ye brought me new of a dozen dead Burtons."

He looked at her and did not dare let him self speak. In those minutes he fought wit himself. He fought his own desires, his ow convictions as to dealing with the Burtons. But he loved his mother with a greatness tha knew nothing of selfishness. If she wanted i that way, that was the way it should be. He' try it, though it might break him in two. "Yer askin' somethin' harder than ye know ma," he declared, his hand crushing hers "but I'll try."

He won his reward in her eyes, and afte firm assurances that her health was in no di rect danger, he set out on his return trip.

Pick half chuckled to himself as he climb the trail leading up from the village. "I' say she weren't sick a-tall. That was jest he way of gettin' 'round me. Pretty good, shu'd say," He threw back his shoulder with pride. "She's a Tolliday, too, I tell ye!"

He reached the rest of Fire Mountain and turning his face towards his father's distan cabin, strode along, his brows knitting and smoothing. His face would cloud and his eye would hold that look of the Tollidays whei they thought of the Burtons, then it woul clear. "I dunno," he muttered to himself a he went along, "them Burtons is as treacher ous as dawgs, an' the only way they can b showed anythin' is with a good healthy bunch o' lead. But I'll try ma's way. I promised her an' I'll see it through." Then he chuck led. "It'll be the first time Pick Tolliday ever let a Burton smite his other cheek—an' may be the last, too," he added grimly.

He was striding along, paying more atten tion to his thoughts than to his surroundings when he heard a faint crackling of under brush over to the left of the trail. Instantly the trained mountain fighter in him wa wakened and he glanced around, quick as a wild cat, for shelter. He was at the center of a small clearing, and he wanted something in the way of a shield until he could learn what that crackling meant. Behind him, but somewhat far to the right of the path, lay the nearest clump of trees. He sprang for it as the crackling sounded again. In great leaps he made for the protection. As he made his last spring, a rifle cracked and the breath of a passing bullet fanned his cheek. Instinctively Pick threw up his arms, gave a high-pitched yell, and fell behind the trees. There he lay motionless, his head twisted to one side, his eyes peering through the underbrush, intent on the spot from which the bullet had come. It was there the crackling had sounded. He felt contempt for one who would shoot a man in the back. He lay quiet in the hope of seeing the number of his enemies.

For fifteen or twenty long minutes Pick forced himself to lie motionless. Aware that keen eyes were on him from their place of concealment across the clearing, he knew the slightest activity would spoil his game.

His muscles ached, his skin itched, he could have cried aloud. Then the underbrush parted, over on the other side of the open space, and a man stepped through, halted, peered uncertainly in his direction, then beckoned quickly to some one behind him. The first man strode forward and was soon joined by a second. Across the small glade they walked, slowly, but with arrogance, conceit, and assurance dulling their sense of caution.

Pick saw them, watched them come. Without moving his body he gathered his muscles for a spring. Nearer they came. Then the first man stopped, and, pointing, said to his companion: "There he is! See him? I told you I got him. That's what we do to Tollidays!"

The other man guffawed and sprang forward. "Come on," he cried. "We'll get his gun. It'll be another souvenir." He came on, his friend close behind him. Sure of their ground, they held their guns loosely, in no position to fire. Pick noticed this and bided his time. Then he sprang. His muscles hurled him upright, his gun flashed up and covered them. "Up!" Pick shouted. "Stick 'em up!" Slowly, with faces scowling, the two Burtons raised their hands.

Pick stepped forward and kicked their guns to one side. "Now, then," he ordered, "git!" They turned, but as they walked away one of them whined, "Ye ain't goin, to shoot us from behind, air ye?"

"Nope," Pick answered contemptuously. "We Tollidays leave them tactics to the Burtons."

The two reached the trail and paused uncertainly. "To the left!" Pick ordered. "An' don't ye stop goin' till ye come to Matamoras. I'm goin' to watch ye a right smart distance, so don't try none of yer tricks."

They turned, and, taking the trail over which Pick had just come, fell into single file and started away for the city. Pick watched them, gun alert, until they passed from sight. "There, now," he chuckled, picking up the two rifles, "I guess that'll hold 'em for a while. Pap'll like these shootin' irons, I guess, too." Throwing them over his shoulder, Pick made his way to the trail, and headed for his father's camp.

It was growing dark as he neared the shack. A little wind had sprung up and Pick had just turned down from the crest of Fire Mountain on to the eastern slope, when a succession of sounds floated to his ears. He stopped quickly and listened. "Wolves!" he muttered.

Then he shrugged his shoulders, patted his gun, and started on. When his course brought him to the dried-up bed of the Neversink river, his ears caught again the cries of the wolves. "Sounds as if they're after somethin'," Pick said to himself, puzzled. But as they were not near and did not seem to be approaching, he went on. Slowly the dry bed of the river fell between cliffs that gradually converged. The trail followed the left bank, and as Pick trudged on, he rose higher and higher above the river bed. Once when the cries rose shrill and clear, Pick stopped, and, going to the brink, peered down into the narrow, shadowy canyon. He heard a strange thudding and looked back up the river bed. There in the semi-darkness he saw two men running for their lives. Behind them, though still some distance off, he saw a pack of fleeting forms even darker than the gray shadows of the canyon walls.

In a flash Pick understood. "Burtons!" he snapped out. "So they swung off the trail thinkin' to come back an' git me, eh? Well, they're a-gittin' somethin' else, I reckon."

But instinctively came the mountaineer's inborn urge to help a fellow being, whether friend or foe. On a little distance the canyon drew together until but a few men could pass there side by side. Ahead of Pick on the trail a gigantic rock poised itself on the very brink of the cliff. It had been there ever since man could remember. Pick's eyes sought it automatically.

He threw one glance down into the river bed, where the two Burtons, defenseless, were running desperately. Then he started for the balanced rock. Arriving, he made a hasty survey of its point of contact with the ground. Assured that he could move it, he looked down into the little canyon once more. The pack was gaining, coming perilously near. It would take quick work to plant that huge stone between the men and the wolves. A slight mistake and either the men would be caught beneath the enormous rock or it would fall, too late, behind the wolves. It was a splendid chance to eliminate two Burtons, temptation reminded him, but Pick remembered his mother's words and he thrust the thought aside.

Seizing one of the captured rifles, he put it under the rock. Using it for a lever, he gave a testing heave, and could feel the giant stone sway. "Won't need much," he told himself, then took one quick glance downward. The Burtons were directly beneath, the wolves racing fast. Quickly Pick threw his weight against the gun. The lever transferred his effort, multiplied, to the rock, and, its slight inertia overcome, the mighty stone swung off the cliff, down into the narrowed canyon beneath.

Hardly comprehending what he had done, Pick watched the missile, hurl itself downward. He had gauged it to a second. The Bur-tons were well away and the wolf pack not yet come, when the stone barricade settled itself to rest between the converged cliffs with the roar of thunder, filling the canyon from wall to wall.

The Burtons looked around stunned. The wolves circled around, their tongues lolling out, some sitting on their haunches, others with heads thrown back, howling their disappointment to the skies.

When the thunder of the mighty stone's descent had died away and silence once more settled into the canyon of the Neversink, Pick called down to the two men in the river bed. "Hey, you!" he shouted. "That's what we do to Burtons!"

That the race of men on the west slope of Fire Mountain had never before known coals of fire, was only conjectured. But that they knew gratitude was demonstrated. When the two Burtons Pick had saved spread the news among their own men, there was some growling, much talking, and eventually some action. After a wait of weeks, a party of Burtons and Tollidays got together without their guns.

Peter Tolliday, Pick's father, was there, and when he came back to his camp he told of the meeting to all his kin. He was talking to Lem one night about the change in the Burtons. "'Tis a great thing, boy," he declared proudly, "an' I'm glad 'twas Pick as did it. 'Twill make his mother glad."

He paused a moment, then went on with a chuckle, "Ye know, Lem, what they say 'bout rollin' stones gatherin' no moss, but did ye ever hear any one say aught else bad of a rollin' stone?"—Selected.

A FAMILY PRAYER.

Before Going on a Sunday Automobile Trip.

"We thank Thee, O Lord, for taking care attendance at divine worship in Thy church may be greatly decreased and Thou wilt be disappointed not to see Thy people and talk with them; but pleasure comes before religion.

"While we are giving and taking the dust of the road with wicked people who are not Christians and do not care what becomes of the Lord's Day, especially in summer-time, we, and our children, will recite the words of a Psalm and have our worship out of doors, unless we have a blow-out and have to work.

"For us to go on any other day than Sunday is out of the question, as that would interfere with our business affairs. Thou dost know, O Lord, that we could not make a full day of it, or cover nearly so many miles of road if we waited for our outing until after the morning church service, and got back before the evening service.

"We ask Thee to keep us from all harm and danger, sickness and accidents, while we are honoring this day. Preserve us and our children from sin and wickedness and evil. May 'Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven.' Amen."—Copied from Kenmore Presbyterian Church Bulletin, Kenmore, N. Y.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Sunday, February 22, was spent with Rev. A. O. Lindley on Randolph charge. We were at both Gray's Chapel and Shiloh, and spoke in the interest of the College Endowment and endeavored to get the folks to take their share of the endowment insurance. They listened kindly to our discussion and we are hoping that with the help of the pastor and the leaders at each church they will plan to raise the very small amount we are asking them for.

Tuesday, February 24, we were in a very enthusiastic meeting in the High Point College. The brethren gathered there to discuss ways and means of carrying on the campaign for endowment expressed a spirit of confidence and hope that will mean much for the High Point College. Then on February 26 Dr. Andrews, Rev. N. G. Bethea and I attended another splendid meeting in Charlotte. All but four pastors in that entire conference were present, and several laymen were also present. One pastor had a funeral at that hour, two others had sickness in the home, and the other one we did not hear from. This was a very fine meeting and confidence in the outcome of the campaign was expressed. At each of these meetings a committee on findings was appointed and in each case resolutions were passed which, I take it, will be published in the Herald this week.

Week of Prayer.

One of these resolutions calls for a week of prayer for the College beginning with Sunday, March 8, and closing with Sunday, March 15. The High Point College is certainly worthy of and deserves our prayers. Every Methodist Protestant in the conference, and every other Christian who will, is asked to join us in a week of special prayer for the College and for the abundant success of the campaign which is now on for the endowment. Let every Christian pray. Pastors will please call attention to this. Where there are no preaching services next Sunday the Sunday school superintendents will please call attention to it, and let us all give heed to this request. The mid-week prayer service might well be devoted to this, and where there are no regular prayer services special prayer services for the College might well be called. Whether you are able to give largely to this worthy cause or not, if you are a Christian you can certainly pray for the college and the success of this campaign.

Haw River Charge.

Sunday, March 1, was spent with Rev. W. D. Reed at three of his churches on Haw River, Mizpah, Friendship, and Brown Summit. At Mizpah they were worshipping for the first time in their splendid new church building. They were so quiet about this enterprise that we were hardly expecting them to be holding services in it so soon. They are a happy people. Feeling the burden of the new church they hardly knew what to do about the College quota; but we know they are very greatly interested, and we believe they are going to take on this extra and carry their share with the rest of us. At Friendship they have subscribed $80 of the $150 they are asked to raise, and we feel confident that this splendid church will soon raise the balance of their quota. At Brown Summit the membership is small, but they are about as far along with their local church finances as any church I know of, and they set in motion plans last night which I feel sure will raise their share.

Easter Sunday and Easter Services.

When you read this you will be within just about a month of Easter, and by all means every Sunday school in the entire conference should hold an Easter service and take a special offering for home missions. The best way to do this is to write to Dr. C. H. Beck, 613 West Diamond Street, N. S., Pittsburgh, Pa., and get him to send you the Easter day program prepared for all Methodist Protestant Sunday schools, and train your children and young people and hold a service which will be of help to your people, and in connection with it take your offering for home missions. But whether you get this special program or not, be sure to hold an Easter service and take the offering. The Board of Home Missions is entitled to 23 per cent of the General Conference budget, and it will be fine if every church can raise the 23 per cent at Easter. The Board of Home Missions needs your help, and this is the time to make a special offering to that board. Let us get busy on this job before it is too late.

Decision Day.

We know of some who are planning to hold revival services about the Easter time. That is fine, and of course you will plan during those revival services to hold a decision service for your children and young people; but if no other special evangelistic services are being planned for that time let us be sure to plan wisely and well for a decision service in each of our Sunday schools.

Saturday and Sunday, March 28 and 29.

Saturday and Sunday, March 28 and 29, are the dates suggested for District Rallies in most of the conference districts. I am asking all pastors insofar as possible to reserve these dates for these district meetings. And yet I know, in some instances, the chairman of one or more districts is planning to hold meetings at other dates. Will those chairmen who will hold the District Rallies on the above dates please notify pastors in your district of your plan, and also give them the place for holding the meeting just as early as possible? I am asking this that they may plan accordingly. Themes like "The Prayer and Devotional Life of the Church," "Church Music," "Winning the Unsaved," "The Sunday School," "The Christian Endeavor Society," "The Ladies' Aid Society," "Church Extension," "Home Missions," "Foreign Missions," "Stewardship," "Our High Point College," "Pastors' Summer Conference," and "Young People's Summer Conference" will be discussed in these district meetings.

Thanking all of you for your prayers and co-operation, I am

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

The Budgets.

Because of pressure of other duties I have been unable to get the figures footed up and arranged properly, giving the standing of the charges, for this week's Herald. There have been some substantial payments shifting the standing of the charges quite a bit. Get your payments into Brother Taylor's hands as early as possible and watch next week's Herald for your standing.

A few charges have not paid anything on budgets yet. Please let us hear from you soon. We want a full list during this second quarter. Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

March 2.

Mt. Pleasant Christian Endeavor.

Rev. and Mrs. G. F. Millaway delightfully entertained the Young People's Christian Endeavor society of Mt. Pleasant at the parsonage Saturday night, February 21.

After the guests had arrived, papers, on which were written a part of a Bible verse, were passed to them, and partners were chosen by completing the verse of another member. A very interesting contest—the "advertisement" contest—followed, the winners being William Stafford and Miss Grace Coley.

In the handkerchief contest which followed, each girl supervised the work of her partner, who had been given either a white or black handkerchief to be hemmed with black and white thread respectively. A prize was awarded to Curtis Shoffner for completing his work before the other contestants had finished, and one was also awarded to Coley Shoffner for the best-hemmed handkerchief.

Following the contests several other amusing games were played, after which the party was invited into the dining-room, where fruit salad, cake, hot chocolate and lemonade were served.

Those present were: Rev. and Mrs. G. F. Millaway, Mrs. Floyd Amick, Misses Sallie Amick, Grace Coley, Edna Coley, Lillian Shoffner, Maude Clapp, Fern Amick, Josie Amick, Mary Fogleman, Joyce Smith, Mae Smith, Edith Causey, Pearle Staley, Jeanette Bowman, and Messrs. Floyd Amick, Raymond Coley, William Stafford, Coley Shoffner, Colon Smith, Colon Staley, Boone Ferguson, Curtis Shoffner, Enos Causey, Gordon Causey, Guy Alexander, and John Amick.

—Brother S. R. Harris made a chapel talk to the students of High Point College last Monday morning which was enjoyed by them.

COLLEGE PAGE

EDITED BY REV. R. M. ANDREWS.

"NOT INTERESTED"?

Recently in a conference with some of the workers in the endowment campaign this statement was made, "Our people are not very much interested in the endowment for our college." Accepting this as true, we asked, "Who is not interested?" Can it be there is a pastor of a church in our entire conference who is not interested in the moral, spiritual, and intellectual development of his people? Just think what sort of a pastor he would be; opposed to good morals. Can he be a leader in a church and even be indifferent to the morals of his people? Morality is the basis for both spiritual and intellectual life. Without morality there is no spirituality. Can a pastor be a pastor and not be interested in the morals of his flock? We say, "No." What say you? Then is it possible that we have officers such as stewards, Sunday school superintendents, and class leaders, who are not interested in the morals of the membership of the church in which he is an officer? Is he worthy of being an officer in the church? Now, really, can a person be a member of a Christian church and not be interested in the morality of the church? We say, "No." What say you?

Now, High Point College stands for good morals. It insists upon good morals as the foundation for life. And yet there are those in the church who are not interested in High Point College. Is it really true?

Further, is it possible that we have a pastor who is not interested in the spiritual development of his people? All would say, Impossible. Don't hurry, don't be too fast. Be quite sure of this. High Point College stands for the spiritual uplift of its students. We teach the Bible, we require attendance upon religious services, we train the students in Christian Endeavor activity, and we are endeavoring, by both precept and example, to keep an atmosphere here that fosters spiritual growth. And yet it was said that our people are not interested in High Point College! If there is no pastor in this class, all are guiltless, and all officers are alike guiltless. We are not accusing. The statement was made and we are asking the question.

Further, is it possible that we have a pastor who is not interested in the intellectual development of his people? If we have such a one, he stands for ignorance, he believes in superstition, he prefers church membership of illiterates. He fears the truth, will not come to the truth, nor does he want his people to come to the light.

Again we repeat, High Point College stands for the moral, the spiritual, and the intellectual development of life. We run for this just like a mill runs to make flour. It is our only ambition, our only purpose, and we must have the hearty co-operation of our people. You must believe in us, or in the College, as you believe in the youth of our church, and we must somehow in the providence of God get our young people in our College if they are to make the most of life. We cannot do this without an endowment. We cannot have an endowment without your co-operation. Therefore, let us arise and do this thing and do it so well that it will ever remain a joy to us all.

"AN ALUMNI ASSOCIATION."

We have asked Prof. P. E. Lindley to get the names of all the Methodist Protestants in the North Carolina Conference who have attended college, that we may organize them into a church college alumni association, or by whatever name it may be called. There are many matters such a company of interested church folks can solve, and we are eager to get them together and to have them attack some of these problems. Won't you kindly help us? First, we are asking all college people, whether graduates or not, who are members of the Methodist Protestant Church and who shall read this, to at once send Prof. P. E. Lindley their names and post office addresses. And now, since all of these may not see this request, we are asking those of you who read this and who know members of the Methodist Protestant Church who have been to college, to send us their names and post office addresses. Be sure to give the correct address, as well as the correct names.

A GOOD MEETING.

We had quite a number of pastors and some laymen at a meeting at the College Tuesday, in the interest of the endowment campaign. It was a splendid meeting and a committee on findings brought in a report endorsing the present campaign and pledging the hearty support of the ministers and laymen present. It was decided to make the week, beginning with the second and ending with the third Sunday in March, a week of prayer for the college and the endowment. We are calling upon all friends of the institution to join us in prayer, not only then but now, for the success of this campaign. Fraternally yours,

R. M. Andrews.

TRIP AROUND THE WORLD AT HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

The High Point College Christian Endeavor society will give a Trip Around the World Friday evening, March 6, beginning at eight o'clock. The following countries will be visited on the trip: Ireland, Iceland, Japan, Brazil, and America. These countries will be represented by the students in proper costume, and some proper place in the college buildings will be decorated to represent each of these countries. The mode of living of these people will be revealed there.

The union station will be in the main entrance of Roberts Hall. After her purchasing a round trip ticket the tourist will be conducted first to Brazil, which will be represented in the large music room in the left wing of Roberts Hall. From there they will be conducted to the library, where they will visit Ireland. Japan will be represented on the first floor of the club room in Woman's Hall, and in the club room on the second floor of Woman's Hall will be the cold region of Iceland. The last country is America, which will be held in the club room of the boys' dormitory. Favors from each country will be sold at the respective places.

This will not only be entertaining but educational as well. It is hoped that the Methodist Protestants who can will take this trip with the young people. The proceeds will go to the cause of missions. We are trying to have here a model Christian Endeavor society, in order that the young people may go back to their respective churches and know how to organize and carry on the work of the Christian Endeavor society. These young people are doing fine work in the society.

LIFT YOUR AIM.

We shot our arrows toward the sun
 Beside the castle wall.
 His arrow was the highest one,
 The highest one of all.
 Another archer said, "you win."
 He answered, "No, I but begin.
 No archer wins, or ever will;
 He goes on aiming higher still."

We never win, we only make
 A mark more near the skies,
 Keep shooting for the shooting's sake,
 Not just to win the prize.
 The thing today we call the best
 Tomorrow is tomorrow's test:
 We never win, we merely find
 Another mark, to leave behind.

This makes us archers, makes us men,
 And this is all that will:
 To shoot, and then to aim again
 A little higher still.
 However high your arrow went,
 We not with one success content;
 Still higher look! Look not below.
 But lift your aim, and bend the bow!

THE GREATEST ANNIVERSARY OF THE CHURCH.

Easter is rapidly approaching. On April 12 we will again celebrate the resurrection of our Lord. No other "Feast Day" of the modern church means so much to us as Easter—not even the anniversary of the angels' glory song at the manger cradle in Bethlehem. Christmas would be without meaning and force to us, and the life and teaching of Jesus would have been engulfed in the darkness which covered the earth when the sun hid his face at mid-day, without the resurrection. Gethsemane would have been just the beginning of the death agonies; and Calvary the termination of the ill-advised efforts of an enthusiast, who though a martyr, would have been only a helpless dreamer, without the glorious consummation of the opened tomb.

The hopes of the disciples were as dead as the body of Jesus when they laid it in the new tomb in the garden of Joseph of Arimathea. The Emmaus pilgrims correctly represented the attitude of all the rest when they said, "We hoped it was He who should redeem Israel." But the woman "ran to bring His disciples word," and the Emmaus disciples forgot that the day was far spent when they knew Him, and hastened back to Jerusalem to tell the glad story.

This is our Easter message—"The Lord is risen indeed." They must tell this story in Jerusalem, where they then were; in Judea, the rest of the province; in Samaria, the adjoining province; and in the uttermost parts of the earth. We must tell it to America, and to the world.

On Easter Sunday, our progressive churches and Sunday schools arrange for special anniversary services, and with song and story celebrate the glad fact of the resurrection of Jesus from the dead. On this day above all others we should allow our hearts to speak, whose we are, and whom we delight to serve. In America today there are not less than 11,000,000 people. Of this number more than 80,000,000 have no connection with the Protestant churches, and nearly 65,000,000 make no pretension to Christian faith. What a wonderful opportunity! What a tremendous responsibility! What a challenge to the church!

By action of the General Conference, Easter has been set apart as the Home Missionary Anniversary. Each year your Board of Home Missions prepares a service for the use of our churches and Sunday schools, which we distribute without charge, with the understanding that an offering shall be taken for the support of our work. The music for the new program was written for this service by our own Methodist Protestant song writer, Rev. W. B. Judefind, of Baltimore, and represents some of his best work. This music will not be available in any other program this year. The literary selections have also been carefully chosen, and are in sufficient variety to enable a school of any grade to arrange a very pleasing program.

Let us send you this service. You cannot buy a better program of its grade, and your offering will "help save America." Mail your order today. We await your pleasure.

Faithfully yours, Charles H. Beck.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT. Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

To every auxiliary not having the young people and children organized there comes an appeal from our secretary of the young people for the Home Missionary Society. Who will be the first to report to Mrs. Speas that there has been a new society organized in your church? Our children will be just as interested in missions as we choose for them to be. The recently published article by Mrs. S. W. Taylor, telling us about the young people's work in the Burlington church should be an incentive for those of us who are neglecting the children along missionary lines. Read again what she said.

Why not have a great report for the branch meeting?

Organize the children and let Mrs. Speas hear from you. Her letter is as follows:

The North Carolina Branch of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies will meet in Winston-Salem April 7-8-9. We want all the Young People's Home Missionary Societies to do their best this year. Will every president see just what she can do between now and the branch meeting? I hope we will not have to report any dead or sick societies.

If you do not have the young people organized in your church, will the president or secretary of young people's work of every auxiliary get busy and organize them before the branch meeting? We must not forget our young people and children, there is a great work for them to do and they are willing to do it if the older people will help them get started.

The board meets in High Point in May. I am sure every one wants North Carolina to have a good report. We would like to win one of the banners so will the young people do all they can to help?

If the district chairmen will remember to try to organize the young people when they are organizing an auxiliary it will be a great help. Please report to me when you organize a new society. I have the Bud of Hope certificates. Will be glad to send to any auxiliary that needs them.

Mrs. T. L. Speas, Secretary,

Woman's Home Missionary Society.

At a meeting of the Executive committee of the Home Society in February, Dr. Harris Glascock was elected secretary of tithing. Will those desiring these cards drop me a card, telling about how many to send? Please send at once, as we have only one month before Branch meeting. These cards are to be filled out and returned.

TIDINGS FROM INDIA.

Rev. Paul M. Cassen, the Union Board's new missionary at Dhulia, wrote under date of January 30, 1925, that their things had finally arrived, and "the place has taken on more the appearance of home, to us."

"We had some very definite impressions when we first arrived, and am glad to say that they were almost all good ones. I was more than surprised with the bungalow and mission compound, they were so much better than I had dreamed of, and I was overjoyed with the prospect."

"The boys in the school are very interesting, and I have great fun in trying my little bit of Marathi (native language) on them. They are very quick to correct a mistake that I may make, so I get a bit of practice from them as well as the teacher."

"The school methods here are so different from those at home that I find it hard to understand. The boys sing as they study and recite some of their lessons, and sometimes the noise becomes very annoying to me. I suppose I will get used to that part in a short while. The crows nearly made my life miserable for me at first, but now I do not notice them at all."

It is quite interesting to see the boys sitting at the feet of their master (teacher) learning their lessons. It makes me think of the Bible stories of how the people sat at the feet of Jesus. The masters seem to be very good teachers, but they have their faults just as the rest of the human family.

"Now that I have gotten a look-in on the work of the mission it has become so very much more attractive to me. Mr. Minnis has been very kind in telling me details of the mission work and the problems that are facing us, and I find myself just wanting to put my shoulder to the wheel."

"During the Christmas Holidays there were many attractive things brought to our attention. The plays at the Girls' School and the Boys' School, the Christmas Day church service and the giving of the presents, but the most attractive part of the whole celebration was our trip to Ner. It is about 17 miles west of Dhulia. The trip through the country in the cart was delightful, and we had our first view of India as it is away from the big cities and towns."

"As we entered the village the band came to meet us, and played a lively tune as we rode through the street. That was the first time that I was honored by having a band announce my coming, and I felt very much out of place."

"The people of the village seemed to all turn out to see the cause of the disturbance, and followed us like so many sheep. We rode almost all the way through the village, which is quite long, to the house of one of the prominent citizens, and we had tea."

"The people gathered around the outside of the house in a great crowd, and they were very curious to see us."

"As I looked out over the crowd I could not help but think of the ignorance and superstition that held them so fast, and I wanted to do something to help them."

"The great problem is to convince them that they need a change of life, and that there is power in Jesus to break their bonds and set them free. Mr. Minnis gave an illustrated lecture, he worked the machine, the native preachers talked, and the people seemed to appreciate it so much.

The district work is the kind of work to do, and it appeals to me very much. I believe there is a great opportunity in our district, and I want to do my best to cover the district with Christians.

"Mr. Minnis is doing splendid work, and I know that we will be able to work together in harmony, because we are working, not for our own glory, but for the glory of the Kingdom. We are trying to put first things first, especially in regard to our part of the work. I am on the side lines now, watching the old team play the game, but after I learn the signals I want to get in the middle of the fight and work hard toward the goal.

"We started to study the language shortly after the New Year came in, and have been hard at it ever since. We know the alphabet, with its 36 consonants and 16 vowels, and a number of the compound letters, and have learned quite a number of words, are able to read the lessons in the book and talk in simple sentence constructions."

TO ALL METHODIST PROTESTANTS WHO HAVE BEEN TO COLLEGE.

We want to organize a Methodist Protestant Alumni Association in North Carolina. Hence it is all important that the name and address of every Methodist Protestant who has been to college be secured for the roll. It does not matter whether the student has finished the college course and graduated or not. We want the name of every one of our college people. This includes those who are older and those who are still in college anywhere. So if you are one of the persons just described please send your name and address together with the name of institution attended. But whether you have been to college or not you can help push this movement. Certainly you can give us the name of some one or several Methodist Protestants who ought to be in this list. Please do this.

Perhaps, since this is the first "call" for such a list, it should be stated that the present effort in the direction of some enrollment of our college people is intended to be the first step towards a permanent organization. Dr. Andrews, president of our College, has asked me to serve as temporary leader. Of course when the list is practically completed the organization can go ahead functioning as a real force for education in our denomination.

Of course you can see many advantages of such an organization. It will create a solidarity of educational interest on the part of the young. This large group, when centered on any objective in our educational enterprise, will be able to do great good. Then the very fact that we are all listed in the same undertaking will give strong support and encouragement. These college people are really anxious no doubt to become recognized and "lined up" in this sort of movement. There are many, many things we may be able to accomplish from time to time.

Please give this idea your thought and be sure to send the names of all Methodist Protestants who have been to college anywhere. Just send the names to me for the present. Won't it be fine to have an Alumni Association of our own! Then after a few years greater numbers will be added from High Point College.

I shall thank you sincerely for this help. Perhaps by inquiring a little you will be able to send quite a list. Again I thank you—please.

Percy E. Lindley.

Thank you for these continued offerings. They help us to meet continued expenses.

We have been and are still passing through a siege of "flu," but no one has been seriously sick and we are hoping all will soon be well. One little girl while she had "flu" was asked why she kept the window so high; she replied, to keep her temperature down, so she could get up.

Miss Millie Bowman is away at Rev. J. H. Bowman's taking a rest. We trust that it will prove to be very helpful. She will be much missed in the Home, since she has been here almost from the beginning.

SOME STRIKING FACTS ABOUT THE SOUTH.

In the providence of God the Southern states of our country have made unusual economical and financial progress during the past few years, and they have before them unprecedented opportunities for still greater development along these lines. Some facts set forth in the "Blue Book of Southern Progress," 1924 edition, issued by the "Manufacturers' Record" of Baltimore, Md., are of especial interest. From these we select a few that will indicate the South's strategic importance and the possibilities that it possesses for the future:

Some Facts of Striking Interest.

In 1922 the South, with a population of 37,500,000, expended on public school education $323,067,000, which was $107,000,000 more than the United States expended for similar purposes in 1900.

The expenditure of the South for public school work in 1922 was only about 15 per cent less than the total spent for the same purpose by the entire country as late as 1908.

The deposits in all national, state and private banks in the South jumped from $680,000,000 in 1900 to $6,500,000,000 in 1923, or nearly as much as the total deposits in all financial institutions in the United States in 1900.

The value of manufactured products of the South in 1921, the latest available Census figures, was $6,877,000,000, which was more than four times the value of 1900 and twice as great as 1910.

The cotton mill capital of the South exceeds $1,000,000,000, as compared with $361,000,000 in 1910, and is greater than the total capital thus invested in the United States in 1910.

The value of the mineral products of the South rose from $369,000,000 in 1910 to $1,489,000,000 in 1922.

In 1922 the South mined 188,900,000 tons of coal, which is more than three times its coal output in 1900.

The South produced in 1923 362,000,000 barrels of petroleum, which is 150,000,000 barrels more than the United States produced as late as 1910.

The value of the farm crops of the South in 1923 amounted to $6,127,400,000, or $1,400,000,000 more than the total value of farm products in the United States in 1900.

The lowest proportion of foreign stock in any section of the country is in the East South-Central States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi, with only three per cent foreign stock and only eight tenths per cent of this foreign born. The South Atlantic States have six per cent foreign stock and 2.1 per cent foreign born, while the West South-Central States of Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Texas and Missouri have 13.5 per cent of foreign stock and only 4.7 per cent foreign born.

In New England, on the contrary, over 60 per cent of the population is of foreign stock and 25.3 per cent is foreign born. In the Middle Atlantic States over 53 per cent is of foreign stock and over one-fifth is foreign born. In the East North-Central States over 42 per cent is foreign stock, and in the West Central States and on the Pacific Coast about 44 per cent is foreign stock.

Only about one-fifth of the population of New York City and Chicago is of native white ancestry; that is, descendants of native white American father and mother. Rhode Island leads in foreign stock with 69 per cent; followed by Massachusetts with 66 per cent, while North Carolina has only seven-tenths of one per cent, or the lowest in the Union of foreign stock to total population. South Carolina has one per cent; Georgia, 1.6 per cent; Mississippi, 1.5 per cent; Alabama, 2.2 per cent; and Virginia, three per cent.

Surely, God will demand from the people of these Southern states, to whom He has given such enormous material blessings, a faithful and devoted loyalty to Him and to His Kingdom. An increased recognition of the fundamental principles of stewardship is evident on every hand throughout the Protestant churches of the South. Will we meet our responsibilities, not only in the sphere of stewardship, but in the field of evangelism? Will the churches rally to the call of God for a deepened sense of personal responsibility for the salvation of those about us? Such a quickened sense of the duty of personal evangelism will bring to the churches a great and much needed revival.—Selected.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—MARCH 8.

Lesson Text: Luke 23:33-36.

Golden Text: Rom. 8:32.

The Central Truth: Jesus bore the cross that we might wear the crown: "in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins."

Scriptural Points.

1. Jesus bore the cross a part of the way to Golgotha. It may be that He became physically exhausted and couldn't carry it any further. At any rate the four soldiers to whom Jesus was given over to be crucified compelled Simon of Cyrene to bear the cross the rest of the way.

2. The nails with which Jesus was nailed to the cross were as large as men's fingers. See John 20:25.

3. Jesus was placed between the two thieves to indicate that He was the chief malefactor.

4. Jesus prayed for the four soldiers who drove the nails, because they did it in ignorance. It is significant that He didn't pray for Judas, Pilate, or the Jewish rulers. They sinned against light and knowledge. Their sin was unpardonable. The crucifixion of Jesus is still the unpardonable sin,—"seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." See Heb. 6:4-6.

5. "He saved others" from sickness, from the grave, from sin, and from hell. "And thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins."

6. "Let him save himself." He could, but He would not. He could have had twelve legions of angels to protect Him, if necessary. The exercise of His own omnipotence could have saved Him. But He chose to die that we might live. He said: "I lay down my life for the sheep. . . . No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again."

7. This is the King of the Jews. He is also the King of the Gentiles, the King of the angels, the Sovereign of all the worlds. For He declared, "All power, or authority, is given unto me, in heaven and in earth."

8. There is an amazing contrast between the prayers of the two thieves that were crucified with Jesus. "The one prayed: 'If thou be the Christ, save thyself and us.'" It was a prayer of ridicule, denunciation, contempt and unbelief. The other prayed: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." This was a prayer of humility,—he asked just to be remembered,—he received the glories of heaven. It was a prayer of penitence and trust,—it won the heart of Jesus.

9. "Today shalt thou be with me in paradise." Paradise is not merely the intermediate place where redeemed souls wait for the resurrection. It is just another name for heaven. Paul in 2 Cor. 12:1-4 says that he was caught up to the third heaven. In the same connection he said that he was caught up into paradise. So he understood heaven and paradise to be the same place.

10. The three hours of darkness were not the effect of an eclipse, for it was full moon. It was a miraculous drawing of the curtain of nature over the supreme tragedy of the ages. There was light at midnight when Jesus was born. There was darkness at noon-day when Jesus was dying on the cross.

11. These are the sayings of Jesus on the cross:

"Father, forgive them: for they know not what they do."

"Today shalt thou be with me in paradise."

"Woman, behold thy son."

"Behold thy mother."

"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me."

"I thirst."

"It is finished."

"Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

Practical Points.

1. Christ's cross of shame has become our cross of glory. "But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me and I unto the world."

2. The blood of the atonement is the fountain of cleansing opened in the house of David for sin and uncleanness. "Without the shedding of blood, there is no remission."

3. The pledged forgiveness of Jesus puts mankind under obligation also to forgive injuries. And the experience of forgiveness is conditioned upon our forgiving others. "Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven."

4. There is a cross that each follower of Jesus must bear. It is the cross of duty against inclination, the cross of the Spirit against the flesh, the cross of the Dr. Jekel against the Mr. Hyde, that are in every one of us. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."—The Word of Life.

Sunday. Topic. Matt. 4:18-20; Acts 1:14; 2:1-4.

Suggestions for the Leader.

Getting ready to do anything, if we intend to do it right, is at least half its accomplishment. This is especially true with reference to soul-winning, the most important business in the world. When Christians learn the real value of human souls, in the sight of their Master, they will be more earnest in their preparation for winning them.

Multitudes of personal workers fail to reach the hearts of men, women and children simply because they are not prepared for their task in their own minds and hearts and lives. The hymn writer said, "Take time to be holy," and nowhere is this more essential than in preparation for winning others to Jesus.

When Christians are young is the proper time to begin to prepare for winning others for the Master. Christian Endeavor has always been a training-school for personal workers. If our society is not doing this for members, it is not the fault of the Master of Christian Endeavor, but of course alone. Let us get close to the heart of Master in this meeting, and we will discover how to prepare ourselves for successful soul-winning.

Soul-winning can be learned, if we have the right spirit; and the best teacher is Jesus. The best preparation for winning others to Christ is to have a personal knowledge of Christ, to fellowship with Him, and to follow Him. The Master said, "Follow me, and I will make you to catch men."

Let us first seek to be filled with the Holy Spirit before we seek to win others. The work of preparation is ours. No one can do it for us. We have been saved to serve, and we should get ready for efficient service.

We must prepare ourselves by getting knowledge of the Bible. Read it, study it, memorize it, and learn how to use it in speaking about Christ. Without the Bible we are powerless in winning others.

Prepare by making your own life a testimony. To become the light of the world is to become light to men, must be lived. Practice, humble and prayerful. Put much over the one to whom you wish to speak about Jesus; then speak and trust God for results.

Points Taught in the Scripture References.

The examples of the Master and His early disciples are invaluable in helping us to find the proper method of preparing ourselves for personal evangelism. If they needed to prepare themselves for this all-important work, how much more do we need to get ourselves ready to follow in their steps.

Matt. 4:8-20 shows the Master calmly going about His business, which was winning men, who in turn were to go out and win others to follow Him.

"Come thou after me," He said to the men, and they left their work and followed Him. Jesus called busy men to be His disciples: He called men in terms of their own experience; and He called them to apprenticeship with Him which would develop them into real soul-winners. You must follow Jesus yourself if you would induce others to do likewise.

In Acts 1:14 we read, "These all continued with one accord in prayer." This is the key to preparation for a revival by a congregation, or by any group of people, where all the members of a church, the Christian Endeavor society, the Bible school, the Ladies' Aid society, and the missionary societies are all in prayer with one accord, something is bound to happen. It never has failed and never will. United prayer is perhaps the greatest single element in all our soul-preparation for soul-winning. And, if you pray very earnestly for souls, you will work just as earnestly to reach them.

Acts 2:1-4 gives us the startling picture of the birthday of the church of our Christ brought into existence in accordance with the Master's promise and in connection with a special demonstration of the Holy Spirit. Here, again, is God's power manifested in a peculiar way. Wherever God's Holy Spirit is present in generous measure, the hearts of His children will be found stirring them to the activity which wins men and women to follow Him.

The Holy Spirit will lead us to win others for Christ, if we are willing to be led. It often seems that we are afraid to let the Spirit lead us. But we need not be; for He has never yet led any one in the wrong direction. And if we follow His leading we will be successful soul-winners.

Things to Pray About.

1. Thank God for Jesus' example in preparing to win followers.
2. Thank God for the early disciples who prepared their souls for winning other disciples for their Master.
3. Thank God for earnest Christians today, who set a good example in soul-winning before the young people in the church.
4. Ask God for His Spirit's help in this meeting.
5. Ask God for courage to prepare in your own hearts for soul-winning.
6. Ask God to lead more of the Christians of this day out into the field of soul-winning.

Missionary Districts With District Chairmen.

The following is the list with some changes that have been made since the list was printed some time ago:

First District: Creswell, Enfield, Whitakers, Halifax, Littleton, Spring Church, Greenville charges—Mrs. J. M. Cutchin, Jr., and Miss Fannie Barnes.

Second District: Henderson, Vance, Greenville charges—Mrs. R. W. Harris, Miss Mary White.

Third District: Orange, Graham, Glen Raven, Mebane, Burlington, Mt. Hermon, Saxapahaw, Alamance, Fairview and Gibsonville charges—Mrs. C. C. Durham, Mrs. J. J. Crawford. Fourth District: Grace, Calvary, West End, St. Paul, Raw River, Flat Rock, Reidsville, Draper and Kernersville charges—Mrs. C. H. Garrison, Mrs. L. M. Foust.

Templeton, Miss Notie Martin.

The conference rallies will be held March 28 and 29.

There is a place on the program for the work of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies. Please see that some one is at the rally in your district to take his part on the program.

Pearl Mculloch,
District Chairman.

YOUR EASTER SERVICE.

What about your plans for Easter? It is not too early to formulate them, and to begin your preparation. The samples of the program prepared by the Board of Home Missions for use in our Methodist Protestant Sunday schools on Easter were sent out beginning February 2, and the entire mailing list was completed by February 4, except in the case of a very few which were delayed.

Up to this date, ten o'clock, Friday, February 27, 258 Sunday schools have ordered our programs, and the orders have been shipped from our printer. This is just about one-third of the number ordering last year, and we presume there will be at least twice as many orders as have already been received. We are calling the attention of our friends to this matter in this column today because we want to serve all in the best possible manner. Every order is forwarded to the printer on the same day it is received here, and shipped by him the same day the order reaches him. We are prepared to give you immediate service.

Based upon the experience of former years, five hundred or more schools will order this program between this date and Easter. If you will send your orders at once we will be able to give you better service than will be possible later in the season. While we think we have enough material to meet all demands, there is always a possibility of exhausting the stock in hand, and some one may be disappointed at the last moment. It will help us, and enable us to give you better service, if the orders are sent at once.

We present this program with a great deal of assurance, based upon favorable criticism from many persons who are quite competent to judge a service of this character. Many have used this expression, "The program is fine, send us, etc." One minister writes, "All of your Easter literature looks mighty good. My church and I are with you. We stress the offering, and it all goes to you." We planned to place a sample in the hands of each active pastor, and of each Sunday school superintendent. We want each retired minister who is interested to have a copy of the program, and of the other literature which we sent out this year. If your copy did not reach you please send a postal reporting that fact, and we will duplicate the package. Our list ran to more than thirty-two hundred this year, and some might have been missed, or his package miscarried in the mails. We want your judgment of the service prepared, your criticism, favorable or unfavorable as the case may be, and your suggestions for the next issue to be sent out in 1926.

Please send your order in the next mail. There is abundance of time of course, but why wait until the last day before you send your order? DO IT NOW. Let us help you in your planning.

COLLEGE STUDENTS AT STUDENT VOLUNTEER CONFERENCE.

We were glad to have had the privilege of representing High Point College at the Student Volunteer Union of North Carolina, which met at Chapel Hill February 20-24, with about 200 delegates representing nearly all the colleges of the state.

The purposes of this Student Volunteer Movement in brief are as follows:

1. To challenge students to consider foreign missions as a possible life work.
2. To unite those students who have declared their purpose to become foreign missionaries.
3. To relate a sufficient number of properly qualified students to the foreign missionary agencies of the church to carry on an adequate Christian program through the world.
4. To lay the burden of responsibility on all Christian students, intelligently to promote and support the missionary enterprise.

The principal speakers during the conference were returned missionaries, Chinese and Japanese students and the travelling secretary of the National Volunteer Union. The theme of the conference was duly emphasized by each speaker.

One of the most beneficial features of the conference were the discussion groups, directed by competent leaders, discussing the different problems of the campus.

At the closing session the officers for the next year were installed: President, Miss Elizabeth Cowan of N. C. C. W.; vice president, Miss Minnie Herring of Meredith; secretary, Miss Cordia Thompson of Guilford; treasurer, Miss Maude Hunter of Duke University.

This is the first student conference of any kind that High Point College has been represented in and we did all in our power to put H. P. C. on the map. When songs and yells were called for we responded readily. One of the leaders said to us, "High Point College is the baby college and we want to see her grow and be a success. From what you are already doing we expect you to quickly rise to the top and furthermore we know you will do it."

GENERAL NOTICE.

There will be a corner-stone laying at Mizpah church, Haw River circuit, Easter Monday. All day service, dinner on the ground.

Every body is cordially invited to attend this service; especially do we urge all the ex-pastors to attend and take part in the service.

Come on, brethren, and let us have a glorious time once more at old Mizpah that will have become new.

Pastors please write me if you will come.

W. D. Reed.

—Rev. F. W. Paschall lost his mother recently. She was Mrs. Hugh Paschall. She was buried at New Hope, the funeral being conducted by Rev. J. E. Pritchard.

WINSTON-SALEM LEAPS INTO THE LIMELIGHT! ASHEBORO LEADS WHITAKERS! CHARLOTTE HOLDS SECOND PLACE!

Rev. R. A. Hunter, of Winston, does the spectacular this week in the Registration Campaign for our Summer Conference and moves his church from nineteenth place to a mile ahead of everybody! Fifty-five registrations in one batch. That is the finest thing we have seen and we may say, "Hats off to Winston and Hunter!" That places Winston first; Charlotte holds second place; Concord is third; while Asheboro, under the fine leadership of Miss Lollie Jones, moves up to fourth place, taking the lead over Whitakers by the close margin of five registrations. Siler City, Hickory Ridge, Bethel Home of Weaverville, Liberty Hill of Anderson, all send in fine lists.

The list received since last notice is as follows:

DICK'S CELEBRATION.

"Washington must have had a lot of headquarters and inns where he stopped," remarked Dick Dean, with a bored look. "Why, last summer when we were touring around, it seemed, every place we went to there was a headquarters or old inn where George Washington had stopped. Gee! Pretty soon it got so I could pick out the places—any old tumble-down shack with mud plastered between the boards would do!"

"But this really and truly was an inn and Washington did stop here," Rachel Bennet protested. "There are records—papers, you know, telling about it. Father's seen them."

"Aw!" Dick exclaimed. "I know all about that! I bet this house wasn't built until after the Civil War. It isn't ramshackle enough."

"Of course, it's been repaired," said Rachel. "We did a lot to it ourselves when we bought it."

"Well, I won't argue with you," Dick replied hastily, as he saw Rachel's brother, Cam, stamping on the front porch. "Anyhow we can celebrate the old fellow's day. We might hoist a flag or something."

"Hello," greeted Cam, dropping snow on the rug as he threw off his coat. "Glad you came over. I've been out on an errand. How do you like our house, eh? George Washington stopped here once!"

"All right," said Dick, with a little smile. "What else do you know?"

"He doesn't believe it," said Rachel, indignantly.

"Well, it doesn't make any difference whether he does or not," said Cam. "What shall we do?"

"Let's go outside," said Dick. "Let's hoist a flag. It's Washington's birthday."

"I know," Cam replied. "We have a flag and were going to put it out, but we haven't any flag-staff. It didn't come."

"Mother ordered it a week ago," put in Rachel.

"Well, let's make one," suggested Dick. The three ran out in the snow. It was fine out, not cold at all and the snow packed beautifully. They began a snow-ball at one corner of the yard and began rolling it. The snow was so sticky that before they were half-way across, the ball became so large it took two them to roll it.

"Let's make a snow man!" cried Cam. "Let's make George Washington!" Rachel suggested.

It was fun. They rolled another ball for the head; then they made the legs and arms, and then—well, George Washington's own mother would not have known him as he stood in the yard with a flag in his hand.

It began to snow again, so Dick thought he had better run home. The Bennets waved him good-by and he shouted: "Well, I'm going to take a short cut this way."

He ran over the snow through a little apple orchard and headed in the direction of his home. Mr. Bennet had been doing some exploring since he had bought the old place and he had made an interesting discovery not many days before. Dick was to make one too, but he did not know that as he ran gayly over the snow. Suddenly, as he plunged happily along, he put his foot on a hump of snow and when he took another step he plunged head-down, down, down.

If there had not been soft snow to fall on, he might have injured himself badly; as it was, he was jarred and wrenched his ankle. He sat up and looked around him. Well, it was the queerest place you ever saw.

He was in a kind of a pit lined with rough stones. All the sides went straight up and there was no door.

"What fun!" was his first thought. "What a find!"

But he soon changed his mind about the fun part when he tried to get out of the place. He found that the walls were not exactly straight up and down, they sloped in, ever so slightly, toward the top, so even if he could have got a toe-hold on the stones, he could not possibly climb out. 'Round and 'round, he went, like a fly caught in a trap. No, he could not get out.

Then he began to call and shout, but he knew that unless he were lucky enough to have somebody passing nearby, his shouts would not be heard. He kept moving around, so as not to get cold.

"Wonder how long I'll be here before they find me," he said to himself. "Wonder what this place is anyhow."

It took all the spunk he had to keep from crying. The minutes became hours and still he called and walked around. He had to fight off a feeling of terror that crept through his bones chilling him like the breath of death. Did he feel the ghostly presence of the forms that had once walked over the same ground on which he walked now? He felt haunted.

"Gee," he told himself, staring all around, fearfully. "I feel as if this place was alive. I'm scared, but I got to be brave. Wonder when they will begin to miss me. The trouble is the Bennets think I'm home and Mother thinks I'm at the Bennet's."

He was in a fix all right. It was lucky for him that it wasn't very cold that day. But the horrors were the worst things he had to fight. A sort of nameless fear. Ugh! He shivered all over. He must take his mind off all this. He felt in his pockets and pulled out a handful of stuff. He might whittle, or draw something, or read—he found a couple of pages torn from his history book. He had meant to paste them back in. They had become torn during a scrimmage with one of his school friends. He sat down in a sheltered corner of his prison and spread out the pages. Well, well! This was interesting. The pages were about George Washington at Valley Forge.

Dick will never forget that part of his American history. He read and re-read. He learned it by heart and said it out loud, word for word. He had to do something to keep from breaking down. Then suddenly he heard a voice calling his name.

My! That was a wonderful sound! He answered loudly, and soon he saw a number of heads looking down at him from the top of his prison. There was Mr. Bennet, Rachel, Cam and his own father.

"There he is!" they all cried in chorus. "Yep," replied Dick. "Here I am. Get busy and help me out."

They soon lowered a ladder and Dick lost no time getting out.

"Are you hurt? Were you scared? Did you get very cold?" he was asked by his rescuers.

"Tell me first what that hole is for," demanded Dick, holding very tight to his father's hand and looking white in spite of his show of bravery.

"It's an old Slave Pit," explained Mr. Bennet. "It had been boarded over, but I discovered it and dug it out. Probably George Washington himself put his slaves in it when he stayed here. At any rate, it was meant to keep slaves from running away when their masters were at the inn. I imagine it was used for runaway slaves too."

"Now do you believe George Washington stopped here?" demanded Rachel.

"Yep," said Dick, soberly. "But I don't believe he would put any slave in such a hole as that. Dad, let's go home. I'm awful hungry and I've finished celebrating Washington's birthday. I bet no kid ever celebrated like this before!"—Selected.

WHEN MOTHER HAD HER DAY.

Beth sat in the hammock studying her "piece" for Mothers' Day, now only two days off. The sweet May air was laden with the perfume of apple blossoms, the sky was all tints of mauve and rose and flame color and sky blue, the birds were crooning bedtime notes in the nearby trees, which were leaved out just enough to begin to rustle in the evening breeze. Beth thought what a wonderful thing it was just to be alive on such a night.

From the back parlor she could hear mother's tired voice crooning a lullaby to the sleepy baby. Mingled with this was the sound of wee Bobby's voice raised in fretful wails now and then because he did not know what to do with himself, and there was no one to play with him. Beth felt a trifle guilty after a while as the baby's frail wail grew louder and her mother's patient voice more tired and Bobby's interruptions of the lullaby more frequent.

"Mother doesn't get much time to enjoy these lovely nights," she mused. "Really, I don't know when she had had time to enjoy anything much but just having us children about. I don't see how she stands it."

Beth turned again to her verses about mother, but somehow she could not get her mind to settle to the business of learning them. It kept turning to the little scene in the room at the back of her house, where her mother was struggling with two fretful babies at once. Finally she could stand it no longer.

"Come here, Bobby," she called. He came eagerly, and for a quarter of an hour she told him bedtime stories, while the fretful little voice inside grew fainter and fainter and at last died away as the baby drifted off into an undisturbed sleep. Two minutes later Bobby, too, was fast asleep against her knee and soon the whole house was quiet for that talk Beth always had with mother at twilight.

After Beth went to bed she kept thinking of mother and how little they all did to help her and how much work they all made for her. She thought how tired mother seemed to-night and wondered what she could do to help more. Before she went to sleep, Beth had a plan well formed in her mind. Tomorrow should be Mother's Day at their house. She slipped out of bed and went to meet father when she heard his key in the front door and whispered her plan in his sympathetic ear.

The next morning mother sprang hurriedly from her bed at the first note from her alarm clock and began a hasty toilet before descending to her kitchen. She was puzzled not to be able to hear baby's voice from his crib in the next room, for he and Bobby were usually awake before she was and demanding attention. Before she had much more than touched the floor her door opened softly and Beth slipped in fully dressed.

"You are to stay in bed this morning and rest if you feel at all like it," Beth said.

"Father and I have breakfast about ready. If you prefer to come down, we shall not command you to stay, however," she smiled.

"But Bobby and baby, I shall have to get them dressed. And why—how?" she glanced from her clock to the window where the bright sunshine was streaming in under the drawn blind.

"Oh, father pulled the blinds down last night after you were asleep and he also set the clock back an hour and set the alarm an hour later. You have overslept, madam, and your young children are already dressed and downstairs ready for breakfast. This is Mother's Day in this house and your day of rest."

When Mr. Brady descended to the dining room a few minutes later, he found a nice breakfast steaming on the table, with Beth doing the honors while her mother enjoyed the unwonted luxury of being waited on. When the pleasant meal was at an end Beth and mother lingered alone for a moment and this gave Beth the opportunity to say, as she rested her rounded chin on her clasped hands and looked across the table:

"Now, mother dear, you are to go right out on the sunny porch and sit and read while you drink your fill of the apple blossom scented air. It's lovely out there. I'm going to do the dishes and tidy the rooms."

"Just as you say," laughed her mother, seeing that Beth was in earnest.

A little later, Beth set off with the children for the park, having first given her mother strict injunctions to walk in the garden, or read in the hammock, or visit with the neighbors, only she must not set foot in the kitchen or do a stroke of work.

At 11 o'clock Beth returned with the children and promptly after her came Mr. Brady with the car and a well-filled picnic basket, all ready for a dinner in the woods.

They stopped only long enough to get the necessary wraps and a few things from the kitchen and they were off without giving mother a chance to do anything which she could call work. Halfway down town they stopped at a cottage where mother used to go often, but had scarcely seen for a year. At the gate stood Mrs. Wheathly, mother's girl-hood chum, waiting with her small son and daughter and a lunch basket. They all piled into the big car and away they went, looking for the best spot in the woods for a picnic dinner.

After a fine dinner which father and Beth prepared by themselves, father gathered all the children in to the car again and drove off, saying that the two mothers could just rest and talk and enjoy themselves till the car returned. It was almost five o'clock when the car came into view and the two women who had been having one of their dear old-time talks, were beginning to get a bit anxious. They needn't have been, however, for every chick and child appeared happy and in the best of spirits.

Pack home again they went to find that good Mrs. Gregory, who sometimes worked for mother, had been busy all afternoon getting the family dinner and making everything in the house ready for Sunday. She stayed, too, to do up the evening dishes, and mother sat out on the sweet-scented porch with father and Beth and the boys, and had her chance to enjoy the glorious evening for once at least, for Beth held the tired and sleeping baby while father himself had wee Bobby in his own strong arms. Mother had had her day. Beth's arms ached under the weight of the sleeping baby and she thought she had never been more tired in her life, but never had she felt so happy nor so good inside, for every time she looked at mother's happy face from which so many of the tired lines had vanished, she felt amply repaid for the hard work she had done that day, Mother's Day.—Exchange.

OUR GIFTS.

"The wise may bring their learning,
The rich may bring their wealth,
And some may bring their greatness,
And some bring strength and health.
We, too, would bring our treasures
To offer to the King;
We have no wealth nor learning;
What shall we children bring?
"We'll bring Him hearts that love Him,
We'll bring Him thankful praise,
And young souls meekly striving
To walk in holy ways;
And these shall be the treasures
We offer to the King;
And these are gifts that even
The poorest child may bring."

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Graham.—Although you have not heard from us in several weeks we are still living and growing. The attendance at all the church services has been fine and the congregation is increasing. God knew the kind of man we needed when he sent our pastor, Rev. D. R. Williams, to us. He is giving us forceful sermons and is making his influence felt in the community, as well as his own church. He and his good wife have endeared themselves to us since they have been here.

Our Sunday school is making splendid progress under the leadership of Mr. Phil S. Dixon. His real business is Sunday school work—he just runs his clothing business to make a living.

All the churches in our community have decided to have union prayer services for a while, on each Wednesday evening. The services are held at the various churches in turn. The real purpose of these union meetings is to promote co-operation among the churches in town and, incidentally, to prepare for the Ham-Ramsay revival in Burlington in April.

The Ladies' Aid society gave an "Apron Party" February 14, which was largely attended. The proceeds, which amounted to about $70, were used to pay for the parsonage furniture.

We are glad to report that Miss Winona Noah, who underwent an operation for appendicitis recently, is improving rapidly.

We are planning a good year's work at Graham and want the prayers of all God's people.

E. C. R., Oepoter.

February 23.

Friendship, Haw River Circuit.—The third Sunday found us again at this little church among the hills to listen to the truths explained by our pastor. Mr. Reed used as his subject, "Doing the Right Things at the Wrong Time," in which the "wise and foolish virgins" were the predominant illustrations.

We had a large crowd at Sunday school last Sunday. Along with the beautiful sunshiny weather every one present seemed to possess a soul full of sunshine. We had a wonderful little meeting.

We are looking forward with great hopes to soon begin work with a Junior choir. We have a quite large crowd of children and we feel the responsibility of our individual work with them.

Instead of having preaching services only once a month, as has been during the winter months, we will have two a month. We begin the next first Sunday—Sunday school at two and preaching service at three.

I am glad to report that the sick of our community are able to be out with us again.

High Point.—Last Sunday was observed as Foreign Missions Day at the First Church. At the 11 o'clock service Dr. Brown delivered a splendid sermon on missions, and at the evening service the Woman's Foreign Missionary society held its annual Thank-Offering service. The president, Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, presided. Miss Annie Robbins gave a pleasing recitation, and Mrs. R. M. Andrews sang a beautiful solo, which was much enjoyed.

We are always pleased to hear Mrs. Andrews. A number of the members of the society then rendered a clever playlet, "The Clinic of a Missionary Specialist," in which Mrs. S. S. Coe played the role of the doctor, Mrs. John Walker, the nurse, and the following were patients: Mrs. J. A. Gray, Mrs. J. H. Pritchard, Mrs. E. L. Douglas, Mrs. D. A. Neese, Mrs. C. C. Robins, Mrs. J. W. Hinkle, and Mrs. A. M. Rankin. This little play was rendered exceedingly well, and it was greatly enjoyed by the congregation. We are glad to see the matrons taking part in a performance of this kind instead of delegating the task to the girls and younger women all the time. Miss Annie Forrest, whom we honor and revere as one of our consecrated missionaries, then gave an eloquent and touching talk on the work in foreign fields. We were delighted to hear her again, and we feel sure that she has aroused new enthusiasm and zeal in the missionary cause among our members. Rev. C. L. Whitaker led in prayer, and a group of young girls, Misses Margaret Opal Neese, Annie Robbins, Dorothy Rankin, Elizabeth Reitzel and Annette Pickens, took up the offering, which amounted to $60.

On Wednesday evening after prayer meeting a committee appointed for the purpose will hold a meeting and formulate plans for the opening service in the main auditorium of the new church, which will be held in a few weeks. The pews are already here, the carpet has been shipped, and the pulpit furniture has been ordered. The pipe organ was installed last summer. So we are hoping that in a short time we will be able to invite the editor and all other Greensboro friends to worship with us in the new church.

Mrs. A. M. Adams had the misfortune to fall and break her right arm three weeks ago, and has been confined to the house since that time, but her many friends will be pleased to know that she is improving. They hope to see her in her accustomed place at church services at an early date.

Mr. A. M. Rankin, Sr., left Monday morning for Hot Springs, Ark., where he will spend a month for his health.

Misses Vista Dixon, Annie Livengood, Lena Martin, and Eugenia Williams represented High Point College at the Student Volunteer Conference at Chapel Hill, N. C., on February 20, 1922.

Rev. and Mrs. C. L. Whitaker went to Lexington last Saturday to visit friends and relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. George T. Penny left Sunday night for Washington, D. C.

February 24.

Chapel Hill, Davidson Circuit.—Brother Ridge preached for us the third Sunday; a good sermon. He made his text plain. We should pray more—should pray for each other, pray for the sinner and every one try to live better. We also had Brother Ridge with us today; he preached another good sermon. We will have preaching every third and fourth Sunday now for three months.

Our Sunday school is not attended as well as it was before Christmas, but I hope when the weather gets better that people will come better.

We have prayer meeting every two weeks. Tonight several of the old and young took part in the meeting. We are having the best prayer meeting that we have had in years. The young men have been opening the meeting and older ones too. Mr. Wade Smith to lead the next meeting. I feel that the prayer meeting was doing good. We ask all the old readers to pray for us.

Lizzie Cranford.

Mt. Zion.—Sunday was a beautiful day, and we had more than one hundred scholars in our Sunday school. We have averaged more than a hundred members present and on time for the last month. Now I know our city people who are members of the five hundred- or one thousand-member Sunday schools think a one hundred-member school isn't large, but believe me it looks mighty good to us people who are scattered over this muddy-road country of ours to see 25 or 30 automobiles (with chains on) and one hundred people gather in a country church yard on time for Sunday school. Think of it, they come every Sunday too. We are planning to start a drive for new members the first Sunday in March to last through three months or more; if it works like we hope we shall take pleasure in reporting it to all of our churches through the Herald. Let us ask our neighbors to come out and join our Sunday school so we may all worship God together.

Our pastor filled his appointment last Thursday at 11 o'clock. He preached on Stewardship. We all enjoyed the sermon very much, the more we have our pastor with us the more we learn to love him.

Last Saturday afternoon Brother and Mrs. Hunter met with the lady members of Mt. Zion church and organized a Home Missionary Society. The society had 12 active members to start and already have a number of honorary members, and I am sure their membership will increase very rapidly.

We are truly glad of the interest the ladies are taking in our Sunday school and church work.

School voted to have an Easter service. The program committee was appointed as follows: Mr. T. G. Barber, Mrs. Ed Jones and Mrs. C. W. Allen. The program will be presented next Sunday and then a training committee will take charge and practice. This Easter program will be held at Mt. Zion on East Sunday night at eight o'clock. One feature of this program will be a pantomime by the girls, "Abide With Me."

Wonder if our pastor has kept his regular appointments with the other churches on the charge? Say something, reporters.

With all sincerity I hope and pray that every Sunday school throughout our conference may have a wonderful success this year.

C. W. Allen, Reporter.

Ai, Kernersville Charge.—Since it has been so long since Ai has been heard from I am afraid our pastor, Brother Edward Suits, will think he has not any reporter. Yesterday was a beautiful Sunday and we had a right good number out at church to hear our pastor deliver his message. But he was unable to preach for us. The talk he made was inspiring. Every one that heard was more than pleased. We have enjoyed every sermon Brother Suits has delivered and all must help him the very best we can. If we help Brother its and our superintendent and do the very best we can there will be no room to grumble. And we truly hope that our dear pastor's health will be given back to him and he will be able to preach for the next appointment, which will be the second Sunday in March. Our dear and devoted superintendent, Mr. M. Whitt, who was sick so long and we thought would not be able to be with us any more, was out at church again and it surely seems good for him to be there, for our church is lost without Mr. Whitt, the mainstay in our Sunday school. In rough places where it seems difficult to get over, it is Mr. Whitt who speaks comforting words and good cheer. We could not ask for a better pastor or superintendent than we have, so why not cheer for a most prosperous year in our church? I am sure Brother Suits will do all his part. Let us make the work at Ai encouraging for him and show him that we appreciate his being our pastor. We had the largest Sunday school attendance yesterday we have had in a long time. When spring comes and we can start up our next meeting, then I am sure every one will be more interested in the church. We were very glad indeed to have Mr. and Bert Warren worship with us yesterday, Mr. and Mrs. Pegram and several more. W. S. Beeson, who has been sick part of this winter, was also able to be with us at church again. Reporter. February 23.

Welch Memorial.—Just a short item to let you know that we are not asleep. Welch is going ahead, Sunday school attendance increasing; every Sunday there are several new members. There are more young people attending church now than in some time. The congregations for preaching service have been increasing, especially extra good during the month of February. We hope the interest will continue to grow and the church will continue to go. All of us are anxious to make a church go is an active influence on the part of the people, as well as usefulness on the part of pastor. Ladies' Aid held a Washington's Birthday supper in the basement of the church last night. They had a very good attendance and rendered an interesting program, which sandwiches, cake and hot coffee were served. The money received amounted to sixteen dollars.

to express my appreciation for this kind act. I am asking the readers of the Herald to pray for me that I may be worthy, and that I may do the work which is to be done in this field. I find a great field for service, and realize my insufficiency for the task, but am asking the Lord to make me efficient. May the Lord bless the Herald and its many readers. T. E. Pierce, Pastor.

Another Pounding.—The Shelby pastor and his family have been subjected to another pounding (the second one for this conference year). Last Thursday night, just after we arrived home from the meeting of pastors and laymen held at Charlotte, and while resting from the day's journey, a knock on the front door was answered. When the door was opened, we beheld the large number of "pounders" which filled the porch and yard. They were invited in and they unloaded the many things they brought, placing them on the dining table. The jolly crowd tarried a while with us in pleasant conversation. When they had left, wife and I took an inventory of the gifts and found about $15 worth of groceries as follows: two sacks of flour, about 30 pounds of sugar, quantities of coffee, meat, sausage, potatoes, cereals, canned cherries, peaches, corn, tomatoes, hominy, peach preserves, jelly, pineapple, pickles, beans, ham, pepper, cakes and crackers. We did not make note of the names of all the donors, but we remember the following families represented and taking part in the occasion: M. G. Willis, S. B. Short, A. R. Chapman, A. O. Baker, S. C. Tate, J. T. Ramsey, Aster Ramsey, C. W. Hamilton and Mrs. Epley. We think we have not omitted any family participating in the delightful affair.

The pastor and family desire to thank most heartily these good people for the tokens of appreciation and manifestation of esteem, and we pray God's blessings upon all of them. C. B. Way and Family.

Grace Church, Greensboro.—The friends of Grace church will be interested in our activities since conference. Some worthwhile things have been done and the ordinary work of the church has gone on smoothly. Mr. Carl Jones, the new superintendent of the Sunday school, has taken up the work vigorously and the teachers and officers are co-operating with him. Mr. J. M. Stone, who has been the faithful teacher of the Baraca class, has given place to Dr. C. L. Whitcomb, whose inspiring interpretation of the scriptures is greatly appreciated. Various societies of the church, foreign mission societies, Ladies' Aid, and the Christian Endeavor organizations, are working along faithfully and with success. After conference a men's banquet was given by the ladies of the church and under the leadership of J. M. Millikan, chairman of the board of stewards, was made to yield two thousand dollars additional subscription for the support of the church. At the quarterly conference held early in the month the quota assessed of $600 for the year was accepted. On the fifteenth of February the missionary society held their Thank-Offering Service, and as usual subscriptions were taken for the support of our missionary, Dr. Fleagle. There was some fear of the outcome of this effort in view of the financial burdens already assumed and in memory of the effort required one year ago when the members who have gone into Calvary were still with us. All fear, however, was soon set at rest after a moving appeal was made by J. Norman Willis. In a few minutes the full amount was subscribed with some to spare. At Christmas time the pastor and his wife were remembered generously by the church and individual members, the crowning gift being a purse to the pastor from the men of the church of over fifty dollars. Many times since coming to Grace church we have been constrained to say, "Our lines have fallen in pleasant places and we have a goodly heritage." S. K. Spahr, Pastor.

Brewers Chapel, Richland Circuit.—Rev. C. H. Hill filled his appointment here the fourth Sunday at 11 o'clock. There were more out than usual. He preached an excellent sermon. Our Sunday school is doing fine with M. C. Hienley as superintendent. We have a good choir most of the time. J. M. Trogdon is choir director. We are planning to do more in the future than we have in the past. Mrs. G. B. Ferree, Reporter.

Community Church, Thomasville.—Last Sunday morning our Sunday school held a short program in memory of General George Washington's birthday. Several scout boys took part in an exercise, Mr. Frank Gardner read a few important events in the life of "the father of our country," and a most splendid talk followed by our good Baptist friend, Mr. Archibald Johnson. The orchestra rendered patriotic music. The Sunday school is very active and well attended, also the church services increasing in attendance and interest. Sunday eleven o'clock sermon subject was, "God Is With Us." Sunday evening service was largely attended, quite a number going up in the balcony to get seats. The order was of the best and Brother Williams ably discussed "The Fact of Life," which was followed by the picture, "The Stream of Life." Both the sermon and picture plainly showed us that true happiness comes only from obedience to the word of God and faith in Jesus Christ, and a service rendered to others. It was indeed a grand and true picture, we hope to have it over again. The music played by Miss Susan Green added to the impressiveness of these great truths. Many of us in the congregation had gone through similar experiences, but many of us had not learned to say with understanding hearts, "Thy will be done," though we have one man who we believe has learned that happiness does not come from possession of wealth but by faith in Christ and a service to others—hence we have our beautiful Community Church. And if we do not use it for the advancement of His cause on earth and use our talents for same, we are neglecting our responsibility and duty. And when we see the numbers of young men who come in groups and sit attentive to the message and get the moral the pictures portray, we feel that the Community Church is rendering a real service for Him.

We missed from the choir Misses Myrtle and Pearl Perry, they having gone to spend the week-end with their sister, Mrs. Potts of Charlotte.

Albemarle.—Yes, I knew it was coming. Those ladies of the Ladies' Aid society kept talking, until the secret leaked out. Well, on Friday night, February 20, the thing happened. And such a thing it was. It beat anything they have ever done.

Promptly at six o'clock they started to serve supper. The first item on the menu was that particular fowl that means more to a preacher's heart than any other kind—chicken. All the good things one could wish to eat with a chicken supper were served. Noodles, potato salad, pickles both sour and sweet, dressing, celery, five kinds of pie and six kinds of cake. Coffee flowed so freely and so pleasant to the taste that one bald-headed man present drank three cupsful, and when the price was mentioned the diners were perfectly amazed—50c was all that was charged for that big feed.

Several of the people from the up-town churches came to eat supper, and told us that we could have gotten 75c just as easily as we got 50c. After all we did not want to make too much money, neither did we have the desire to overcharge. It is thought by some that there were more overcharged stomachs than pocketbooks. One of the characteristics of the ladies' society of this church is to give more than value received when they feed the crowds.

After the money was counted and all bills paid, it was found that they had realized a net gain of more than $30 in the evening.

This supper was one of those appetite-sharpeners, and for the first time in many weeks, chicken was served on the parsonage table yesterday. Not that we could not get them, but we decided to join with Brother Burgess in letting the chickens live to a ripe old age in the barnyard, but the temptation was so strong, we just had to break over. And if any one is to be saddled with the responsibility of this breaking over, it must be those good ladies who cooked for the chicken supper.

I am refraining from mentioning any names of those who prepared this meal, for I can not think of all them, but suffice it to say everything was just as good as I ever ate. And I know that I have a good cook at my house, because for more than eight years I have been increasing in weight. All the ladies did their best to get this supper ready, and those who came did their best to eat all that was brought. And only the fragments were gathered after supper.

It might be well to say that the evening was spent in the home of ex-Sheriff and Mrs. S. R. Greene, and they proved that their reputation of hospitality was well sustained.

We are looking forward to the time when this supper will be repeated. Ladies, please do not wait too long.

I promised to let the readers of this good paper know what was in the air, but I had to wait until I got over the effects of that chicken supper.

No, no, I am not sick at all, I feel fine now, thank you. J. L. T.

Orange.—We are still trying to keep things going. Have been greatly handicapped by rough weather, bad roads and sickness. A number of our people have been sick. Think most of them are improving now.

Was kept in nearly all last week by "flu." I can testify from personal experience it is not pleasant company.

The people continue to give us good things to eat. For all of these things we express our thanks.

The parsonage trustees met last week and decided to begin building the new parsonage at once.

Effland and Hebron Sunday schools are planning to hold Easter services. Hope the other churches can do likewise.

We were glad to have Dr. Johnson of Mebane with us first Sunday night in February at Effland. Dr. Johnson presented the college endowment proposition to our people.

Dr. Dixon came to us second Sunday in February and presented the college proposition at Chestnut Ridge 11 A. M. and at Hebron three P. M.

All these speeches were of a high order and we think made a favorable impression for the college.

We are not through with our college campaign yet. Rain kept us in one week and sickness another. Hope to finish up this work soon.

We want to have our second communion services for the conference year as follows: Chestnut Ridge, second Sunday in March, 11 A. M.; Effland, third Sunday in March, 11 A. M.; Hebron, fourth Sunday in March, 11 A. M.; Unica Grove, first Sunday in April, 11 A. M. B. M. Williams.

Saxapahaw charge.—Some of our faithful members are very sick at the present time. Brother A. N. Roberson, who previous to last Sunday had not missed a single service from Concord during the present pastorate, has been confined to his bed for about two weeks. We hope and pray that this good man will soon be better. Mrs. T. H. Moore has recovered sufficiently to return home from the Wesley Long hospital, Greensboro. Brother T. E. Williams and other members of his family have had influenza, but are improving.

Three of the Sunday schools on this work are planning Easter entertainments. The pastor is arranging for a service at each of four charges on Easter Sunday.

The good people of this charge continue to remember their pastor with gifts. The young people of Concord Christian Endeavor society seeing that their pastor did not have a watch chain, presented him a solid gold chain some time ago. Others who have helped him in a substantial way are: Mr. Jim Crawford, and Mrs. H. L. Paris, Mr. and Mrs. I. Durham, and Mr. and Mrs. Onslow Thompson. All these have the sincere thanks of their pastor. H. L. Ish.

South Davidson.—The meeting at Lexington came to a close the 22d of February after fifteen evening services. We had 24 conversions and four have joined the church. The pastor did all the preaching at the closing-out of the services they took up a free-will offering that amounted to $37.56 for the pastor. There was collected from $12 to $15 for Brother Rud Newsome, one of the best and sweetest singers I have heard sing and play the organ since I have been in the ministry. Talk of the sweet singer of Israel—you should hear the sweet singer of Lexington, N. C. You may hear him when the Willow Moore Springs tent meeting gets in full blast. We are expecting to cross the Red Sea dry shod.

Sunday at West Lexington church there was collected $20 for Brother Cross, whose wife has been sick for some time. Pray for Sister Cross.

The business at Mt. Carmel church is on the go for God and his cause. I am wonderfully pleased with the way she is coming on with the Sunday school and the spiritual atmosphere of the church, and they greet the pastor with a smile and a good old-time handshake.

Yadkin College church is preparing to paint the church and to make some improvements. It has been stated by good authority that Yadkin is the best paying church in the North Carolina Conference according to her membership. The pastor believes that he has some of the warmest friends at Yadkin that there are in the denomination. Your truly, W. L. Carson, Pastor.

Randleman.—On Saturday, four P. M., the parsonage was visited by a half-dozen ladies and gentlemen and a Ford truck. All at once proceeded to pound. The items ranged all the way from a cake of soap to three 24-pound bags of flour. We have not the names of all the donors, but evidently the church was pretty generally represented. The pounding made our pantry fuller and our hearts lighter. We are grateful.

For nearly a week we have had "flu," according to the doctor's diagnosis. All are improving now. Brother Dosier preached for us twice last Sunday. Wm. H. Neese.

AN INSPIRATION.

However the battle is ended,
Though proudly the victor comes
With fluttering flags and prancing na-
And echoing roll of drums,
Still with exclaims this motto,

HOW TO PROCEED AGAINST BOOT-LEGGERS.

February 23, 1925.

Dear Sir:

A letter just received at this office says, "I believe that in a very few days, he (meaning the detective) could get twenty or thirty tills, for I have never seen the time that there was so much whiskey in this community as at the present. If you will send the detective I will give him any information I can."

This communication reveals the fact that citizens want to get rid of blockaders but don't know how to go about it. The proper way is to use the evidence. Any citizen has access to the grand jury and to the police officer. The grand jury is the proper place to investigate. It is the purpose of the grand jury to investigate all cases of crime and prevent indictments of all such as need trial to the courts. Therefore, we advise citizens to visit the grand jury and lay any case or cases before that body that need investigating.

It is the duty of all citizens, men and women, to tell the facts to the grand jury in investigating and later to go on the witness stand and testify. Nothing less than this will rid our State of the blind tiger.

Don't wait for the grand jury or some officer to subpoena you. Remember it is the duty of every citizen to defend his country against all criminals, so take the initiative and approach the grand jury or the sheriffs.

Yours truly,

R. L. Davis.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Crutchfield.—On January 29, 1925, Mrs. Elizabeth Gill Crutchfield was called to her reward. Mrs. Crutchfield, if she had lived until March 28, would have been 83 years old. She was one of the oldest of our members at Hebron. She will be sorely missed by both young and old.

In her early life she was a member of Hawfields Presbyterian church, but after her marriage to James Crutchfield, she became a member of Hebron church, of which she was member until death.

She was the mother of five children, two of whom died several years ago, and three sons still living—Messrs. George, Tom and Whit, of Effland. She leaves six grandchildren, a number of other relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

We all are grieved and sad at the death of Mrs. Crutchfield.

Johnson of Mebane. The floral designs were beautiful.

May the blessings of God rest with the bereaved family. May they all meet mother and grandmother in heaven.

Thou art gone to the grave, and thy mansion forsaking,

Perhaps thy tried spirit in doubt lingered long;

But the sunshine of heaven beamed bright on thy waking,

And the song that thou heard'st was the seraphim's song.

Thou art gone to the grave, but 'twere wrong to deplore thee,

When God was thy ransom, thy guardian and guide;

He gave thee, He took thee, and He will restore thee,

And death has no sting, for the Savior has died.

Mrs. U. A. Orrell.

"Sunset, and evening star, and one clear call," and the sweet spirit of Mrs. U. A. Orrell responded, going home to God.

It was on January 15, 1925, after an illness of two weeks with pneumonia. The end came peacefully—and the eye of faith revealed to us the new life beginning gloriously!

Funeral was conducted from Elbaville church, Davie county, Saturday morning at 11:30 o'clock, by Rev. Mr. Cashwell, of Statesville, pastor of the deceased, and Rev. R. A. Hunter, of Winston-Salem. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Taylor, Miss Girta Byerly and Rev. Mr. Sisk, pastor of Elbaville church, sang some of her favorite hymns, among which were, "How Firm a Foundation," "I Would Not Live Alway," and "I am So Glad That Jesus Loves Me." Mrs. C. D. Peebles, a close friend of the family, presided at the organ. The body was tenderly laid to rest beneath a covering of beautiful flowers.

Mrs. Orrell is survived by her husband, Mr. U. A. Orrell, three daughters, Mrs. D. C. Kurfes, Mocksville, Mrs. W. A. Ellis, Cornatzer, N. C., Miss Eleanor Orrell, Winston-Salem, one son, A. M. Orrell, Winston-Salem, two sisters, Mrs. B. C. Orrell and Mrs. William Beck, of Davie county, and two brothers, W. M. Williams, Davie county, and James Williams, Wytheville, Va., and eight grandchildren.

Before her marriage Mrs. Orrell was Mary Williams, of Davidson county. When fifteen years old she lost both father and mother. She then went to Sampson county to live with her uncle, Mr. Hugh McAlpin. Of her life in this home she loved to talk. Her father was a Baptist minister. In early youth she was converted and joined the Baptist church at Boykins Chapel, in Sampson county. Her own uncle baptizing her. When, however, after a few years she married and went to live in Davie county to love, loving the Baptist church all the while, she yet co-operated heartily with her husband in sending the children to the Methodist Protestant Sunday school church, because it was nearer home and more convenient, and at this time she herself joined the Methodist Protestant Church with her husband, and all the children were brought into the Methodist Protestant church. Later, Mrs. Orrell re-joined the church of her choice, the Baptist church at Advance, of which she was a loyal and faithful member until the end. For sometime her physical strength would not admit of her attending church regularly, but she loved to go when she felt like it.

Mrs. Orrell lived her Christianity—it was a living, practical thing in her everyday life. The friends who knew her best appreciated her most—the retiring, unassuming manner, the quiet life that spoke by actions rather than by many words. And she maintained that quiet and calmness throughout her illness. She had builded character well, so toward the end there was not the least alarm, though she fully realized that she was letting go of material things. As she lingered and suffered, at times she would pray, just a sentence now and then, and at times she would sing a line or two of some favorite hymn. The abiding Presence proved very real to her and the gates of Heaven seemed opened wide, ready for her entrance.

In her home life Mrs. Orrell shone most brightly; there, day by day, she lived a beautiful, consistent, Christian life. She glorified every little detail connected with home-life. She was in the zenith of her happiness when serving the members of the family. Through her gentle presence Love became the ruling spirit in this home creating an atmosphere leading to such devotion and consideration of each other's needs as must closely resemble that "place prepared" for His followers by the Great Master Himself.

Mrs. Orrell truly lived for others and even during the last hours thoughtfully inquired after the welfare of the loved ones who were trying so hard to make her comfortable.

How she loved her earthly home was proven by a lifetime of devoted service. But during all these years she was ever busy laying up treasure for "that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens" and we know that the riches of this permanent abiding home she will never cease to enjoy.

Mrs. Orrell's husband and four children were with her in the closing days and each in his and her own way gave to her the human strength and solace needed, her only son, Arthur, proving a wonderful source of comfort in his gentle ministrations. She seemed to realize fully, though, that her loved ones could go only so far with her, and that Jesus, the Lord, would accompany her and be her support down through the Valley. She loved the 23rd Psalm especially and quoted it along with other precious promises, and when the members of the family spoke softly with her of faith and trust and of how implicitly we might rely on God, she exclaimed: "Oh, it is glorious!"

"It singeth low in every heart,

We hear it each and all—

A song of those who answer not

However we may call;

They throng the silence of the breast,

We see them as of yore—

The kind, the brave, the true, the sweet,

Who walk with us no more.

" 'Tis hard to take the burden up

When these have laid it down;

They brightened all the joy of life,

They softened every frown;

But, oh, 'tis good to think of them

When we are troubled sore!
Thanks be to God that such have been,
Although they are no more.

"More homelike seems the vast unknown
Since they have entered there;
To follow them were not so hard,
Wherever they may fare;
They cannot be where God is not,
On any sea or shore;
Whate'er betides, Thy love abides,
Our God, for evermore."

High Point.—Mrs. Sallie Wilborn, widow of Rev. John W. Wilborn, and sister of the late Mrs. J. R. Reitzel, with whom she lived for many years, died this (Tuesday) morning of pneumonia at 3:40 o'clock. Her death had been momentarily expected for the past 24 hours. She had been practically an invalid for several years, but was able to attend church occasionally, and was present at services two weeks ago. She was a consecrated Christian, a most devoted and loyal member of the First Church, and was held in loving esteem and regard by its members, to whom she was affectionately known as "Aunt Sallie." Funeral arrangements have not been announced at this hour. A more extended notice in detail will be given later.

Engham.—Catherine Wright Bingham, wife of Rufus Bingham, was born June 10, 1844, died February 18, 1925.

She professed faith in Christ thirty years ago and joined Friendship church and remained a faithful member until death. Although her suffering was great she bore it patiently.

She will be greatly missed in her home. She leaves a husband, a little adopted son about two years old, a little daughter only two weeks old, father and mother, one brother and two sisters, and a number of friends.

Her body was laid to rest at Friendship cemetery.

May God bless and comfort the husband and the little ones.

Paschall.—Lucy Elizabeth Paschall, daughter of Robert and Lucy Paschall, was born near Drewry in Warren county, N. C., September 12, 1878, and fell asleep in Christ February 21, 1925. In 1895 she was united in marriage to Hugh W. Paschall. This happy union was blessed with eleven children, three of whom died in infancy, eight are still living. At the age of 11 years Mrs. Paschall united with New Hope church, Vance circuit, and remained a faithful member until called to the higher life. She was of a retiring disposition and never put herself forward. But while she was not a leader in the church yet she was willing to follow. Those who knew her best say of her that she was truly a good woman and lived her religion all the time.

While she was a faithful member of the church, she was also and even more so, useful in the home. Some one said, "She simply lived for her family." In this she found great joy, and was amply rewarded by seeing her children grow in usefulness, one son, Rev. Fred

W. Paschall, being one of our most promising young ministers.

The funeral service was held from the home on Monday afternoon, February 23, and in the absence of her pastor, Brother Chambliss, was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Eboe, pastor of the M. E. church (South) at Whitakers. Burial was at New Hope church cemetery. Mrs. Paschall is survived by her husband and the following children: Rev. F. W. Paschall of Whitakers, Miss Lois and Clyde of Richmand, Va., Lottie, Robert, Richard, Eugene and Hunter, the last five being at home.

"Thy servant of God, well done,
Thy glorious warfare's past;
The battle's fought, the race is won,
And thou art crowned at last."

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father in his divine wisdom saw fit to call our beloved school mate, Lucy Elizabeth Paschall, to his heavenly home, we, the members of Hollister school, feeling the deep loss that we have sustained by his death, therefore resolve:—

First, That we will ever cherish the memory of his daily walk among us, and his godly life which seemingly ended so untimely.

Second, Although our hearts are sad because of our loss, we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things for the best. We rejoice in the fact that in his last hours he expressed an abiding faith.

Third, That we extend to the family our deepest sympathy in this time of great bereavement, assuring them that we are partakers with them in their sorrow.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to the local paper, a copy to the Methodist Protestant Herald for publication, and a copy spread upon the school record.

Sallie Bert Ross,

Rosa Mae Shearin, Committee.

How oft beyond the sunlit skies, by ardent faith I gaze,

I see that lovely city fair, one bright unending day:

The pearly gates so wondrous fair, the shining streets of gold,

Increasing joys and pleasures new, that never can be told.

But who is this? I see him smile, with nail-prints in his hand,

I see that face that loved me so in yonder earthly land?

Yes, 'tis that face, so kind, so true, 'tis Jesus—there's no other.

He is the fairest of the fair, he is my friend and brother.

'Tis he who suffered grief and care: he shed his precious blood;

In him the healing stream abounds; in him the crimson flood.

He offers you this love, my friend; will you reject or own?

How will you answer in that day, around the great white throne?

Will heaven's gate swing open wide? Are you prepared to stand?

Will you those friends and loved ones see, and take no parting hand?

Have you your treasures kept above where dross does not consume?

Have you the right to pastures green, where sweetest flowers bloom?

Take heed, my friend, don't spurn his love until it is too late.

He'll guide you with unfailing hand, straight up to heaven's gate.

He'll give you wisdom, grace and power, to foil the tempter's snare.

Will you resist his love today to go down in despair?

Some day you'll need this Savior true, so turn now while you may.

He wants your service now, my friend, get in the shining way.

Don't wait until it is too late and hear him say, Depart.

He's waiting with his outstretched hand to cleanse your sinful heart.

—Mrs. J. A. Cox has done for the Calvary church what she has been soliciting money to purchase. The bell has arrived and her assistance in it will be much appreciated by the members of the church. We are sorry to hear that Mrs. Cox is now quite ill, and hope that the probability of a hospital term will be a short one.

THE INDIVISIBILITY OF THE CHURCH'S LIFE.

By Robert E. Speer.

There is nothing in Christ that any one communion can monopolize. This is the most outstanding single impression that comes to me as a result of close association with all the churches in the Federal Council during the last four years. It is a sheer impossibility to segregate any fresh discovery of Christ that any one of our great Christian groups has made. If any group has had a true insight into Christ and what He means for human life, all have shared in that insight. If anyone writes a hymn that exalts Christ or writes a new devotional book centering around Him no one stops to inquire to what denomination the author belongs.

We are coming to a common recognition of the elemental unity of life and experience among the churches. There is no Presbyterian type of sin, with which only the Presbyterian church can deal. You cannot denominationalize sin. There is just one kind of sin. And there, accordingly, just one task, elemental in its unity, before all the churches, whatever their names may be—the task of overcoming sin through the power of their one Savior and Lord. We have come to a realization of this inner unity as our churches have been brought face to face with concrete tasks. There is an indivisibility of our Christian reactions to any great moral issue. Among the many recent evidences of this none has been more striking than the response in all communions to the Japanese exclusion act. The reactions among the various churches against such a racial discrimination were identical. The public statements made by the Federal Council were simply a gathering-up of the judgment of all thoughtful Christian groups.

Or take the resolutions on war adopted by almost all the Christian bodies. If you erased the denominational names no one could possibly tell which declaration came from which body. The common convictions on the issue of war and peace are a revelation of the community of mind among the churches. Other illustrations, equally convincing, of the indivisibility of our Christian experience could be drawn from the attitude of the churches toward prohibition, their efforts to relieve the suffering in the Near East, Russia and Central Europe, their new experience in grappling with the problems of race, and in many other fields of co-operative activity.

That there are difficult and delicate questions before the churches as they undertake to deal with great social and international questions cannot be denied. None is more difficult and complex than the true function of the church in its relation to issues which are also the concern of the State. But the difficulties themselves are a unifying force, drawing the churches together in an effort to find together the right way, as they cannot find it alone. Certainly the churches must not be intimidated from doing what they ought to do because of fear of making mistakes or of doing what some think they ought not to do.

There are voices that would like to keep the voice of the church from being heard. We ourselves may at times have misgivings as to what the church should do. But all our questions as churches finally reduce themselves to two. The first concerns our relation to our common Head. How great a Lord is Jesus Christ to be. Are there areas of life of which he is not meant to be Lord? If so, then he is not the Lord of all, as we had supposed. The whole of human life belongs to him and must be brought under his mastery. That is the first issue on which we must be clear.

The second question has to do with the relation of our churches to one another. The problems which are faced in the Federal Council are church problems. They are issues with which the churches as churches must deal. They are questions on which the churches must find a common mind and in relation to which they must be able to fulfill their corporate and infeasible responsibilities. We have passed beyond the day when the churches can delegate their responsibilities to other agencies. We must grapple ourselves with these momentous tasks and in order to do so with power we must develop a will to unity that will relegate to a secondary place all details of polity and organization and draw the churches together in a growing oneness of spirit and purpose.

UNIVERSAL CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE MEETING AT STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN.

The success of the conference at Stockholm is assured. Practically all the Protestant churches of the world, with the Eastern Orthodox Church, will be represented in Stockholm from August 19 to 30, and these representatives will discuss the problems with which the church has to do. The international committee on arrangements will be in Stockholm from August 9 to 18 in preparation for the larger meeting. Practically all the Protestant communions of America have appointed their delegates and it looks as if a splendid delegation of 150 men would go from America. The Swedish people the rejoicing that we are to be their guests and are planning to entertain all the delegates. The importance that Sweden attaches to this conference can be seen by the fact that the King has issued a proclamation to the people in which he plainly indicates that this conference is to be the greatest event Sweden has known for many years. The message is practically devoted to the Universal Christian Conference and is so significant of the eagerness with which all Europe is looking forward to this meeting of the churches that I am moved to quote two paragraphs of it below. Meantime, I am glad to say that the full reports prepared by the American Committees on the six subjects which are to come before the conference have been written and are in printed form ready to be sent to the committee in Europe. During the two weeks preceding the conference, the international committee will go over these reports with great care and put them in final shape to be presented to the conference. I am empowered to say that visitors will be freely welcomed to the conference and arrangements will be made to issue tickets of admission to all who come and make proper application.

The King's proclamation to the Swedish people follows in part:

"With the object that the Spirit of Christ should reign more fully in the hearts of men and in the lives of peoples, chosen representatives from the greater part of Christendom will gather in Stockholm, after profound preparations during several years, for the Universal Christian Conference on Life and Work, in August, 1925, if so be God's will. The Lord make His face shine upon the meeting so that the way may be discerned and the will strengthened with one accord to walk in the way of love. May the church and congregation of Christ in our land help in the undertaking with faithful prayer."

"The thoughts and efforts of men are powerless. But God's strength is made perfect in weakness."

"So let us all then, young and old, men and women, who are settled, live and dwell in the realm of Sweden, free ourselves from daily cares and, whatever else may divide us, humbly unite considering how we fill our duties as citizens, men and Christians. Let us all, on the appointed general days of Thanksgiving, Fasting, Penitence and Prayer, go up into the house of the Lord, that together we may contemplate His Holy Word in the texts appointed thereto, with prayers and thanksgiving."

While the conference will devote itself to practically all the tasks that face the church, it is understood by all the churches that great emphasis will be placed upon what the church can do toward the outlawing of war and the promotion of international goodwill.

GOSSIP OF OLD INAUGURATIONS.

Washington was elected President of a republic of eleven states by the unanimous vote of ten of them. The eleventh, New York, lost its chance to vote by a dispute between the two houses of its legislature. Rhode Island and North Carolina had not yet accepted the Federal Constitution. The curse of slackness which hung over the declining days of the Continental Congress and brought its closing sessions into contempt seemed to threaten its successor. Members were busy at home, the roads of late winter were terribly deep with mud. It was a full month after the fourth of March before the Federal Senate secured a quorum and the electoral vote could be counted.

In the meantime Washington and Adams were decorously waiting at their homes for the official summons. Adams was sworn in on the twenty-first of April and the following day Washington reached New York after a triumphal progress from Mount Vernon. Even then the city was not ready for him, and he was kept waiting a whole week while the carpenters and decorators were finishing their work in Congress Hall. The second inauguration of Washington took place quietly in Philadelphia, where Congress had settled itself while waiting for the slow process of building a new city in the rough or marshy wilderness on the Potomac.

Of the inauguration of the second President we have abundant details from John Adams himself and others. It took place in Congress Hall, Philadelphia, with all the state and circumstance dear to the heart of the President-elect. Adams himself wore "a full suit of pearl-colored broadcloth, with powdered hair." Fine as he was, however, he must have been outshone by the taller figure of Washington, who wore "a full suit of black velvet, his hair powdered and in a bag diamond knee-buckles and a light sword wit gray scabbard." In stateliness of ceremonial this was the greatest of the early inaugurations. Even Jefferson, the despiser of stately fashions, on this occasion wore a crimson vest.

It was a trial to the sensitive pride of Adams that it was, after all, the retiring rather than the incoming President who was the chief figure in popular interest. It could not be otherwise, but it hurt. We feel it in the letter Adams wrote to his wife, who was detained at home in Quincy: "A solemn scene it was, and it was made more affecting to me by the presence of the General, whose countenance was as serene and unclouded as the day. . . . When the ceremony was over he came and congratulated me and wished that my administration might be happy, successful, and honorable. . . . In the chamber of the House was a multitude as great as the space could contain and I believe scarcely a dry eye but Washington's. The sight of the sun setting full-orbed and another rising, though less splendid, was a novelty. . . . All agree that, taken altogether, it was the sublimest thing ever exhibited in America."

With John Adam's own account may be compared the report of Elias Boudinot: "Mr. Adams has been solemnly, peacefully, and joyously enstalled into the Presidential office. The day was solemn. Everything was conducted in the most quiet, decent, and interesting manner."

At the end of the administration so solemnly and "decently" inaugurated, Adams did not wait to congratulate his successor and political enemy, Thomas Jefferson, but drove out of Washington in the early hours of Inauguration Day. It would have been too much to ask, perhaps, that he should take the second place in public notice at both ends of his single term as President. Nor did Jefferson apply his democratic beliefs to the solemnities of his first inauguration, many popular traditions to the contrary notwithstanding. He did not, as the familiar story runs, ride alone to his inauguration, hitching his horse to a fence and walking quite unattended to the ceremony. The fence was there, no doubt, for Jefferson was the first President inaugurated in Washington, which was still a good deal of a wilderness.

Washington and Adams had been accustomed to ride to the meeting-place of Congress in great occasions in a coach and six, with outriders. They read their messages in person, as the British kings did in Parliament. But Jefferson sent his communications by any chance messenger. The chief justice of Pennsylvania suggested that the President should be called "His Serene Highness," and Washington favored the title "High Mightiness," in imitation of the stadholder of Holland. Imagine Calvin Coolidge as "High Mightiness"! But Jefferson was satisfied to be plain "Mr. President," and fixed the title so. He abolished the Presidential levees, which under Washington and Adams had been formal receptions at which the President merely bowed to his guests, and introduced the terrible ordeal of handshaking.

It was a time of powder and pomatum, of velvet clothes for men, of silk stockings and knee-breeches, of snuff boxes and cocked hats, and the Democrats who came in with Jefferson, with their short queues and simpler fashions, were the despair of the hair-dressers. It was easier, perhaps, to be simple and careless of fashion when Congress met in the woods, with all the conveniences of living three miles away at Georgetown. As for the ladies, they merely substituted French fashions for English and were more splendid than ever. And if the election of "Long Tom" Jefferson was a bitter trial to the Federalists, it was the cause of sometimes riotous joy to the Democrats, who celebrated their triumph with parades, bell-rings, orations, and ostentatious public readings of the Declaration of Independence. And the Federalist despair only added zest to the Democratic mirth.

Madison, Monroe, and John Quincy Adams were inaugurated in plain suits of black broadcloth. The fashion of male butterflies was going out. Monroe was the last President who wore the cocked hat of the Revolution. With Madison we first hear of the Inaugural Ball as a social usage. It was attended by "upwards of four hundred persons," and, if some of the splendor had departed from the sterner sex, Mrs. Dolly Madison appeared, "attired in a robe of yellow velvet, her bare neck and arms hung with pearls, and her head nodding beneath a Parisian turban with a bird-of-paradise plume." It was Monroe who carried the inauguration ceremony out of doors into the presence of the crowd, and the order of the day has ever since remained about as Monroe designed it. When John Quincy Adams was inaugurated, Mrs. Monroe lay ill in the White House, and Adams and his wife went back to their own house until she had recovered.

There were no railroads when Andrew Jackson was inaugurated, but his admirers came by steamboat, stage, and on horseback to share his triumph, especially from the West and South. "I never saw such a crowd here before," said Daniel Webster. "Persons have come five hundred miles to see General Jackson, and they really seem to think that the country is rescued from some dreadful danger." Another writes: "The West and South seemed to have precipitated themselves upon the North and overwhelmed it. On that memorable occasion you might tell a Jackson man almost as far as you could see him. Their every motion seemed to cry out: 'Victory!'" A ship's cable was stretched across the steps of the Capitol to hold back the crowd, and when Jackson appeared "the color of the whole mass changed as if by miracle: all hats were off at once."

General Harrison had a like enthusiastic crowd at his inauguration in 1841. He rode to the Capitol on a white charger escorted by officers and soldiers who had fought under him in the Indian campaigns. He holds the record for length of inaugural addresses, and his speech was rather wooden and terribly pedantic. Daniel Webster, who was to be his secretary of state, had begged the privilege of revising this inaugural and is said to have remarked wearily as he finished, that he "had killed seventeen proconsuls since breakfast."

The most interesting of later inaugurations was that of Abraham Lincoln in 1861. Seven states had already adopted ordinances of secession and the public anxiety was at fever heat. To a good many Eastern men the new President seemed like an untried man brought face to face with unexampled difficulties. There had been threats of assassination, and he was guarded by detectives and troops, as it had never before been thought necessary to guard an elected President, on his way to be inaugurated. Senator Sherman in describing the scene says: "I sat near him and heard every word. Douglas stood conspicuous behind him and suggesting many thoughts. I have witnessed many inaugurations, but never one so impressive as this."

That first inauguration of Abraham Lincoln now stands almost half-way back to our first inauguration of a President in 1789. Down to Lincoln there were fifteen individuals in the President's chair and, including Lincoln, there have been fourteen individuals since. President Coolidge has chosen to have a simple and inexpensive inauguration ceremony, vastly different certainly in dress and manners from that of the first Massachusetts President. But the real dignity of the office and of the man remains.—Isaac Ogden Rankin, in Zion's Herald.

FAITH.

Faith in God is a vital principle that will produce patience in the soul, even in circumstances of trial and testing. Those who live by faith in God in the midst of great trials and sorrows do not grow callous, nor are they hardened. They are conscious of the storm that sweeps about them, but they live on in quietness and patience, knowing that God will protect them. Yet many of us are conscious that there is something lacking in our faith. We fail to measure up to God's standard, which is a life of faith—unwavering faith, unflinching faith in God.—Selected.

SWEET LIBERTY.

"I want to be free to do as I please," is a remark that falls on our ears every day, and yet the fact remains that no one is, or ever can be free to do as he pleases unless he pleases to do right.

Sin is always bondage, and wrong-doing of any sort always brings its fetters with it. We cannot escape law whatever path we choose, and attempting to evade it by following one's own inclinations outside its pale cannot bring freedom. Every broken commandment of nature entails its own penalty. Every bad habit enslaves, every wrong path leads to captivity. All God's laws, whether written in nature, in His word, or in individual lives, are for the welfare of His creatures. It is only when we come into the light of this knowledge that we become really free. When it is our pleasure to do God's will, we have reached the joy of liberty.—Selected.

"I AM WITH YOU ALWAYS."

Christ's presence with every believer is not a figure of speech. It is literal fact: blessedly literal. A missionary from South Africa, speaking recently in Toronto, has told, with simple faith, how real the presence of his Lord has been to him in his missionary work; sometimes, he says, when walking through the African woods, so conscious was he of the presence of the Lord that he stepped to one side to make way for him to walk alongside, an involuntary act disclosing what a reality in this man's life is the fact declared in God's Word. Have we realized that this inviolably guaranteed presence of Christ with us is the death-knell of sin and defeat of every sort—the common and constant sin, for example, of worry? How can we worry while Christ is here, meeting all our needs?—Editorial in Sunday School Times.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Sunday, March 8, was spent on Vance charge in the interest of the College, while Dr. Andrews spent the day on Granville and in Henderson. I visited Harris Chapel, Flat Rock and Spring Valley. These three churches will do what we asked them to do and more. It was a real pleasure to present the College to these people. They heard so cheerfully and they seemed so glad to know that things are going so well at the College. I do hear that some folks stay away when we go to present the College. How foolish! We have no way of making anybody give to the College, and we would not make them give if we could; but we do have the privilege of telling our people who will hear what a wonderful thing we have accomplished as a church in the building and equipping of this splendid institution. And we do have the privilege of offering the folks the joyful privilege of giving for the benefit of the youth of the Methodist Protestant Church in the years that are to come. It is a great work and we are glad to help push. Every Methodist Protestant who loves his church should be glad to share in this great undertaking.

Easter Services.

In just one month we will reach the Easter time. I am concerned about the Easter services, and I am glad to note that many of our Sunday schools are preparing for the Easter services. If you are going to get ready for this service there is no time to lose. Twenty-three per cent of the G. C. B. goes to Home Missions, and this will be a good time to collect that much on the General Conference budget. Last Sunday I heard a young layman, whose church always pays both budgets in full, say, "If the people will take the collections regularly and hold the special days recognized by the church they will not have any trouble raising the G. C. B."

"Making Ready for Our Passover."

Recently the General Conference Budget Council mailed to each pastor in the denomination a leaflet with the above heading. It is full of good suggestions. If your pastor does not speak of it, ask him about it.

I quote just a part of it here to urge that we undertake to do what it says do insofar as we can. And we can certainly make sacrificial offerings at Easter.

"Our Response to Christ's Passion."

"There were those who looking on the Crucified Christ mocked him; others who stood afar off beholding, and still others who sitting down watched him there. But not we. O, never we! His passion of suffering shall beget in us a passion of gratitude."

"My Savior, how shall I proclaim,

How I pay the mighty debt I owe?

Let all I have, and all I am,

Ceaseless, to all, thy glory show."

"Are we listening to the call of our church, our Lord's living representatives, to us at least? It is telling us of the need of all our boards and institutions, our own agents for carrying on the great work he has given our church to do, a need crying to us just now with peculiar insistence, for the money required, and not yet received.

"Then let us keep a

"Sacrificial Week."

"Let us mark out one week, at least, wherein we make a sacrificial offering. Let us deprive ourselves that we may put into the Lord's treasury enough to carry on his work. On each of these seven days let each one of us lay aside, as God has prospered us, something for him."

"Suppose each one of us should bring to his pastor, to be placed to the credit of the General Conference budget, one-tenth of his earnings for that week."

"Or, suppose each one should go without one meal a day, or some luxury, and pay the price of that into the treasury."

"Or, suppose each one knowing that he is living constantly on the bounty of God, should pay the price of one week's board into the treasury."

"Or, suppose each pastor should recommend his own sacrificial plan to his church."

"Any one of these plans faithfully and universally practiced for this one week in the Methodist Protestant Church would produce one hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

"What shall I render unto the Lord

For all his benefits toward me?

I will take the cup of salvation

And call upon the name of the Lord.

I will pay my vows unto the Lord,

Now in the presence of all his people."

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

OUR TASK AND OUR PRIVILEGE.

Cornelius and Lincolnton enter the ranks of those paying on the A. C. B. with a promise of more to follow soon. Calvary and Halifax also enter the list of those paying on the G. C. B., and they make very substantial payments. Welcome to these new ones to the list of those paying on the budgets. This leaves only 20 charges not heard from on either budget. Surely every charge will make a good substantial payment before the end of the second quarter. Also note that there are some mighty good charges whose payments on either budget range below $100 here more than four months removed from conference. It is perhaps due to the fact that some church treasurers have not sent in the funds which have been raised. See that your treasurer has something to send in and that he sends it in at once to Rev. S. W. Taylor.

See where Why Not goes to on G. C. B., moving up to three. There are some splendid gains this time. Charlotte jumps from 10 to five and pays in full on A. C. B. Flat Rock makes a good gain, but loses eight to Orange because of Charlotte's greater gain. Spring Church moves up one place and takes 12, forcing Cleveland down to 13. Gibsonville and Fountain Place moves up two notches and takes 26 from Davidson. Saxapahaw made a payment but holds her place at 36.

These lists are growing substantially and thus making a better showing than in other years, but the year is slipping by, and the first thing we know we will be within about a month of conference with more to do than we can do in a short time. We now have nearly eight months in which to work. Let us redeem the time. This is our privilege of service for others. Come on with your very best.

Yours in service for the King,

A. G. Dixon.

RALLIES FOR THE FOURTH DISTRICT.

There will be two rallies held in the fourth district instead of one on March 28-29. One will be held at Midway church on Haw River charge for Haw River, Reidsville, Draper, and Flat Rock charges. The other one will be held at West End church, Greensboro, for Calvary, Grace, St. Paul's, West End, and Kernersville. The Flat Rock people and Kernersville people can take their choice of places. We are having the two instead of the one with an attempt to make it as convenient as possible for all concerned.

The program will begin Saturday morning at ten and close Sunday afternoon. Topics that are of vital interest to all church people will be discussed. I trust that pastors, Sunday school superintendents, Christian Endeavor or presidents, presidents of Ladies' Aids, missionary societies, etc., will see to it that their organizations have a large representation at these meetings. I think it would be well for each of these organizations to elect delegates, and not to elect the same one to represent two or more organizations. The good accomplished will be in proportion to the number in attendance.

L. W. Gerringer,

Chairman.

State Street, Lexington.—Every branch of the work is moving on in a very encouraging way.

Sunday at 11 o'clock the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society held their Thank-Offering Service. The service was under the able direction of Mrs. F. J. Cox, president of the society, and was very interesting and helpful. Our pastor gave us an impressive talk on the duty and privilege of helping to send the gospel to those who do not have it.

The Christian Endeavor society is growing in interest with each meeting. The time of meeting has been changed from Sunday night, 6:30, to Tuesday night, 7:30.

We are praying for and expecting a great revival to begin at our church the night of the second Sunday in April. There will be an Easter service at the 11 o'clock hour. All who read the Herald please pray for the success of this revival.

COLLEGE PAGE

EDITED BY REV. R. M. ANDREWS

THE COLLEGE CAMPAIGNS.

Two college campaigns of interest to many folks in Davidson county, and of more or less importance to the county itself, are now being conducted. One of these is for increasing the endowment of High Point College, the fine new Methodist Protestant college opened last fall at High Point. The other is for Catawba College, the new edition of an old and respected place of learning, that is to open next fall at Salisbury. Davidson county stands just midway between these two colleges, one a few miles beyond her border on the northeast and the other about the same distance from her southwest boundary. Neither the Reformed nor the Methodist Protestants are among the more numerous denominations of the State, their membership being more or less centralized in certain sections. But it so happens that both are important churches in this county and many of the best citizens of Davidson are found in one or the other denomination. The county has contributed some of the ablest leaders of both churches and has been a worthy factor in their educational programs. It is quite important to Davidson county folks that both of these campaigns succeed and that these colleges go forward as standard high grade institutions of learning spreading their benefits most generously throughout this territory in particular and to the world in general.

This part of the State has grown more rapidly in an industrial way than it has in respect to higher education. But the neglected field is being cultivated more intensively now and such institutions as High Point College, Catawba College and Lenoir-Rhyne College will grow into importance alongside their older fine companion, Davidson College, whose name is derived from the same heroic and historic source as that of this county, that finds itself aiding in building up strong colleges on either side.—Lexington paper.

WHAT THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE SHOULD MEAN TO HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

By Rev. R. M. Andrews.

Attendance upon the Young People's Summer Conference at High Point College will give those who come a knowledge of the plant. An important part of the college is the physical plant. While the old saying that Mark Hopkins on one end of a log and a student on the other end constituted a university is in a sense true, and also very highly complimentary to both teacher and student, yet the modern college teacher, the modern college curriculum, and we might say the modern college student, call for certain equipment which the log does not furnish and which must be present before the student can do his best work. We call this the physical equipment, which consists of the grounds, buildings, library, and laboratory equipment. You will find here beautiful grounds, modern buildings comfortably arranged, and up-to-date equipment. So we will expect those who come to the Young People's Summer Conference to become boosters of the High Point College.

While you will not see the college functioning as a college, we believe you will have your desire for an education quickened and stirred so that you will become a student at High Point College in the near future. High Point College not only wants students, it wants the choice young people and we are proud enough of our own people to want all of them at High Point College who may attend college in North Carolina next year. This conference will be of the select young people and while there will by no means be all of that class, they will be among the best young people in the Methodist Protestant Church, and we want that type of students at High Point College.

Again, we state that we believe the attendance upon the Young People's Summer Conference will send out over the entire State college boosters, and we believe that it will be a good thing for the college if it did not mean anything at all to the other activities of the church. But since we know something of the program that is proposed, we are rejoicing with you in the thought of attending this conference. Your presence here will help us and we hope you will be greatly benefited by your stay.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

By Rev. L. Layman, D.D.

Pev. S. Wada, of our Japan Conference, was recently honored by the Emperor of Japan in a unique way.

The following is a translation of the document which Brother Wada received from the Imperial Household Department.

"Their Majesties, The Emperor and the Empress, are pleased to know that Mr. Shuho Wada has been rendering distinguished service in social service for a long time and They have rewarded him with a silver cup engraved with the Imperial Crest in its center, and two hundred Yen, according to their Majesties' special wishes.

"The Imperial Household Department.

"January 26, 1924."

Brother Wada was born in the Presbyterian Church. But he has spent most of his Christian life and work in the Methodist Protestant Church.

Before he came to us, he became one of the directors of the Lepers' Home, situated at Meguro, on the outskirts of Tokio. He has remained as one of the directors ever since. Not only is he one of the directors but he is one of the most active among them. Probably no other man connected with the Leper Home has been more active in its management and in shaping the policies that have put the Home on its present nation-wide status.

When Rev. M. Ohgimi, the founder of our Tokio School for the Blind, had to give up his post as principal of the school, owing to age, the directors of the school called Rev. S. Wada to this important position.

No doubt the motive in calling Brother Wada was because of the intense interest he has manifested in the unfortunates of Japan for so many years.

The building in which the school was being conducted, a rented building, was destroyed by the fire which followed the earthquake of 1923. All the equipment of the school was destroyed.

In a subsequent article will be told the story of securing of the funds and the erection of a new school building, all the labors of this noble man.

The securing of a site for the school building, after the earthquake and the fire, was a very difficult matter. The site finally found was so far out that a dormitory was essential to the growth of the school.

The mission could not see its way to provide the funds for the erection of a dormitory. But nothing daunted, he proposed to secure the funds for the dormitory on his own initiative. The dormitory is now completed and students can occupy it from the first of the year.

Nothing but his love for the unfortunates of his country could prompt him to such works. And it is for this that his Emperor and his Empress have honored him.

SOME SIGNIFICANT SUGGESTIONS.

By Rev. Luther K. Long.

Agricultural conditions—one of the things which made the political situation so problematical last summer and autumn—have greatly improved. Better prices for produce and a more hopeful outlook toward the future have put new courage into the hearts of farmers.

Religiously, the rural situation is about as bad as ever—that is to say, about as bad as it can be. Here or there is a community not yet greatly affected by conditions generally prevailing elsewhere; and once in a great while a community may be found that has gained deliverance from conditions long felt to be intolerable. But as a rule rural churches throughout all sections of the country are in a backward state, both spiritually and as regards real leadership in their several communities; this is true notwithstanding the fact that in many cases they are raising much more money than in former times.

The American Country Life Association, a national society having in mind the improvement of rural life and conditions, is a live organization doing effective work along many lines. Its meeting—held recently in Columbus, Ohio, and presided over by Dr. Kenyon Butterfield, president of Michigan Agricultural College—was a notable gathering.

While this association is not a religious organization, neither religion nor the church could be kept out of its convention, because many church people were among the delegates—and they were persuaded that at the foundation of any rational hope for an improved country life must be placed an improved country church.

Here is a paragraph from an address of Professor Walter Burr of the department of sociology of the Kansas State Agricultural College:

"The rural church is a failure. There is no need to recount the results of the many surveys that have been made from every angle of approach. They all tell the same story 'The rural church is a failure!' We subsidize certain demonstrational fields and then go out and tell the world! But the world knows that is not the rural church. The world knows that is just a thing dressed up for show purposes. We have read from a recent report that more than thirty thousand churches in America are pastorless. We have read of the inroads made upon whole rural sections of states, by the Holy Rollers, the Holy Jerkers, the Holy Jumpers, and the like. We have read of the thousands of rural ministers who serve the churches that still remain, and who are getting much less than living salaries. We find these ministers unable to buy books to keep them up-to-date; or to send their children to high school, to say nothing of college. We find many of them hopelessly in debt to the storekeepers of the towns where they serve as pastors."

With reference to the activities of the country church, concerning which there is much discussion just now, Professor Burr has this to say:

"What sort of community activities do you have here through the winter?" I asked a farmer in a Kansas town. 'Oh, there's plenty doing,' he replied. Then he went on to tell me how the Baptists began their revival meetings in the fall as soon as corn was out of the way, another church started immediately after the Baptists were through, and the two others finished the season up to March when spring work began. 'And the Holy Rollers,' he added, 'keep theirs going all the time. What a continuous spree for country folks! No wonder that the educated self-respecting ones are big enough to stay out and above all. But if the rural church is dominated by that sort of thing in the interest of denominational competition, then the self-respecting folks must leave it alone. I suggested to a denominationally crazed farmer that a preacher that peddled a sermon to them occasional might give them better service if he were educated for his work. 'Law me!' he exclaimed. 'He don't need no education. Why, last Sunday he preached down to the church and they wa'n't nary a dry eye in the house. He don't need no education.' On the other hand, I asked a farmer who is a college graduate, 'Did you attend the service at the church last Sunday?' He replied, 'I should say not. Why should I go and hear a man who doesn't know as much as I do of the things he talks about?'

A feature of this convention was the group conferences. One of these was a gathering of the Methodist delegates to consider matters that specially concerned their denomination. Out of this group of Methodists came the Significant Suggestions referred to in the title of this article. They were telegraphed to their bishops. Here they are:

Methodist Pronouncement.

To the Bishops, District Superintendents and other administrative officers of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

"We, the undersigned members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in attendance at the American Country Life Association at Columbus, Ohio, have had impressed upon us some facts among which the following is typical:

Communities throughout our country feeling that competing denominations are hindering the co-operation necessary for their largest religious development, are eagerly seeking some solution of their problems.

In the light of this fact and in view of the contribution toward what we believe to be a constructive solution of this problem we appeal to you to give prayerful consideration to the following suggestions:

1. That the bishops, district superintendents, and other administrative officers of our denomination cordially co-operate with the leaders of other denominations in an effort to so organize rural church geographical units that not more than one Protestant church to every one thousand population shall prevail as a standard.

2. That service to the community rather than to the denomination be the basis on which ministers shall be trained, appointed, and promoted.

3. That the Methodist Episcopal Church take the lead in the give and take method with other denominations, even to the extent of encouraging the discontinuance of small, struggling, competing Methodist churches in the interest of real Christian service to the communities involved.

4. That zeal for service to the entire community and a sympathetic consideration for those whose background and training are non-Methodist shall characterize the efforts of the Methodist Episcopal Church wherever it alone occupies a rural field.

5. That the conference membership of a Methodist Episcopal minister shall not be jeopardized by appointment as pastor of a federated, or undenominational church where such a church is required for the largest service of the community."

I am persuaded that out of these suggestions and others that may be added from time to time, great good will come. For while the Methodist Church always has much to say of its own mission and great growth, yet, at heart, it stands for the kingdom of Christ and its growth everywhere—and, like Wesley, this church desires a league with all men of good-will.

If like-minded Christians in all the denominations give their sympathy and aid in this matter, the time is not far distant when the country church will be in a greatly improved condition. This will be a most important factor in improving country life, and the entire religious outlook as well.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN JAPAN.

From "The Christian Movement in Japan," which has come to hand, the following is taken.

"It is no longer a question of the attitude of the government toward Christian education for men. Practically all restrictions have been removed. Whatever remains we may gladly accept for purposes of greater incentive. Christian education enjoys unlimited freedom in Japan today. Recognition awaits such schools as care to have it if they attain to the high standards set by the authorities.

"The closing months of 1923 and the beginning of 1924 showed a strong desire on the part of the government for mutual co-operation with Christian schools in the education of the youth of Japan.

(The government made a grant again last year to Nagoya College).

"Public opinion also has befriended Christian schools. Never before have they enjoyed a more wholesome public confidence.

"The Christian kindergarten furnishes the most conspicuous example. The cradle roll is no longer the monopoly of the Sunday school. The Christian kindergarten has its waiting list of babies enrolled soon after birth. In the case of the kindergarten it is not the teacher but the mother who sees to it that the new baby's name is entered early. This is not a fad. Fad days are over so far as the Christian kindergarten is concerned.

"It is needless to say that Christian schools of all grades enjoy a similar confidence. It is not a new thing that our schools were crowded in 1923. They were only a little less crowded in 1922. And unless we become more wise than we have been they will be still more crowded.

"At present the Christian kindergarten is doing by far the most effective piece of Christian education in Japan. The reasons are not far to seek. They are mainly two. The kindergarten gets the children very early in life, and therefore has a unique opportunity to start them on the "Great Highway of Life" which leads God-ward. In the second place the kindergarten is in a class by itself as an educational institution. If you want to know what education really is, frequent a well regulated kindergarten when pupils and teachers are engaged in sharing the experiences of living.

"You will find a social group characterized by warmth, and enthusiasm, purpose and co-operation. You will find here child problems arising out of the actual situations which are vital to children. These must be solved to allow their activities to go on unhindered. You will find many eager little hands ready to give a lift at all times. Here is education of the most vital kind.

"Of these splendid institutions there are about 250 under Christian guidance. Would there were ten times as many doing their work equally well.

"At present about twenty per cent of all the kindergartens of Japan are Christian.

"Ten times as many would go far toward bringing in the Kingdom within a generation or two."

"The aim of every school which bears the name Christian must be definitely and thoroughly Christian, or the whole cause suffers as a consequence."

"The end of learning is to know God, and out of that knowledge to love him and to imitate him."

OKLAHOMA NEEDS YOU.

The following article was written by Rev. G. O. McMillan, president and missionary superintendent of the Ft. Smith-Oklahoma conference. It was written in harmony with the request made of him that he justify the interest of the Board of Home Missions in Oklahoma. There were many things which we might say but we will let Brother McMillan tell his own story.

"Yes, Oklahoma needs you. I mean some Thomas Woodfords, who will walk out of their splendid churches of the North and East, where they are well organized, where they pay good salaries, and make some sacrifices to establish the work in this great commonwealth. That is the crying need of the Methodist Protestant Church in Oklahoma.

"There are over two million people living in Oklahoma. But, the tragedy of it is, only eighteen per cent of this group of people belong to any church, either Protestant or Catholic. There are a lot of churches in Oklahoma, but not too many, no, not enough. The Methodist Protestant Church has about forty congregations in Oklahoma but they are mostly rural. We need to get into some of the strongholds of the State if we are to live as a denomination. We are allowing our best church members to move to the cities from our rural churches and go into other denominations. Then, they are lost to our church. One of the ways of testing whether a man is insane or not is to place a barrel before him with a hole in the bottom of it. He is now given a bucket and told to fill the barrel with water. If he fails to stop the hole in the barrel when the water begins to run out, he is judged insane. I could not say that the Methodist Protestant Church is insane, but it seems we show some signs of insanity, for we are constantly getting members for other churches, simply because we are not taking care of them when they move to the city.

"Pastors from Maryland, Ohio, Texas and other States write me that they have members who have moved to Tulsa, Durant, Ardmore, Fort Smith, Oklahoma City, and other places, but we can not offer them a church home, because we have no home. We must get there or lose our church. What we need to get the men is money. I hope that some good man or woman that reads this will send me a thousand dollars by return mail to pay for a lot in Ardmore or Tulsa.

"At Ardmore, I found that we had at least ten families living there without church homes. I organized a Sunday school there the first Sunday in January, with 45 present. The next Sunday there were 59 present. They were meeting in a little dilapidated store building, but that store building has been sold so we are out of a home again. This is the greatest field I have ever seen. There are six thousand people living in that part of the city, isolated from the churches of the town by the railroad and business section, and only one little non-progressive church of Christ in the entire section. The people live in good homes, have money, paved streets, and all modern conveniences, but they are anywhere from twelve to twenty blocks from church, therefore not many of them attend.

"I am trying to take care of the Ardmore church at my own expense, preaching there occasionally. $1,000 would get a lot and small residence building that would hold the Sunday school for a short time. The average salary of Oklahoma Methodist Protestant pastors is about $235.

"Already we have lost heavily in these fields. We need to go there at once. What are you willing to do about it, dear reader? If you cannot come to our assistance, why not send some money? At least, will you not pay the Home Mission Board their askings so that they can help us in this field?"

CHICKENS!!

"Nina! Come quick! The chickens are gone!"

Nina gave a cry of dismay as she rushed to the basement kitchen where her sister Betty stood gazing at the spot where the chickens, roasted to a turn, had stood waiting.

"Jim and Denny did this!" exclaimed Nina, in an awful voice.

"What shall we do?" cried Betty.

Nina turned and ran, pale and panting, upstairs to the third floor and flung herself against her brother's door. It was locked as usual. The boys were always locking themselves in their room and acting mysterious. The family was led to suppose that they were writing a book.

"Did you take the chickens?" shouted Nina, and Denny opened the door a crack.

Denny turned to Jim and asked solemnly: "Did we take the chickens?"

"You boys have had your heads together ever since we girls were given permission to get up Grandma and Grandpa's Golden Wedding dinner," said Nina. "I don't believe you are writing a book at all. You are plotting mischief. Now you've spoiled our dinner which we worked so hard over, and I think you are horrid!" Nina's face vanished behind her handkerchief.

"Say!" Jim exclaimed, coming to the door. "Don't cry. It was just a joke, and your chickens aren't spoiled. We hid them in the summer kitchen. We'll go and get them for you."

"They'll be stone cold!" cried Nina.

"Oh, you can warm them up," said Jim.

The boys ran downstairs feeling rather mean. They hurried out of the back door, and were just in time to see a slouchy person in a faded red and black checked coat dart out of the gate which opened into an alley back of the house. Jim remembered that he had not locked the summer kitchen. He rushed in and looked at the place where he and his brother had hidden the chickens. They were gone!

"Gee, the tramp swiped them!" he cried.

Denny ran swiftly to the alley and Jim hastened after him. They saw the tramp ahead of them running. He had a parcel under his arm. It was a cold day and the boys had no coats or hats, but they did not stop for that. They rushed after the tramp who led them a merry chase, up one alley and down another and into vacant lots. Finally he jumped on to a trolley and it looked as though he had given his pursuers the slip, but just then Steve Henderson, a friend of the boys, happened along on his motor-cycle. Jim hailed him and he let the boys jump into his side car. It only took a moment to explain the situation to Steve. He was game for a race. He soon caught up with the trolley and when it stopped, the boys got on board.

There sat the tramp, holding a large paper bundle. The boys sat beside him, but they did not know what to do. The man looked like an ugly customer. The boys paid their fare and were glad it was warm in the car.

And on they rode beside their unpleasant companion. Suddenly Jim nudged Denny. The man had dropped asleep. Pretty soon moans began to issue from his half-open mouth. Jim slid the paper parcel carefully off the man's knee and slipped it to Denny. At the next corner the boys got off the car with their prize.

They shivered a good deal before they got another car home, and Jim, who was subject to colds, began to sneeze.

When they reached home, they found nobody in the kitchen. They tiptoed into the dining room and found the company all there, Grandma, Grandpa, Mother, Dad, the girls, aunts and uncles and cousins feasting and rejoicing.

"Well, well!" cried Grandpa in his hearty tones. "Here are the truants. Come, boys, you'll be too late for any chicken in a minute."

"Chicken! Sure enough! It was there on the table. The boys exchanged startled glances.

"Hurry up now!" said their father, rather sharply. "I'd like to know what you mean by being late anyhow."

"We'll tell you all about it later," said Denny humbly.

"Do hurry!" put in Betty.

The boys backed into the kitchen.

"They have chicken," said Jim.

"Maybe they sent out and got it somewhere," said Denny.

They were both looking at the paper parcel they had taken from the tramp.

"Let's open it," said Jim.

Denny agreed, and they got the knife and cut the strings. Before they had finished unwrapping, Jim knew and so did his brother, that there was no chicken inside. Instead when they had opened it up they found a pair of old overalls and a pair of old shoes.

"Poor fellow!" exclaimed Jim. "We've robbed him!"

"What'll we do?" said Denny, looking scared. "We really weren't to blame. He sneaked out of our summer kitchen."

"Besides the chickens were gone," said Jim.

Just then the door opened and their father came in looking far from pleased.

"Will you come in and have dinner with us or not?" he demanded.

"We're coming," said Jim.

"You're not very polite to your grandparents," said Dad. "I ought to make you eat out here."

The boys came hastily to the table, and they both noticed that their sisters were unusually gay during the meal. The chicken tasted rather flat, besides it was cold and the others were ready for their dessert and kept telling the late ones to hurry up, which isn't the way to enjoy a good chicken dinner. Jim and Denny felt that the meal had been a failure.

"We could put an ad in the paper about those things," said Jim in a low voice to his brother.

But Betty was talking and Denny heard her telling Grandpa: "So I saw them in the summer kitchen and put two and two together and I rescued the chickens."

"It was really Mr. Foreman who rescued them," said Nina, with a smile.

"Who's Mr. Foreman?" asked Denny.

"He's the plumber," said Nina, "Didn't you know the plumber had to come and fix that leaky faucet in the summer kitchen?"

The boys were quiet, each of them thinking.

"Say," whispered Jim to his brother, "if that was Mr. Foreman, why did he run away from us?"

"Maybe he was just running to catch a car or something," said Denny.

"Maybe he knew we suspected him and was stirring us along," was Jim's guess.

"If that's the case, let's burn up his overalls," said Denny.

But they did not burn them up. Mr. Foreman came around later and they were returned. The boys never heard the last of that joke, and their sisters could always get a rise out of them at any time by saying "Tramp," or "Chickens."—Selected.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

Through our secretary of education, Mrs. L. Whitaker, we are asked to use the "Question Box" which is found in each issue of "The Missionary Record." It is one of the essential things to do to keep informed about our work. As to the Student Loan Fund, that will mean so much to assist in educating some worthy woman for the foreign fields; still, it is such a little bit for us to give that ten cents per member, so let us have the entire North Carolina membership pay into this fund.

Read Mrs. Whitaker's article. Use it on your next program.

To the Auxiliaries.

Your secretary of education wishes even this late in the year to make her debut.

I was appointed last fall by the executive committee, which met in High Point when I was very busy trying to get lined up with my strenuous duties at High Point College.

There are two things that I wish to stress in the auxiliaries, first, the Question Box; second, the Student Loan Fund.

The only way to keep posted on our foreign missionary work is to read The Missionary Record. The Question Box will help to get this Record read.

If you have not a Question Box secretary or superintendent, appoint one whose duty it will be to get ten women to answer the questions for the next month.

It is far better to get ten women to answer the questions than for one woman to answer them all. This gets ten women to reading the Record thoroughly. It takes careful reading to get up the answers, so be sure to assign the questions one month ahead.

Then the Student Loan Fund—what shall I say of that? I am afraid that since so much stress is laid on the budget, the Student Loan Fund is lost sight of and some of our women do not even know about it. Every auxiliary is asked to contribute ten cents per member for this fund. Have some one at some time during the year speak on the subject. This money is put in trust and the interest is used to help educate young women for the foreign field.

It is bad policy to work poor girls so hard trying to get an education that often the health is impaired and much time lost before they can be fitted for an efficient position. Miss Hodges says health means so much in the foreign fields, she even went so far as to say a sick missionary was in the way. So don't forget the Student Loan Fund. Make it as large as you can. If some one pleads for the need of this fund perhaps you can get more than ten cents per member. Give out the information and the inspiration is sure to come.

Hoping to be more help to you in the coming year,

Sincerely, Mrs. C. L. Whitaker,
Secretary of Education.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES FOR SUNDAY, MARCH 22.

What Can We Do to Win Others to Christ? Daily Readings.

Mon. Invite friends to Christ. John 1:40-42.

Tues. Pray for friends. Matt. 15:22-28.

Wed. Live Christ-like lives. 2 Cor. 4:1-6.

Thurs. Manifest friendly interest. 1 Cor. 9:19-23.

Fri. Write letters. Luke 1:1-4.

Sat. Support preachers. Gal. 6:6.

Sunday. Topic. 1 Peter 3:8-16; 1 Thess. 1:8. Suggestions for the Leader.

In this topic the emphasis is placed upon the word "do." "What can we do to win others to Christ?" At the very beginning it may be said, we must be in dead earnest before we will do much of anything. There is no such thing as lukewarm soul-winning. Either a person will be red-hot in witnessing for the Master, or he will be a dead failure as a soul-winner. It is not worth while to argue about religion; for no argument compares with a beautiful life. Christian love shown in practice will attract souls to Christ (v. 8).

The world watches how a Christian acts in adversity, when he is wronged, or when he is blamed unjustly, or when he is ridiculed, or criticized. If he fights back, or sputters, or resents, people are ready to say that religion is not what is claimed for it (v. 9).

Zeal to do good, to be kind and thoughtful and helpful and generous are sure methods of commending our Lord to others. Try these if you would win others for the Master (v. 13).

The trouble, too often, with us is that there is not enough difference between the professed Christian and the one who makes no professions of Christianity. If the difference be marked, and the Christian life be joyful reports of such a life will spread (1 Thess. 1:8).

A person may be well qualified as a soul-winner in some ways and yet not succeed. He may know all he needs to know to enable him to speak to others, but if he does nothing to back up his knowledge he will not get anywhere. A person cannot pray earnestly unless he is willing to back up his prayers by his deeds. So, doing is the outworking of our being, and of our inmost desire. Our doing to win others to Jesus should be unstinted and generous. There ought not to be anything that is right and that is within reason which we will not do in order to reach the hearts of those whom we hope to win for Christ. We must give ourselves unreservedly to the task of winning others if we would succeed. This should be a very practical meeting, and in order to be the most practical and helpful it should be deeply spiritual.

Truths Taught in the Scripture Texts.

1 Peter 3:8-16. Here we are taught that we must first love our fellow men, if we would reach them. We must have compassion upon them. We must be tender-hearted toward them. And we must bring them the blessing which we ourselves enjoy. We will never win others to the Master unless we love them for the sake of the Master; because we could not otherwise be sincere in our efforts.

If we love the people we will really want to help the people, and then the rest will be easy.

Another lesson here is that, if we have Christ in our hearts, we will be able to show Him to others. And we will always be ready to give a reason for the hope that is in us. We must have clear consciences because we are living godly lives. No matter what we say, and no matter what we know, if our lives do not square with our faith, our efforts will not bear much fruit in reaching others.

1 Thess. 1:8. Here Paul praises the Thessalonians for their witnessing for the Master. They had not neglected the most important thing in making them real Christians,—witnessing for the Master. That is our business today, if we are Christians. It is the one thing that Jesus especially wants us to do—to be His witnesses. And it is the only thing which will get definite results for Christ and His church. The greatest thing, in the way of service, the church members and Christian Endeavorers can do is to witness for Jesus.

The Christian Religion Wrought Out in Life.

Winning others, as an active pursuit, is Jesus' method of attracting men and women to be His disciples. That was His way of leading people to an interest in His Kingdom. His early followers followed the same method, and the church was born and put into active service. And the conditions have not changed since so far as the progress of Christianity is concerned.

One of the important things for one to do in winning others is to exercise tact. This is necessary in all phases of Christian service. If we love people we will treat them right.

It is also necessary to pray much. Prayer will see through almost any occasion that arises, it will help one to be tactful, it will connect one with the source of spiritual power in such a way that he cannot easily go wrong.

Seek the leading of the Holy Spirit. One cannot be a successful Christian worker without His leading. "Seek and ye shall find," holds true of the Master's Spirit. When you find Him allow Him to lead you. Just as He told Philip to go to the man in the chariot, so He will direct you in the right way, if you will permit Him to do so.

Personal work is the best way to bring others to Jesus. Public services and other means may help; but what clinches their decision is personal witnessing on the part of His disciples. Any soul is worth saving, and if Jesus and His early followers could spend their time to save them one by one, we certainly ought to do likewise.

Things to Pray About.

1. Thank God for the active followers of Jesus who have shown us what to do to win others to Jesus.

2. Thank God for the compelling power of the Spirit which sends us out with an honest purpose to win our friends for Christ.

3. Thank God for the friends who have done something which helped us to make the decision to follow Jesus.

4. Ask God to strengthen those of our Endeavorers who are too timid to do personal work.

5. Ask God to bless this meeting that all the Endeavorers present may be stirred to go out after others to bring them into active service for the Master.

6. Ask God to help the young people of your community to make your church a soul-winning church.

He Is Counting on You.

He is counting on you!
On a love that will share
In His burden of prayer,
For the souls He has bought
With His life-blood; and sought
Through His sorrow and pain
To win home yet again.
He is counting on you.
If you fail Him—
What then?

He is counting on you!
Oh! the wonder and grace
To look Christ in the face
And not be ashamed.
For you gave what He claimed,
And you laid down your all
For His sake—at His call.
He had counted on you.
And you failed not.
What then?

MARRIED.

Hill-Brinkley.

On Wednesday afternoon, March 4, 1925, Mr. C. C. Hill and Miss Elizabeth Brinkley were united in marriage. They were married in the new West End Methodist Protestant Church, of Thomasville. The writer officiated. Mrs. Hill is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Brinkley. Mr. Hill is a son of Mr. R. L. Hill, who is engaged in the automobile business in Thomasville.

These are splendid young people and we wish them a long and prosperous journey.

They will make their home in Thomasville where Mr. Hill is located. W. M. Loy.

A DOUBLE VALENTINE.

"Mother," called Larry, whistling in from school with the February wind, "what do you think? Every single boy at school had a sled but Dan Liggitt and me!"

"Well, now, what's to be done about it?" replied his mother playfully. "A boy who spent Christmas in Florida running about barefooted couldn't be expected to need a sled, could he?"

"N-no," replied Larry with a twinkle; "but when he comes home in February and lands in snowdrifts, he's sorry he forgot to ask Santa for a sled. Maybe I can save up and buy one," he sighed, "though I s'pose it would be fourth of July before I could earn it. If I had a sled," he confided, "I'd share it with Dan Liggitt. I don't care how ragged his clothes are or if his mother does have to wash and iron all the time," he said from the depths of his loyal little heart. "Dan's the smartest boy in school, and he can jump the highest and run the fastest. Besides, he always stands up for me."

"I'm glad you feel that way," smiled his mother proudly, "and Dan is lucky to have such a friend."

Just then a neighbor shouted for Larry to come out and help build a snow fort, so he said no more about a sled that day. Next day he and the other children were very busy making valentines, which was just as well, as there was a rousing snowstorm outside. Besides, Larry wrote a long letter to his grandpa in the next town. He told them all the news and asked him to visit them soon.

"I'd like you to go past Mrs. Liggitt's in the morning and leave an extra bundle of washing," Larry's mother said at bedtime that night, before Valentine Day. A very sleepy boy stacked up about a dozen gay valentines he had made. But when his mother turned her back, quick as a cat he flew to put her valentine on top of the bread box, where she would find it the first thing in the morning. He had cut roses out of a seed catalogue and painted them brightly. Then he printed his best:

"Some roses are red, some roses are pink,
But you are lots sweeter than any, I think.
If you can guess who wrote this line,
I'll always be your valentine."

"It will be fine coasting today," sighed Larry next morning as he dressed by the kitchen fire. "And no school, either."

His mother's valentine stood up against the sugar bowl in the middle of the little table. She was so proud of it, and from the big squeeze she gave Larry he guessed that she knew who made it.

Every year his mother made a game of her valentine to him. Last year he had hunted all over the house before finding in his toy cupboard a box of heart cookies iced in red. This morning his mother didn't say a word, and Larry wondered where on earth he would find his valentine.

"I want you to make a path to the front door," Larry's mother said after he had eaten more pancakes than anyone would expect one small boy to hold.

Larry started out with his heart in the neighborhood of his heels. It was hard to shovel paths when all the other boys were to meet at the schoolhouse hill for a coasting bee. But of course when he didn't have a sled—

Ten minutes later hard-working Larry, tossing the soft snow right and left, spied something bright red before the big white mound made by the lilac bushes near the front gate. "Hurrah! If it isn't a brand-new sled!" he shouted, reaching his treasure in one record jump. There was a big white heart pasted on the sled, and this is what Larry read with a happy grin:

"I'm waiting here, and that's a sign
I came to be your valentine."

Larry yelled so loud his mother clearly understood that he and his valentine had gotten together. But just before he was ready to go on his errand he had another surprise. The parcel post wagon stopped before the house, and what should be left at the front door but another red sled! It was a valentine from grandpa. Larry laughed so hard that his face was as red as the sleds or the hearts on his valentines. Then he turned a double flip, and after that he exclaimed: "I know what! Grandpa didn't know you would give me a sled, and he won't care if I pass it on to Dan for a valentine."

"Of course he won't," agreed his mother heartily. So that is how it happened that on the following Monday every single boy had a sled of his own. But the gayest of all sliders were Larry and Dan, toiling up or flying down on their queer, welcome valentines.—Daisy D. Stephenson, in Pearls for the Little Ones.

THE FAIRY IN THE BELL.

Donald Lucas and Martha Kent lived side by side, and it happened that they usually started to the schoolhouse together, for they were good friends, and in the same first grade at the Emerson Building a few blocks away. Sometimes Donald could not find his cap, or Martha had mislaid her books, so that they had to hurry as fast as anything to get to school before the bell stopped ringing.

"I believe there is a fairy in that bell and she's cross this morning," painted Martha as they struggled along through the high autumn wind. "She says, 'Come on! Come on!' just as if she meant to punish all who are late."

"I think so, too," said Donald, as his cap went sailing in the wind. "I know we'll be late and then our grade won't win the prize. Oh, dear!" He set the muddy cap firmly on his head and tried to catch up with Martha, but the wind was strong and his coat was not snugly buttoned, so he had a fall and that made things worse.

But next day the sun was shining and there was plenty of time to get to school. Donald and Martha were eating big ripe grapes that Mrs. Teck had given them, and it was only when the bell began to sound that they quickened their pace a little.

"The fairy is in a good humor today," said Donald. "She says: 'Come, dear, come dear,' as if she liked children."

"Yes, it doesn't sound as it did yesterday," said Martha.

But the next day the fairy was in another mood, for it was as plain as anything to the children that she was saying: "I'm sorry! I'm sorry! I'm sorry!" Donald and Martha walked soberly along, but that very afternoon on the way home from school they stopped in at Mrs. Teck's and told her that they had not intended to break her big pink geranium. It had caught in Donald's kite string and been broken, and they had been so frightened that they had hurried on to school without saying anything.

And so it went from day to day for more than a week, and then one day something happened that set them both to thinking. "How happy the fairy is today!" said Martha, who was wearing a brand new coat because the minute she reached home she was to take a long drive with Uncle Mark and have a picnic supper. "I just love to hear her."

"Martha Kent! It's no such thing. She's as hateful as can be," said Donald. "She's saying: 'Bad child. Bad child. Bad child!' right now. I guess you must have something in your ears."

The first thing any one knew Martha was angry and said she never intended to go to school with Donald as long as she lived, and that very moment she heard: "Bad child! Bad child! Bad child!" clear and strong.

It was such a strange thing that they had to tell their mothers when they reached home, and what do you think they found out? Why, the bell had been saying the same thing each time in the same sweet tone, and it was the way the children were feeling that determined what they heard. Maybe this sounds strange to you, but you try it with your own school-bell some day and see what it says.

"Then if we're always pleasant and happy the bell will not scold?" said Martha.

"Try it and see," said the mothers.

And from that day to this the fairy in the bell has been sweet and kind, and she hasn't said anything but: "Come, dear!" no matter how rainy or dark or gloomy the day, for Donald and Martha are very careful not to give her a chance to be anything but pleasant.—Hilda Richmond, in Sunday School Times.

A BOY GETS A GLIMPSE OF SIN.

Such a wild, ignorant fellow he was. One wondered, as so often, what had brought him in, for unlike many of the visitors he had no thirst for the truth. But as we were waiting he explained to another reader how the worker had found him, some weeks ago, lying in the sun slowly burning a beetle's legs off with his cigarette.

To his surprise she had objected to his occupation, and objected in such forcible and energetic Arabic that, as he put it, "By the time she had finished, the beetle and I were about the same!"

God uses many means to draw his prodigal within sound, and this special one decided that if this champion of beetles had a reading-room open he might as well hear what she had to say.

The simple Gospel talk with a new student was just over, and also a Bible reading with recent convert, so when the ne'er-do-we lounged in there was time for him, and a special prayer was telegraphed up for wisdom to deal with him.

He sat there jauntily sure he was a very good fellow, in fact he said as much, free from sin of every kind, therefore not needing a Savior, naturally.

But the ever-faithful God sent just the message he needed. A word on the day of judgment stirred him to a frank, "Yes, I am afraid of God, I am afraid of man." Then a short talk on sin the word lying stung him again to attention, and he poured forth his own views on the subject, while we sat listening getting fresh insight into the sophistry with which the devil beguiles his victims. The boy almost laughed as he said lightly, "How can I help lying? It is not my fault that I lie. If I work for any one and I oversleep or idle in the market-place and arrive late I must lie. If I don't he will be angry and beat me."

A few more grave words from the Book and then comes another plausible excuse. "I don't lie from my heart, my heart is true, it comes from my mouth only. That sort of lie does not matter. God is merciful, if I pray and fast and give alms and witness to the one God and his prophet I shall enter heaven all right."

"No liar shall enter therein," stops him for a moment, but once more he tries to shake off the words that are so pricking. "It is only wicked to lie about the things of God, not about the things of the world."

gain with prayer the "sword of the Spirit" is wielded, and stern, straight warnings are given that pierce through all his poor self-deception, till, quieted and awed, he gets a glimpse, for the first time in his eighteen years, of what is sin and how a holy God regards it. Then he says, "rest in peace," and slips away quietly, we hope to think and pray.

And we look at each other and recognize that this poor ignorant boy has voiced the moral code of Islam, the canker at its heart—M. M. Watling, in Sunday School Times.

HOW JESUS HELPS SINNERS.

The very purpose for which Jesus came into the world was to save sinners. Paul proclaimed this truth as one worthy of universal acceptance—that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners—and he added, "of whom I am chief." To study how Jesus helped sinners is really to study His whole life. If we would follow in the footsteps of Jesus we, also, must try to help those who are sinners.

Luke tells us that "all the publicans and sinners were drawing near unto him to hear him." The Pharisees and Scribes murmured at Him because of this, saying, "This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them." It was something beyond their conception of religious life and service that a good man should associate with and eat with publicans and sinners, but Jesus sought to change their conception of the religious life by telling them the parable of the man who had a hundred sheep. When one of them was lost he left the ninety and nine safe in the wilderness and went after the one that was lost until he had found it. He pictures the joy of the shepherd, returning with the lost sheep on his shoulders, as he called together his friends and his neighbors and said to them: "Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep which was lost." But that joy of the shepherd was as nothing compared with the joy of God over one sinner that repenteth.

In this parable Jesus impressed upon His followers the duty of seeking the lost, the duty of personal work to win men into the Kingdom of God. This is the chief duty of Christians today, and the church everywhere needs a great revival along the line of personal evangelism. Jesus emphasized this duty of seeking the lost through two other parables—the parable of the woman who lost one of her ten pieces of silver and the parable of the lost son. These rich passages of Scripture will repay earnest study on the part of those who are willing to do personal work.

The other passage of Scripture assigned for study at this meeting tells the story of Zaccheus, who was chief among the publicans and very rich. When he could not see Jesus because of the crowd that thronged him, "for he was little of stature," he ran before and climbed up into a sycamore tree to see Him. Jesus recognized the earnestness in the heart of the man and called to him to come down, for He would abide in his house that day. Zaccheus came down and received Him joyfully.

Again they, the Scribes and Pharisees, murmured, saying, "that he was gone to be guest with a man who is a sinner." Zaccheus confessed that he had been a sinner, but he immediately determined to make complete restitution and to follow Jesus. Jesus said to him, "This day is salvation come to this house." He then gave to the crowd that attended Him this great truth: "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." In these words Jesus made it plain that His chief mission is to save men.

There are certain facts about Jesus' life that indicate His attitude toward sinners. He was friendly with them; He recognized the value of their immortal souls; He encouraged them and He appealed to the best that is in them. But most of all he challenged them to repent and return to God.

Thing to Think About.

How has Jesus helped me?

How can I help Jesus to help others?

Why do sinners need help?

In our fluctuation of feeling, it is well to remember that Jesus admits no change in His affections; your heart is not the compass Jesus sails by.—Rutherford.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—MARCH 15.

Our Lord's Resurrection.

Lesson Text: John 20:1-16.

Golden Text: Luke 24:34.

The Central Truth: Jesus Christ rose from the death of the body that we might rise from the death of sin unto the life of righteousness.

Scriptural Points.

1. "The first day of the week," upon which Jesus rose from the dead corresponded to our Sunday. The body of Jesus rested in the sepulcher from late Friday afternoon to early Sunday morning.

2. Matthew states that "there was a great earthquake; for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment as white as snow: and for fear of him the keepers did shake and became as dead men." As soon as they recovered from their deadly swoon they went to the chief priests and reported these strange events and that the body of Jesus was no longer in the tomb. These priests bribed these soldiers with large sums of money to say that Jesus' disciples came and stole away the body while they slept.

3. It was a sad, forlorn message that Mary Magdalene brought to Peter and John. The tomb was empty, and she supposed that some parties had removed the body. Neither she nor any of the twelve had the least hope that Jesus would rise from the dead; though Jesus had foretold His resurrection a number of times.

4. Both Peter and John carefully investigated the empty tomb. They saw the linen shroud carefully folded, and the head-napkin, also carefully folded, in a place by itself. This indicates that Jesus was deliberate in leaving the sepulcher. Thieves would not have been so careful.

5. This, however, did not convince them that Jesus had risen. They returned home with sadder hearts, no doubt, than ever.

6. But Mary Magdalene, whose passionate love for Jesus knew no bounds, could not leave the place. She wept unrestrainedly. Looking into the sepulcher she saw two angels, who rebuked her for her unbelieving tears. Footsteps behind her caused her to turn quickly, and there stood the living Christ. Her blinding tears prevented her from recognizing Him. Supposing Him to be the gardener who might have removed the body for some reason, she asked that it might be given her for removal.

7. Jesus also rebuked her for weeping when she ought to be rejoicing. She was seeking the living among the dead.

8. But she recognized Jesus when He called her name so tenderly. With an overflowing heart of love and joy she breathed, "Rabboni,"—My Master. It is likely Mary wanted to embrace Jesus; but He forbade her this longing of her heart. But the other women were permitted to hold Jesus by the feet in humble, adoring worship. See Matt. 28:9.

Practical Points.

1. The resurrection of Jesus is the keystone in the arch of Christian doctrine. Salvation is impossible without it. "And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain; . . . ye are yet in your sins."

2. The resurrection of Jesus completed the plan of the atonement: "Who was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification." Rom. 4:25.

3. In the resurrection of Jesus we have a strong and sufficient hope of our own resurrection and immortality. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." 1 Cor. 15:19. Jesus is therefore "the firstfruits of them that slept."

4. Most troubles are borrowed troubles. The imagination paints a thousand catastrophes that never come to pass, that weight the soul with inexpressible sorrow. Worry is the prolific offspring of unbelief. "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." Phil. 4:6.

5. The resurrection of Jesus creates a most binding and unceasing obligation. It binds us to rely upon omnipotence to endure every trial, to meet every responsibility, and to perform every task. It binds us to walk always worthy of our risen and ascended Lord. And it makes it our daily duty to "press tow-and the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ." "If ye then be risen with Christ seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Col. 3:1.

6. In the resurrection of Jesus there is the guarantee of the power of Christianity. "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Phil. 3:10, 11.

7. Jesus is always so near when we think He is very far away. "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." "And they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us."

8. The risen life is the only safe, happy, and victorious life. Have you risen with Christ?

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Canaan, Denton Charge.—I have seen no letters from Canaan this year. The future of our church looked dark to us at the first of the year. Brother Trogdon, who had been our pastor for nine years, and whom we had learned to love as a father, was called away to another circuit. While we miss Brother Trogdon from among us, we still have the good influence that he left with us, and will have for years to come.

Then Brother C. E. Ridge, our class leader, was called to preach on the Davidson work. We miss him and his family so much. Our next loss was sister Nannie Welborn, who had done so much to build up our Sunday school; she moved to another locality. About the same time Brother Fred Nance, who had been our faithful superintendent, moved away, and then Brother Jeff Harris, whom we had elected as class leader, was taken sick and had to be carried to the hospital.

So you see taking so many of our leaders away at once was quite discouraging. But we have the good example that they left with us, and we have the greatest of all leaders, Jesus Christ, if we will only follow Him. We are thankful that we have a few faithful ones to carry on the Lord's work.

We are having a good Sunday school with Brother J. M. Gallimore as superintendent. We have prayer meeting twice a month. We are all pleased with our new pastor, Brother Loy. His sermons are always good and he seems to have the Spirit of Christ. Dear brethren, pray for us that we may be faithful in the Master's work. Jeff Ward.

March 2.

Pine Grove, Kernersville Charge.—Pastor Suits filled his regular appointment yesterday at 11 o'clock with a forceful sermon which should prove very helpful to all present. He has not been feeling the best physically for some weeks; we hope and pray that he may soon be restored to his usual health.

At the next appointment efforts are to be made to raise the money to finish paying the church debt. Mr. H. L. Barrow, treasurer of the building fund, suggests that we push a bit and he feels sure we will get over all right. May we all be present next time feeling spiritually and financially like doing our part.

Paul Barrow and Allen Warren were kept away from church Sunday on account of mumps.

Mr. R. L. Dwiggins has been on the sick list for some time. We hope that ere long he will be restored to his health, Reporter.

March 2.

Reidsville Woman's Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. Mary Hopkins on Monday, March 6, the president, Mrs. J. D. Williams, presiding. Scripture lesson and prayer by Rev. J. D. Williams. Ten members answered roll call. Dues and pledges, $3.80. Our secretary assures us that our delegate to branch meeting will be able to report, paid in full, which is very encouraging. Mrs. C. H. Garrison was elected delegate to branch meeting.

Officers for the coming year were elected as follows. President, J. D. Williams; vice president, Mrs. A. O. Royals; secretary, Mrs. C. H. Garrison; treasurer, Mrs. D. L. Carrol; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. H. Allen.

Owing to sickness no meeting was held in February. The April meeting will meet with Mrs. S. J. Kernodle. Mrs. J. H. Allen, Corresponding Secretary.

A Surprise Dinner.—On Sunday, March 1, Mrs. John Sharpe, Jr., gave her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Lineberry, a surprise dinner, in being their 25th wedding anniversary.

A long white cake bearing in silver figures "1925" formed the center of the table. A four-course dinner was served the invited guests by the hostess.

Every one seemed to greatly enjoy the occasion and to enjoy the pleasure of having so completely surprised Mr. and Mrs. Lineberry.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Anderson, Mr. Willie Anderson, Miss Nova Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. John Sharpe, Sr., Miss Maye Sharpe, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Bowman, Master Arthur Norman Bowman and Mr. and Mrs. John Sharpe, Jr.

The guests departed wishing Mr. and Mrs. Lineberry many more years of happy married life. All unanimously voted Mrs. Sharpe good at serving surprise dinners.

Mrs. Frances L. Bowman.

Some Things the Monticello-Friendship C. E. Society Has Done During the Last Three Months.

The society had the opportunity of making the Christmas holidays brighter for a mother and six children who were in sore need of both food and clothing. To this cause the members responded most generously. When these were presented a number of the members visited the home and held a short service with the family. At this time a number of Christmas carols were sung, followed by a Scripture lesson, prayer and talk.

We as members feel sure all who were present had a deeper realization of what the real spirit of Christmas meant after such an experience as this.

In addition to this many hours were made brighter for the sick by flowers, books and magazines—as well as visits by the society members.

At the last business and social meeting ways and means of raising more money for charitable work were discussed. Following the business meeting the members were entertained with a debate, music and contests.

It is the hope of the society to increase its membership, also the efficiency of its present members during the next three months, and by this means do much toward developing the spirit of service for mankind and a stronger desire to do the work of Him whom we serve daily.

March 8.

Whitakers, Whitakers Charge.—Today has been a good day for us. We had a splendid Sunday school this morning and this always makes us feel good. Then our pastor gave us a splendid sermon on "The Power to See It Through." We do need this power so much, because so many times the way looks hard and dark; and it takes some external power to be able to see it through.

Our people gave a splendid play a short time ago, "The Old-Fashioned Mother." It was well rendered by every one who took part. Mrs. Dr. Cutchin coached it. The house amounted to $78. They are expecting to take it to other places this week.

It was the sad privilege of a number of us to attend the burial of our pastor's mother two weeks ago. We never had the pleasure of knowing this good woman but we say, all honor to her memory for having given to the world and to the Methodist Protestant church a son who is one of our most promising young ministers, Rev. F. W. Paschall.

We were very much pleased to have Spencer Cutchin back home for the week-end; we wish she could come oftener.

We are planning for our District Rally to be held March 28 and 29.

Last Thursday night our town experienced another shock when Mrs. Tom Ruffin died suddenly. She had been in bad health for some time, yet she was up most of the time and the night she died had just gotten in from a neighbor's house. Truly "in the midst of life we are in death."

One of our boys (Robert Jones) is now at St. Louis, Mo., taking treatment to enable him to walk. Several years ago he had infantile paralysis and has never been able to walk since without crutches. We are hoping he may be benefited.

Mrs. J. M. Cutchin, Sr., and her companion, Miss Annie Carlisle, have both been on the sick list, but are better now.

We were glad to have some of our members who live away with us today, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Killebrew and little daughter, Lena Scott, also Mr. and Mrs. George Neal. We are always glad when they come back to worship with us. Best wishes to all.

Mamie Johnston, Reporter.

March 8.

State Street, Lexington.—Our Thank-Offering Service yesterday under the direction of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was a success. The children had their service of this nature a week previous and they found over two dollars in their boxes. So the two totaled $20.55. We think that does well for our women and children when you consider the size of our church here.

We had Miss Forrest with us on Thursday of last week and her visit was quite an inspiration to our little band. Her visits are always helpful.

While the pastor was away in the interest of the College Endowment Fund the first Sunday, Dean Harrison filled the appointment and there have been many favorable comments on his sermon. Our people are always glad to see and hear Brother Harrison.

Our Sunday school is now taking the lead in Lexington on the percentage basis, as we have the largest enrollment according to church membership of any school in the city. One of the leading members of another church said some time ago, "Every member is on his job at State Street Methodist Protestant Church." Well, that is very nearly true, wish it was altogether true, but there are a few slackers, but I suppose about as few as you will find anywhere according to membership. We are planning now for our revival meeting which begins Easter Sunday. Brother L. W. Gerringer is our engaged help. Will you please pray for us? We have so much to do and we would like for all who are near enough to come in and help us. Dr. Owen, pastor First Baptist Church here, said to me the other day: "Brother, I would love to see you succeed in your work, and if there is anything I can do to help put your project across, call on me." These are not mere words, for this same man gave hearty co-operation to Dr. Whitaker in his meeting here last year. Now if the nearby Methodist Protestants will only give us their sympathy and help in the way to show that they are really glad of this organization too we can accomplish wonders here for Christ and the Kingdom.

We are very much encouraged with the spirit that is manifested by our own members in more ways than can be expressed. We thank Mrs. F. J. Cox for three and one-half dozen eggs; Mrs. A. H. Evans, seven pounds butter, two gallons sweet and buttermilk and two dozen eggs; Brother F. J. Cox, two wild ducks; Mrs. J. W. Roberson, souse meat and cheese; Mrs. J. B. Leonard, butter; Brother J. W. Lindsay, fifty-pound sack of flour. Such things as these you will see come in good to the fellow who has everything to buy. Thank you, good people.

Our young people are taking hold of the Christian Endeavor society recently organized with a great deal of interest and they are making it interesting for all who come. I am sure that they are going to grow if the same interest is continued which I believe will obtain for they are not the kind to back down on a hard job.

We will begin our evangelistic campaign with the Easter service prepared by Dr. Beck. To those who read these lines, please pray for us here that we may do the thing that will mean the advancement of the Kingdom.

Sincerely, N. G. Bethea.

Henderson.—We enjoyed hearing Dr. A. G. Dixon talk to us at our Sunday school hour yesterday. Dr. Dixon told how each one of us could help and give to the college by giving our prayers.

At the 11 o'clock service Mr. Northcote from New York took a few minutes to plead the cause of the Y. M. C. A. in this city.

Rev. R. M. Andrews preached for us at the evening service. He presented the plan of the Endowment Fund for the High Point College. Miss Helen Hayes told just what the college was doing for our young people, and how this fund would help. Our church decided to place our proportionate part, $500 per year for ten years, on the regular church budget.

Miss Alice Falkner and Miss Helen Hayes, students at High Point College, were home for the week-end.

The Ladies' Aid had a fine business meeting last Monday. The Traveling Baskets had collected $15 during the month. The program committee also had been busy; result, a splendid program. The annual birthday social had to be postponed until March 19.

The good attendance keeps up at all of our regular services.

March 9.

West Thomasville Circuit.—Little has been reported from us recently, but that is no indication that we are dormant. While we have nothing to boast about, yet we are slowly moving forward, at least at some points of the battle-front. If we were numerically and financially as strong as some we would do great things.

We are probably making the most progress at West End, in Thomasville. The auditorium of our new church will be complete when seated. This we are expecting to do at an early date. There is considerable work to be done on the Sunday school department before it is ready for use; however, we expect to have the entire church complete within the next few weeks. When finished, we will have one of the most attractive little churches in Thomasville. I am sure it will be creditable to our denomination. This church has been made possible, largely, through the generosity of Messrs. C. F. Finch and J. L. Brinkley. Others have contributed but not near so largely as they.

Our third quarterly conference was held Saturday, March 7, 1925, at Canaan. This was by far the best conference held since I have been on the circuit. Services were held both morning and afternoon. The morning service was a period of worship, while the regular business session was held in the afternoon.

The most attractive, but not important, feature of the day was the sumptuous dinner which was served in picnic style. It is needless to say that all enjoyed this to the fullest extent.

Much interest was expressed by all present, which included representatives from each church. We are endeavoring, in our conferences, to create a greater spirit of fellowship among the churches. Messrs. E. E. Weavil, of Canaan, and J. L. Brinkley of West End were elected nominees for delegate to the annual conference.

I feel that it would be doing justice to these people to mention their loyalty to the church. They nobly stand by the church and pastor. I have not been able to give the attention due them, yet they do not complain. They, beside their moral support, have given us many things in the way of food, clothing, etc., for which we are very thankful. As much as the gifts, I value the spirit that prompts the giving. The spirit helps when we are blue, and the gifts help to keep our house in running order.

W. M. Loy.

Hawkins Chapel, Littleton Charge.—On last Sunday at the usual hour the preaching service was held. The congregation was quite small; I am sure there would have been a larger congregation if it had not been for the sickness throughout the community. After the service Brother O'Briant made his announcements which the people agreed upon. The second quarterly meeting will be held at Littleton Saturday before the second Sunday in April at two o'clock P. M.

The First District Rally will be held at Hawkins Chapel on March 28-29. We are glad that our church can be honored with the rally. We are looking forward for a large attendance both days, Saturday and Sunday.

May the Lord bless all the Herald readers.

Maggie Hawkins, Reporter.

Knob Creek, Fallston Circuit.—Our church is still alive and a-going. We have been having a very good Sunday school under the able management of the assistant superintendent, Mr. T. P. Deal. The attendance is growing larger each Sunday. As the spring opens up we are hoping for a still larger attendance and a better Sunday school.

Our faithful superintendent, Mr. Q. A. Hartman, has been confined at home for several months on account of the illness and death of his father, Mr. Johnnie Hartman, who departed this life March 3, 1925. He was 78 years, 10 months and 10 days old. Brother Hartman lived a good and consecrated Christian life until his death. He was confined to his home for about three years, in which time he went blind. He will be missed by his family and the community. But we realize our loss is heaven's gain. His body was tenderly laid to rest in the Knob Creek cemetery in the presence of a large crowd of relatives and friends who came to pay their last respect. May God's richest blessings rest upon all the relatives.

Rev. J. M. Morgan delivered his sermon as usual in a very forceful way. Brother Morgan always has something in store for us each Sunday that he is with us that does us so much good, if we will only take heed. We hope that the next fourth Sunday we will have a larger congregation.

We are hoping soon to receive two services a month.

We still have our prayer meeting the first and third Sundays. Our young people as well as old are taking a great interest in this work. It is very often conducted by young girls and boys.

With best wishes to the Herald and all its readers, Fannie Belle Norman, Reporter.

Content not thyself with a bare forbearance of sin, so long as thy heart is not changed, nor thy will changed, nor thy affections changed; but strive to become a new man, to be transformed by the renewing of thy mind, to hate sin, to love God, to wrestle against thy secret corruptions, to take delight in holy duties, to subdue thine understanding, and will, and affections, to the obedience of faith and godliness.—Bishop Sanderson.

Saxapahaw Charge.—Brother A. N. Roberson passed to his reward this (Wednesday) afternoon. In his death Concord church has lost one of her pillars and Alamance county one of her best citizens. A fuller account of his life will appear later. H. L. Isley.

March 4, 1925.

Glen Raven.—We are having a splendid Sunday school now, under the superintendency of Brother J. O. Glenn. Brother Glenn is taking a great interest, and is trying to get the people more interested.

Professor Hamilton has been teaching a singing class in our church for some several weeks, and last Sunday we had him with us for the morning service and in the afternoon he held a song service. We also had some visitors who favored us with several beautiful selections.

Professor Amick of Elon College preached for us Sunday morning as our pastor has had la grippe and was not able to conduct the service.

We have been quiet for some time, but hope to report more often in the future.

Reporter.

Melton's Grove.—Our pastor filled his regular appointment last Sunday and preached a sermon on Stewardship. I am sure he gave us all something to think about. It was a beautiful day and the congregation was larger than usual.

We are expecting Mrs. A. G. Dixon the third Sunday in this month. We are looking forward to the time. We have such good reports of her. I am sure we will all love her. Will report later of her success.

Glena Lane.

Clark's Chapel, Weaverville Charge.—Although it looked as if we were going to have disagreeable weather, our people came out to Sunday school and preaching services last Sunday. We had a good crowd Sunday morning and a full house Sunday night. We are so thankful to God that things have happened that are bringing our people out to church, closer together as Christians, and closer to Him.

There were six new members added to our church last Sunday, among them our good pastor, Rev. Fred R. Love. The other five were Mrs. John Hampton, Fletcher Hampton, Mrs. Walter Cheek, Miss Alma Black and Mrs. Lester Watts. So you see we are increasing in number and thanks be to God we are growing in grace. We are very glad to welcome these new members into our church and pray that the work of our splendid pastor and people will continue to bear fruit.

A good lady said a few days ago that she had always prayed for the time when the people of Clark's Chapel could shout and praise God without a revival meeting. God answered her prayer one week ago last Sunday night when we had such a down-pouring of the Holy Spirit that folks had to shout and praise God.

Our Christian Endeavor societies are doing splendid work. The Junior Endeavorers are working on an Easter program which we are looking forward to as a great event.

The public is invited to come and attend our services. Sunday school at 10 A. M. preaching at 11:15 A. M., Christian Endeavor or at 6:30 P. M., preaching, 7:30 P. M. Come and worship with us at your first opportunity. Reporter.

March 2.

North Davidson Charge, Mt. Pleasant Church.—On last fourth Sunday we held our regular service. We were glad to have Dr. Andrews with us, and of course when he comes he always preaches, for we will not accept any excuse, and we are always glad to have him.

After preaching service Brother Stone announced that the committee on plans had decided what kind of church they wanted to build, and would be ready to cut the framing on Tuesday, the 24th, and it will not be long before you will see a modern church at Mt. Pleasant, for they have a mind to work.

Listen, tune up your nerves, for something else happened after service, another surprise. As I went out to my car I found it loaded with good things to eat. Annie Payne, five pounds sugar; Evelyn Payne, baking powder; Harrell Payne, tooth picks; Mrs. W. D. Payne, five pounds sugar; Joseph Payne, matches; Ruth Payne, soda; Mary Payne, dried fruit; Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Green, one can of preserves, and one bucket of lard; Joe Ball, meat; Mrs. H. F. Murphy, apples; Mrs. and Mr. W. T. Murphy, oatmeal and five pounds sugar; Mr. W. G. Hayworth, five pounds sugar; S. C. Hayworth, five pounds sugar; C. A. Livengood, one-half gallon molasses; Raymond Ball, peanuts; Elmo Murphy, two cans of kraut; Della Ball, Beans; Mrs. Joe Ball, dried fruit; Vandie Murphy, one can of corn; Ray Ball, one peck of Irish potatoes; Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Murphy, one ham; Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Green, 10 pounds sugar; Lois Murphy, can salmon; Mr. J. R. Stone, $2 cash; Mr. and Mrs. John Leonard of Lexington, canned peaches, apples, and one peck of Irish potatoes; five pounds sugar, one half-bushel Irish potatoes, two cans peaches, baking powder and matches, the giver unknown. For these and all other tokens of appreciation we thank these good people very much, and pray God's richest blessings upon them. R. S. Troxler, Pastor.

Bethesda, North Davidson Circuit.—We have been busy at work. Our pastor has not failed to be there on the job, regardless of rain and bad roads. He has been giving us good gospel sermons, which we all enjoy.

Rev. R. M. Andrews came over last second Sunday from High Point to talk on the College Endowment Fund and also preached for us. We are glad for these brethren to drop in.

We are having a good Sunday school this winter; in fact, our Sunday school has been on the boom ever since we went to work building new Sunday school rooms. We built seven Sunday school rooms, which we are very proud of. We do not see how we did so long without them, for it puts new life into a school.

Our Christian Endeavor is doing good work. We also have a Ladies' Aid society with 25 or 30 members, which we do not feel that we could do without. We also have a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, with 29 members, one perpetual member. We are going to hold our Thank-Offering Service Sunday night, March the 8th. The service consists of songs, recitations, readings, and a pageant, "Converting Aunt Jane." Songs, male choruses. Everybody invited.

We are having much sickness around. Old Uncle Billie Grubb has been in a serious condition for some time and does not seem to improve any. Mrs. C. M. Yokley, Reporter.

The Quarterly Conference.

The second quarterly conference, Granville circuit, is to meet at the parsonage on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in this month (March 21) at 11 o'clock.

This conference is of special importance—one reason is that at the second quarterly conference we select nominees for delegate to the next annual conference.

There is a story in regard to Stonewall Jackson to the effect that Mr. Jackson was a deacon in the Presbyterian Church and that on one occasion the deacons had met and one member, Judge —, who lived near the meeting place, was absent. When the hour had fully arrived Mr. Jackson asked to be excused for a few moments. He walked hurriedly to the home of the judge and rang the door-bell. The judge answered the call and Mr. Jackson asked, "Judge, why are you not at the deacons' meeting?" The judge replied, "Why, Mr. Jackson, I was so busy tonight that I could not get away." Stonewall Jackson said, "Well, Judge, we only meet once a month—we only spend about an hour in the meeting, and it is the Lord's work and when that time comes I would not think you would have time for anything else." Jackson returned to the place of meeting and in a few minutes the judge was there.

Is not the work of our quarterly conference the Lord's work? We request a full attendance. Date, March 21, at the parsonage.

Burke Chapel, Connelly Springs Charge.

Our pastor last Sunday preached a splendid sermon, and received another new member into the church. We pray that he will be a true and faithful member to God and his church.

Our Sunday school is not doing anything at present, but we have not lost hope and are expecting to have a bigger and better Sunday school in the future. Best wishes to the Herald and its many readers. Reporter.

Littleton.—Since our last report there has been so much sickness and bad weather that we could not attend services as we would have liked. Our pastor is very faithful and zealous in his work and is much beloved.

We have lost several of our church members. They went to the M. E. Church. I trust they will be loyal and helpful to the church of their choice. Last week we lost, by death, another member, Mr. E. G. Glenn. His wife has moved to Brinkleyville so we will greatly miss them. There are a faithful few left who are striving to do their best to uphold the church and I pray God will bless us.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Lynch.—January 27, 1925, Mr. J. C. Lynch, better known as "Buck Lynch," died in his home near Eaton's Ferry. Mr. Lynch was among the first members of Weaver's Chapel. He was about 52 years of age. He had kept Eaton's Ferry for several years. He did not wear well and lived some distance from his church and did not attend church as often as he would have had conditions been different. Funeral service was held in Weavers Chapel church on January 28, conducted by his pastor, after which his body was carried to an old family burying ground at Mr. Henry Jenkins' and laid to rest. He leaves one son and some small children. These have the sympathy of the church and friends.

J. B. O'Briant.

Wilson.—Mrs. Sarah Wilson died February 1, 1925, aged about 17 years. She joined Weavers Chapel church in 1922. She was known as a good girl. She and her husband, Mr. Matthew Wilson, had been married some more than a year. She leaves besides her husband and friends a little baby, which, if it can be raised, will never know anything of its real-mother, only as it is told by others.

Funeral was held at the family cemetery Mr. Henry Jenkins' February 20, by the writer, after which her body was lowered in the grave and covered with a mound of earth with stones at the head and foot to mark her resting place. The sympathy of the church and community goes out to this young man so early bereft of his companion and to the motherless baby.

J. B. O'Briant.

Glenn.—On February 23, about three o'clock P. M., Mr. E. G. Glenn passed away in his home in Littleton, N. C. He was nearing his 40th mile-post. It was our happy lot to receive Brother Glenn into our church at Littleton in 1923. He was a man of faith and strong resolutions. We believe he lived close to his Lord after giving his heart and life to God. He was afflicted for more than a year. He was very patient and for a good while entertained hopes of getting well, but in his last months and days we believe that he had given up his hopes of living in this world, and began to live in the better world. He expressed himself as wanting to see Jesus, and was expecting Jesus to come for him any time, and had his ticket for the gospel train which would carry him home.

Funeral was held in Littleton M. P. church, February 24, three P. M. The casket which held his body was rolled down to the altar in the church where he made his vow to God and the church, and remained there while short service was conducted by his pastor, assisted by the following ministers of Littleton: Rev. Francis Joyner, Rev. C. B. Smith, D., and Rev. Mr. Miller.

Brother Glenn was a man held in high esteem by all who knew him and will be greatly missed. He is survived by his good wife, two sons and one daughter. One son lives in Fayetteville, N. C. The other son and the daughter live in Hanover, Pa. He has living so three brothers and three sisters and two grandchildren.

His body was laid to rest in Littleton cemetery. The wife and children and other relatives and friends have the sympathy of the church and town.

J. B. O'Briant.

Elizabeth Gill Crutchfield.—God in His infinite wisdom on January 29, 1925, in the still hours of the night beckoned, and Elizabeth Gill Crutchfield went to join her husband, James H. Crutchfield, and their three loved children, who had long preceded her to that home celestial.

Although we realized fully that she had fought a winning battle, run a good race, and the victory was hers, it wrung our hearts to feel that never again would we see her cheerful face, never again hear her ever-wise counsel. We loved her so it was hard to submit, but knowing and trusting in Him who doeth all things well, we bow submissively, saying in our hearts: "Not our wills but thine, O Lord, be done."

Although we grieve to part with her, we rejoice to know there'll be one more hand outstretched in welcome, when we, too, shall go to join God's innumerable band, where sorrow is unknown, and where Jesus reigns eternally, our Sovereign and our Friend.

Dear Grandma, for having known, loved and lost you, we'll ever strive to be worthy monuments of thine, that by so doing we may honor your memory and render service unto the Father.

Bertie D. Crutchfield.

—Mrs. D. A. Fishel, wife of Brother D. A. Fishel at Vaughn, N. C., died Friday, February 20, and was buried at Littleton on Saturday, February 21.

J. B. O'Briant.

Page.—On January 23, 1925, the death angel visited the home of Mr. J. A. Page and claimed the soul of the husband and father.

Mr. Page had been a member of the church only a short while. He was converted last summer at the union meeting held at Hardawee school house and united with the church at Eden, where he remained faithful unto the end.

Mr. Page was sick only about one week. He soon contracted pneumonia and soon passed into the world of spirits to await those who remain.

His body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Eden church.

Mrs. Page and the children have our sympathy in this sad hour and we would commend them to God, who doeth all things well.

C. L. Spencer, Pastor.

Stokes.—On February 17, 1925, death visited the church at Hollister and claimed one of its members, Mr. Lloyd Stokes.

Lloyd was converted and united with the church at Hollister in August, 1918, where he remained faithful until death.

Lloyd was a very quiet, obedient young man, and was loved by all who knew him. He just lacked a few months of being 19 years old. He contracted pneumonia and the doctor and loved ones did all they could but the Lord (no doubt) saw best to take him home to rest.

The church and community, as well as the family, will miss Lloyd, but let us all be faithful unto the end, and meet him over yonder. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, in the home of his grandfather, Mr.

Andrew Hardy, after which his body was laid to rest in the family cemetery in the presence of a large congregation.

Snotherly.—After having been a patient sufferer for many months and quietly breathing her last, Mrs. John Snotherly, more familiarly known throughout Albemarle and Stanly county as "Aunt Cam," died at her home on Pee Dee avenue, Wednesday afternoon, February 25, shortly after four o'clock.

"Aunt Cam" had never fully recovered from an attack of pneumonia of last winter, at which time two of Albemarle's best physicians gave up all hopes for her recovery.

Before her marriage in 1871 Mrs. Snotherly was Miss Joyce Camaline Miller. Converted at an early age, she united with Old Bethel M. E. church, and remained in constant service in that church until she married. After marrying she decided to unite with the church of which her husband was a member, and thereupon she united with the Methodist Protestant church at Milledgeville, which is now called Tuckertown.

In those days, few persons were able to play an organ—it was before pianos went to church—she served in the capacity of organist at Milledgeville until that church was destroyed by a cyclone. After that church was gone and no hope of restoration she with her husband moved their church connection to the Methodist Protestant church in New London. There it was destined to stay only a few years for that church was finally sold. The members had moved to other towns, and not enough remained there to keep it going, and she, with her husband, came to Albemarle and immediately started the work of building a Methodist Protestant church, and the church in this city today stands as a memorial of her, and others who like her, sacrificed to make it possible.

She had a great love for children. It was not her happy lot to become a mother of her own child, but that great loving heart of hers reached out many years ago and drew into her life the life of little Pattie Parker Harris. Pattie is now Mrs. R. W. Hall, of Tuckertown, and for several weeks she was by the bedside of her foster mother, and did all that her love prompted her to do and was with her to the last.

"Aunt Cam" was one of the sweetest characters in the community in which she lived. She and "Uncle John," her husband lived alone, save for the visits of their hundreds of friends who were to them a host of "nephews and nieces." Last year when Mrs. Snotherly was so very ill with pneumonia, "Uncle John" was heard to pray that she would get well. His prayers were answered to a certain extent, but never fully answered.

Faith in a loving Father was to her the hope that has at last anchored her barque safe within the vale. Through all those years of struggle and suffering attendant upon those of her advanced age, she and Uncle John were just as much sweethearts as they were 60 years ago. One of the most touching scenes, and that one scene which had the populace been privileged to witness would have strengthened lost faith, was enacted Tuesday night about 10:30. It was thought that then she would pass out into that world for which she so fondly longed. As she was slowly sinking, and it was evident that the end was not far away, Uncle John came to her bedside, and from those eyes the lovelight beamed as in days of yore. As he looked into her face which seemed to be encircled with a halo of light he was heard to say, "Go on to heaven, I'll be there in a few days." Then it was the memory of those 54 years of happiness together which prompted him to ask the God they both loved and served to take him along with "Cam."

When seen by this writer in the privacy of his room Wednesday afternoon he looked up and said, "God is always just, I have nothing to say against Him, for He never makes a mistake." And then it seemed that all the sweetness of those 54 years fairly burst his great heart, and he exclaimed, "Bless the Lord, O my soul." And he today is lingering at the door through which "Aunt Cam" passed.

The funeral service, short and simple, just the kind "Aunt Cam" told her pastor some months ago she wanted, was conducted from the late home Thursday, February 26. Uncle John was not able to go to the church for the service, and hundreds of their friends gathered around the house, whose memory held scenes of many years of happiness and joys shared together by these two good people. The pastor of her church conducted the service of the Methodist Protestant church, after which the throng of friends followed the remains to Fairview cemetery, where they were tenderly laid to rest.

"Aunt Cam" is survived by one brother, Mr. R. A. Miller, of New London, and one sister, Mrs. M. S. Russell, of Granite Quarry.

Living to the age of 77 years, six months and 28 days, the greater part in Christian service, and 53 years, nine months and 29 days of this walking arm and arm with "Uncle John," she leaves a legacy far greater than stocks and bonds. Many are they who give her credit for leading them into the "paths of eternal truth."

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." J. L. Trollinger.

March 7.

In Memory of Dear Father.

Alfred Newton Roberson, aged 77 years, four months, eighteen days, breathed his last on Wednesday, March 4, 1925, at 4:15 P. M., at his home in Newlin township on Saxapahaw circuit. He gave testimony that all was well with him. Early in life he joined the Methodist Protestant church at Concord, Saxapahaw circuit. He was always present at church services when his health would permit, was not only true to his church, but was true to his country.

He leaves to mourn his loss his wife, Mrs. A. N. Roberson, six daughters, Mrs. W. T. Garrison, Mrs. G. M. Newlin, Ola, Neva, Nona, and Lala; three sons, Lois, Roy, and Loy; four sisters, Mrs. William Newlin, Mrs. Henry Jones, Mrs. J. C. Thompson, Mrs. A. T. Riddle, and one grandchild. Funeral services conducted at Concord, by Rev. H. L. Isley, his pastor, assisted by Rev. S. W. Taylor. His body was carried to the cemetery, tenderly laid to rest amid the tears and sighs of a large concourse of relatives and friends. The beautiful floral designs that covered the mound testified to the esteem in which he was held.

It was so hard to give him up and a vacant place which cannot be filled is left in our home, our hearts. But we grieve not as one without hope, for we know that he is standing at the right hand of God, ready to welcome his loved ones as they, one by one, enter that beautiful home where cometh no sorrow, no care.

Husband, father, grandfather, we loved you, but Jesus loved you more, and you have entered into the joys of that home prepared for you. You are resting "safe in the arms of Jesus, safe on his gentle breast." We will treasure the fond memories of you, and may your wise advice and your influence shed upon our lives lead us on to higher and nobler things. May your spirit guide and direct the footsteps of every child, and grandchild of yours, may you meet and welcome us, as one day we shall reach the shores of eternity, and together we will spend the countless ages in that land where no tears are ever shed, and we say goodbye no more.

"We loved him, yes, we loved him,

But angels loved him more,

And they have surely called him

To yonder shining shore."

A Daughter.

Butler.—Brother J. H. Butler died at his home, Ante, Va., on February 5, 1925, age 74 years, four months, 17 days. Brother Butler was sick for a short time. He had grown very feeble the last 12 months. He was faithful to his church. Many times, exhausted when he got to church, he would lie down and rest.

A memorial service will be held at Hobbs Chapel on the fourth Sunday at 11 o'clock. A suitable obituary will appear later.

H. L. Powell, Pastor.

—Dr. George R. Brown, pastor of First M. P. Church, High Point, is in a hospital seriously ill with pneumonia. Pray for him.

—Mrs. W. H. Neese is in ill health, we are sorry to hear. Remember her also when you pray.

—Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Pritchard were visitors at High Point College yesterday.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to thank our friends and neighbors for their exceeding kindness and sympathy rendered us during the sickness and death of our husband and father. May God's greatest blessings abide with each one.

GETHSEMANE.

Golden youth when seems the earth
Summer-land of singing mirth,
When souls are glad and hearts are light,
And not a shadow lurks in sight,
We do not know it, but there lies
Somewhere veiled under evening skies
A garden which we all must see—
The garden of Gethsemane.

With joyous steps we go our ways,
He lends a halo to our days;
Light sorrows sail like clouds afar,
We laugh, and say how strong we are,
We hurry on; and hurrying, go
Close to the borderland of woe,
That waits for you, and waits for me—
Forever waits. Gethsemane.

Own shadowy lanes, across strange streams,
Shaded over by our broken dreams;
Behind the misty caps of years,
Beyond the great salt fount of tears,
The garden lies. Strive as you may,
You cannot miss it in your way.

Old paths that have been, or shall be,
Lead somewhere through Gethsemane.

For those who journey, soon or late,
Must pass within the garden's gate;
Must kneel alone in darkness there,
And battle with some fierce despair,
And pity those who cannot say,
"Not mine but Thine," who only pray,
"Let this cup pass," and cannot see
The purpose in Gethsemane.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

"A FENCE AROUND THE BIBLE."

In a recent address a public speaker inferentially accused the defenders of "the faith" of having delivered unto saints "of trying to build a fence around the Bible. They are attempting no such thing. And what is more, they don't need to. A fence, or rather a wall, is thrown around the holy scriptures at their completion nearly nineteen centuries ago. And this was done by their Author, the Eternal Word. The record of this transaction is found in Rev. 22:18, 19: "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." It is high time for every lover of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ to enter a most solemn, earnest, and prayerful protest against the diabolical and damnable program of the extreme wing of the modernists to rob the Son of God of His deity, the Holy Spirit of His personality, the Godhead of its trinity, the atonement of its efficacy, Christianity of its spirituality, hell of its torment, faith of its privilege and power, the Holy Scriptures of their inspiration and supernatural content, and the believer of his only well-grounded hope of everlasting life.—The Word of Life.

THE BIBLE IN THE HOME.

The test of the nations is their loyalty to God's Word. The nations which have honored God's Word, and which are honoring God's Word, are the nations which have His blessing.

The state will never be guided into ways of constructive peace and permanent development through society's aim and desire to better mankind. Reform movements, no matter how strong and efficient they may be, can never reform the state or the nation until that reform begins at the fireside. There is no chance for men to do in their interests and desires for others, what God has said the father and the mother, the husband and the wife, the brother and the sister, must do.

The Bible is the one great power which God has given to us, to instruct us how to build our homes aright.—Exchange.

JESUS CHRIST NO MOLLYCODDLE.

The attempt of the modernists to camouflage their sinister purposes by the extravagant commendation which they ascribe to Jesus Christ is pitiable and ridiculous. They exalt His manhood at the same time that they assault His Godhood, and foolishly presume that the former will sufficiently condone the latter. Jesus is more than the Apostle of divine tenderness. His teachings were more than a revelation of the love of God. His life was more than an unfolding of infinite compassion. He was just, as well as generous, and just before He was generous. Judgment proceeds from the throne of His holiness as truly as redeeming grace. His crucifixion proclaimed eternal justice as clearly and forcibly as it did eternal love. The lips that breathed the invitation,—"Come unto me all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," also pronounced the fearful denunciation,—"Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell." The same Lord of destiny who blessed little children also cursed the barren fig-tree. The same Lord Jesus Who will say in the Judgment, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world," will also say, "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."—The Word of Life.

A SPIRITUAL AWAKENING.

A short time ago, writes a friend, a young man who has not gone to church or read his Bible for a long time, but who recently began to take a great interest in good literature, came to me full of enthusiasm over something that he had read in a magazine.

"Listen to this," he said, opening the periodical. He read for a few minutes, and there was a new note of reverence in his voice as he ended with: "Or ever the silver cord be loosed or the golden bowl be broken or the pitcher be broken at the fountain or the wheel broken at the cistern. Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." His face glowed as he exclaimed: "Isn't that wonderful?"

"It is," I agreed. "Would you like to read more by the same author?"

He nodded, and I handed him my Bible that lay on my desk.

He stared at me. "You don't mean to say that's from the Bible?"

I nodded and opened the book at the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes and he read: "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh when thou shalt say, 'I have no pleasure in them.'"

"I didn't know that was in the Bible," he said quietly. "Are there any more passages like that?"

I turned to the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah and then passed on to other beautiful passages both of the Old Testament and of the New. He listened to them eagerly.

A few days ago he said to me: "I'm going to church now." He had found his God again through reading the Bible.

It has been a real joy to watch the spiritual awakening of that young man who had been rejecting the spiritual food for which he really hungered because at some time in his youth it must have been served to him unattractively.—Youth's Companion.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

The term, Christian education, looks good and sounds good, but it may mean much, little, or nothing, depending on the interpretation given it. The term may be used to "cover a multitude of sins"—errors on religion. It has been said that "religion is to a man what he conceives it to be." If this be true, then it would naturally follow that if a man's conception of religion be faulty, so would his conception of Christian education be faulty in proportion. A great many things are being lugged into so-called Christian education in some quarters, that are quite foreign to the "faith once delivered unto the saints." It is remarkable how "extremes often meet." The pope and his string of cardinals, archbishops, bishops, and priests, are alone qualified to interpret the Bible, or have a correct opinion of religion, so these religious bosses say. The people must not think. They are incapable. The people must let us think for them, so they say. This is utterly repugnant to us Protestants. But are we better than they? Are we wiser? Are we more independent? Do we assert our manhood and God-given rights more than they? Are we not supinely and obsequiously submitting to having our children taught things "contrary to Jesus of Nazareth"? Have you ever thought seriously about this matter? Did Jesus ever express doubts about the divine inspiration of the Bible? Did he ever go about criticizing—finding fault with the Bible? Hunting for, and parading, seeming contradictions? And chuckle with delight at what some superficial, unfriendly reader supposed to be a mistake in the Bible? Was Jesus ever guilty of anything like this? Did Jesus ever teach that man is an evolution from an animal ancestry? That there is no such thing as sin—that what we call sin is just a lack of development—of further evolution? Did Jesus ever teach anything like this? Or perhaps you do not know that these, and similar anti-Christian things are being taught in Christian schools.

This is alarming to a devout Christian who knows God—knows God hears him when he prays—has tested the Bible in his own life and experience. But the promoters of this anti-Christian teaching tell us very complacently that there is no cause for alarm. That to doubt the Bible only increases one's faith. Makes us more angelic. That to be evolved from animals is more glorious than to be created in the image of God. And when we demur, they gravely tell us that we are not capable of understanding it, and must receive it on their simple "say so," like good dupes of the pope accept his infallibility. They attempt no proof, like the pope, as he, nor they, cannot err. To attempt to prove is superfluous, and would be a reflection, by themselves, on their own infallibility. That in the due and continued process of evolution, when our "eyes are opened and we become as gods" we will see as they see, and that the Bible, its inspiration, the supernatural, the origin of man, etc., etc., will give us no further concern. We will have so evolved into such super-beings that no absurdity will ever trouble us more. We will have reached a state in which gravitation will pull upward, light and darkness be the same, truth and falsehood cease to contradict. These are some of the mental gymnastics that some of these modern professors and pedagogues perform to our simple and innocent delectation.

Perhaps you did not know all this. It is high time that we Protestant Rip VanWinkles were awakened from our long and easy sleep. We need another Luther to lead another Reformation, not against an Italian pope, but against an intolerance, a tyranny no less pronounced than that of the pope, but more concealed, more insidious, and more destructive if possible. If the great mass of the people knew the situation as it really is, the battle would be easily won. They must be enlightened. No camouflage, no smoke screen, no dodging the issue, no double-entendre. These persons who are subverting our children in the name of religion and Christianity must be made to face the issue like honest men, and not hide under pious platitudes and generalities.

Now to make a long matter short, the great mass of the people are honest about this question, and have a correct idea, or conception, of Christian education. That it is an education acquired in a school, or under such conditions and circumstances, that nothing is imbibed that is damaging to, or subversive of, an unquestioning faith in the full divine inspiration of the Bible, deity of Christ, blood atonement, or any other fundamental doctrine of what is generally known as true, orthodox, evangelical Christianity. It is a school or place where doubt is not engendered, but faith and true godliness are promoted. Education under these conditions is what is generally conceived to be Christian education. But an education acquired at an institution where the Bible is questioned—spoken of as myth and legend, or at best as a merely human book—its inspiration being of a kind like unto Shakespeare or Milton's; where so-called science and human philosophy are given precedence over the Bible; where human opinion, conjecture, surmising and theorizing as to the age of the world and origin of man are accepted and taught dogmatically, instead of the Bible, is not Christian education, whatever the claim may be, but rationalistic, anti-Christian, and skeptical. We Christians want none of it.

Sunday Night.

- 7:00 Song Service and Devotional—R. L. Hethcox.
- 7:30 Sermon: "What Jesus Means to Me"—H. L. Powell.

The regular program will be interspersed with live music, consisting of solos, duets, male and mixed quartets. We hope many good singers will be there.

All are expected to bring their own lunch except those coming on trains and those a great distance away.

Hawkins Chapel is on the Roanoke Rapids-Littleton-Aurelian Springs roads, which are fine roads and run right by the church.

You couldn't have a better time anywhere else for those two days, so hitch up "Dobbin"—crank up whatever you have and "meet me there."

R. C. Stubbins.

DISTRICT RALLY NO. 7.

We want all those who love to sing to be on hand as much as possible during our rally March 28-29. All churches that have good singers, soloists, quartets or any specials, bring them along and let us make the singing a helpful feature of our meeting. Bring your books along that you are accustomed to use.

Hope to see you there tuned up good for the whole time.

N. G. Bethea.

SEVENTH DISTRICT RALLY.

At Pleasant Grove.

Will every church, every Sunday school, every Christian Endeavor society, every organization in the charges named below see that delegates are elected to this Rally to be held Saturday and Sunday, March 28-29: First Church, High Point, Welch Memorial, Lebanon, English Street, West Thomasville, Thomasville, Community Church, Guilford, North Davidson, South Davidson, State Street, Lexington.

The chairman, Dr. Geo. R. Brown, is sick and this work of getting up the program has fallen to me and the speakers have nearly all been assigned. If all the pastors had been as prompt as seven have been we could publish the program this week. But enough have responded heartily to make the rally a success anyway. So we want you to come. Pleasant Grove is a good place and they will give you dinner Saturday and Sunday and if you wish to stay in the community after services Saturday night, write Rev. G. L. Reynolds, High Point, and he will see that a home is provided.

We have several speakers promised besides the pastors in the district. Some prominent laymen will address us. You cannot afford to miss this for there will be discussions that will be helpful to every department of church work. If your church does not elect you as delegate, come on anyway as there is no limit to the number that wish to come. Send yourself and you will be glad that you did. All are welcome. Let us have a rally worth-while. COME! N. G. Bethea, Chairman pro tem.

P. S.—If you wish any information about the meeting communicate with me at once.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES FOR SUNDAY, MARCH 29.

Friendliness as Expressed through Evangelistic Missions. Daily Readings.

Mon. Friendly visits. Matt. 10:11-15.
Tues. The friendly message. Luke 4:16-21.
Wed. Friendly help. Acts 14:8-10.
Thurs. Good will to men. Acts 3:11-26.
Fri. Breaking down prejudice. Acts 10:24-48.
Sat. Establishing a brotherhood. Acts 2:41-47.

Sunday. Topic. Matt. 9:35-38; Acts 8:35-37.

The evangelist traveling from place to place has much to do with keeping the church awake, and frequently prevents God's people from falling into a rut, and forces them to think of God. (Matt. 9:35.) During the next few weeks two great evangelists will hold meetings right here in the very midst of us—Mr. Ham in Burlington and Billy Sunday in Winston—and you will hear their work variously estimated. When thinking of their meetings remember that these men have done great things elsewhere and that they will do great things in these two cities, and that as long as they live they will be doing great good.

Study these striking statements:

"If the church felt the passion of Jesus for souls, the world would soon be evangelized. Our compassion is dulled. We are too self-centered." (Matt. 9:36.)

"The harvest is always plenteous. There are more people ready to listen than we can possibly reach. Pray for workers." (Matt. 9:37.)

"The mission of the evangelist is to preach Jesus. Others may have a social message; his message is Christ. The soul first needs salvation." (Acts 8:35.)

"If Christ is more important to the world than 'working conditions,' and 'social conditions,' and 'international co-operation,' why don't Christians preach Christ more?" The religion of the Lord Jesus Christ is the only thing that can change these conditions, and bring about what the world needs.

Missionary Interest.

Arouse missionary interest by stating something of how many people there are in the world who are not even professing Christians. It is said that there are 565,000,000 Christians in the world, and 1,082,000,000 non-Christians. This gives the Endeavorers at once a glimpse of the tremendous task of evangelizing the world in this generation. But, remember, this is the only generation that we can reach.

For Beginning the Meeting.

Evangelism is the center of all missionary work. No matter what is done in connection with missionary effort, whether the work is educational, industrial or medical, it is all done with the one purpose of reaching the souls of men and women for the Master. The teacher teaches to prepare the heart for the one great truth; the missionary farmer and craftsman set an example of honest work to inspire the natives to follow the Carpenter of Galilee; and the medical missionary heals in the name of the great Physician. In this sense all missionary work is evangelistic.

Everything done on the mission field is done to help those who are benighted to see the Light of life. It is done to inspire them to better living and doing. Thus it proves our friendliness for them as messengers of Jesus. When folks are helped to know more, to do better work, and to live healthier lives, they are just that much more ready to receive the Gospel message.

Missionary work is done for the sake of making Christians, in the first place; and, after that, to make these better Christians. The missionary speaks to the head, and to the heart and to the soul of the native, that he may be constrained to yield himself to the great Master Missionary. Success on the mission field is measured in terms of souls born into the kingdom; and we are responsible for our part in the enterprise.

Lessons Taught in Our Scripture References.

Matt. 9:35-38 should have our careful study if we would determine how best to become friends through evangelism. This lesson indicates how Jesus worked, and how souls were reached as a consequence. Jesus went anywhere and everywhere. No place was more important to him than another. He realized that the important thing was souls, and to him one soul was just as valuable as another. This is an important truth for us all, and it is one that not a great many Christian workers realize. Then, too, Jesus did anything and everything that was needed. He taught, He preached the Gospel, and He helped the needy. And "the common people heard him gladly."

Jesus had compassion on the multitudes when He was upon the earth; and He still has that great ache in His heart because multitudes are still unreached by the Gospel message. The world which has not accepted Jesus is distressed, there can be no question about that; and it is scattered because its citizens are not following the same great Leader.

Our Savior was interested, and is still passionately interested, in reaching men. He knows, and we know, that men will not be reached except by laborers in His vineyard. So He asked His disciples to pray for laborers, because there was such a great need. And He asks us today to pray for laborers. And, if we pray sincerely for laborers, we will do all in our power to back our prayers with our efforts and with our money.

Lessons in Life to Think About.

Missions constitute the greatest world task today. Knowing one's responsibility is one thing; measuring up to it is another. Many Christians fail simply because they will not do their duty as they know it.

We prove our friendliness to those who are not Christians by doing our best to bring them to Christ, who has proved Himself our greatest Friend. All classes of people about us expect us as Christians to be their friends. And we are Christians just as we measure up to their expectations. Christian Endeavorers have won and must continue to win countless souls for the Master. Many Endeavorers are on mission fields, at home and abroad, because the society has always fostered the missionary spirit. We will never be able to measure the good Christian Endeavor has done in this respect, until we shall be able to count the souls safely sheltered in the Master's presence.

Things to Pray For.

1. Thank God for Jesus, the inspiration of all missionary evangelism.
2. Thank God for the great commission which sends us all out to win individuals for Christ.
3. Thank God for the men and women who have given their lives in missionary evangelism.
4. Ask God to bless this meeting to the good of all, and especially that He may stir up many Endeavorers to volunteer for the mission field.
5. Ask God to give your society more interest in evangelistic missions.
6. Ask God to help your church to be more and more a missionary church.

NOTICE! NOTICE!! FOURTH DISTRICT RALLIES.

This is to call attention again to the two Rallies to be held in the Fourth District Saturday and Sunday, March 28-29.

The Rallies are to be at Midway church, Haw River charge, and West End, Greensboro. The programs will begin at ten o'clock on Saturday morning and close Sunday afternoon. There will be no night service.

We are attempting to arrange a helpful program. However, it will be worth very little unless the people attend. It is up to you, Brother Pastor, Brother Sunday School Superintendent, Christian Endeavor presidents, and other leaders, to see to it that the people come. Draper, Reidsville, Flat Rock, and Haw River are urged to attend at Midway, Kernersville, Calvary, St. Paul's Grace, and West End at West End. Come to these rallies prepared to spend the day. Bring along your lunch.

Subjects vital to the life of the church will be discussed by interesting speakers. Please do not disappoint the speakers with your absence. And I trust the speakers will not disappoint the people by their absence or by being late.

District Chairman.

of the charges have not paid any amount we will just have to publish that fact. About six weeks remain before the first of May. Much can be done in that period of time. Come on, men, and let us all do our best. One pastor is planning to pay A. C. B. in full and most of the G. C. B. by Easter.

That Easter Service With Its Sacrificial Giving.

Remember the Easter service with its offering for Home Missions. Twenty-three per cent of the G. C. B. goes to the Board of Home Missions, and if properly managed that much of the G. C. B. might be raised at Easter. One pastor at least is planning to do just that. Sunday school superintendents and stewards can very greatly help pastors in this if you will plan for great things at Easter.

Decision Day.

Decision Day should also be observed. The one need not interfere with the other. One set of workers may plan for Decision Day while another set of workers plan for the sacrificial giving. Let us plan in every way possible to honor our Lord who did so much for us, and who honors us by permitting us to be His co-laborers.

Doing Well.

All of us have great reason to rejoice at what is being done; but all true Christians have a deep seated desire to go one to greater and better things in their service for the Master.

Paid on Budgets Last Week.

1. Henderson$40.00
2. Stanly 2.29

C. B.—

1. Forsyth$44.08
2. Halifax 28.25

The amount from Halifax on G. C. B. should have been reported last week. We beg pardon for the omission. We called attention to a payment in the notes, and then by oversight omitted it in the figures.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Some one has said, "The workers drop out, but the work goes on." We note with sadness that the workers all about us are dropping out this winter and spring. That means one of two things for us, and perhaps both. It means that we must do more, and it means that we must be training other and younger workers to take their places and our places when we drop out; for the Master's work must go on. The most important thing in connection with human life today is that the Master's work must go on, in developing human beings into greater efficiency in Kingdom service. The only reason we can have for living is that we may serve. The great privilege God has vouchsafed to man is the privilege of being His co-laborer in serving mankind. This thing of Kingdom service could be magnified in our minds. Every day we live we should praise God for the privilege of service. It is not a rare thing to hear men and women complaining about the hardships of service; but rarely do any of us find ourselves praising God for the privilege of service.

It is great these days to be able to go about among the people and try to show them where in God has graciously and gloriously led us. Methodist Protestants along to that point in the affairs of the North Carolina Conference where we have privileges of service such as we have never had before. Men and women have the great privilege now of helping to raise the College Endowment with the assurance that what money they put into the endowment fund will go on working for the development of Christian workers after they themselves have gone home to glory.

Stop and Think!

Rev. Lawrence Little figures it like this:—The person who puts $100 into the endowment fund will throughout the years be paying at least $5 per year for the uplift and the training of young men and young women, and the person who puts $1,000 into the endowment fund will throughout the years to come be paying at least $50 per year for the uplift and the training of young men and young women.

Truly, we Methodist Protestants have never before had offered to us such a privilege of doing service for our King and His little ones both for the present and for the future. It seems to me that every thoughtful Methodist Protestant would quickly grasp this opportunity of beginning at once to pay whatever amount he can each year, just as long as he can, for the benefit of his church today, and for the benefit of his church through the years that are to come. We are not asking any of our people to shoulder a burden, but we are asking all of our people to join with us in making some sacrifice for the joyful privilege of helping in a great cause. Out of hearts full of praises and thanksgivings to Him who has led us on to such glorious success during the last three years, come on and let us help each other to help the Lord to lead us on to greater things in the development of our College at High Point.

Last Sunday.

On last Saturday Dr. R. M. Andrews, Rev. N. G. Bethea, Rev. Lawrence Little and I all drove to Fallston ready for services on Sunday morning. Misses Hull and Richards, teachers in the Children's Home, accompanied us to the pleasure of all of us. Sunday morning dawned bright and clear and cool, and the four of us scattered out and spoke in eleven churches last Sunday; and we are glad to report that as a result of this visit we can fully believe that Fallston, Cleveland, Caroleen, Shelby, Bess Chapel, and Bessemer City charges will all raise their quotas for the Endowment. We turned homeward feeling that we had been permitted to do a great day's work for our church and our Lord. The work of raising these quotas is not all done on these charges, but we believe it will be done, and we would urge the workers to do it with all possible speed. God bless the work and the workers. The most glorious privilege men and women have on earth is the privilege of being His workers. How lightly many of God's children esteem this privilege.

Please Continue to Pray.

Our special week of prayer which was set apart for special prayer for the College and for the success of the endowment campaign has just come to a close; but we are hoping that you have become so accustomed to praying for the College that you will continue to pray the blessings of heaven upon the undertaking. With God's help we can go on to greater and greater success, but without Him we can but fail. He will help us if we continue to ask Him for His help.

The Plan Again.

We started out some weeks ago to find 300 people among our 26,000 people, who would pay $50 per year for ten years and thus help us to raise an endowment of $150,000, which with its accumulations will amount to about $190,000 within the ten years. We are still looking for that 300 or its equal. Fifty dollars per year constitutes a share, and 300 shares take care of the proposition. But we concluded that it was not quite right to give 300 the privilege of doing what all of us ought to do. We felt that many, many people who would not feel able to pay $50 per year would want a part in this great work. Feeling thus we changed the plans a bit, and now we are asking all who will to pay the $50 per year and thus take a share. Others we are asking to pay $25 and thus carry a half share. Others to pay $10 per year and thus carry one-fifth of a share. Others to pay $5 per year and thus carry one-tenth of a share. And others still smaller amounts if they will. This plan permits all to have a part in this splendid work, as God may direct.

There Is Need For Haste.

Please help us to do this as speedily as possible that we may turn to other service that needs to be done. We wish to publish a list of shares taken at an early date. Let us hear from you soon that yours may be published in the first list. All information concerning this should go to Dr. R. M. Andrews, High Point College, High Point, N. C.

Yours for a speedy completion of this campaign,
A. G. Dixon.

WHY USE OUR PROGRAM.

First, because it is a good program. If this sounds egotistical to you, please come into the office and allow us to show you what others have written about this service. The music includes ten splendid Easter carols, covering ten full pages of the program, with all the music for each number available without turning a page. It is printed from new plates, and every page is practically perfect.

Every song is new, having been written by our Methodist Protestant poet and composer, Rev. W. B. Judefind, a minister of our Maryland Conference, and pastor of one of the Methodist Protestant churches in the city of Baltimore. Brother Judefind is at the head of a successful music publishing business, and many thousands of people await his publications with pleasure. Our Easter songs represent some of his very best work, and will not be available in any other publication this year. The literary features of the program too offer a challenge to the services usually published. The programs on the market for sale comprise from twelve to sixteen pages, and sell for five cents per copy. Our program has 20 pages in all, eight of which contain suggestions for a successful service, with responsive Scripture, readings, recitations, class exercises, and other special features. We do not expect any school to use the entire program, it would require too much time to render it all, but we do believe that any school can arrange a very pleasing and profitable service, selecting that which best suits its local needs from this program. We offer to place it in your hands without charge to you.

Second, Because the General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church has designated Passion Week, and Easter, as the special season for the presentation of the home mission work of the denomination, and directed that the board shall be "authorized to raise money by assessment apportioned by the General Conference to the annual conferences, and by them to the several charges; by Easter services in the Sunday schools, at which freewill offerings shall be made for the support of the work of the board; and by making such other appeals to the church as the work of the board shall require, and the judgment of the board shall deem to be wise." It is the judgment of the Board of Home Missions that we should not ask for the freewill offering this year, but rather that we should ask for the assessment for home missions in full from each charge. For the year beginning at the annual conference next succeeding the General Conference of 1924, this proportion will be 23 per cent of the total assessment to each charge for the General Conference budget. The proper use of this program, with a well defined effort from the leaders of the Sunday schools throughout the church, will make it possible for every church within the denomination to pay its apportionment for home missions in full on Easter Sunday. This is our slogan and our goal for Easter is $115,000. Why not? This is our appropriation made by the General Conference. Let us pay it in full in one day. Charles H. Beck.

C. B. Way, Reporter,
J. D. Morris, Chairman.

Fairfield, Guilford Circuit.—With God permitting the sun to shine on another Sabbath day, last Sunday afternoon our attendance was 63, which exceeded the number present for some little time. At the three o'clock service we had the pleasure of having Brother T. E. Pierce of Welch Memorial church, High Point, with us. He spoke on the importance of paying your vows unto the Lord. I want to say personally, and for the church, that we were glad to have him and appreciated his message. We extend to Brother Pierce and the visitors a hearty invitation back.

On the first Sunday in April at 11 o'clock Brother C. H. Whitaker will fill his regular appointment. In the afternoon of the first Sunday in April we are glad to announce that Brother J. W. Johnson, a lover of song service and other good works, will have a singing. Everybody has a hearty invitation.

On the second Sunday in April we are preparing to have an Easter service. Let us join hand in hand and have a wonderful program. Ethel Modlin, Reporter.

Zcar, Mecklenburg Circuit.—We are pleased so much with our pastor, Brother Short. He delivers us some mighty splendid and helpful sermons. I am sure every one present enjoys them to the very highest. We hope the weather will soon be so Brother Short can bring his wife and family over to be with us.

Let us all pray that this may be the best year ever on the work. Best wishes to all. Mrs. T. J. Atkins.

Pleasant Grove, Thomasville Circuit.—Brother Reynolds has been very ill with the "flu" but is improving and hopes to fill his appointments the fourth Sunday. His wife is quite sick with the "flu". Hope her recovery will be speedy.

Brother Hall, a student at High Point College, has filled two of Brother Reynolds' appointments. Brother Carroll, another student of High Point College, filled his appointment Sunday. We appreciate their filling his appointments and hope they will visit us soon again.

The Sunday school is improving nicely and had the largest attendance Sunday that we have had this conference year; seems to improve as the weather gets milder.

We are planning on having an Easter exercise.

The Seventh District Rally will meet with Pleasant Grove church on March 28 and 29.

Dr. Brown is very ill with pneumonia and could not act as chairman, but Brother Ithea is going to get up the program in place. We are expecting all to enjoy themselves and Pleasant Grove is expecting to give the brethren dinner.

The Ladies' Aid will meet with Mrs. Kathleen Lambeth of High Point April 8; expecting a good attendance, as the Aid is expecting to have a very important meeting.

Walter Burton, Reporter.

Bethel, Flat Rock Circuit.—Our pastor, R. J. B. Trogdon, is on the sick list, I am sorry to say; hope he will soon be well. He was not able to attend the Sunday school on Saturday or to preach on Sunday. Brother Paul Southard, a young preacher of the Christian church, preached for us Sunday afternoon. He preached a good sermon.

There were four speakers at the rally; they were: Rev. T. E. Pierce, subject, "Evangelism;" Rev. E. L. Ballard, "Sunday School and Church Music;" Rev. Edward Smith, "College at Present and Future;" Rev. W. Gerringer, "Making the Church a Success." These speeches were all good and inspiring. Rev. George Brown was to have been there but he is sick in the hospital; hope he will soon be restored to health again.

The rally was in the forenoon and quarterly conference after dinner. The dinner was served on the grounds. Brother R. W. Johnson of Bethel and Brother Johnson of Flat Rock were elected as nominees for delegate to the annual conference. One Who Was Present

March 15, 1924.

Laurel Hill, Fallston Circuit.—On Saturday, March 7, at 11 o'clock, Rev. E. A. Bingham of Bess Chapel preached for us a good sermon. His leading thought was that God blessed that we might be a blessing to others. We were very glad to have Brother Bingham with us; will be glad to have him come again at a time that he can.

In the afternoon the second quarterly conference was held and the regular business of the quarterly conference was transacted.

Sunday, March 8, our pastor, Brother J. Morgan, filled his regular appointment, taking for his subject our Savior's prayer on the cross, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." How many of us pray this prayer when our enemies do wrong. May the Lord help us to be faithful and thoughtful of our duty. We always look forward to the days when we can expect our pastor to preach for us, for it seems that he gets better every time that we hear him. We are proud indeed to have such a man with us.

Sunday night, March 15, Dr. Andrews was with us and read a lesson from the Holy Writings and explained it in a very interesting way. After the lesson Dr. Andrews talked on the ways and means of starting an endowment fund for our College at High Point. I hope that this meeting will prove much successful for the College. THE OCCUPANCY OF PEKING.

Our missionary at Kalgan, China, Rev. C. G. Soderbom, sent the following in explanation of the occupancy of Peking by the Christian General, Marshal Feng Yu-hsiang, last October, as set forth by the Kalgan Tutung, and throws light upon that notable event.

"Ever since Marshal Feng Yu-hsiang, the Christian General, returned suddenly and occupied Peking on October 23, 1924, he has been bitterly criticized. It has been termed a disloyal, traitorous act, and Marshal Feng has been accused of degrading the name of Christianity before the Chinese.

"Nearly all newspapers have thus censured the Marshal, so that it has been extremely difficult for Christians to retain their confidence in him. We feel, therefore, that a word of explanation from one of the Marshal's five generals would serve to justify the Marshal in his actions, and give Christians another example of the way God guides those who look to him.

"On the occasion of the visit of Mr. G. T. B. Davis, of the Pocket Testament League, General Chang Shih-chiang, now Tutung of Chahar, invited the missionaries of Kalgan to a tiffin, and afterwards at Mr. Davis' request kindly gave an account of the circumstances leading up to the occupancy of Peking by Marshal Feng.

"General Chang prefaced his remarks by saying that though they, that is, Marshal Feng, his officers and men, have always striven to walk in righteousness and before God, and have prayed much for help, yet in this time of national and personal danger they strove yet harder, and prayed more earnestly for guidance.

"How could they conquer without God as their help, their sword and buckler? However well they were armed, the enemy were still better armed and were stronger. But they remembered that David cried to Goliath, 'Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield; but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied.' Just so the army advanced in God's strength, not their own.

"The route which Marshal Wu ordered Marshal Feng Yu-hsiang to take was an exceedingly difficult one. The road was bad, and lay over mountainous region, and was the worst of the three taken by the main armies. It was in so bad a condition that he had to remake the road when marching up to battle. This front, which Marshal Feng was to guard, was also considered strategically unimportant.

"The plan of campaign which Marshal Wu Pei-fu had worked out was considered imperfect by some of the generals, but when they wished to discuss the matter with him, Wu would not listen.

"Thereupon Feng wrote out a suggested plan which he asked Wu to consider, but it was returned unopened with a message to 'speak less.'

"Thus there was no alternative but to obey. "For had Feng refused, Marshal Wu would have turned on him and easily defeated him, as his army and strength was much greater, and then proceeded with the fight against Chang-tso-lin.

"Marshal Feng was, of course, promised sufficient equipment and ammunition, but it was not all delivered at first. He had to pay President Tsao Kun $130,000 in order to get the rest of the equipment. This is an example showing the avaricious, grasping character of the President.

"General Chang told what his opinion was of the characters of these two men, Tsao Kun and Wu Pei-fu. The former sought wealth, the latter personal power.

"Tsao was so avaricious for money, that he demanded a certain sum before others could meet him. Marshal Wu did not care for money, his sole object was personal aggrandizement. He regarded himself as the only one capable of directing and commanding the armies, the only one whose plans were worth considering.

"The object of these two men in the war was to defeat Chang-tso-lin—not for the country's welfare, but because of the money and power they could personally get out of it.

"They were not patriotic, they were self-centered and ambitious. General Chang could not say what Marshal Chang-tso-lin's character was, as he did not personally know him, but he was sure he was better than these other two.

"On the way up to Jehol, the difficulties of their position pressed on the minds of the officers and soldiers.

"Wherever they were at any time, whether one, a hundred, or a thousand together, they prayed for God's guidance.

"On the 15th of October, Marshal Feng called a meeting of his generals. They had to choose between two courses. They could go on, and expect to throw away a great part of the army, killed or frozen to death, in an effort to support two tyrants against a man they believed to be better.

"Another course was to return and strike a blow against Tsao and Wu, and to try to stop the war. This second was not without danger. Marshal Wu was still lord over the greater part of China, and had a much larger number of troops than Feng.

"At this meeting, after much discussion and prayer, it was unanimously agreed that they should return and take Peking.

"When the decision was made Marshal Feng burst into tears at the thought of the terrible condition of China when such drastic action was necessary. His generals sought to comfort him, saying it was not his plan—it was God's.

"Under ordinary circumstances it is an eight-day march from Jehol to Peking, but they decided the road must be covered in four days.

"They prayed earnestly that God would give them the needed strength to hold out on the march, and further that he would grant them fair weather.

"Just before they started for Peking there was heavy rain, but it passed over quickly, and enroute the weather was perfect.

"The army marched practically night and day, taking only four or five hours rest a day. They were very tired, but were happy, and not one was unable to make the forced march.

"Thus they came entirely unexpected, and had no difficulty in occupying the city."

SUPREME COURT JUSTICE OF NEW YORK FOR PROHIBITION LAW

Justice John Ford, of the Supreme Court of New York, sends to the Board of Temperance and Public Morals the following letter to Rev. George Zurcher, a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, who is beloved by both Protestants and Catholics because of his Christian character and services to the cause of total abstinence and prohibition. In this letter Justice Ford states his position in regard to prohibition:

December 30, 1924.

Rev. George Zurcher,

North Evans, N. Y.

Dear Father Zurcher:

I am glad to see that you are keeping up your noble fight for temperance, and the only real temperance is total abstinence. Many have I known who claimed to be moderate drinkers. Every one of them drank to excess on occasions.

For some years, while in politics, I tried their system, and found it did not work. It never did, and never will. An old friend of mine in the State Legislature summed it up when he remarked to me one day: "John, it's either drunk or sober with me. I'm going to cut it out." And he did.

Some years before prohibition came, I "cut it out," too. I have not touched a drop in many years. For most of my mature life I have been a total abstainer. My experience on the other side of the fence seems like a nightmare to me. Some of my foolishness will haunt me as long as I live.

My life has been a varied one, from the little country farm of my birth in Orleans county, N. Y., to a seat on the Supreme Court bench in New York City. I have worked on the farm as a hired man, in the stone quarries, in a factory, in newspaper work from reporter to editor. Five times I have run for public office, and have been elected four times. I have been intimate with men of all sorts and conditions, from the humblest laborer to the highest in the land. Always I have seen the devil of drink ruining the lives and souls of my associates.

Saddest of all, perhaps, in my experience has been to see the brilliant minds and stalwart bodies of several of my classmates at the university fall to decay and degradation from the use of intoxicants. One of them, the most brilliant of the lot, still comes to me at times begging for money.

I am for prohibition and full enforcement of the Volstead act. There can be no compromise with this curse of the ages. As I write, there come to me the words of a poem from my old school reader:

Tell me I hate the bowl?

Hate is a feeble word.

I loathe, abhor—my very soul

With strong disgust is stirred

Whene'er I see or hear or tell

Of the dark beverages of hell!

Sincerely yours, John Ford.

CHINESE CHURCH LIFE.

From the China Mission Year Book, the following is taken as showing conditions in North China, the region where our China mission is located.

Freedom from the disturbances which hindered the work of preaching the gospel for the last few years is noted, and that relief work following famine and flood had been beneficial in many ways, especially in the fact that "the reputation of the church has been greatly enhanced among all classes, and the thinking public has come to realize more nearly what the purpose of the church is.

It is not the old despised foreign institution. It is not the servant of the foreign governments that compelled obedience to its wishes with a threat of foreign intervention as was the idea after 1900.

There has come in all of the churches a realization of the fact that the great need of the church in North China is a spiritual uplift.

The fearful competition in business, the absolute loss of all ideals in politics, and the craving for amusement that has spread all over the country has threatened to engulf the spiritual life of the new church in China, and there is a realization on all sides that these tides must be stemmed.

The only hope of China is in the living, vital, Christ-filled church. The organization of a few foreigners or Chinese when not led by the Master himself will not aid in any way in stemming the present downward tendency.

How is the spiritual life to be deepened? The answer is not far to seek. The missionaries and pastors must be willing to pay the price. It will not be brought about through committees nor campaigns, but only through agonizing prayer on the part of individuals and groups of individuals who will carry their newly acquired strength out into the larger life of the church.

The living Christ is as willing to give His Spirit to the church now as at any time in the past, and His power is sufficient for all even in the most trying circumstances of modern life, if we as a church are only willing to seek that power, and to live the life He would have us live. There is need not so much for great campaigns as for intensive work among the present membership of the churches that they may understand their relation to God, and their responsibilities as Christians to their families and their neighbors and go out to fulfill their responsibilities.

In the days gone by when there was so much objection to Christianity the question of bringing people into the church for false motives was one not to be thought of among the better classes.

But now there is a certain prestige about being a Christian in many quarters, and men will join the church who can pass any examination on the Bible that is set up for them, and still lack entirely the essence of Christianity. They can read and sing and pray, but do not know Christ, and after all that is the great demand for the church at the present time.

The supply of preachers in North China is far from adequate. There are countless opportunities everywhere, but the responsibility has shifted from the missionary to the young Chinese leaders. Will these young men hear the call of the Lord Jesus to help their countrymen and be willing to pay the price of serving churches, or, when the situation becomes tense will they resign and satisfy their consciences with the fact that they have been driven from the hard work of the church to the more remunerative employment outside?

Fred. C. Klein.

To Prospective Correspondence Auxiliary Members.

I had just been wondering of late if the Correspondence Auxiliary was working, when a letter from our treasurer informed me that there was nothing whatever doing.

I feel sure you would do something if you knew how badly your mission board was needing money.

Our North Carolina Branch is far behind in its apportionment. And perhaps you do not all know that our work is growing and that we have sent out several new missionaries this year, and that calls for more money.

And remember, the books close the last day of March and if you do anything before branch meeting you will have to do it at once.

I know there are lots of good Methodist Protestant women scattered over North Carolina who are not in reach of or members of any society.

Won't you send your name and just as big an offering as you possibly can to Mrs. S. W. Taylor, Burlington, N. C., and tell her the Correspondence Auxiliary will live just as long as we have missionaries in India, China and Japan.

Miss Forrest told us in our district meeting last Sunday that missionaries did not run any accounts, but when the money failed on pay day they had to do without—guess she knows, as she was on the field for many years.

They are depending on you and on me. Let us not fail them.

NOTICE, PASTORS AND PEOPLE, THIRD DISTRICT.

We are planning for our District Rally Saturday and Sunday, May 30 and 31, to be held at Mt. Hermon church, Mt. Hermon charge.

We intend to ask each one to bring their lunch so as not to overtax the local church. This is such a large district and we got started to working on program late is the reason we thought best to postpone this rally from March to May.

We are hoping to have a good attendance of pastors and people. Program will be published later.

T. O. Pender,
 Annual Conference Chairman,
 B. M. Williams,
 Chairman-Young People's Work.

PREACHERS, LISTEN!

Have you forgotten that big rally day at Mizpah church, Haw River circuit, Easter Monday, that was announced in the Herald a week ago; and that all ex-pastors were invited to attend? Well, if you have not, won't you tell me quick that you are planning to come?

Better show up, you may want to be pastor of that splendid congregation again.

W. D. Reed.

OUR TASK AND OUR PRIVILEGE.

Not very much was sent in on the budgets during the last week, so we will not ask the editor to publish the entire list showing the standing of charges this week. We will just give the amounts paid last week, and then in next week's paper these amounts will be added in with the others so that these charges along with others will have their proper places in the list showing amounts paid.

It seems that there is some mistake somewhere regarding the amount paid by Why Not charge. We will check up by next week and make proper corrections.

All Pastors and Stewards Please Note.

Conference said last fall that monthly payments should be made on the budgets. We are rapidly approaching the end of the second quarter, and all the charges save 20 have made payments up to date. We are serving notice now that at the end of this quarter, about May 1, it is our purpose to publish the names of all the charges with the amounts they have paid. And if it so happens that

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

The March meeting of Grace church auxiliary was held with Mrs. J. Norman Wills at her home on West Gaston street. There were a large number in attendance to hear the reports of the year's work, and also to elect the new officers for the incoming year. Mrs. Wills was re-elected president; Mrs. T. A. Hunter, first vice president; Mrs. W. S. Jones, second vice president; Mrs. Roy Millikan, recording secretary; Mrs. J. M. Stone, corresponding secretary; Miss Maye Bain, treasurer; Mrs. A. S. Pettit, secretary of scholarships and native workers; Mrs. A. H. Johnson, secretary of thank-offering; Mrs. R. H. Brooks, secretary of young people's work; Mrs. B. W. Terrell, secretary of education; Mrs. W. S. Jones, secretary of Memorial members; Mrs. F. R. Brittain, secretary of field work; Miss Charlie Hunter, secretary of tithers' and intercessors' league; Mrs. E. E. McIver, superintendent of Precious Jewels; Mrs. W. S. Jobe, Record agent; Mrs. R. H. Brooks, auditor.

Our society was most fortunate in having present with us Mrs. Chas. H. Ireland, who gave a vivid account of her attendance at the great missionary convention in Washington city. She said in part, there were representatives from all the mission fields of the world and the best speakers that could ever be gotten together were on the program. The meetings were in the city's new auditorium, which is rectangular in shape, stage capacity several hundred; and the six to eight thousand people present could hear all speakers distinctly. There was plenty of singing but none of solos, quartets, etc., just the old gospel hymns which every one knew and loved. The people attending these sessions were so deeply impressed with the addresses that little thought was given to who the speaker was or what his denomination. They were God's people met together with one purpose and of one accord to talk about His work. There were three sessions each day and sixty-two addresses in all.

The keynote of the convention was Christ. It was not only the missionary's idea but also from the non-Christian world that Jesus Christ and He alone is the only solution of the world's troubles. If we expect to christianize the people of the East we must be better Christians in the West, some speaker said; and it is up to the Christian people to get some plan to do away with wars. John R. Mott said there must be unity among the churches and unity must be between the races. In regard to the missionary fields, Robert Speer said there were more people, or as many, now, who do not know Jesus as when the missionary work began; we just touch the fringes of the work, there is so much to be done, he said; for the population has increased so rapidly. He said the time was coming when Jesus Christ would be Lord of all, and everything would run as He would have it. The need of prayer was stressed in all the addresses. The message Mrs. Ireland brought the society was an inspiration. Each one could but feel that Christ is omnipotent, that He is indeed Lord of all.

During the social hour which followed Mrs. Ireland's address, we were delighted with several piano solos by Mrs. Cora Cox Lucas, of Columbia, S. C., a musician of national reputation. Also Miss Sara Alderman favored us with a violin solo, while tea and sandwiches were served.

Mrs. J. M. Stone,
Corresponding Secretary,
Grace W. F. M. S.

In our department of February 19, you will note that our president, Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, of the W. F. M. S., says this: "Our branch meeting will be held in Winston-Salem April 7-9. Only a few weeks more in which to raise our budget of $6,000. We have a third of it yet to raise."

Mrs. S. W. Taylor, our branch treasurer, received the following letter from Mrs. Lida K. East, our executive treasurer, which we think best to bring before each auxiliary and urge all to raise their budget.

Bellevue, Pa.

Dear Branch Treasurer:

At this time we wish to call your attention to the finances of the W. M. M. S. Remittances have not been received in amounts sufficient to meet our obligations, consequently we had to borrow, and this must be replaced before our annual meeting. We also wish to remind you that branch treasurers' books must close March 31, and all money to be sent to the executive of the W. F. M. S. as soon thereafter as possible, as my books will close April 15.

If one of your auxiliaries shall send you a check bearing date of March 31st and it does not reach you until during the first week in April, this shall be credited to this year's work, but if a check shall come to you, bearing a date of April, it shall be credited to the next year's work.

Please notify your auxiliary that the treasurer shall give to her church treasurer, monthly or quarterly, a written statement of all money she sends to her branch treasurer. The branch treasurer shall, monthly or quarterly, send a written report to her conference treasurer, of all money she has sent to her branch treasurer. Each month your executive treasurer sends to the general church treasurer a written statement of all monthly branch remittances, and these must agree.

We are trusting that your branch will reach its goal. We have sent out more missionaries and we have now the largest number of workers we have ever had in the history of the W. F. M. S. We have obligated ourselves to care for them, we can do this only as each individual member does her best.

We urge that your auxiliaries pay up all their pledges as there is but a short time now for this year's work, and unless the auxiliaries raise their budget the whole budget cannot be raised. Yours in His service,

Lida K. East, Executive Treasurer.

West End, Greensboro.—In the exchange of pulpits in Greensboro Sunday night, West End was very fortunate in getting Rev. S. B. Hall, pastor of Palm Street Christian Church. Mr. Hall used as his subject, "Personal Influence and Its Responsibility," and gave us a strong and timely sermon. He discussed the different kinds of influence, bringing out very forcibly the fact that every life is influenced by some other life, and urged the godly men and women to use the gifts God has bestowed on them in helping the weaker ones, especially the young people, to mold character.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society met at the home of Dr. Joy Harris Glasco last Monday afternoon. The election of officers for the ensuing year and the election of delegates to the branch meeting to be held at Winston-Salem in April, were the most important items of business. Mrs. J. R. Holden was elected president, and Mrs. M. H. Waynick vice president. The other officers were re-elected. Delegates to branch meeting were Mrs. Paul A. Burns and Mrs. V. C. Stockard. Following the business session Mrs. E. Ratledge and Mrs. J. R. Holden each gave chapters in the study book, and Rev. E. Ballard delighted the audience with a beautiful solo. The hostess served a delicious salad course. Rev. N. M. Harrison, Jr., and Rev. L. W. Gerringer were guests at the meeting.

Mrs. L. M. Foust was hostess to the Woman's Home Missionary Society at its March meeting. The officers elected were: Mrs. K. Osborne, president; Mrs. S. E. Ratledge, first vice president; Mrs. J. E. Herndon, second vice president; Mrs. F. S. Stockard, recording secretary; Mrs. J. R. Holden, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. C. A. Cooper, treasurer. Delegates to the branch meeting were Mrs. M. H. Waynick and Mrs. J. R. Bull.

The members of the Foust Bible Class gave the teacher, Mr. L. M. Foust, quite a birthday surprise when they gathered at his home Saturday night and, as a token of their appreciation of his loyalty and faithfulness, presented him with a gold watch. Mr. Foust has been the teacher of this class since it was organized when West End was first opened, and his intense love for the cause and the personal interest he manifests toward every member of the class has won for him the love and admiration of the entire church and community. Through his efforts this class has been, since its organization, the strongest in the church and Mr. Foust's teaching, both by precept and example, has been an inspiration in the lives of many.

The senior Christian Endeavor society held its regular monthly business meeting in the basement of the church Thursday night, and enjoyed a social hour after the business session. Plans are being made for the Dixie Endeavor Day program to be given at the noon for Sunday evening service March 22d. This is a very interesting and instructive program and we extend a cordial invitation to members and visitors to come and hear what wonderful things Christian Endeavor is doing in the Southland.

The Township Sunday School Convention for Morehead and Gilmer Townships will be held at West End next Sunday afternoon March 22. Friends of our former pastor, Rev. N. M. Harrison, Jr., will be interested to know he is to be one of the speakers on the program, his subject being, "How to Interest and Hold Young People in the Sunday School." Other interesting speakers are Mr. H. B. Moore and Mrs. Van Noppen.

The play, "Aunt Peggy's Surprise," given by the missionary societies at Pomona High school recently, was quite a success and delighted the audience. It is under the direction of Mrs. W. H. Bonkemeyer, and is to be repeated at Guilford High School next Friday night at eight o'clock.

Plans for the Easter program are being formed. Mrs. J. R. Holden is directing the children for the service to be given on Sunday morning, and in the evening, under the direction of Mr. L. M. Foust, the choir will have charge. Reporter.

High Point.—We are much pleased to announce that the pastor, Dr. Geo. R. Brown, who has been seriously ill of pneumonia, is improving. He was first taken with the influenza nearly two weeks ago, which developed into pneumonia in the left lung, and was removed from his home to Guilford General Hospital. Messages were sent to his children, and Mrs. Geo. Armacost of Westminster, Md., and Mr. Geo. R. Brown, Jr., of Atlanta, came to be near their father. The attending physician, Dr. S. S. Coe, thinks that the danger is past, and if no complications arise, he will soon recover, for which blessing many hearts will rejoice, and offer praise and thanksgiving to God for His goodness. During Dr. Brown's illness, the congregation has been most fortunate in substitutes; one Sunday the pulpit was filled by Rev. Paul S. Kennett of High Point College, who delivered a splendid message on Humility; then again last Sunday Rev. Nat Harrison, dean of men at the College, officiated at the 11 o'clock service, and gave a most timely message to the young people, and at the evening service the pulpit was occupied by Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk of the Children's Home.

We are also happy to note a decided improvement in the condition of Mr. Richard Reitzel, who has pneumonia in Watts Hospital, Durham. His sister, Mrs. Ben Moore, is with him.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies held their monthly meeting at the handsome home of Mrs. C. C. Robbins, south of the city on March 2. There was a large attendance of members and renewed interest shown in the work. Delegates were elected from both societies to branch meeting in Winston-Salem April 7-9. We were delighted to have present as a visitor Mrs. S. R. Harris of Henderson, who was the guest of her daughter, Mrs. R. M. Andrews, and who has been the faithful president of the foreign society at Henderson for many years. At the conclusion of the exercises, Mrs. Robbins served dainty refreshments.

The Ladies' Aid society held an enjoyable meeting with Mrs. H. E. Montsinger and Mrs. J. W. Hinkle, associate hostesses at the home of the former on March 9. The members of this society have assumed responsibility for payment of the carpet for the new church, which amounts to $2600.

The Young People's Missionary Society met Thursday evening with the leader, Mrs. Jones Burns, on English street. The Young Ladies' Circle of the Foreign Missionary Society, which is composed of members of the Philathea class of the Sabbath school, held a meeting last week with their leader, Miss Young at High Point College.

One of the older members of our church, Mr. Jesse A. Newton, died Sunday night at 11 o'clock at his home, 217 Best street. He had been in declining health for some time, but had been out and up town until 10 days ago. Mr. Newton was a native of Davidson county, having been born there on October 27, 1859, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Jackson Newton. About 35 years ago he moved to High Point, and married Miss Lula Barton in 1890. She passed away in 1919. He is survived by one son, J. Radford Newton, and a daughter.

FOR THE HONOR OF HIS CLASS.

George Marsh looked at the spikes in his new running-shoes and gritted his teeth to show his displeasure. These running-shoes represented both pride and disappointment to him. He had worked all summer running errands and mowing lawns so that he could have everything he needed for the playground, and now it seemed that he wasn't going to get to use his running-shoes at the very time he needed them most.

He had been using them all the fall, and he had already won a number of races for his school; but that had been all right, because the boys from the other schools had owned track-shoes much like his own; but this race seemed to be different all the way around.

George was president of his class at Oakdale Sunday school, and he was proud of the honor. His was Junior Class No. 6, "The Young Crusaders," and George had read quite enough to understand the meaning of their name. He knew that the crusaders of ancient history were men who went out in search of the sepulcher in which Christ was buried, and that they were men who had courage and who loved the Lord and wanted to show their love for him.

That much George understood thoroughly, and the name of his class meant to him that he too had pledged himself to follow in the footsteps of Christ, not hoping to find the tomb in which Christ had been buried, but hoping to live true to those teachings of Christ that will live forever in the hearts of people.

It was thinking of all this that made George grit his teeth, square his shoulders, and throw back his head until his mop of black hair waved upward like an Indian's feathers.

He was wondering what to do next. The track-meet of the Sunday School League was on, and the fifty-yard dash was about to be run. George had just discovered that none of the other runners were wearing track-shoes, and of course he knew that it would not be fair for him to do so unless the rest did.

That much was very plain to him, and it wouldn't have been at all hard for him to decide what to do next if it hadn't been for Big Ben Williams, who was standing just outside the circle watching George with eager shining eyes of approval. Ben was the latest addition to the Young Crusaders Class, and George's particular pride and responsibility. George knew that he had been the means of winning Ben to the class, and now he not only felt the responsibility of keeping him there, but a desire to hold him to the class for more reasons than one.

There was not a better all-round athlete in the whole Junior Department than Big Ben, and now since the organization of the Sunday School League there was not a class in the department that would not have welcomed Big Ben with delight. But Ben was wary and hard to entice. He had cast his fortunes with the Crusaders and there he meant to stay. Or he meant to stay there until, as he expressed it, somebody could come around and show him something better than the Crusaders. That was what troubled George so now. He knew just how proud Ben was of his fame as a runner, and he couldn't bear to lose the race now with Ben watching him.

He had a feeling now that to lose that race would be to lose Ben from the class. That was why he could not bear to lose the race, and that was why he found it so hard to decide what to do.

Just then his puzzled thoughts were suddenly broken into by the booming sound of Big Ben's hearty voice.

"We can beat 'em on that, hands down, can't we, Blackie?" Blackie was Ben's special nickname for George; it must have been suggested by George's dark eyes and heavy thatch of black hair, but it meant that Ben heartily approved of him, and George was always glad to hear himself so called.

"Course we can," George called back in reply, but without the usual heartiness in his voice.

"Nobody's got anything on us when it comes to racin'," Ben continued. "We've got the whole business skinned alive."

How George wished that Ben wouldn't do that. It only made it harder and harder for him to know what to do about the shoes. It had all seemed so simple and easy at first. He had thought it would be the easiest thing in the world just to pull off his track-shoes and borrow a pair of plain tennis-shoes; and if Mr. Gillespie said anything about it he would just say that he did not think it would be fair for him to run in track-shoes unless the other boys had them too.

That would have been the natural and easy thing for George to do, and if he had had no one but himself to consider it would hardly have taken him a second of time to decide; but then there was Ben to consider, and the honor of the class.

It was quite a responsibility for ten-year-old shoulders, and George wished that the time for deciding was not so short. If he had time he might talk it over with his mother, or he might ask Mr. Gillespie, the director, about it. Mr. Gillespie was away over the fence across the whole field and he seemed to be very busy talking things over with the superintendent. Neither Mr. Gillespie nor any of the runners from other classes had seemed to notice the shoes or say anything about them. Maybe they thought that it didn't make any difference at all in the running, but George knew very well that it did, and it was his certain knowledge that made his big responsibility.

"Of course if they don't know that it makes a difference and they won't think anything about it, then it'll be just to please my own conscience that I take 'em off; and I don't know if I ought to do that when Ben's depending on me to win, and the class is depending on me to keep Ben with the Crusaders." George put his thoughts into unspoken words as he wrestled with the big problem in his mind.

Mr. Gillespie had turned in the direction of the track and was coming back that way. That meant that George must either do something about it very quickly, or just let it go and win the race, as he was sure he could do.

There was a general stir all over the field and the people were gathering about to see the start of the fifty-yard dash. Ben was leaning on a rope and whistling heartily, so confident was he of his class's victory.

"Crusaders've got this race boxed," he shouted to George. "Get ready, Blackie, and show 'em all you've got this time."

That was the general policy of the Crusaders anyway; when they did a thing they simply let go and did it with all their might, and Ben knew very well that his beloved Blackie could be counted on to give every ounce of his strength to win that race for the honor of the class.

"For the honor of the class;" that was one of the treasured mottoes that hung on the wall of the Crusaders' classroom, and suddenly the letters seemed to flash themselves very clearly before George's mind, his real eyes.

"Oh, I guess I'll have to go on and run for the honor of the class," he declared to himself, "and to keep Ben for the Crusaders. It isn't quite fair, and I know it isn't quite fair, and I don't really want to do it at all, but maybe I ought to for the class."

"Blackie! Blackie! Blackie!" the Crusaders were chanting to an old tune, while Big Ben stood in the very front row and added a lot more volume if not a lot more melody to the music.

George looked up and tried to smile but the smile wouldn't work. He had never in his life done anything that he knew was not quite fair in a game, and it hurt him to do this. The fact that none of the others noticed it didn't have any real weight with him. The thing that counted and counted hard was that deep down in his heart a voice told him it wasn't right.

Mr. Gillespie was by that time almost within ear-shot, and the impatient runners were gathering ready for the start.

There was Sam Bass, who was certain to stand George a close second in the race even with the advantage of the latter's track-shoes; and who might even stand a show of winning the race if George discarded his cherished shoes with the little knobby spikes that gripped the ground and made running easier and kept down the danger of falling on the turn.

There were a half dozen of the runners, and they were chatting and laughing and teasing each other about winning.

It all sounded very cheerful and friendly to George, but somehow with that deep sense of wrong-doing eating into his heart he couldn't get into the fun.

"Buck up, Blackie!" cheered Ben from the lines. "We're countin' on you. The rest of these fellows are goin' to get choked with heel-dust about the time you come in home."

Mr. Gillespie came up to the starting-post and a sudden hush of waiting fell on the crowd. The noisy yelling ceased with the tense interest, and only a few boys here and there poked and jostled each other, quietly until they got into comfortable standing positions from which they could see well.

George looked up toward the place where Ben stood and thought how he loved the big generous-hearted fellow, and yet he couldn't love wrong-doing for his sake.

Mr. Gillespie was raising his hand for silence, though it was hardly necessary, since there was already the silence of a tense interest.

George suddenly bent his head reverently and sent up a little prayer-thought something like this; "O dear heavenly Father, is it ever ht to do wrong, even if you do it for a good purpose?"

Like a flash the answer came to him. He never could explain how it was that he just suddenly knew what was right for him to do, he did; and always as soon as George saw his duty he was ready to jump right and do it.

Mr. Gillespie had raised his hand and was out to speak when George found the answer to his problem and knew all at once that he can't possibly make right out of wrong, matter if it is for a good purpose.

"Mr. Gillespie," came George's clear voice taking into the interested stillness, "I have track-shoes and none of the rest have. They make it easier for me to run, and that wouldn't make the race fair. I'd like to change them."

"Why certainly, of course; I never thought that," Mr. Gillespie said a little absently, and some of the other runners smiled their appreciation of what he was doing; for it only took George a few seconds to slip off the running shoes and get into some plain tennis shoes that one of the waiting Crusaders had thrown to him across the line.

But it was over in the bunch of Crusaders that the real excitement prevailed. George boldly dared to look over that way, he dreaded to see the look of disappointment that he felt quite sure of seeing on Big Ben's face. He had to look the next minute though, for suddenly there boomed out a big cheer for Blackie! Blackie! rah! rah! Blackie!" from the bunch of loyal Crusaders.

It was fine of them to do that, George thought, and "If I've got it in me to win that race for them I'm going to do it," was the resolve that George made to himself.

It was a close race when it was run. George slipped on the turn and did not make the distance he had expected to, but he held to it with all his strength until he came in by ten yards the leader.

All the other runners crowded up to congratulate him. They were glad he had won the race, because they felt that he had done his best to be fair. Even Mr. Gillespie had a word of appreciation to give, for he admitted that he would never have thought of track-shoes making any difference.

It was from Big Ben though that George heard the words that made him happiest.

"You come pretty near losin' me, Blackie," Ben confided happily to his friend. "I thought them shoes and I knew it wouldn't be any good. I didn't see 'em until 'most time for the race, and then I looked away, because I didn't want you to think about 'em. Then I talked hard at you and I sort of knew that you'd already thought about 'em; and I thought you it hurt like everything to think you wouldn't be willing to do what wasn't fair. You know I was just banking on you like every body else, Blackie, and I pretty near yelled myself off when you come out about the shoes. I hope some of you think that I just come to day school for the games, 'n' I do like the games; but there's somethin' else too, way down deep in me, Blackie; there's somethin' that wants to do right and be fair, an' the Crusaders have done a lot to make me try harder to be that all the time. It was hard to do what you did today; but I tell you it counted strong with me, Blackie. The kind of boy that'll do that has got me nailed for sure, 'n' I stick to the Crusaders now 'n' forever."

"I started to do it right at first," George confided to his friend; "but when you came up an' I got to thinking that maybe if I did it and then lost the race for the class you'd blame me and maybe quit the Crusaders, an' they'd blame me for that, I hardly knew what to do next. I felt like I had to win that race to keep you."

Ben was silent for a few seconds and then he went on quietly: "I guess you thought it was just the games that kept me on; but it was the other most of all, Blackie. It was wantin' to do right an' feelin' like the Crusaders could be trusted to do right and help a fellow to do right. Shucks, I guess a boy can't hardly get so rough but what he's got a lot o' respect for seein' anybody do what's right."

They separated with a cheerful "So long," and George walked thoughtfully home alone, a bronze medal in his pocket, and a cheerful, all-round good feeling deep down in his heart.

"And to think," he said to himself, "that I was afraid Ben wouldn't stick if I didn't win the race. I s'pose one of the biggest things you can ever do for your class is to live as straight as you know how. Just set your mark high and live right up to it."—Selected.

I LIKE TO GO TO SCHOOL TO GOD.

I like to go to school to God!

I hear such strange, revealing things;

He talks to me where rivers run

And where a sky lark soars and sings.

He teaches me His love and care

Through every tree and blade of grass

Here on the hill where I may sit

And listen while the wide winds pass.

He writes with glaciers on the rocks

And with the stars that blaze on high;

With fossil shells and ferns that fall

And leave their imprint as they die.

His books are beds of slate and coal;

His manuscripts are Redwood trees;

Volcanoes punctuate the tale

And turn the pages of the seas!

His blackboard is a canyon wall

Whereon He writes of ages past;

In even lines the strata tell

Of things that shall forever last.

He writes with rivers and they carve

The crevices He leaves to tell

A story of His living love

In temple, tower and pinnacle.

I like to go to school to God

Because it always seems to me

He talks in every breeze that blows;

Through every bird and bud and bee!

THE BIBLE.

This Book contains: The Mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners, and happiness of believers.

Its doctrines are holy, its precepts are binding, its decisions are immutable.

Read it to be wise, believe it to be safe, practice it to be holy.

It contains light to direct you, food to support you, and comfort to cheer you.

It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's charter.

Here paradise is restored, heaven opened, and the gates of hell disclosed.

Christ is its grand Subject, our good its design, and the glory of God its end.

It should fill the memory, rule the heart, and guide the feet.

Read it slowly, frequently, prayerfully.

It is a mine of wealth, a paradise of glory, a river of pleasure.

It is given you in life, will be opened at the Judgment, and be remembered forever.

It involves the highest responsibility, rewards the greatest labor, and condemns all who trifle with its holy contents.—Anon.

Is there no reconciliation of some ancient quarrel, no payment of some long outstanding debt, no courtesy or love or honor to be rendered to those to whom it has long been due; no charitable, humble, kind, useful deed, by which you can promote the glory of God, or good will among men, or peace upon earth? If there be any such, I beseech you, in God's name, in Christ's name, go and do it.—Stanley.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Fairview, Fairview Circuit.—We had our regular preaching service Sunday morning and evening. Rev. Clarice Isley preached a very interesting sermon Sunday morning to a large congregation. We were more than delighted to have Mr. Whitney with us Sunday evening and to hear the splendid talk he gave us on Christian Endeavor. After the talk we organized a Christian Endeavor society. We have a very active set of officers, and we are going to do our best to make the society live. Elsie Lee.

Asheville.—Our church is a bee-hive of activities. There have recently been three successful socials: a George Washington Birthday party, a Christian Endeavor social for all the church, and a "Tackey Party" by the Philatheas. The Men's Bible Class, Brother Fancett teacher, meets every second Monday night. The board of stewards meets every third Monday night. The Ladies' Aid and the Woman's Missionary Society meet regularly.

Attendance at church and Sunday school is increasing each Sunday. Painters are busy on church and parsonage. Both buildings are being gone over inside and out. New guttering on both. About $500 will be expended on these improvements.

Dr. C. D. Sinkinson and Mrs. Sinkinson spent a two weeks' vacation here, renewing old friendships and making new friends. He preached for us the first Sunday in March. All were delighted to hear him.

Brother J. B. Hyatt, one of our most faithful members, has been ill three weeks. He will soon be back in his place at our services.

The finances of our church are shaping up fine. Pastor Bates preached on the stewardship of money the last Sunday in February. That sermon, like all his sermons, was quite inspiring and helpful. Beginning on the fourth Sunday in March, Rev. Edward Suits will assist in special services here. Brother Bates will conduct services through Passion Week.

David Kimberly, who lives across the street from our church, has offered to furnish and plant shrubbery on the church lawn. This kindness is the more appreciated because Brother Kimbebrly is an Episcopalian. Brother J. F. Salisbury brought his bride to church last Sunday. We welcome her into our congregation, and hope she will join our church.

We sympathize with our brother, Rupert Pickens, in the death of his wife. The two young sons also have our deep sympathy.

Brother Chris Pickens, Mrs. Bates's father, spent a week in Asheville recently, visiting his daughter. We pray for his complete recovery. Reporter.

West Thomasville Circuit.—The fourth Sunday at 11 o'clock Brother W. M. Loy preached for us a splendid sermon. The subject was, "An Ideal Home." The attendance was very large and it was enjoyed by all who heard it. Collection was taken for the Children's Home. The amount was $3.93.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely with Mr. E. M. Briles, superintendent, very active and well attended. Best wishes to the Herald and readers. Ressie Kinly,

Reporter.

First Church, Thomasville.—We had a good day Sunday. Our Sunday school is gradually increasing in numbers as well as interest.

We started a new roll the first of the year and our enrollment now reaches near the 300 mark. Our goal set for the year is 500 and I am pretty sure that we can grasp up enough of the harvest (which is plentiful) that is scattered around in our section to easily reach that mark and even more.

We are very grateful to have secured Mr. T. L. Lowe as our Baraca Teacher. He is a devoted Christian leader and is giving them very interesting discourses each Sabbath morning. We can easily tell by his instructions that he studies his discourses thoroughly.

We are very proud of our Baraca class, which has an enrollment of about 60, with an attendance of possibly two-thirds.

Mrs. A. H. Ragan is the capable teacher of the Junior Baracas and we can already see visible results of her efforts. The boys did not really have a teacher last year, they really worked their way without anyone specially to lead them and in the face of that, grew in numbers throughout the year, and since Mrs. Ragan has consented to lead them we are sure that success is in store for them.

Our special revival meeting will begin the fourth Sunday in April with Brother N. G. Bethea of State Street Church, Lexington, as pulpit help. The most of us are well acquainted with Brother Bethea and congratulate ourselves in being able to secure his services during our meeting.

We are preparing to paint our church and repair such things as are generally needed to be done, such as carpeting the aisles and pulpit, finishing the benches and many other things that need to be done to protect our building and also to beautify it.

Brother Reynolds has been confined to his room for near two weeks with the grippe, but we are glad to state that he is improving and hope that he will be with us again next Sunday. Brother Hall of High Point has been filling his appointments in his absence. Brother Hall is going to make a good addition to our ministerial staff. When he completes his preparation he will make a good man for almost any charge.

Brother James Perry, Sr., was out at services Sunday. He is among our oldest standard bearers, being up in the eighties. He tells us that the proudest he ever is is when he can come out and hear the old songs of his childhood and the good old gospel preached.

Our Christian Endeavor society is getting along nicely under the leadership of Brother Clyde Watts. This is his first effort toward leading and he certainly is having good success in his undertaking.

Our Junior Christian Endeavor is doing fine under the new management, Miss Frindleless Harris as president and Miss Anna Class as assistant. The children are coming to the front with their exercises, which tends to show that the leader's efforts are not in vain.

We want to invite competition in Sunday school attendance. Who will meet us with 250 again next Sunday? Just whistle.

We wish success to every church and Sunday school in our conference that is striving for better attendance and higher ideals in the church work. D. R. Connell, Notice, Vance Charge.

Our second quarterly conference convene in the Methodist Protestant churcherson, Saturday before the fifth of this month, 2:30 P. M. Trusting churches will be well represented,

M. P: Chambliss, 1

Orange Charge, Notice.

The second quarterly conference will be at Chestnut Ridge church Saturday second Sunday in April, 2:30 P. M.

A full attendance of the officials is important business. Candidates for to the next annual conference to be ed. Please be on hand promptly at 2:

Sincerely, B. M. Wi

First Church, Lincolnton.—Five ser Sunday and something at the church night in the week keeps us pretty busy. We feel that we are gaining ground rapidly by being so busily engaged. The church is fast becoming the center of the community and people are now attending that number of people as attended before. Our congregations are the best we have had, especially on Sundays. Our pastor, Rev. C. E. Phillips, has been for some time, preaching at the church at 11 o'clock. Then Sunday at 7:30 o'clock he delivers special messages on the fundamental doctrines of the Creation, Inspiration of Scriptures, of Jesus, Atonement, etc. These messages are attracting large crowds and we feel that we are doing much good in these days when Bible truths are being questioned. Phillips preaches an old-time gospel that defends the truth our church was founded on.

Our Ladies' Aid has gotten well under way and is now doing some of the best work in the departments of our church. A new paint is soon to be put on our church. A new communion set is to be purchased. Funds raised by the Ladies' Aid. We are sure our pastor worked so hard to get this church organized as we can now see what we are doing.

Our church is now working on our claims and if good times continue we will be able to pay out soon. We have been working for the last few years to get on higher ground and we are glad that God has blessed that our church is now a power for good in our community. Pray for us that we may continue to grow. Rep

Palestine, Flat Rock.—We were very glad today to learn that our good pastor was able to be present today. Hope he will be out again. We all enjoy hearing Brother Trogdon's good sermons. Rev. Mr. Prest is kind enough to fill the pastor's appointments today. All enjoyed his message.

As we have had no Sunday school, no meeting, Endeavor or anything aside from our regular meeting day during the winter owing to the long distance the most of our people have to go, we have had very little to report. We hope as spring appears we will have Sunday school, prayer meeting or other service at our church each Sabbath the month.

Aunt Haily Ann, the good wife of the late Uncle Jem Tucker, has been confined to bed for the past two weeks.

Best wishes to Herald readers.

A PLACE FOR ME.

Take me, O God, in Thy great harvest field,
Which stretcheth far and wide, like a wide sea;

The gatherers are few, I fear the precious yield

Will suffer loss. Oh find a place for me!
A place where best the strength I have will tell;

It may be one the other toilers shun;
Be it a wide or narrow place, 'tis well,
So that the work it holds be only done."

—Christina Rossetti.

"NOW I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP."

Half a century ago nearly every child in the American Christian home was taught a little prayer of four lines. Notwithstanding the shafts of criticism more recently aimed at this little prayer, it is still enshrined as a gem in the memories of many, and still extensively taught the new generation. Two beautiful illustrations from life indicate how precious this little prayer is to many, both young and old.

A dear old gentleman, over 90 years of age, infirm of body, but mentally as alert as ever in youth, was a frequent guest in the home of his nephew. The door of the guest chamber was left ajar when he retired, that he might the more readily call some member of the family should he be in need during the night. Before he retired he made his evening prayer and always audibly. And it was the child's prayer:

"Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray thee, Lord, my soul to keep.
If I should die before I wake,
I pray thee, Lord, my soul to take."

He was perfectly familiar with the Lord's Prayer and gifted in extemporary prayer, but in his old age no prayer was so precious to him as that first learned at his mother's knee.

In one of the great city hospitals, says the "Youth's Companion," a little girl of eight years awaited a most serious operation, the result of which would be either death, or life with restored health and happiness. The attendants expected a somewhat distressing scene when the ether was administered and were preparing themselves for the cries of fear that frequently occur at such a time. The moment came, and when the attendant approached with the ether, the child lay watching with close attention. Then, suddenly, instead of a cry from her lips, a most beautiful and winsome smile, like the opening of a flower, overspread her small white face. She closed her eyes and reverently repeated in a low sweet voice the child's prayer, "Now I lay me down to sleep," and so on through. There was silence for a moment as tear-filled eyes turned away. Then gently and confidently the serious work began, and the spirit of the little prayer fell as a benediction upon all present.—Exchange.

UNFEELING FAITH.

Faith and feeling are opposites. Feeling may be a snare; faith never is. God asks us to believe him without any feeling; he may, or he may not, give us certain feelings after we believe him, but we are to believe him anyway, just because he is, and because his Word is true. Commenting on the Scripture "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ," the Keswick Calendar quotes Dr. W. P. Mackay as saying: "I have had to do with many anxious inquirers, and I find the greatest stumbling-block of all is this: They wish to be able to feel faith. Even the telephone cannot let us see a sound; it can let us hear a sound. You might as well speak of hearing a sight as feeling faith. 'Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.'" Let us therefore turn forever away from our feelings, and face the precious Fact of Christ and the inviolable truthfulness of God's Word.—Sunday School Times.

IGNORANCE OF THE BIBLE.

Theoretically every man will acknowledge that a knowledge of the Bible is an essential part of a thorough education, which means in plain English, that no man can claim to be educated, who does not know the facts of the English Bible.

The reason for this position is that English literature is full of references based upon Scripture, so that unless a man knows what these references mean, he will not know what the writer means.

Those who have read "The Eclipse of Faith," will recall the Skeptic's Dream, where he found blank spaces scattered over nearly every page in his library, due to the fact that every reference to Scripture had been taken out.

Never before had he realized how Scripture reference had become the warp and woof of English literature. Scripture phrases and Scripture imagery have so entered into our language that one ignorant of those references would find it difficult to follow the writer.

That the Bible has, in a measure, come into its own, we all know. Never before have greater efforts been made to teach it than at present. The churches are emphasizing its study, and it forms a part of the course of study in many schools and colleges.

While this is true, it is also true that when we test the results of this wide-spread study of the Bible, we find the most ridiculous ignorance in too many instances.

Dr. Crisman, of a Missouri normal college, has been making some investigations along the line of Bible knowledge.

Here are some of the results of the examination of 1,800 high school graduates:

"Sixteen per cent of the high school students neither knew where Christ was born, nor the name of His mother. Sixty per cent knew not that Peter, James, and John enjoyed the larger confidence of Jesus. Seventy per cent did not know what to call the Sermon on the Mount. Sixty per cent did not know what Christ said about loving one's neighbor. Twelve per cent did not know the first clause of the Lord's Prayer. Sixty-five per cent did not know the Golden Rule. Thirty-five per cent thought that the Book of John was located very close to Revelation. In the following quotation from Lowell's 'Irene,' 'No want of faith that chills with side-long eye hath she; no jealousy, no 'Levite pride' that passeth by upon the other side,' eighty per cent did not know what story is here referred to in the Bible.

"The following are a few of the hundreds of humorous and pathetic examples of Biblical ignorance:

"Forty per cent thought Paul 'a book the Bible.'

"Twelve per cent thought Pilate 'a book the Bible.'

"Twenty-five per cent thought Pilate author of the Bible.'

"Twenty-five per cent thought James river.'

"Forty-five per cent thought Galilee river.'

"Seven per cent thought Agrippa 'an aple.'

"Thirty per cent thought Jude 'a king'

"Three per cent thought Herod 'an aple.'

"Six per cent thought Mark 'a king.'

"Nine per cent thought Samaria 'an athor.'

"Twelve per cent thought Peter 'a king'

"Nine per cent thought Peter 'a priest.'

"Six per cent thought Revelation 'a prince.'

"Six per cent thought Caiaphas 'an aple.'

"Twelve per cent thought Ephesians province.'

"Six per cent thought Martha 'a book the Bible.'

"Twenty-four per cent thought Alleluia blessing.'

"Twelve per cent thought Alleluia 'a lnoise.'

"Nine per cent thought Amen 'an plause.'

"Fifty per cent thought Amen 'a stop.'

"Thirty-three per cent thought Centur a century.'

"Fifteen per cent thought Centurion 'iddle point.'

"Nine per cent thought Elders 'bushes.'

"Thirty per cent thought Gethsemane ity of Egypt.'

"Twenty per cent thought immortal 'death.'

"Nine per cent thought immortal 'breath.'

"Twenty-five per cent thought resurrect 'the building of the temple.'

"Eighteen per cent thought scribes 'men.'

"Nine per cent thought tithes 'things ftened together.'

"Twenty-five per cent thought tithes 'n sionary money.'"—Selected.

"Heart-keeping," says Dr. Cuyler, "is much like housekeeping. There must be continual sweeping out of dirt, a daily waging of dishes and a perpetual battle with sorts of vermin. If heart-cleaning could be done up once for all, then the Christian might have an easy time of it. And just because assaults of subtle temptations are so constant and the uprisings of sinful passions are frequent, and the task of keeping the inward man what it ought to be is so difficult, man who begins a religious life gets discouraged and makes a wretched failure. The question with every Christian is: "Shall these cursed Amalekites of temptation burn up my spiritual possessions and overrun my soul? Shall outward assaults or inward weakness drive me to discouragement, and disgrace before my Master and before the world? shall they drive me to Jesus, who will give me the victory?"—Selected.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Ward.—Mrs. Mary Jane Fry Ward, widow of the late Daniel Ward, was born in 1851 and fell asleep in Christ March 7, 1925. She was united in marriage to Daniel Ward. This happy union was blessed with five children, one who preceded her to the great beyond, and four still living, three sons and one daughter. Mrs. Ward united with Canaan church and remained a faithful member until called to the higher life.

Those who knew her say of her that she was truly a good woman and lived her religion at home. We are all grieved over her death, as she always had a word for her friends. A good woman has left us. All her friends speak in the highest terms of her. She came to her church just as long as she was able.

Her funeral took place at Canaan church Sunday afternoon at two o'clock. Funeral service was conducted by Rev. C. E. Ridge, assisted by Rev. O. C. Loy, Jr., pastor of Canaan church, and Rev. C. H. Hill. The floral designs were beautiful. May the blessings of God rest with the bereaved families. May they all meet mother and grandmother in heaven, where partings are no more, Emma Ridge.

Mrs. Sallie Brooks Wilborn.—Death has again invaded the ranks of the First Methodist Protestant Church of High Point, and taken one of its choicest and sweetest spirits, Mrs. Sallie Brooks Wilborn, wife of the late Rev. John W. Wilborn, a well-known teacher and preacher of this section. To her large circle of friends as well as kindred, she was affectionately known as "Aunt Sallie." She had been an invalid for several years, but retained an unbounded interest in her church and was present at services three weeks ago. After an illness of only two days of pneumonia, the end came peacefully in the early hours of the morning of Tuesday, March 3, just one short year since her loved sister, Mrs. J. R. Reitzel, passed away. These sisters were "lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death were not far divided."

Born in Chatham county, N. C., October 24, 1853, Sallie Brooks grew to womanhood there and at Liberty, where she was happily married to Rev. John W. Wilborn in 1886. About 15 years later they removed to High Point, and made their home with Dr. and Mrs. J. R. Reitzel. After Mr. Wilborn's death in 1908 and the tragic accident which cost the life of Dr. Reitzel in 1914, she continued to reside in the Reitzel home, and being childless, she devoted herself to her sister's children, and loved them almost as dearly as their own mother. To these nieces and nephews, Mrs. Ben T. Moore, Messrs. Richard and Brooks Reitzel, and Miss Elizabeth Reitzel, the loss of her, who was a second mother, will be very keen and sorrowful.

Throughout life Mrs. Wilborn was a consecrated Christian. Converted at a tender age, she spent her life in service to her loved ones and to her Master. Upon coming to High Point she soon connected herself with the First Church, and never did it have a more faithful and loyal member. She belonged to the different societies, and when in strong health always attended the meetings. She loved her church and pastor, whoever he was, with unusual fervor and devotion, she loved the companionship of good men and women, and above all she loved to read God's Word and to listen to His ministers. Though frail of body and often suffering from pain, she insisted on coming to church, and was always assisted across the street and up the steps by one of her nephews. The sweet picture of frail and gentle "Aunt Sallie" leaning on the arm of one of the tall, stalwart Reitzel boys, or Ben Moore, will linger long in the memory of the members of this congregation.

Of a large family of brothers and sisters, only two, Messrs. Richard H. Brooks of Greensboro and J. M. Brooks of Coleridge, Randolph county, survive.

Funeral services were conducted in the home on Wednesday morning, March 4, by her pastor, Dr. Geo. R. Brown, and Dr. A. G. Dixon, president of the North Carolina Conference and a former pastor, both of whom paid high tribute to her worth and excellent character. Dr. Dixon based his remarks on the memorable passage of Jesus concerning Mary: "She hath done what she could." The church choir, with Mrs. Minnie P. Harrell at the piano, sang three of her favorite hymns, "How Firm a Foundation," "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," and "Asleep in Jesus."

The offering of flowers was remarkably handsome and profuse. The following close friends carried her body to its final rest: Messrs. H. A. Moffitt, E. L. Auman, J. A. Gray, V. W. Idol, J. E. Perryman, and C. C. Robbins.

This beautiful life had attained more than the allotted span of three score and ten years, and had accomplished its purpose: her mission on earth is fulfilled: her years of sacrifice and service, "the little, nameless, unremembered acts of kindness and of love," which constituted the life of a good woman, will live always in the hearts of those who knew and loved her. Instead of grief and lamentation, may not those nearest and dearest to her rather take courage and inspiration from the message of the Book which was her daily guide and comfort: "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like hers."

"Life's race is well run,
Life's work is well done,
Life's crown is well won."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—MARCH 22.

The Forty Days and the Ascension.

Lesson Text: Luke 24:36-53.

Golden Text: Luke 24:48.

The Central Truth: The presence of Jesus is the supreme privilege of His followers, and it is the sure guarantee of joy, victory, and success.

Scriptural Points.

1. Previous to the events of this lesson Jesus had appeared to Mary Magdalene, to the other women, to Peter, and to the two disciples on the road to Emmaus. Verses 36-48 of this lesson give account of His fifth appearance. The same is recorded in John 20:19-23. Verses 49-53 give account of His last appearance, which Luke repeats with some variations in Acts 1:4-9.

2. John states that on this occasion the doors were shut, or "barred," for fear of the Jews. It appeared that the enemies of Jesus had threatened the disciples—hence this act of self-protection.

3. "Jesus himself stood in the midst of them." His appearance was sudden and startling. No wonder the disciples were "terrified and affrighted." Their first thought was that He was a ghost.

4. What scared them the most of all was the fact that Jesus must have entered through the walls, for all avenues of entrance had been closed. They did not understand that the risen body of Jesus was no longer a natural body but a spiritual body, and subject to spiritual laws. So Jesus could as easily as a spirit enter the closed room.

5. Jesus did three things to reassure these terrified disciples. First, He spoke to them, "Peace be unto you." These gentle and loving words ought to have quieted their wrought-up sensibilities, but they didn't. He next showed them His hands and feet, and the print of nails. And John says He showed them also His pierced side. All this did not reassure them completely. Next He ate before them. It is not likely that Jesus was at all hungry, but He ate to make clear to them that He was the same human Being Who had been with them for three years.

6. Jesus now presents Himself to His disciples as the fulfillment of prophecy. He no doubt quoted those prophecies that had been so recently fulfilled in His death and resurrection.

7. He also mentions the purpose of His sacrifice for sin, "that repentance and remission of sin should be preached in his name." His death and resurrection would be the burden of the gospel throughout the church age.

8. He enjoins them to wait at Jerusalem until they receive the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, which came down on the day of Pentecost, about ten days after.

9. The ascension took place at Bethany where He spent so many delightful evenings. He was taken up to heaven while He was bestowing a blessing upon the eleven apostles. It was the blessing of abounding joy that He imparted to them. It was an abiding and outspoken joy that filled their souls. For it is written that they "were continuously in the temple, praising and blessing God."

Practical Points.

1. Jesus still meets with those who love and adore His name. For He has given this pledge: "For where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

2. Peace is the fundamental blessing of the gospel. It is peace with God by means of the forgiveness of sins. It is peace of conscience by means of the removal of the burden of guilt. And it is peace with mankind by means of taking all enmity out of the heart.

3. The resurrected body will be quite different from the natural body. The Apostle Paul describes the wonderful change in 1 Cor. 15:42-44: "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body."

4. The Holy Spirit is the appointed Interpreter of the Holy Scriptures. Jesus calls Him "the Spirit of truth," and says of Him, "He shall testify of me," and, "He shall teach you all things."

5. Joy is the uppermost grace. It flashes from the eye, beams from the countenance, and gushes from the lips. It is above all the visible grace, the grace that Barnabas saw, as mentioned in Acts 11:23. This joy of salvation in its fulness is "unspeakable, and full of glory."

OFF FOR GOBI DESERT.

A big party of scientists from the American Museum of Natural History of New York are on their way to the Gobi Desert, in Mongolia, China. Their leader, Roy Chapman Andrews, has been in China for several months getting ready for the expedition. The real trip to the desert will begin in May, with 150 camels and scores of automobiles. In the fossil beds of Gobi the explorers will search for relics that they hope will show the origin of man and animals. This is the fourth Asiatic expedition of the American Museum. On the third expedition, in 1923, twenty-five fossil dinosaur eggs were found.

—The City Council of Chicago has voted to buy the street car system of that city from the private owners and to make large extensions and improvements. The plan must be approved by vote of the people before it becomes effective. The referendum will be held April 7. Under the plan Chicago would spend nearly half a billion dollars on its street car system in forty years and would then own the system free of debt.

—The Peking government of China has paid foreign nations, including the United States, an indemnity of $30,000. This represents damage caused by Chinese bandits in May, 1923.

—The South Dakota Legislature has passed a resolution for an amendment to the State Constitution that would abolish the two-house Legislature in that State. The proposed amendment would substitute one small body, something like that in cities that have the commission form of government.

Card of Thanks.

Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Morris desire to express their grateful thanks to the many good friends of Littleton and community for the kindness shown them during Mrs. Morris's illness. They want to thank Drs. Putney and Justice for their splendid service.

Proctor.—Tuesday morning, March 10, 1925, death claimed as its victim one of our best known and most highly respected church members, Brother H. O. Proctor. He had been a member and a very dear friend of Fairfield Methodist Protestant Church since his youth. In 1920 he lost his wife and companion, Eister Z. A. Proctor, and since that time Brother Proctor had been in declining health. He lost interest in the things of this world and he seemed to look forward to the time when he could begin life with her again. For five years he waited and then God called him home. He was 73 years old. He leaves a host of friends, seven children, 23 grandchildren, and two sisters to mourn their loss. He was laid to rest in Fairfield cemetery. The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Shelby.—Our work here has been moving along as usual since the last report from this charge. The Sunday school has been holding its own with slight increases. Interest and attendance at the church services have been fairly good.

On Sunday, March 8, the pastor was called away to assist in a funeral service at the morning hour, and in his absence Rev. Caleb Hoyle, a retired minister of the M. E. Church, who resides in Shelby, occupied the pulpit and, according to reports of the sermon, delivered a very helpful discourse.

Last Sunday was a very good day with usual interest and attendance at the services. Brother Joe Kennedy, the assistant superintendent of the Sunday school, presided over the Sunday school in the absence of the superintendent. The question of preparing an Easter service was discussed, and some of the women volunteered to train the children for the service. The work of preparing for the service will probably begin next Sunday afternoon. Brother Kennedy always puts interest in the Sunday school when he is called upon to conduct the exercises.

Brother W. C. Wright, one of our members who suffered a very serious injury to his leg in a tractor accident about a month ago, has recovered sufficiently to return to his home from the Shelby Public Hospital and is recovering as rapidly as could be expected.

We have completed arrangements for our revival meeting which will begin on Wednesday night after the third Sunday in April. Rev. C. E. Phillips, of Lincoln, has been engaged to assist the pastor in the meeting. Our people here have been called upon to begin preparation for the meeting with the purpose in mind that we desire a real revival of religion in the hearts of the members and the awakening of the community in general in spiritual things. The one great need of our church and community is a revival of religion, according to the opinion of the pastor. We feel fortunate in securing Brother Phillips to do the preaching for us in the meeting and we are expecting great results if our people will yield themselves to the will of the Lord.

The church here was favored last Sunday night with a visit from one of the speakers of the College endowment campaign, Rev. N. G. Bethea, of Lexington. Brother Bethea brought us a most helpful and inspiring address in the interest of religious education in general and the High Point College in particular. At the close of his address, Brother Bethea presented the matter to the congregation. The quota assigned our church is truth and mercy.—Horace Bushnell.

$150, or three shares. A committee was selected to canvass the membership of the church in an effort to raise the quota or as much of it as possible.

Brother Bethea made a very helpful talk to the Christian Endeavor society at their meeting last Sunday night, giving the members some points in conducting the meetings of the society.

All of our regular services will be held next Sunday.

EDISON'S FANTASTIC CONCEPTION OF MAN.

Edison has investigated much and thought much and has mastered some subjects, but when he came to investigate the human body he found a subject that was too difficult for him. He found what a writer of long ago re-ferred, that "man is wonderfully and fearfully made." Edison has become accustomed to deal with complex subjects, but the complexity of the human body and the powers of the human soul defied all his efforts at analysis. Still his active mind could not refrain from action and he proceeded to weave a theory where he could not build a rational theory.

Hear him:

"How do we remember? Well, now, let us see. In the first place we do not remember. A certain group of our little people do this for us. They live in that part of our brain which becomes known as the 'fold of Broca.' Broca discovered and proved that everything we remember goes on in a little strip not much more than a quarter of an inch long. That is where the little people live who keep our records for us."

According to Edison's conception the living human body is a great aggregation, a great colony or city, we might call it, made up of millions of intelligences which he calls the "little peoples." These little peoples are experts in their own work, but cannot do the work of each other. "The little peoples that compose your stomach cells can perform miracles of chemistry that no chemist can perform, but you would drop dead if they were to tap into your heart and try to function as a pump. A few million intelligences have nothing to do from the time you are born until you die but to act as your memory."

Not all these little memory people remember the same thing, he says. "There may be twelve or fifteen shifts that change about and go on duty at different times like men in a factory. I infer this from the fact that we sometimes have to send for the particular ones that have the records we want."

Mr. Edison is a great man and an especially great inventor, but our opinion is that in the role of philosopher he is a failure.

—Brother W. A. Bowman has our profound sympathy in the loss of his excellent wife. She died at the Wesley Long Hospital last Monday after a long fight for health. She was in the hospital last November and went home improved; but disease gained upon her and she was brought back to the hospital to end the struggle for life. The funeral was held at Pleasant Union church on Tuesday, conducted by Rev. T. M. Johnson.

—Proximity Baptist church was burned last Sunday night. Fortunately the congregation has a new and better church about completed.

—Tennessee now has a law forbidding teachers in the state controlled schools to "teach any theory that denies the story of the divine creation of man as taught in the Bible and to teach instead that man has descended from a lower order of animals." There seems to be very good ground for prohibiting such teaching as anything more than a theory, for no man knows or can know how God created man.

The New Grace Church.—This morning's Daily News shows a picture of the new church to be erected soon by the Grace congregation. The plans were drawn by Mr. Hobart Upjohn, of New York. The style is colonial. The dimensions are 42 by 104 feet with a Sunday school building in the rear to be 84 by 32 feet. The steeple will be over 100 feet high. The cost is expected to be about $130,000. We congratulate our brethren of Grace upon their prospects, and hope that no untoward happening will prevent the early realization of their hopes.

Voting on the Union Question.—The proposed basis of union between the northern and southern Methodists must be approved by three fourths of the annual conferences of the southern church to make it binding. The first southern conference, the Baltimore, has just voted on the question. By a vote of 141 to 137 the conference put itself on record as opposed to the union. The vote taken was regarded with intense interest by thousands of Methodists gathered from many parts of the country. The presiding bishop, Mr. Candler, is strongly opposed to the union on the proposed basis and perhaps on any basis.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

"MOTHERS' DAY" AN OFFERING OF "STRANGE FIRE."

By Mrs. M. R. Emmens, Atlanta, Ga.

For some time the impression has been deepening in me that in the celebration of "Mother's Day," the church is again culpable in offering "strange fire." How often the god of this world has dimmed the spiritual ear and understanding of God's children by some sentiment that has not the backing of God's Word! Any subterfuge the enemy will use to get the eye off Christ and rob Him of His honor. All mothers who are in Christ must resist this infringement on His day when they pause to think. The Lord will see to it that godly mothers will be honored but He does not call for the church to give His day to their homage.

In the old dispensation, the seventh day belonged absolutely to Him. In the new dispensation, He expressly calls it the Lord's Day. So for the church to put itself on record as having added a new day for celebration looks like flagrant insolence to the teaching of the precious Book, where we are told in all things He shall have the pre-eminence, and again, "my glory and honor will I not give to another."

The music, alas, is too often not worship, but strange fire. To the ear tuned to hear His praise, it must sound like blasphemy when the soloist in the choir sings,

"I know whose prayer can make me whole,
Mother o'mine, Mother o'mine!"

I believe the Lord would have attention called to this new apostasy on the part of the church, for He is grieved that those called by His name do not yet understand that the first day of the week is the Lord's Day and not "Mothers' Day."

THE CULTIVATED CONVERSATIONAL VOICE.

By Rev. Luther K. Long.

In the intimate relationships of life—in the home and among friends—the average person finds the largest and most important sphere for the use of his voice. Here it may be sweeter than music, and more persuasive than eloquence.

The voice of the accomplished singer, however good naturally, has undergone discipline. All agreeable and impressive public readers and speakers are such because their voices, some of them originally very ordinary, have been improved by persistent training.

A voice may be by nature shrill, excessively loud, monotonous, or contentious. In various combinations these qualities conspire to cause many persons, otherwise attractive, to make a bad impression. How often do we—by the use of these same qualities—irritate, antagonize, or put to sleep, those whom we would persuade or entertain?

Is it possible to make of the every-day conversational voice a more pleasing and effective instrument with which to express our thoughts and feelings? It is possible; and, if a person finds out what qualities to seek and what defects to overcome, he may apply himself to positive improvement—finding the task not too difficult.

Clear and distinct in utterance, medium to low in pitch, mild or strong in force as occasion may call for—these are the qualities of voice one should endeavor to acquire.

A disagreeable manner of speaking is often due to a defect or disease of the nose or throat—readily relieved by treatment or an operation. Or the unpleasantness may be only a bad habit, the result of thoughtless imitation, or the failure to maintain a self-respecting mental attitude.

If one thinks before speaking—not only considering what words but also what sentiments to use—the voice will be better controlled and will more perfectly accomplish the speaker's purpose.

Listening to cultivated voices while associating with refined people is an excellent practice. Special vocal exercises, under the direction of a competent critic, will surely produce marked improvement.

Character is the most important single factor in voice cultivation because manner and speech are but the overflow, or fragrance of character. The angry person shows anger in his voice. If you are refined, sincere, gracious, your voice will exhibit these qualities.

One should not, however, count too much on the unconscious, automatic regulation of the voice. An early beginning, and faithful practice, are necessary to eliminate faults and to acquire excellences.

To use mild speech, to give the soft answer, to say the kind word, to speak the truth forcibly and in love—these are every-day requirements and opportunities. They can be met successfully only by the person whose every-day conversational voice has received adequate cultivation.

THE POWER OF THE NAME.

"His name through faith in his name hath made this man strong." Acts 3:16.

A missionary in South Africa has told a story of her experience in the use of that great name. The story has a simplicity and power that makes one feel all afresh that we have not used that great name as we may and should. She was traveling to Bechuanaland, camping by the banks of a badly swollen river. The discomforts of heavy rains, bad roads, poor food and stinging insects were very great. But sorer far was the moral havoc being wrought within sight, by the wayside canteen where liquors were sold to the hundreds of poor dark-skinned natives. The distress of the situation seemed unbearable. In her almost despair of soul, she was drawn away to pray, then in calmer mood was led to go over toward the canteen.

Her thought was directed to one man, very old, very poor, clad in a few filthy rags, with a bloated face, bleared eyes, and loathsome sores, all the result of his drinking the cheap, adulterated liquor kept in the canteen. He was just staggering towards the canteen when she called him. And as he stopped to speak to her she asked him why he drank when it was ruining him.

With a wild laugh he said: "Why, I can't help it. I am enslaved by this vile white man's drink. I would gladly quit, but I can't." And she told him there was a way out into freedom from his slavery. It was in a name. "A name," he said with a touch of awe coming over him. "Yes, a name," she said. And would she tell him that name? Praying for guidance, she told him as simply as she could the story of the gospel, and of the power in the name of Jesus. And the old black wreck repeated the name, "Jesus," which was but a new sound to him. And they knelt in prayer among the trees and parted.

Her journey took her away, but weeks after, on returning, she met the old black man's wife, and from her gleaned the fascinating sequel to the story. The poor old enslaved heathen man had gone away, and when the fever for drink came upon him he had with great earnestness repeated the name of Jesus over and over. And in his simple speech the fever left him, the craving for the drink went away, and he felt as if he had never tasted the stuff. He said his mouth felt clean as a little child's and his body had become strong and well.

One day he had allowed an old drinking companion to persuade him to go with him. As they started toward the canteen the old fever for drink came upon him. He could feel it burning within his body. He tried to break away from his companion, but the old slavery gripped him anew and held him fast. Then he remembered, and with all the earnestness of his soul he repeated the name over, "Jesus, Jesus, Jesus." And he said, "A coolness came over my brain and my body, and I was free again, and turned quickly away."—S. D. Gordon, in Quiet Talks About the Tempter.

WORLD CELEBRATION.

The nations of the world will be invited to take part in the big celebration that is already being planned for the two hundredth birthday anniversary of George Washington, February 22, 1932. That was announced by President Coolidge in a statement telling of the purposes of the commission that he has appointed to plan for that event. He said, in part:

"The two hundredth anniversary of General Washington's birth will be an occasion of such significance, not only to our country, but to the entire world, that it is manifestly fitting that the American nation should appropriately observe it. But beyond this, it is felt that as the life, the career and the achievements of Washington belong, not to a single nation, but to all humanity, it is proper that the nation founded under his leadership should invite all other nations and peoples to join it in the observance of this anniversary.

"For the present, it is impossible more specifically to suggest the purposes and character of the commemoration which it is proposed to arrange. The commission will in due time take proper measures to enlist the interest of the nations in the observance of this inspiring anniversary."

THE GOSPEL OF FUN.

The gospel of fun is not the gospel of Jesus Christ, nor of Paul, nor of Peter, nor of John, nor of any of the evangelists or prophets. They were all too serious for fun—for lightness, jest, or pun. One would hardly believe that one of these modern pulpit jesters had "been with Jesus," the "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Jesus was no comedian. Paul was no vaudeville performer. Peter was no clown. These men had visions sweeping out into the eternities. Saw a race of dying men and women moving on to hell. No time for jest, and pun—for the cheap attractions of the stage. They felt the call of God, for humanity, and not of position, or of the applause of men, of popularity, or of financial remuneration. "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," is not the language of a comedian, but the words of a soldier, a martyr—of one ready and willing to die if need be. When a great battle is on, as Waterloo, Gettysburg, or the Marne—when the fate of empires is hanging in the balance, is no time for jest, lightness, and fun. In the language of Scott, it is, "Charge, Chester, charge, on, Stanley, on!"—or of Burns, "Welcome to your gory bed, or to victory!" And so the true herald of the gospel feels that when the battle is on it is not the fate of empires at stake, but the eternal destiny of immortal souls that is at stake, and that lightness, jest, and fun have no place in his soul, but grim determination and fight to the finish.

If the modern pulpit jester, vaudeville performer, and buffoon, could be prevailed on to sit down quietly for one hour and see himself in contrast with Jesus and the apostles, he might feel like soliloquizing, "What fools we mortals be!"

Jesus said, "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." If a whole lot of this modern gospel(?) of fun is not idle words, or worse, it would be difficult to find any. "Neither foolish talking nor jesting," said Paul. And as foolish preaching was not practiced by Paul, surely he would condemn it in others. Surely there is a time to laugh, as Solomon said, but he did not say when, but there is no intimation either by precept or example, in the book, for turning the pulpit into a stage, nor the sanctuary into a playhouse. If Jesus were to return in the flesh and visit some of our modern churches of fun, it would not be a surprise if the "whip of small cords" were used again to cleanse the temple. Those eyes of fire flash divine indignation because of the desecration of a holy place and a holy service. But the day is coming when all these things will be tried by fire, and the chaff, hay, and stubble will be burnt up.

But some superficial advocate of levity in the sanctuary may say, "Oh! I don't believe in 'long-faced' Christians." Well, who does? This scribe has never heard of anybody that does. The most sunny, bright faces that we have ever seen were neither "long-faced" nor "fool-faced." A person can be cheerful, bright, and sunny, without being light, frivolous and foolish, much less clownish and coarse.

The gospel of fun never carries Holy Ghost conviction to the heart of sinners. Never makes a sinner feel like he is facing the Judgment Day or drawing near to perdition. He may sit and "laugh with those that laugh" as his own ridiculous folly is set off with pun and jest. But it reaches no deeper than his risibilities, and he goes home to continue his sinful course without any special concern about his soul. The Holy Spirit is not a jester. Neither does he work through "quips and cranks and wanton wiles."

Now we are not inveighing against spontaneous, dignified humor of a high order. Though even this, it seems should be scant in the pulpit. The true preacher is an ambassador for the King of heaven; and the matter in hand is too momentous for jest and fun.

As Barnum said that he had learned that "the people loved to be humbugged," in matter of shows, so it seems that some of them love to be humbugged in preaching. Of course they do not know this, and would resent the imputation with considerable warmth. It is not a question as to what the people want, but what they need. God has never consulted a foolish, wicked world as to what it would have in the way of preaching. Neither does any true herald of the cross do so. God says, "preach . . . the preaching that I bid thee," not what unregenerate, worldly, foolish persons enjoy. A great deal that is passed off as the word of God is the "gospel of fun," a shameful travesty on the gospel of Jesus Christ, enough "to make the angels weep," and Satan chuckle in high glee.

For a man to ascend the pulpit and begin to jest about himself and his wife—that she is "boss," etc., etc., ad infinitum, is foreign to the gospel of Jesus Christ. As a matter of fact, he is liable to be lying, for if his wife were "boss" he would not be likely to tell it. Of course there are apt to be enough fools present to laugh and giggle, and he and his wife—if she be present—giggle with them. And the refreshing(?) performance sometimes ends with, "Well, Amen! Praise the Lord." And I confess I have never been able to see the pertinency of saying "Amen," and "Praise the Lord," over foolishness and jesting—lying. But so goes "the gospel of fun." We've even seen some of these clerical comedians do some "high kicking," and snatch up a book and throw it wildly half across the house. Then would follow an outburst of laughing, giggling, hand-clapping, waving of handkerchiefs, and lusty "Amens." We've often wondered if such gospellers of fun know what Amen means, and where it should come in. The whole performance would be amusing if it were not so serious. But to the would-be devout worshiper it becomes painfully disgusting. But it is often said in extenuation of this fault, "Oh, it gets the people interested and draws the crowd." But this is simply a ruse of the devil. There is nothing interests and draws the crowd like the plain, simple gospel—the word of God—earnestly preached by a man "full of faith and the Holy Ghost?" We heard a plain layman tell a preacher not long since that if he could not interest the people without resorting to the jest and joke method that he had better quit. It was plainly and bluntly put, but we felt like saying "Amen" then. The remark hit the center and the preacher said no more. We remember seeing a certain religious paper some years ago that carried a sermon each week, with illustrations of the preacher jumping so high that it caused his coat-tail to fly up. And the paper said in all seriousness, if the preacher's coat-tail did not fly up, he did not have the "fire." This was one, at least, of the evidences of the true prophet, to jump so as to fling up his coat-tail. This would hardly come under the head of the "gospel of fun," but the gospel of jump. But the two seem to be related, belong to the flesh, the human, the comic. But time would fail to tell of all the antics we have seen performed by these clerical comedians. One we have seen pull off coat and vest, and prance from one end of the platform to the other in a waltzing, mincing, springy manner, with hands on his hips and "sweat." And as he wore no suspenders we felt nervous about the possibility of his pants' slipping off his hips. It was quite interesting to look at the performance, but I never could see how it added anything to a gospel message. I am sure it detracted. I have seen others jump, or climb over the chancel rail and run up and down the aisle, or back and forth in the altar space, and throw books and flowers like mad men. If this added anything to the word I was never able to see it. Detraction. I always feel like hanging my head when the preacher attempts to play the comedian or clown. It is utterly foreign to anything we can conceive of as belonging to Jesus and the apostles.

All this can hardly be called the "gospel of fun." The gospel of the ridiculous would be nearer the truth. The two are closely related. Neither is the gospel of Jesus. Such performance may bring some cheap notoriety. May cause fools and ignoramus to applaud. But what does Jesus think of all such vaudevillism performed in His name? Enough to make angels blush and hide their faces in shame. What more can be said? Language fails. How much the church has lost and is losing because of such travesties on the gospel cannot be estimated. But the loss must be fearful. A whip of small cords is needed to cleanse the temple. It is time that devout, sensible people were asserting themselves to weed out all such clerical impositions and mountebanks. J. F. Dosier.

A MINISTER'S CODE.

A code of ethics for ministers, believed the first to be drawn up in this country, has been announced in New Haven, Conn., by the New Haven Association of Congregational Ministers, which includes 50 Congregational clergymen. Of the numerous codes now known to exist for many trades and professions, this is said to be the only ministerial code extant. The code deals with the minister's work, his relation to his parish and to his profession.

With the statement that "while it is fair to argue that for the ministerial profession a code of ethics may or should be superfluous," William G. Lathrop, registrar of the association, announced the code with this preamble:

"The work of the ministry brings its own peculiar responsibilities and temptations. We believe that a statement of what we consider to be the proper ethical standards of our calling will be valuable for our own guidance and helpful to young men entering the profession, it will also suggest to the public what they may rightfully expect of a minister."

Among the numerous duties and responsibilities enumerated, are the following:

As a minister controls his own time he should make it a point of honor to give full service to his parish.

"As a public interpreter of divine relations and human duty, the minister should tell the truth as he sees it and present it tactfully and constructively.

"It is unethical for the minister to use sermon material prepared by another without acknowledging the source from which it comes.

"As an ethical leader in the community, it is incumbent on the minister to be scrupulously honest, avoid debts and meets his bills promptly.

"It is unethical for a minister to break his contract made with the church.

"As a professional man the minister should make his service primary and the remuneration secondary. His efficiency, however, demands that he should receive a salary adequate to the work he is expected to do and commensurate with the scale of living in that parish which he serves.

"It is unethical for the minister to engage in other lines of remunerative work without the knowledge and consent of the church or its official board.

"The confidential statements made to a minister by his parishioners are privileged and should never be divulged without the consent of those making them.

"Part of the minister's service as a leader of this people is to reserve sufficient time for serious study in order thoroughly to apprehend his message, keep abreast of current thought and develop his intellectual and spiritual capacities."—The Burlington Daily Times.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE BUDGETS.

When people pay toward the annual conference budget, and the General Conference Budget they have a right to know just where their money goes. We are not publishing a wall chart this year showing these facts, so this article is published that any one who decides to do so may clip it, and refer to it betimes to know just where all moneys paid on the budgets go.

The Annual Conference Budget.

In this we will just give totals as found in Conference Journal, page 78.

1. Church Extension	$10,000
2. Superannuates	5,000
3. President's Salary	3,000
4. Debt on President's Parsonage	550
5. For Up-keep of Parsonage	300
6. For Field Secretary of Y. P. Work and Expenses	1,700
7. Conference Expenses and Incidentals	550

The General Conference Budget.

For the present quadrennium the following is the percentage distribution of the General Conference budget.

1. The Board of Young People's Work	$9,000	Per cent
2. The Board of Foreign Missions	25
3. The Board of Home Missions	23
4. The Board of Education	23
5. The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society	12
6. The Woman's Home Missionary Society	6
7. Salaries	2
8. Superannuates	4
9. Children's Home	1
10. Home for the Aged	1
11. American Bible Society	1

12. Contingent Fund

With these facts before you any one of our workers can explain to the people just where the money goes.

Faithfully yours,

A. G. Dixon.

OUR GOAL FOR EASTER, $115,000.

Our slogan, "The Apportionment in Full From Every Charge."

Some Questions Answered.

Notwithstanding the many articles which have appeared in this column since the recent General Conference, some of our friends still ask for information. Perhaps there are others who still have unanswered questions concerning certain phases of the same matter.

Question number one. What is the apportionment from the budget for the Board of Home Missions? Answer, One hundred and fifteen thousand dollars, twenty-three per cent of the budget fixed by the General Conference for General Conference purposes.

Question number two. Is the apportionment for the Woman's Home Missionary Society included in this amount? Answer, No. The Woman's Home Missionary Society has been given an apportionment of thirty thousand dollars, no part of which is expended through the Board of Home Missions, all being used by the Woman's Home Missionary Society in projects developed under its own management.

Question number three. What is the relationship existing between these two Home Missionary agencies? Answer. There is no organic relationship existing between the Board of Home Missions, and the Woman's Home Missionary Society, each organization operating under a separate management, and having its own independent charter.

Question number four. From what sources is the income of the Board of Home Missions received? Answer. Our inquirers are respectfully referred to page 92, paragraph 8, in the discipline of 1924, which reads as follows: "The Board of Home Missions is hereby authorized to raise money by assessment apportioned by the General Conference to the several annual conferences, and by them to the several charges; by Easter services in the Sunday schools, at which freewill offerings shall be made for the support of the work of the board; and by making such other appeals to the church as the work of board shall require, and the judgment of the board shall deem to be wise."

Question number five. What credit is allowed on the General Conference budget for these contributions? Our inquirers here are referred to the Journal of the General Conference, 1924, page 93, item three. "The three boards of Foreign Missions, Home Missions, and Education shall be entitled to their special days offerings, plus their percentage of the undesignated budget. These special days offerings shall accrue to the boards as they shall be designated when remitted by the churches, provided that in offerings made on these special days no board shall receive from any one charge more than its percentage of participation in the General Conference budget." Your Easter offering will apply to the payment of your budget apportionment up to twenty-three per cent of your total apportionment for the General Conference budget. Any sum in excess of that amount is to be sent in, but is to be credited to the undesignated budget.

Designate your Easter offering, so that it may be placed to the credit of the Board of Home Missions. You will get full credit on your budget apportionment, and we will profit by the contributions of your people for home missions.

Question number six. To whom shall the Easter offering be sent? To your annual conference treasurer in every case.

Winston-Salem.—The monthly meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society was held at the home of Mrs. W. D. Coble, South Main street, with 20 members present. The president, Mrs. R. A. Hunter, presided; the pastor led the devotional period. The reports of the different circles for the month of February were very encouraging; $40 was received into the treasury. The society pledged $100 to be used at an early date toward some repair work on the Sunday school rooms.

At the close of the business session the hostess, assisted by Mrs. McCall, served ice cream and cake.

Miss Jacque Gwyn was hostess to the Mission Band on Saturday afternoon, March 14. A large number of the members were present. Miss Frances Martin, the president, conducted the devotionals. A short business session was held; $9 was paid into the treasury. An interesting program was rendered, consisting of piano solos and readings. The hostess, assisted by Miss Joem Davis, served refreshments. The April meeting will be held at the home of Miss Margaret Huffman on Oak street.

One of the most impressive of the Sunday services is that held the first of each month, because the main feature of the service is the administration of the Lord's Supper. The first Sunday in March the pastor delivered a short communion message on "Christ Our Passover;" a quartette sang "Olive's Brow," and as usual the Lord's Supper was administered.

The Sunday evening services, which are evangelistic, have been unusually well attended recently, a large number of visitors being present.

The Wednesday evening prayer service is becoming more and more interesting, and the attendance has increased. Last week Mr. Hunter began a series of lessons on the main Bible characters. This character study of the leaders in Old Testament times will be looked forward to each Wednesday night, and the ones who attend regularly will receive the greatest benefit.

The Baraca class is arranging to give a play, "The Mock Trial," the proceeds of which will be applied on their pledge of $200 to the College.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Hauser have the sympathy of the entire church and community in the death of their son, Horace B. Hauser, who died as the result of injuries received when struck by an automobile several weeks ago.

(Consecration Meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

Every church member should learn in order that he may be able to teach others. This is one phase, often forgotten, of personal work (v. 2).

The church challenges to sacrifice. It is founded upon sacrifice. Its own spirit is sacrifice. The church does not beg; she demands (v. 3).

The church is right in expecting that its members study the Bible that they may "handle aright" (R. V.) the word of truth. We fail because we do not know how to use the sword of the Spirit (v. 15).

The church expects that our lives shall be pure vessels, "meet for the Master's use." Let us lay this to heart (v. 21).

Church Night.

Make this "Church Night" in your society. Ask the officers of the church, Bible school and its various organizations to visit your meeting and occupy reserved seats. One part of the program should be given to talks from this group on "What the church Expects from Its Young People." The Endeavorers themselves may then speak on the subject, "What the Young People Expect from the Church." Advertise the meeting well.

The Leader's Talk.

This is consecration meeting and we ought to make the most of it. Christian Endeavor is not the church; it is merely associated with the church as an expedient avenue of activity for the young people. Every active Endeavorer is a member of the church, and as such must be vitally concerned in his duty to it. The church, in turn, has a right to expect certain things of every one of us, its members.

The church is the body of Christ. He is its head. What the church expects of you and of me, then, is just what the great head of the church expects of me—and that is a great deal. Yet, when a Christian thinks of what Jesus did for him, he is ungrateful indeed if he is not inspired by these thoughts to do his utmost for his Master. "It is enough for the disciple if he be as his Lord."

Every one here tonight knows at least some one thing the church should expect of him. Let every one be frank and say what it is. Then, after we have talked about our responsibilities to the church, we shall have a season of prayer, asking God to help each one of us to do his full duty.

Christian Living a Battle, not a Landslide.

Paul did not want Timothy to expect to take things too easily; neither does our Master expect us to do so today. We must be willing to suffer hardship, to do what needs to be done in the church, with concentration and consecration. And, as with Timothy, so with us; the results we see will amply repay us for our efforts. And we will see splendid results if we throw ourselves into the Master's service, unafraid of doing too much for Him and His church.

The Master knows who are His, of course; those who are building upon Him as the one true foundation. If our lives are built upon this foundation, they will square with Him. Then we will treat our Master right, and also our fellow-men. Let's make every effort to make the building we erect conform to the foundation. The Head of the church expects this of us.

"The Lord shall give thee understanding in all things" is a word too often unappreciated. The disciple is to be learning more all the time, which means that he should be doing more continually, too. The Christian who refuses to learn anything more from God's word, or from the leadership of His Spirit, is a poor disciple. Paul expected Timothy, and Jesus expects us, to be on the alert always for greater and greater service in His cause.

Living Up to Church Privileges.

The church expects me to live a life hid with Christ in God, and to emulate His example. Our ideal is no earthly saint, but the one true ideal, Jesus, our Master. It isn't easy to live such a life, by any means, but it is by the one means of consecration to our Lord and Master. "So let your light shine before men that others, seeing your good works, may glorify your Father who is in heaven."

The church expects me to give, of self, substance and service. My money is just so much of myself, and I must gladly and generously give it that the gospel story may be told at home and abroad. I must not be afraid of giving too much in effort, either, for the kingdom grows by generous service. And the joy that comes from such threefold giving is ample reward for all that it costs.

The church and the Christian Endeavor society expect me to strive to do whatever Jesus would have me do. The word spells volumes for the consecrated young Christian. Today I live so well, but tomorrow I must live better, and the day following, better yet. I must always be striving onward and upward to higher and better things, if I would do my duty and render my proper service to the church.

The church expects me to be evangelistic. It has a right to expect me to read the Word, find out how Jesus and Paul and Peter won souls to the Way, and then to follow in their steps. By being evangelistic in this intimate, personal way, I win friends for Christ, and thus advance His kingdom. If we who are in the church do not win others to this divine organization, they will not be won.

The church expects me to train myself continually for better and better service to Him. I am to work on committees in the Endeavor society that some day I may be capable of working on a committee in the church. I am to accept office in the Endeavor society, or in the Bible school, to prepare myself for yet greater usefulness in the church later on.

The church expects me to teach. Character is developed when we are young, to a large extent. If we are active and earnest in learning, we will be active and earnest in teaching some day. The Bible school teacher has a wonderful opportunity to develop himself, and to bring the unsearchable riches of God's word to those who are under his instruction. You can never measure the good that will come from consecrated teaching.

The church expects me to know why I am a member of the body of Christ. I am to be able to give a reason for the hope that is in me. I must know by what steps I came into the church—hearing, believing, repenting, confessing, obeying through baptism—and I must know that I am rejoicing in the gift of the Holy Spirit. All these things are essential for my own Christian development, as well as for the purpose of winning others to follow the Master's way.

The church expects me to see Christ continually in His body, the church. What I do, I am not doing for the sake of an organization or machinery, but for His sake. He died for me, I am saved through the shedding of His blood, and He is heart-broken if I fail to keep Him in mind and in heart as the Head of His church. If we visualize Him, through faith, we will not, we can not, go far astray.

The church expects me to be 100 per cent "for Christ and the church." No other organization or institution can take its place. It must be first. If we live for the Master, we will live for His church. The church will be victorious only as its members live up to its expectations.

NOTICE!

All delegates to the Branch Meeting, to be held in Winston-Salem April 7-9, who wish entertainment, will please forward name and address to Mrs. B. K. Millaway, 910 Carolina Avenue, Winston-Salem, at once.

LETTER TO THE CONGREGATIONS OF THE PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE.

To the Members and Friends of the Congregation of the Methodist Protestant Church—Greetings.

The president of the General Conference has called upon our entire denomination to make the week of April 5 to 12 a special Sacrificial Week and to give the money we save during that week by deliberate sacrifice as a special gift to the benevolences of our church.

As your president, I am asking the churches of our conference to give at least during that week one-tenth of our General Conference budget. That will net the budget $5,000. Whatever you give will apply on your local budget for benevolences.

The week that has been designated marks the anniversary of Gethsemane, Pilate's Hall and Calvary. Since He suffered so much for us, we ought gladly to sacrifice for Him. Give up every luxury for that week and carry your spirit of sacrifice even to the giving up of some of the things regarded as necessary. Figure up the money value of your sacrifices, and, in addition to your regular offering, give that amount in the special envelope the conference will provide.

Follow your gift with your prayers for God's blessing thereon.

Your president, J. C. Broomfield.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUMMER CONFERENCE AND THE CHURCH OF TOMORROW.

By Rev. T. M. Johnson.

The Young People's Summer Conference means a broader culture and more thorough training for our young people, and it is to the young people of the present that we must look for development and progress in the future along all lines. It follows that the more thorough the training these young people receive now the stronger they will be as citizens in the future. It is to give these young people thorough intellectual training that we maintain at great cost a system of public schools and colleges and universities. But in the nature of things the training the schools give is mainly intellectual. No one questions the importance, nay, the necessity, of the intellectual training the schools offer. Nor do I overlook the fact that the right kind of school, the right kind of teacher, the right kind of teaching exerts a good moral, and certainly not an irreligious, influence over the character of pupils and students, now in the formative stage.

More Is Needed.

However, when the school has performed its full duty, something yet needs to be supplied, something that lies outside the province of the school. Just as that which the school offers is mainly intellectual, so that which needs yet to be supplied is mainly religious, mainly Christian religious. Since something Christian religious is to be supplied, to what source may we look for this other than the church whose business it is to instruct and train in religious matters, Christian religious matters? And with present organization the church has no better method than the Young People's Summer Conference for this special instruction and training. Personally I think there is no better method; the only thing better would be more of the same thing, a longer term.

How to Live.

The greatest problem is not how to make a living but how to live. Right living involves a right attitude toward one's fellowman and a right attitude toward God. The Young People's Conference helps in learning this life-long lesson of how to live. There's the fellowship, association one with another, not overlooking the play and fun side of life. There's the Bible study, the inspirational addresses, the period of devotion, of worship, studies in stewardship. These are some of the features that help those attending to learn how not to live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God—a lesson the church both of today and of tomorrow greatly needs both to learn and to teach.

What to Do With Life.

The greatest question is not what to do in life but what to do with life. It is not enough to live right, one should live right with a purpose. James asks: "What is your life?" The Spirit of Christianity asks: "What will you do with your life?" The Young People's Conference helps to lay this question on the conscience and to find the answer. Many a man has entered the ministry late because he "hid himself among the stuff." Maybe not intending to hide but sincerely thinking his work was to handle things, not ideas, to shape materials, not men, to lead flocks, not folks. Naturally he began to do the things he saw most other people doing. But now the young people, gathering in the Summer Conference, come "to the mountain of God. . . and the angel of the Lord appeareth unto them in a flame of fire out of the midst of" the zeal and devotion of the conference. They look and behold this devotion burns with fire and the devotion is not consumed. Some of these young people "turn aside and see this great sight why the devotion is not burnt. . . and God calls unto them out of the midst of" the spirit of the conference, saying, "The place whereon thou standest is holy ground. . . And the Lord says, I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in India, in China, and in Japan, and in America. . . And I am come down to deliver them out of the hands of poverty, ignorance, superstition, and sin. . . Come now therefore and I will send thee unto them. . . that thou mayest bring them out into the light of the Gospel." And these same young people go and return to their home church and home people and say, "Let me go, I pray thee, to the help of the Lord in the relief of suffering humanity." And the home church and home people say, "Go in peace."

Thus it turns out that the Young People's Summer Conference is a very vital force in helping the young people into such a state of mind and conscience, consecration, that they are willing to join the ranks of life-work recruits. To these the church of tomorrow may confidently look for workers and for leaders.

How to Do It.

But it is not enough simply to be willing to work or to lead in the activities of the church, one must know how. This is especially true in an age of specialists in all lines of endeavor. I think it was Henry Van Dyke who said, "Wisdom consists in knowing what to do, skill consists in knowing how to do it, and virtue consists in the doing of it." As applied to church activities, these three elements, wisdom, skill, and virtue as defined above constitute effective workmanship and efficient leadership. To this end the Young People's Conference offers special instruction. Every one who attends with a purpose may be reckoned as a prospective worker or leader in the church of tomorrow.

The importance of this cannot be too much emphasized by pastors and others in an effort to induce their young people to attend the conference. We have in our church a host of as fine young people as this progressive generation affords. In these young lives is an enormous amount of unmeasured latent power ready to be quickened into action for the Kingdom and trained for the highest order of service through the church of tomorrow. The Young People's Conference will help tremendously if we can bring the conference and these young lives into vital contact with each other.

Reidsville Christian Endeavor.

At a recent meeting of our Christian Endeavor society we decided to subscribe $50 to the College Endowment Fund, and we make this as a challenge to other Christian Endeavor societies in the state.

As soon as we lay ourselves entirely at His feet, we have enough light given us to guide our own steps; as the foot-soldier, who hears nothing of the councils that determine the course of the great battle he is in, hears plainly enough the word of command which he must himself obey.—George Eliot.

THE CHRISTIAN MOVEMENT IN CHINA.

"After the birth of the republic, 1911, it was widely asserted that the Christian movement did more than any other single force to prepare the way for the revolution and to make possible its successful consummation; and reciprocally that the revolution brightened the prospects of the Christian movement.

"At the end of 1923 Christianity was pronounced the most steadying factor and the most optimistic feature in the total situation in China.

"Between these two points of time lies more than a decade of steady achievement. The progress may be traced along the following lines.

"Numerical growth. The number of communicants increased from 207,747 in 1913, to 366,600 in 1920, an average of more than 6 per cent annually.

"At the same ratio, the number is now well above 400,000, thus doubling the membership since the beginning of the republic.

"Aside from members added to the church, there has been a remarkable growth in reaching adherents. Sunday schools increased twice as fast as communicants, or about 12 per cent annually from 1914 to 1920. From 1906 to 1920 communicants increased 105 per cent, students in Christian schools 332 per cent. During the last two years the movement has established contacts of great potentiality with three special groups—students, laborers, through the interest of the church in industrial problems; and to a less extent with political leaders.

"Leadership. In 1913 the number of missionaries in China was approximately 5,565, and in 1923 it was 7,820, an average yearly increase of about four per cent. In the future the numbers will be limited, with insistence on the highest standards of qualification and training.

"The increase in Chinese workers has been amazing. In 1907 the Chinese salaried workers outnumbered the foreign workers 2 to 1; in 1913, 3 to 1, and in 1922, the last figures we have, the ratio was 6 to 1.

"In seven years previous to 1922, while the missionary force increased 25 per cent, the Chinese force increased 95 per cent. Evidence could be presented to show that these workers have developed in spiritual apprehension and in general ability to discharge their responsibilities, quite as truly as they have been augmented in numbers. 'The reaction of the Christian teaching and experience on the Chinese gifts and character is producing men and women who stand beside any in the world.'

"Deepening Spiritual Life. There is abundant testimony that those in China professing the Christian faith have secured a firm grasp on its essential meaning, and have acquired a real personal experience of it.

"One in a position to know states: 'The hope of the church is not merely in the ability, nor even in the moral character of its leaders. It is in the fact that there are many people, often quite ordinary people, who have themselves come into a personal knowledge of God through Jesus Christ. . . . Now I can say after spending a year and a half in fairly continuous travel here, that I have repeatedly met men and women who show the mark of such personal experience. They are not copies, they are the real thing.'

"Christians have co-operated heartily in movements against opium, alcohol, lotteries, gambling, and commercialized vice, and have given support to creating and maintaining new moral standards in regard to the home, business, politics, international relations, in fact in every relation that touches the life of the people. A new religious climate is being produced, a different religious atmosphere is being created, and this cannot be described in able of figures." The above is from the China Mission Year Book recently from the press.

Fred. C. Klein.

From the treasurer's book we find that the following churches are supporting either scholarships or native workers:

Sunshine Circle, Burlington, scholarship in India.

Mission Band, Burlington, scholarship in India.

Young Woman's Auxiliary, Burlington, scholarship in China.

High Point Auxiliary, native worker in India.

West End, Greensboro, native worker in India.

Whitakers, native worker in India.

Just see what can be done by organizing the young people as has been done at Burlington. Perhaps this would help to solve the missionary problem at all our churches. Let's try it, anyway.

The latest information we have is that a scholarship in India costs $35, one in China $50, native workers or teachers range in price from $90 to $130 per year. In making up your budget for next year won't you include one or more of these? If you can do this kindly let me hear from you.

JOY "IN ALL VICISSITUDES."

True joy never depends upon circumstances. It is tragic that the millions in "the pursuit of happiness" are chained to the impression that it does. One of the most delightful sermons of the late Dr. Griffith Thomas dealt with "The Secret of Happiness." He had learned it himself, as all who came in contact with his cheery personality realized. He liked to draw a distinction between "happiness" and "joy," rather than to consider the words synonymous. "Happiness," he once said, "depends on what 'happens,' on the 'hap' of life, on circumstances." But to be "always rejoicing," as was the imprisoned Paul, was possible. In one of his last editorials in the Toronto Globe, which he furnished every Wednesday, Dr. Thomas commented upon an article of Irving Bacheller in the American Magazine, entitled, "The Happiest Person I Ever Knew," Mr. Bacheller reported that he had made the discovery that Mark Twain who for years kept the English-reading world in gales of laughter, was "one of the most unhappy of mortals" in his own home. Of John Burroughs, the naturalist-philosopher: "In his look there was a note of unsatisfied curiosity; in his face a look of sadness." In the midst of his great abundance, Andrew Carnegie said he felt the need of something he could not buy. The only really happy person Mr. Bacheller ever discovered "was an old mountain woman who kept a boarding-house in North Carolina," with nine children of her own and more bequeathed her by impecunious relatives. The writer's conclusion was that the secret of happiness was "home, children, love, faithfulness, and work." And yet," he adds, "if one is to keep it through all vicissitudes he must have faith in something greater than all the loves and joys of this world." Dr. Thomas, seizing this fine conclusion as a text, went on to prove that constant joy "is bound up with a personal relation to God in Christ."—Sunday School Times.

HIDE YOUR PAIN.

Life is a burden, bear it;
Life is a duty, dare it;
Life is a thorn-crown, wear it;
Though it break your heart in twain,
Though the burden crush you down;
Close your lips and hide your pain;
First the Cross, and then the Crown.

COLLECTIONS FOR SPECIAL DAYS.

The first of these collections for the present year will be that for Easter Day. The programs for this service have been sent out by the secretary of the Board of Home Missions, and the collection made that day is intended for the support of that board.

The General Conference arranged and directed that this collection should be given to the board in addition to its percentage of the budget, but there are certain conditions to be observed and this notice is given that there may be no confusion.

1. No part of this or of any other collection may be sent to the secretary of the board, nor to any other person than the treasurer of the Annual Conference. This rule was not observed last year and much confusion resulted.

2. When the collection is sent in it must be distinctly stated that it is for the Board of Home Missions as the collection for Easter Day. This will be counted on the apportionment of the budget for that church just as the regular collections for the budget. But it will not be given entire to the Board of Home Missions unless it is stated when sent to the Annual Conference treasurer.

3. If the collection should be greater than 23 per cent of the whole amount assessed to the church for the General Conference budget it cannot all be given to the Board of Home Missions, but only that much of it. For instance, if your collection should be $25 and the assessment of your church for the General Conference budget should be $100, only $23 would go to the Board as Easter Day collection and the rest to the general fund for the budget.

4. These statements apply equally to the other two special days, Children's Day in June and Rally Day in October, and they are made now to cover the whole situation.

President of the General Conference.

American Bakeries of High Point make to the Home a donation in bread every week. This counts to us both in quality and quantity.

Good people, making good offerings to the Home, feed, clothe, train and educate boys and girls to become men and women of service to their country. Thank one and all for co-operation in such a noble work. Past evidence helps me to believe that you say with me, Let the good work go on.

Have just learned of the death of Mrs. W. A. Bowman of Liberty. We greatly sympathize with all relatives and friends.

A YOUNG HERO.

One afternoon almost a century and a half ago, so goes an oft-told tale of one of England's heroes, three lads were idling along a country lane in Ireland.

"Come on, let's go swimming," said one of the boys.

"Oh, yes," chimed in the second, tossing up his cap into the air. "Come on, Arthur. You haven't any objections, have you?"

The lad called Arthur, a blue-eyed, freckled-faced fellow with a shock of brown hair that half covered his high forehead, hesitated briefly before he answered: "No, I haven't any objections, and I think a swim would do us all good, but we promised old man Goodhue that we would hoe his garden for him, and we ought to keep our word."

"Oh, come on, don't be a ninny, Arthur!" cried the first lad. "As if you, an earl's son, would hoe a poor man's garden!"

"But we promised," replied Arthur, "and, besides, he is an old soldier, and I mean to be a soldier too, and a soldier must always do his duty."

"Oh, pshaw! As if it was your duty to care for an old man's garden! I am going to the river." This from the second boy.

"And I am going to keep my word," answered Arthur sturdily. "I can have my swim afterward."

"Well, I wish you joy in your task," shouted the others as they kept on their course to the swimming-hole, where the boys of Dublin

School were accustomed to take their weekly swim.

The boy called Arthur turned in at the rustic gate of a poor cottage, where an old man with a crutch and a wooden leg greeted him.

"Well, you have not forgotten the old soldier," he said. "Some boys would."

"I try to keep my word on all occasions, and I could not forget a man who lost his leg at Culloden."

The old man gazed at the proud face and grave eyes of the boy, and something that he saw there made him say: "My lad, you will be a great man some day."

The boy's face flushed. Praise from an old soldier was very pleasant.

"But I want to be a great soldier like Marlborough."

"Well, if you are a soldier, you will be great too. Determination, hard work, and faithfulness to duty will help any one to succeed."

With these encouraging words lingering in his ear, the boy stripped off his coat and vest and went to work. It was toil he was unaccustomed to, and before an hour's time his hands were sore, and he was dusty from head to foot. But he worked on with a brave spirit till the task was done.

It was the very afternoon—an eventful day, as it happened, in the career of the young student—as he was returning from his belated swim in the river that he showed himself a hero of another kind. A carriage driven by a coachman in livery was rushing along one of the streets of Dublin. Suddenly and without apparent cause the leading horse took fright. In the driver's attempt to hold in the frantic steeds one of the reins snapped in twain, and the coachman sat dazed and helpless in his seat. A glimpse of a young girl's face pale tearing horses and the heavy coach lurching with terror and that of a middle-aged gentleman, evidently her father, and the frightened, tearing horses and the heavy coach durching dangerously from side to side was enough to set young Arthur's feet a-flying. Darting swiftly across an intervening street, running at right angles to the other, the lad rushed out in front of the galloping horses. A leap like that of a bloodhound, and he had the frightened animals by the bridle.

He was lifted from his feet, but he clung like grim death. He could not be shaken off. Dragged forcibly along, he did not relinquish his grasp and at last succeeded in checking the horses' mad pace. In a few minutes more they came to a halt, and as the coachman and outriders sprang to the ground the coach door opened, and the gray-haired gentleman and the girl alighted. The gentleman said in surprise: "Why," if this is not my friend Lord Morington's son! You have saved our lives and proved yourself a hero. I am Lord Longford, and this is my daughter, Catherine Pakenham. Young man, I predict great things for you. England will not hold your fame." And as he marked the lad's flashing eyes he placed his hands upon the boy's head as if pronouncing a benediction: "And, dying, you will sleep with England's great men."

These words all came true, for young Arthur became the great Duke of Wellington, field marshal, conqueror of Napoleon, and peer of the realm, who was accorded honors beyond those given to any other of England's heroes.

Great victories were to be his, great honor and moments of supreme exaltation; but never in a life that was destined to touch the summit of earthly glory did he show greater manhood than in keeping his word with Master Goodhue, nor did he ever perform a brave deed than when he saved the life of his future wife at the risk of his own.—The Presbyterian.

THE LOCKET IN THE POCKET.

Mary Alice had come to spend two weeks with her little cousin Cornelia on the farm. Oh, such fun as they had! Especially Mary Alice, for never before had she romped the livelong day in the beautiful outdoors. She grew as brown as a berry and slept like a top at night. As for chubby little Cornelia, never before had she had such a happy time. Tired of having a playmate all day long and soon one to sleep with and hug up at night!

"I hope it doesn't rain a single teeny tiny drop the whole time I am here," said Mary Alice one day as she came in from picking berries.

"See here, Mary Alice," spoke up Uncle John. "Don't you go making any such wishes, as badly as the crops need a drink of water."

One morning before she opened her bedroom eyes Mary Alice heard a pitter-patter, pitter-patter, on the tin roof. In two winks she hopped out of bed and ran to the window and saw that the rain was coming down in a torrent.

"Rain, rain, go away!" she cried.

But Cornelia, who was truly a farmer's daughter, clapped her chubby hands and cried: "Oh, goody! Now father's corn will grow."

Poor Mary Alice did not share Cornelia's enthusiasm, and at breakfast she presented a woful face.

"I tell you what," said Aunt Flora, suppose you children go up to the attic and pick up this morning. Mary Alice, your mamma and I loved to play up there on rainy days."

"That will be jimsy," cried Cornelia, hopping up and down. "May we dress up in the funny clothes in the old green chest?"

"Yes, indeed," answered her mother.

So Mary Alice's countenance gradually changed, and after they had tidied their room they set off in hilarious spirits for the attic. Such quaint-looking old dresses, festooned and ruffled and beribboned, as they found in that old green chest! And such a happy time they had dressing up and playing "ladies" and "social."

About the middle of the morning Aunt Flora's voice came from the foot of the stairs: "O children, come down. Hot cookies and milk for a little party!"

"Goody!" cried Cornelia delightedly.

"Goody, goody!" cried little Mary Alice.

There was a shuffling to get out of the funny dresses. Of a sudden while Mary Alice was struggling with her beruffled dress a band went into a pocket.

"Cornelia!" she exclaimed. "Here's a de-lovely locket—and, my goodness, there's something in it!"

"Mother," cried Cornelia, running down the steps, "Mary Alice has found a pocket in the dress she has on, and she says there's something in it,"

Mary Alice, still wearing the beruffled dress, ran down beside Cornelia.

"Aunt Flora! Aunt Flora!" she cried. "Do please look; it's a gold locket—I found it in the pocket."

"Mary Alice!" exclaimed Aunt Flora, reaching for the gold locket. "Why, you've found the gold locket your mother lost when she was a little girl. It's just too lovely that you should have found it. You see, your grandmother gave us each a locket, and your mother lost hers. Our names were engraved on them; here's Mary Alice, your mother's name. See it, child?"

Mary Alice gave a little squeal of delight and clapped her hands and cried, "My name too!"

"Of course," laughed her aunt.

"But, Aunt Flora," began Mary Alice, "how do you suppose it ever got in the pocket of this funny old dress?"

Aunt Flora looked down at the little figure in the quaint dress, and then of a sudden a light darted over her face. "Child, I know!" she cried softly. "Why, it seems like yesterday; your mother and I were playing in the attic, just as you and Cornelia were playing there today, and I suppose your mother was afraid she might lose the locket, and she took it off and slipped it into the pocket of this dress and never remembered a thing about it after that."

Uncle John poked his head in the door and cried in his funny way, "What's this? Is Mary Alice going to a masquerade party?"

The little girls just shouted with laughter. Then Mary Alice told him all about the locket in the pocket, and Uncle John said, "Ho, now, you were the little person who wished it wouldn't rain; and if it hadn't rained you wouldn't have gone to the attic to play."

"And then I shouldn't have found the locket in the pocket," said Mary Alice softly as she fondled the locket at her neck.—Linda Stevens Almond, in The Youth's Companion.

TOBACCO AS A POISON.

By Will H. Brown.

Sir James Cantile, renowned British medical authority, in an article on smoking, gives nearly every conceivable kind of advice to smokers except this: "Quit." He admits the injuriousness of the weed, but advises thus: "Smoke the same quantity of tobacco every day; the same quality and strength of cigar or tobacco, for by altering the quantity of the poison (observe that he uses the word "poison"), the heart will become intermittent, and its general effect on digestion, breathing, and the nervous system will vary."

In other words, the smoker should make a steady attack on his stomach, his lungs and his nerves, by the injection of nicotine poison, instead of making hit and miss attacks! It is really pitiful to witness the attempts of friends of tobacco to defend what they themselves admit is a rank poison.

Dr. Royal S. Copeland, writing for a great syndicate of daily papers, comes right out about it, in one of his articles, discussing diseases brought on by chronic poisoning, and says: "Under this may be grouped the continuous use of drugs, such as morphine, alcohol and tobacco."

Dr. H. E. Brook, another writer, says of the tobacco habit: "It is harder to live up than alcohol or coffee."

Dr. S. P. Blumenberg says in the San Francisco Bulletin, quoting from Ellingwood's Materia Medica on the Physiological action of tobacco: "Tobacco is an acrid narcotic poison. Nicotine is second only to prussic acid in the rapidity of its action as a poison, death having occurred within three minutes."

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Sunday, March 22, was spent with pastor W. D. Reed at Midway and Fair Grove on Haw River charge. At Midway we had a good hearing, and the people seemed to rejoice at what is being done at the High Point College. We asked this church to take two shares of the endowment insurance. Two families took $35 of the $100 asked, and the others are thinking about it and praying about it, and we believe they will take the balance of it when they have considered it properly.

There was a Sunday school convention in a nearby church on Sunday afternoon, so there were only a few present at Fair Grove. Those of us there had a good time together in a brief service, and I suggested to one of our leaders there how Fair Grove might easily take the two shares this church is asked to take.

Haw River is my old home circuit, and most certainly I am expecting every church on the charge to raise its quota.

Every One Help Quick.

By this time every charge and every church knows what we are trying to do in the way of raising an endowment for our High Point College. Without an endowment it cannot succeed, but with a proper endowment, and with the proper management, and with our young people going there in large numbers it cannot fail.

Please let us know soon what to depend upon from your church.

In conversation with Rev. B. M. Williams this week, I find that Orange circuit with its four country churches has raised its quota and notified Dr. Andrews that the work has been done. Other charges are almost over. Please let us hear soon that the campaign is finished up on your field.

Holy Week.

Next week is Holy Week. Some of our pastors are planning for services every evening leading up to the Easter services. Others are preparing for Decision Day services, and others still are preparing for the regular Easter services with an offering for Home Missions. We are trusting that every church and every Sunday school in the conference will at least undertake to raise 23 per cent of the General Conference budget at Easter and send it to Rev. S. W. Taylor as your part for Home Missions.

Faithfully yours,

A. G. Dixon.

Sandy Ridge, Kernersville Charge.—Our church is still alive and going. We have been having a very good Sunday school under the able management of the assistant superintendent, Mr. J. H. Gordon. On last Sunday at the usual hour the preaching service was held. He gave us a splendid sermon. Do wish more could have heard it than did. Our quarterly meeting will be held at this place on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in April. We will have all-day services beginning at ten o'clock. There will be some visiting preachers. Among them will be Dr. A. G. Dixon of Kernersville. Everybody invited.

A number of our people have been sick, but we are glad they are all on the improving list now. Mrs. J. L. Frazier. She does not seem to improve any. She has been sick for a long time. It seems that, with all that loving hands and doctors' medicines can do for her, she seems to grow worse.

On Saturday morning, March 7, death carried away one of our best neighbors and friends, Mrs. W. W. Shields. She only lacked a few days of being 85 years old. She was a member of the Friends church at Deep River, but was laid to rest in Sandy Ridge cemetery by the side of her husband, who preceded her to the great beyond some 20 years ago. She was the second wife of W. W. Shields. She was a patient sufferer for many weeks. She often would express her desire to go; after she got too weak to talk she would often raise her hand and wave it as if beckoning some one to come for her. She was the last one of a large family of children. She was a most devoted stepmother, married to Mr. Shields when some of his children were quite small. Their actions and kindness toward her proved that she had been a real stepmother. There were two stepdaughters, one of whom was with her most of the time, and one stepson. Faith in a loving Father was to her the hope that has at last anchored her soul safe. She had made her home for quite a while with her stepson, Mr. W. P. Wear, in whose home she passed away. While only a stepson any one would have taken her to be his mother. The pastor at Deep River, Mr. Reynolds, conducted the funeral, assisted by the pastor of Sandy Ridge, Brother Suits.

With best wishes,

L. G. Wood.

The diameter of the earth is generally given in round numbers as 8,000 miles. As a matter of fact it is not quite that. The most careful measurements were made some time ago by John F. Hayford, director of the Northwestern University College of Engineering, at Evanston, Ill. These measurements have now been adopted by all the important nations of the world. Boundary lines in the future will be based on them. Dr. Hayford found that the polar diameter, that is, the distance from the North to the South Pole, is 7,899,964 miles. The equatorial diameter distance from one end of the equator to the other is 7,926,678 miles.

—A presidential election will be held in Germany March 29, to choose a successor to the late President Ebert.

PRAYER.

Lord, let me like a lighthouse stand
Above life's troubled sea,
And let me speak of love and land
Above its mystery.
Let me give to some mariner
Who fears the stormy gloom
The comfort that a candle brings
To a long, lonely room.
Lord, let me like a lighthouse stand
Above the ocean's fear;
Lord, let my glow be like a hand
That draws a lost soul near.

CHILDREN'S WEEK.

Spring Date—May 3-10.

Autumn Date—October 18-25.

Because of the difference in climatic conditions in the Northern and Southern sections of our country, it was thought best by the Children's Division section of the International Council of Religious Education that two dates for Children's Week should be set instead of one. The Northern states will observe the spring date, May 3-10; while the Southern states will observe the fall date of October 18-25.

We will confer with the State Children's Division directors in the border states to determine on either a spring or autumn observance. The thing that we are all anxious about is that we shall all observe one of the two suggested dates and that all of the churches in the various states will co-operate in using just the one date.

The Children's Week literature is now ready for the Northern conferences, and will be mailed to the pastors in the Northern section in time for the spring observance.

If you fail to receive your literature, please write for it. — Mrs. Henry W. Maier.

THE NEAR EAST DAY IN CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The Young People's Advisory Committee on Near East Relief, composed of representatives from the leading denominations, is recommending to all Christian Endeavor societies the use of the Christian Endeavor topic for April 26 to emphasize the great work of this worthy organization.

The topic, "Friendliness as Expressed Through Educational Missions" is particularly adapted to giving information regarding the Near East work. It is for this purpose that we are recommending the observance of this day. Where people are informed as to the character of the work being done, they cannot fail to take a deep interest in the youth being trained by the Near East.

The value of this work can hardly be overestimated. They are not only providing food and clothing for the millions of boys and girls under their care, but are training them for future citizenship, and for worthy vocations. These young people are soon to be the leaders of a people whose faith in Christ and devotion to the Christian religion has not been surpassed in all history.

As General Secretary of the Board of Young People's Work, I am requesting insofar as possible that our Christian Endeavor societies shall co-operate in this movement and observe April 26 with this objective in view. Articles will be furnished through our church paper giving information on the topic, and for those who may desire additional information, we would suggest that they write the Near East Headquarters, 551 Fifth Ave., New York.

SECOND LARGEST STAR.

Betelgeuse no longer ranks as the second largest star in the heavens. Mira (meaning "the wonderful") has pushed Betelgeuse back to third place and now ranks second only to Antares, the largest star known to observers on the earth. The measurements of Mira have just been made by Dr. Francis G. Pease, of the Carnegie Institution at Washington, D. C. His observations were made at the Mount Wilson observatory in California.

The diameter of Mira is more than 250 million miles, or more than thirty thousand times larger than the diameter of the earth. Mira is about one-fourth larger than Betelgeuse. Antares has a diameter of 400 million miles.

The distance of Mira from the earth is estimated at 165 light years. One light year is the distance that light, traveling at the rate of 186,000 miles a second, would cover in one year. Therefore it takes a ray of light from Mira 165 years to reach the earth.

ANOTHER EGYPTIAN TOMB.

An Egyptian tomb has just been found in one of the pyramids at Giza which may be even more important than the discovery of the tomb of King Tut-Ankh-Amen. It was found by what is known as the Harvard Boston expedition which has been working about the pyramids for some time. The tomb is at the end of a dangerous passage 150 feet long and the walls must be strengthened before it can be reached. An alabaster coffin can be seen on which is the seal of King Sneferu. Perhaps he, or members of his family, are buried there. Sneferu reigned in Egypt about 3,000 B. C., more than 1,500 years before Tut-Ankh-Amen. Sir Wallis Budge, a noted English scientist, has this to say of the discovery:

"The world will remember the excitement caused by the discovery of Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb, and the joy of finding gilded chairs and couches inlaid with blue glazed porcelain. But these things blinded people to the fact that we have not recovered one historical fact from that tomb. Tut-Ankh-Amen was a king of no importance, but in Sneferu we have certainly one of the master builders of Egypt who may possibly be bracketed with Usersten III and Thothmes III as founders of the empire."

—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has given one million dollars toward the fund of five million that is being raised for Tuskegee Institute, in Alabama, and Hampton, Institute, in Virginia.

ROADS.

There is a road to happiness;
There is a road to pain;
A road to failure and success;
A road to loss and gain;
A road to meadows gay with flowers;
A road to evenfall;
A road to bright and shadowed hours—
God lets me tread them all.

There is a quiet road that finds
The little singing streams;
A road that reaches till it winds
Along the Hills of Dreams;
A road to hope, to duty done,
And to that last clear call
Across the gates of setting sun—
God lets me tread them all.

DICK'S GOOD MORNING.

"I had a curious thing happen to me this morning. As I crossed the street I saw one of my Sabbath school class. 'Good morning, Dick. How are you?' I said.

"He did not hear me, but a poor mulatto boy, dirty and ragged, rose from the curbstone, and made a bow.

"Mawnin', mistis, I's poo'ly 'nuff dis mawnin'; thank'ee for yer axin'."

"He evidently thought I was speaking to him when I said 'Good morning, Dick,' and I did not tell him I meant Dick Howell.

"I stopped and chatted with him, and found him, as he seemed to think, without any friends. I hope I encouraged him some."

That was Mrs. Northern's side of the little story. One of us heard the rest from Dick himself.

"I done lost my place, 'cause I was sick; and I was pow'rfully fretted 'gainst my heebnly Fader 'bout bein' sick, 'bout losin' my place, 'bout 'most everything. Seemed to me lak nobody cared. Well, here comes along one o' dem high-steppin' ladies, and sang out loud and cheerful like, 'Good mawnin', Dick.' Anyhow, I got up and made my bow, and told her how poo'ly I was, and she just stood dar in de sunshine, talkin' to Dick lak he was President.

"'Cheer up, Dick,' says she.

"Den she giv me a card wid her name writ on it.

"'You take this down to Baker and Northern,' says she, 'an' ax 'em to give you some work today.'

"I took myself down dar in a hurry, an' when I showed dat scrap o' white card de gen'lum smiled kin' o' pleasant, and set me to rightin' up his lumber room.

"I'll have ter lock dat lady up, Dick,' says he; 'if I don't she'll send me all der city.'

"Best let her alone, master, says I; 'ef I hain't mistaken de great Master set her doin' dis work; else how she come ter know Dick's name? I want yer to 'splain dat, sir.'"

Dick was right, the "chance" that made the kind voice call out "Good morning, Dick," was one of God's "chances," one of the kind that keeps the sparrow from falling to the ground till God's best time.—Selected.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—MARCH 29.Review. Closing Period of Christ's Ministry.

Golden Text: "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever." Heb. 13:8.

Lesson I. teaches that Jesus is Savior and weeps over those who will not be saved, that He is Creator and "possessor of heaven and earth" and has need of all things that He has made, and that He is King of hearts and homes, of races and kingdoms, and deserves the homage of every human being.

Lesson II. teaches that Jesus is coming again to judge the quick and the dead, that He will separate the race into two classes, according to the deeds done in the body, that He will assign the righteous to the blessedness of "the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world," and that He will assign the wicked to "everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels."

Lesson III. teaches that Jesus was faithful unto death in observing the ordinances of the sanctuary, and that the Lord's Supper was instituted to replace its ancient type, the Passover, to be a standing memorial of the crucifixion, to be a sign of Christian fellowship and devotion, and to become a means of feeding upon the Bread of life, Who came down from heaven and gave life to the world.

Lesson IV. teaches that Jesus is one with the everlasting Father, that He is the Carpenter Who has built the many-mansioned home, that He is "the way, the truth, and the life," that He is the Executor of the Father's will in answers to prayer, and that obedience and service are the surest evidences of love and devotion to Him.

Lesson V. teaches that Jesus came that "ye might have life and that ye might have it more abundantly," that faith is the bond of union whereby believers share this life and uplift, that prayer is the method of promoting the Christian experience, and that the "much fruit" of the Spirit reflects "the glory due unto his name."

Lesson VI. teaches that "this is eternal life that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent," that the glory of God is the ultimate purpose of redeeming grace, that keeping power is guaranteed through intercessory prayer, and that the oneness of all believers in Jesus Christ is that splendid ideal to be realized during the church age.

Lesson VII. teaches that the throne of grace is a safe and comforting refuge in times of trouble, that Jesus did not in the least shirk the awful price of redemption, but meekly submitted, "Not as I will, but as thou wilt," that in the garden "the Lord hath laid upon him the iniquity of us all," and that His soul became "exceeding sorrowful even unto death" that we might rejoice with "joy unspeakable and full of glory."

Lesson VIII. teaches that civil government is a branch of God's universal sovereignty, that civil rulers are God's ministers to restrain wickedness and promote righteousness, that moral and financial support of civil government is a Christian duty, that common honesty is the best policy, and that the supreme debt of life is to love God and mankind.

Lesson IX. teaches that Pilate was a weak, vacillating ruler, without conscience and courage, and more anxious to please than to do right, that the phrase "without conscience" was employed in the sense of "without principle," that Pilate was misled by the deities of falsehood, and that Jesus was sent to die on the cross that men might not be sentenced to languish in hell.

Lesson X. teaches that the resurrection of Jesus is a crown of glory, that we believe on Jesus, that the forgiveness of sins through the blood of the cross is the hope of the human race, that it is better to suffer for the right than to rule in the wrong, and that cross-bearing is indispensable in the development of character.

Lesson XI. teaches that the empty tomb proclaims a risen Lord, that Jesus burst the bonds of death that those dead in trespasses and sins might rise to a life of righteousness, that Jesus gave proof of His resurrection by appearing to many, talking with them, eating before them, and showing them His wounded hands and side, and that the power of His resurrection is the guarantee of immortality.

Lesson XII. teaches that the risen life in Christ Jesus is the normal life of the believer, that the resurrection of our Lord makes imperative the preaching of the gospel to the ends of the earth, that the descent of the Holy Ghost was a most needed qualification for the gospel mission, and that when Jesus ascended to heaven His mantle of service fell upon all who believe on His name.

There is a certain title

Goes in and out me with:

Some people always greet me:

"Howdy, Reverend Smith."

As just a common "Mister"

I'd acknowledge him and kith:

"This is Reverend Smith."

If four things are distasteful,

I'll offer you the first:

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Pleasant Hill, West Forsyth.—Although it has been some time since a reporter has sent in a report from Pleasant Hill, we have not been idle. Our missionary societies meet each month at the home of one of the members. Here we learn through our Missionary Record of the poor and needy in foreign lands as well as in our own land. Even though our membership is small I am sure the missionary societies of Pleasant Hill are doing good work.

A few months ago the ladies of the missionary societies had a bazaar through which we made over $50, which will be used for the benefit of our church.

Our Sunday school has improved very much in attendance and other ways since the weather has become better. Our classes are large, owing to the influence of the teachers and superintendent. We have 15 or 20 in the young people's class, which is exceedingly large for us.

Our pastor, Mr. D. A. Morgan, has faithfully delivered two sermons each month, one on the third Sunday at 11 o'clock, the other on the first Sunday night.

We hope to see our Sunday school keep on improving as it has been doing in the last few Sundays. I hope to have something more interesting to report next time. I thank the editor for this space. Reporter.

Calvary.—On the second of March a Foreign Missionary Society was organized at Calvary church, Greensboro, with 15 members. The following officers were elected:

President, Mrs. James G. Sullivan; first vice president, Mrs. L. W. Jobe; second vice president, Mrs. Otis Campbell; third vice president, Miss Josie Taylor; recording secretary, Mrs. L. W. Gerringer; corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. F. Medearis; treasurer, Mrs. T. B. Waugh; Record agent, Mrs. A. E. Causey; Secretary of Thank-Offering Boxes, Mrs. L. H. Hines; secretary of young people's work, Miss Mary W. McCulloch. Delegates to the branch meeting, Mrs. J. F. Williams, Miss Josie Taylor. Mrs. W. F. Medearis, Corresponding Secretary.

Halifax.—The weather has been fine for three Sundays, and the roads greatly improved, and our attendance at the church services has improved as well as the roads. On the second Sunday we had a big congregation at Bethesda, and also at Hollister at night. On the third Sunday we had good congregations at Harmony and Eden churches. On yesterday we had good attendance at Hollister and Ringwood. The interest seems to be on the increase. The Woman's Missionary Society at Hollister is planning a program for next Sunday night. The Ladies' Aid at Eden is doing good work. We are planning to have three or four Easter services on the work.

We will hold our second quarterly conference at Eden church on Friday before the third Sunday in April at two P. M.

We want to thank Mrs. J. C. Edwards for a nice lot of Irish potatoes and a bar of chocolate, Mr. Ross for a nice bag of oranges and apples, Mr. J. N. Boseman for a nice ham; and Mrs. N. W. Cousins for turnip greens and meat to cook with them.

There is still some "flu" in the community.

Mrs. Spencer and the boys have all been down with it. We want to thank our good neighbors who have been so kind to us while we had the "flu." C. L. Spencer, Pastor.

Welch Memorial.—We are having a splendid Sunday school now under the superintendency of Brother C. R. Ward. Brother Ward is taking great interest and is trying to get the people more interested. We had the largest attendance Sunday that we have had this conference year. We are planning to have an Easter exercise.

Our pastor has two helpful sermons for all who will come and hear him each Sunday. They were especially good yesterday. There are lots of people, young and old, all round us that are still out of church. May we as a church do all we can to bring them in. The Master has a great work for us all; let us get busy.

Miss Forrest was with us last Sunday week and organized a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and we also had a splendid talk from Miss Forrest which I think everybody enjoyed. We met at the church last Thursday evening and elected officers. Mrs. D. B. Eldridge was elected president; Mrs. T. E. Pierce first vice president, Mrs. W. A. Scott second vice president, Mrs. I. B. Ridge recording and also corresponding secretary, Mrs. B. C. Royals treasurer, Mrs. G. E. McDowell Record agent, Mrs. Alma Boone secretary of young people's work.

We were fortunate in having Miss Forrest and Mrs. G. R. Brown meet with us Thursday evening; hope they can meet with us again and give us new ideas of how to have a successful society.

The Ladies' Aid will meet with Mrs. B. C. Royals April 5, expecting a good attendance, as the Aid is expecting to have a very important meeting. Mrs. I. B. R., Reporter.

Bethesda, North Davidson Circuit.—Pastor Troxler at three o'clock yesterday gave us a fine sermon on letting our light shine. Our Sunday school was after dinner; we had a good number. We are planning for an Easter program on Easter Sunday, preaching at 11 and our Easter program after dinner—all-day service.

Mr. Grady H. Leonard from Hickory, N. C., visited his parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Leonard, a few days ago. Their daughter, Mrs. John Everhart, has been in Winston hospital, but is back at home, we are glad to note. We are still having some colds and "flu." Mrs. Nelie Clodfelter, mother of our superintendent, has been on the sick list.

Death visited our community March the 11th, claiming for its victim Mr. William Grubb, one of our respected members, age, 85 years. He was a member at Beulah Reformed church early in life but moving into our community he connected himself with Bethesda M. P. church and was a faithful member. In his late years he was in feeble health and could not come to church often but earlier in life he was one of Bethesda's most active members. He was not only true to his church but was true to his country. Uncle Billy enlisted in company H, 18th Regiment, where he served with honor. In his passing Davidson county loses one of her valiant soldiers of the Confederacy. His wife preceded him about 25 years. He leaves three sons, Noah Lee and William Grubb, also three daughters, Mrs. Faustine Hinkle, Mrs. Enzer Latham and Miss Minnie Grubb; 25 grandchildren and 25 great-grandchildren to mourn his departure. His passing from our midst makes heaven nearer and sweeter to us because we feel one more bright jewel has been added to the glory world. While here he suffered, but we are happy in the firm belief that he has passed on where sorrow, suffering and disappointments are not permitted to enter. His funeral was conducted by Dr. Leonard of the Reformed Church and Dr. C. L. Whitaker. His body was laid to rest in the cemetery to await the resurrection.

"In heaven no drooping nor pining,
No wishing for elsewhere to be;
God's light is forever there shining:
How beautiful heaven must be!"
Mrs. C. M. Yokley, Reporter.

Hendersen.—Since the last report from our church all the missionary societies have had their last meeting of the year.

The Woman's Missionary Society elected the following officers for the coming year: President, Mrs. L. R. Gooch; secretary, Mrs. J. B. Fox; foreign treasurer, Mrs. F. R. Harris; home treasurer, Mrs. W. H. Grissom; superintendent Mission Band, Mrs. John Renn; superintendent Sunshine Circle, Mrs. S. R. Watson; superintendent Precious Jewels, Mrs. Howard Thorne.

At the Young Ladies' League, the pastor and his wife suggested that if the league would pay half, they would pay the other half, and make Mrs. S. R. Harris, the retiring president of the W. M. S., a Life Member which suggestion was promptly acted upon and the certificate was presented to Mrs. Harris at the 11 o'clock service March 15.

The second quarterly conference has been called for next Wednesday night. The delegate for the annual conference will be nominated at this meeting. All members are urged to be present.

Next Thursday night there will be a meeting of the Vance county Christian Endeavor Union in the Presbyterian Church. Rev. Frank Lim Fleet will be here and give us something good and worthwhile. We hope all of our young people will attend.

The Ladies' Aid will have their regular meeting one week earlier than usual, as their president, Mrs. J. E. Pritchard, will be at the missionary conference on April 6. The Aid had their regular birthday social on the 19th. The meeting was in the basement of our new annex. This was the first time the basement has been used since completion.

The Young Ladies' League is preparing a pageant for the Easter services.

We are glad to report that Mrs. J. W. Hayes, Sr., who has been very ill, is improving now. Reporter.

Bethesda, Halifax Circuit.—Mr. Spence filled his appointment here last night, fourth Sunday, and gave us a good logical sermon. Our night congregations are small, but we hope for improvement in this respect. We have missed so many night appointments in the past, due partly to bad weather, partly to other causes, that people seem to have gotten out of the habit of coming.

Last second Sunday we had beautiful weather, a large congregation, and an excellent sermon which has been much commended—one of the best we have heard here in a long time. We were glad to see one man present who rarely attends church, and he also seems to have been pleased with the sermon.

Mr. Spencer is a good visitor, and he seems to make special effort to lend a helping hand and give encouragement to the weaker or less fortunate. We believe him to be a very earnest and consecrated man.

Mrs. Spencer has taken a class in Sunday school for us, and Mr. Spencer himself often helps out in that line too. We missed her in Sunday school yesterday, as she was confined at home with "flu," after seeing the two boys through it.

The school is planning to have an Easter service, and though our numbers are much reduced, we hope to have a creditable program.

It is hoped, also, that there will soon be sufficient funds in hand to begin the repair work on the parsonage.

March 23.

Orange Charge.—Hebron and Chestnut Ridge churches notice:

Preaching services fifth Sunday (March 29) as follows:

Hebron, 11 A. M. (communion service); Chestnut Ridge, three P. M.

Sincerely, B. M. Williams.

Haw River Circuit.—Don't forget that our District Conference will be held at Midway church March 28-29. According to the rulings of our Annual Conference all pastors and people are required to attend these conferences. To us it is not a question of the merits of the conference, but of being subject to the powers that be. Is it not a test of our loyalty?

W. D. Reed.

Calvary.—It has been several weeks since we have made a report from Calvary church. In the mean time we have been doing things. Our Junior and Senior C. E. societies, the organization of which we mentioned in our last report, are making a good growth and doing good work.

Almost every Sunday brings a nice increase in our Sunday school. Our very efficient superintendent, A. Hester Causey, is putting his whole soul into his work. We have a fine bunch of teachers. Dr. J. F. McCulloch is making the teaching of the lesson so interesting for the men's Bible class that the class is making a steady increase. When we got into our new church in January we had around 50 attending our Sunday school. On last Sunday the secretary's report showed 133 in attendance. We are marching toward our 200 goal.

The other organizations of the church are doing good work. At a meeting of the Ladies' Aid society last week the ladies of the church organized a Foreign Missionary Society with Mrs. Jas. G. Sullivan president, and Mrs. L. W. Gerringer secretary.

We are all proud of our pastor. We do not feel that any church has any better preacher than we have. Brother Gerringer is doing some earnest preaching. And his sermons are always so appropriate. He preached several sermons on love—"Man's Love to God," "God's Love to Man," and "Our Love to Each Other." On last Sunday his sermons at both morning and evening services were in the evangelistic line. The 11 o'clock sermon was especially impressive. He tried to impress upon the church members their responsibility to the unsaved.

On next Sunday, March 29, our special meeting will begin and continue until April the 12th. Rev. N. G. Bethea of Lexington will arrive on Monday to assist the pastor in these services. Pray for us.

A. C. Dixon,
Publicity Committee.

Union Grove, Forsyth Circuit.—We are planning for an Easter service which we will render on Saturday night before Easter, April the 11th. We extend a cordial invitation to all to come.

On the last third Sunday we had a very interesting service. The Salvation Army major, his wife, daughter and lieutenant and some others from Winston-Salem came with their musical instruments, played, sang and talked to us, which we all appreciated and enjoyed very much.

Our Sunday school has purchased for the church a communion set and collection plates.

Our Sunday school is improving some.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers for a happy Eastertide.

Reporter.

State Street Church, Lexington.—The children have begun practicing for the Easter program to be given Easter Sunday morning. Next Sunday morning we are all planning to go to Pleasant Grove for the district rally to be held there.

All the services Sunday were well attended and all who attended were helped and encouraged by the fine sermons by the pastor and the enthusiastic work of the Sunday school. Three young ladies from the Greensboro College spent the week-end at the parsonage and worshiped with us Sunday morning and night. Two of them were sisters—Misses Crew—the other Miss Davis. The Crew sisters delighted us with a duet Sunday morning.

We are hoping to have a great revival, beginning Sunday night, April 12. Again we ask your prayers to this end.

March 24.

Spring Valley, Vance Circuit.—On the second Sunday night in this month Dr. A. G. Dixon was with us and preached a splendid sermon. Our church voted to take one share of the College Endowment Fund.

Our Sunday school is doing fine. We had fifty-three present yesterday, and we are still adding new members.

We are practicing for an Easter service to be held on April 12. One feature of the program will be a pageant by the young people of the church. We expect to have our pastor with us also.

On last Wednesday night we organized a new society, called the "H and T" Young People's League. We expect to do great work for the up-building of God's Kingdom in our community. This society was organized in honor of three of the most faithful members we have even had in our Sunday school and church since its beginning, Brother L. M. Harris and Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Turner.

The missionary society, the Christian Endeavor society and our prayer meetings are all well attended.

We still have some sick in our community. We hope to have them out again soon.

Reporter.

March 23.

Midway, Haw River Circuit.—Since our last report Brother Reed has filled all his appointments, always preaching good and helpful sermons. The more we see and know him and his good wife the better we like and appreciate them.

Last Sunday our president, Rev. A. G. Dixon, was with us in the interest of the College. He made a splendid talk, showing us how proud we ought to feel for what has been done and how thankful we should feel for the privilege of helping to keep the work going. However, our congregation was small and the pledges were small, but we hope to do more in the future.

We are planning for an Easter program at this place which I think will be held the second Sunday afternoon at two o'clock.

Next Saturday and Sunday the District Conference will be held here. We are hoping to have a good time together.

Pray for us. Mrs. G. W. Apple.

Methodist Protestant Herald:

I note article of the 19th inst., gotten out by our Children's Home manager and superintendent. I am so glad they have brought this before us. They ask for suggestions in regard to getting a bus for the Home that our children may have a way to get to church and Sunday school on Sunday. God bless those children and those that have care over them. Now we have thousands of members in our churches, all having at heart our children at this home. And this being the case, it will be a light thing to get this money. A bus will cost about $3,000—a good one. Hear our suggestion: three hundred of our people give just $10 apiece and we have the money, and nobody hurt. We will live just as long and die just as well off. I have often spoken of this as I have come up with those children on the road going from church in the heat and cold and always taken them in my car, as many as I could get in it, and wondered why we did not provide some way for them. Just think how many of us have good cars to ride with our children in while those walk the road. I will be one of the three hundred to send check for $10 if this suggestion suits.

If some one has a better suggestion, come on.

Your brother in Christ, for God and the children,

R. E. Andrews.

High Point, March 24.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to express our sincere thanks to our friends for their sympathy and help during the period through which we are passing, brought about by the death of mother, Mrs. Fruzia J. Williams.

B. M. Williams and Family.

Heroes in history seem to us poetic because they are there. But if we should tell the simple truth of some of our neighbors, it would sound like poetry.—G. W. Curtis.

Salem.—Our second quarterly conference was held on Wednesday night, March 11, with a large attendance of the official members of the church and a few of the regular members. The first item of business transacted following the devotional period was the election of a secretary. Mrs. W. C. Wright, who was elected secretary of the conference at the meeting of the first quarterly conference, declined to serve in that capacity. Brother W. C. Tate, the superintendent of our Sunday school, was elected to serve during the remainder of this conference year.

Reports were made by the pastor, Sunday school superintendent, presidents of the Ladies' Aid and Christian Endeavor societies, class leaders and treasurer. The pastor's report covered a period from December 10, 1924, to March 11, 1925, and is summarized as follows: sermons delivered, 22; prayer meetings conducted, 6; communion services held, 4; visits made, 17; amount received on salary, $155.42. The Sunday school superintendent reported the Sunday school increasing and doing very good work. The presidents of the Ladies' Aid and Christian Endeavor societies reported memberships increasing. Class leaders reported no meetings held.

The nominees for delegate to the next annual conference were elected, these being Brothers Joe Kennedy and J. T. Ramsey.

Plans for the raising of the pastor's salary and other matters of the church were discussed by different members. The conference was adjourned subject to the call of the pastor in an adjourned session to complete the transaction of some matters that were deferred. C. B. Way.

Corinth, Titushton Circuit.—Who said I would not report any more? I do not get out quite as much as I used to, am not in close touch with the work, in mother and father are "shut-ins" and it is my privilege to look after them. Mother hasn't walked but a few steps since her fall last April, father has not been able to attend church in nearly three years; hasn't been out to his meals in six weeks, but he can go about his room, sits up some, and reads nearly every paper that comes his way. Neither of them is cross or raving.

I attended Sunday school yesterday. The attendance was good. Came in by car-loads. Mrs. Walter brought 11 with her.

They are thinking of working up an Easter exercise, if possible. Mr. John Willis Liles, who now lives in the old extern, wants to give Easter eggs to the Sunday school for a big hunt. This is his first year in the old church; he has made wonderful improvements over the cemetery and wants to do more.

Brother Tate is busy visiting the sick. He has made two appointments here since I last reported.

Brother Stubbins is to be our pulpit help in revival meeting here for September.

Mrs. Lawrence Morris, who has been in homeopathic hospital for treatment, has returned home, much improved.

Sanitary Bible Reading.—By a vote of 75 to 10 the Indiana legislature passed a bill on March 10, 1925, providing for the reading of the Bible in all public schools of that state.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

Who Is God?

Text: "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord." Mark 12:29.

The Bible nowhere expresses the least doubt that there is a God. It assumes His existence. "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." Every created thing is both a memorial and a testimony of a wise, god, and powerful Being called God. And God has revealed Himself to men. Thousands, yea, millions, have testified that God has spoken to them, and wrought in them and for them such wonderful works. But who is God? What is He like? And what is His relationship to the work of His hands?

"God is a Spirit." Man's spirit is a finite duplicate of God's. God thinks, reasons, remembers, loves, hates, chooses, commands and governs. And God is three Persons in One, God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. In the first place let us consider that

The Father is God.

He is the "Father of the spirits of all flesh." For all human spirits come from Him. He is the Father of every human being in this creative sense. The universal fatherhood of God is a very precious doctrine.

He is in still more precious sense the Father of all who believe. Such are born from above, born of God, born of the Spirit. These have God as their Father in the spiritual sense.

That God the Father is the Sovereign of salvation is plainly revealed in the Holy Scriptures. All prayer must be directed to Him. "When ye pray, say, Our Father," and declared, "I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." It is He that bestows the blessings both of Providence and Redemption. "Every good and every perfect gift cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness neither shadow of turning."

In the second place let us note that

The Son Is God.

The Father declared of Jesus Christ, "This is my beloved Son: hear him." He is the only begotten Son of the Father. The Son is the executive member of the Godhead, just as the Father is the sovereign member. God "created all things by Jesus Christ." "All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made, that was made."

The Son was also the Father's spokesman to a sinning world. It was He that spoke to the prophets and saints of old. As Jehovah He wrote and delivered the ten commandments. He is the eternal Word. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."

Jesus Christ was God because He did the works of God, by the exercise of His own power and authority. He forgave sins, He cleansed lepers, He raised the dead, He stilled the storm, He multiplied the loaves and fishes, and performed many other wonderful works.

Because He was God Jesus rose from the dead, ascended to heaven and sat down at the Father's right hand to make intercession for all children of God.

In the third place let us consider that

The Holy Spirit Is God.

The Holy Spirit is the Breather of the Holy Trinity. He imparted life in the creation. "He breathed into man the breath of life, and man became a living soul."

The Holy Spirit inspired the Holy Scriptures. "The Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake." "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

The Holy Spirit is the Administrator of redemption. He has been sent by the Father and the Son to administer their joint plan of salvation. He imparts the experience of the new birth. He cleanses from all sin. He gives power for service. He bears testimony to sonship. He reproves of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. He takes the things of Christ and shows them, or delivers them, to all that believe.

In the last place let us note that These Three Are One.

John wrote: "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one."

They are one in the essence of being. "God is love." The Father is love. He planned salvation for the race, and sent His only begotten Son to die for mankind. The Son is love, because He laid down His life that all who believe on Him might live forever. And the Holy Spirit is love, because He is always pleading with sinners to be reconciled to God.

The three persons of the Godhead are one in their attributes. They are equally good, holy, wise, merciful, and powerful to an infinite degree. Officially the Son is subordinate to the Father, and the Holy Spirit is subordinate to the Father and the Son. But they are the same in all the infinite attributes of being.

The Godhead is our richest heritage. God is our Father. Jesus Christ is our Savior. The Holy Spirit is our Comforter, Cleanser, Life-giver, and Witness. Let us make the most of this glorious Heritage. Let us adore and worship Each. Let us love them with all our hearts. Let us pray to the Father, trust the Savior, and have fellowship with the Holy Spirit.—The Word of Life.

"Lazy Husband" Bill.—Both houses of the South Carolina legislature have O. K.'d a measure which provides that, in event of a husband's being sent to a chain-gang, his family draws $1.50 a day during his servitude. If the husband is fined the fine goes to his family, the cost only being held by the state.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Fishel.—Sister Emma Jane Fishel, devoted wife of Rev. D. A. Fishel, was the youngest of five daughters born to Wyatt and Mary Nicholson. The Nicholson home was in Warren county. It was there that the deceased was born, and in this county, and among the people with whom she was reared, she spent the whole of her earthly life. The date of her birth is December 20, 1861.

In her seventeenth year, to be exact, April 17, 1878, she became the wife of Rev. D. A. Fishel, a young minister just beginning his first year as pastor of what was then Littleton mission. Some one has said,

"The mighty gates of circumstance
Turn on the smallest hinge,
And oft some seeming pettiest chance
Gives to life its after tinge."

This was certainly true of these two young people. Brother Fishel had no idea that he was to spend the remainder of his earthly life in Warren county when he accepted his appointment to Littleton mission; and this happy girl of seventeen never dreamed that she was to meet her future husband on that Sunday when she went for the first time to hear him preach. But so it was, and for forty-seven years—but little short of half a century—they traveled, happily and prosperously, life's pathway together.

This union was blessed with ten children—six sons and four daughters. One son, Edward Nicholson, and two daughters, Maude Fishel and Mrs. Mamie Fishel Cobb, preceded their mother to the spirit world.

Early in life Sister Fishel became a Christian and united with the Methodist Protestant Church. For 48 yeyars, and to the close of her earthly life, she was a faithful member. During her last illness she was greatly comforted by her faith in Christ. For six months she was a sufferer, but her affliction was borne with patience and Christian fortitude. She never murmured nor complained about her lot. It was her opinion that she would not get well, but approaching death did not disturb her. Often she would say to her loved ones, "I'm not afraid; there's nothing to be afraid of." She evidently felt as the psalmist did, when he thought of passing through the "valley and shadow of death." She, too, feared no evil. On the 20th of February, 1925, she passed quietly and peacefully to her reward. Her age was 64 years and two months.

It was my privilege to be her pastor for two and a half years, and nowhere have I found a truer and more sympathetic friend. My frequent visits to her home linger with me as one of the pleasant memories of my early pastorate. Her warm-hearted and unstinted hospitality assured me always of a genuine welcome. I shall continue to be gratefully appreciative of her kindness to me in those early years of my ministry.

In her home Sister Fishel was devoted, loving and industrious. Nothing was ever too good or too hard for her to do for her loved ones. As a neighbor, she was kind and obliging. She will be missed from the community where her long life was spent; but most of all she will be missed in the home by those who knew her best and loved her most.

Besides the husband, Rev. D. A. Fishel, she is survived by five sons, T. L., W. H., B. F.,

H. O., and S. B. Fishel; and two daughters, Miss Pearl W. Fishel, and Mrs. Paul A. Johnston. There is also one surviving sister, Mrs. J. J. Pegram of Macon, N. C.

The funeral service was held on Saturday at 4:30 P. M., conducted by Rev. Francis Joyner. Interment followed in Littleton cemetery where a covering of flowers marked her last resting place.

May the God of all comfort greatly sustain her loved ones, and keep them to that day when separations are no more.

This tribute to the memory of this good woman is gladly written, at the request of the family, by her friend, the undersigned.

March 17.

The Passing of George F. Thompson.

In the death of George F. Thompson the writer has lost a friend whom he greatly appreciated. His home has lost an affectionate husband and faithful father. His community has lost a substantial citizen. His church has lost a wise counselor and a loyal supporter. Those of use who knew him well are richer for having known him and poorer for his having gone. We do not think of him as dead, but as having changed his associates and the place of his activities. A few days ago earth was the place of his activities and imperfect people were his associates. His activities were such as tire and result in discomfort and pain. Now his activities are such as multiply energy and result in pleasure. His associates here many times misunderstood him and he misunderstood them and so there was friction. Over yonder his associates understand him and he understands them and there is agreement. There he also associates with a delightful and affectionate daughter who preceded him some thirteen years ago. I wonder if the two look in this direction for the wife and mother and brothers and sisters and friends. Surely the thought makes heaven more attractive. The Lord bind up the broken hearts left behind.

Ward.—On March 7, 1925, the death angel visited Canaan church of Denton charge, and claimed one of its faithful members, Mrs. Mary Jane Ward, who has helped to lead her church toward the goal of success for many years.

Mrs. Ward professed faith in Christ in early life, and has been a true soldier of the cross for a number of years. While we are grieved because of her absence, yet we rejoice in believing so firmly that she had laid down her weapons of warfare to take up a bright and starry crown.

The relatives of the deceased Mrs. Ward have our sympathy in this sad hour, and we would commend them to God, Who doeth all things well.

O. C. Loy, Jr., Pastor.

Childress.—J. J. Childress, one of the members of Hebron church, died March 11. Funeral services conducted at the home March 12 by Rev. T. M. Johnson and the writer, after which the remains were quietly laid to rest in Hebron cemetery.

It was not the writer's privilege to know Brother Childress; but his neighbors speak of him as a good man.

Gill.—The following day, March 13, the writer was called upon to assist Brother Howell, pastor Hawfields Presbyterian church, in conducting the funeral services of Mrs. Mary Gill.

Mrs. Gill was once a member of Chestnut Ridge M. P. church; after her marriage she joined Hawfields Presbyterian church with her husband. A good woman gone. Sincerely,

B. M. Williams.

Elizabeth A. Hall (Boon), the daughter of John and Malinda Hall, born in Alamance county June 25, 1844, departed this life March 1, 1925. She was married to Andrew J. Boon February 11, 1868, and to this union were born two daughters, Ida M. Boon and Mary C. Boon, who still survive.

Grandma Boon lived here in Alamance county on her farm near Burlington with her grandson and granddaughter, Mr. and Mrs. Mack Boon, and that is where she died, pneumonia being the cause of her death.

Grandma Boon spent most of her life in Alamance county. Early in life she professed faith in Christ and united with the Christian church at Union Ridge and later in life she moved her membership to Shallow Ford Christian church and lived a consistent Christian life to the end. Not long before she died, she expressed her desire to go and be with the Lord.

This death was especially touching to me, because I have been so closely connected with the family for so many years. For instance, Brother Mack Boon, her grandson; and myself were, as you might say, boys together. We have played on the branches together, and then when I went to preaching at Glen Raven we were together a great deal. Brother Mack and his mother attended the Sunday school here at Glen Raven when it was first organized. We were also together in school at Elon College. Brother Mack was converted in the first or second special meeting that was held in the Glen Raven Methodist Protestant church, and joined the church, I think in 1907.

By special request from the family, the writer was called to conduct the funeral service in the Glen Raven M. P. church on Wednesday, March 11, at two o'clock P. M., assisted by the pastor, Brother T. A. Williams. The many friends that attended the service and the beautiful flowers showed that she was loved. Her body was quietly laid to rest in Brower's Chapel cemetery to await the resurrection. May the blessings of our Heavenly Father be with and comfort the bereaved family.

D. M. Loy.

In Memory of Mrs. Ward.

It pains us very much to note the death of Mrs. Jane Fry Ward of Canaan church. Mrs. Ward was born January 18, 1851, died March 7, 1925. She was married about fifty-two years ago to the late Daniel Ward, and to this union were born five children, three sons and two daughters, Messrs. Robert Ward of Thomasville, John and Jeff Ward of Cid, and Mrs. Mary Surratt of near Denton, and one stepson, Mr. El Ward of Lexington, whom she loved and cherished as her own. One daughter died several years ago.

Mrs. Ward joined the Methodist Protestant church at Canaan in young womanhood and always took an active part in her church and was a leading spirit in the neighborhood. She was a great reader of books and especially the Bible which she loved and lived by all these many years and it could always be found near her, which helped her through her 25 years of widowhood. There could never have been one more gracious, hospitable, kindly and true in every relation of life. And she religiously adhered to her convictions of right and wrong regardless of public opinion or any other opposing influence. She was very much devoted to her children and grandchildren and was never too busy to visit the sick and distressed, and to administer to them the best she knew.

She had been in declining health for a year or more, but was not regarded as seriously ill until a few days before the end came. She suffered intensely, but bore her suffering without a murmur and made her preparation to go away as one starting on a journey.

She was laid to rest the following day in Canaan cemetery beneath a beautiful display of flowers, and in the presence of many sorrowing relatives and friends to await the resurrection morn; and then the grave shall give up its dead, and all sleeping nations shall arise and we shall see mother and grandma again. Rev. Edmond Ridge conducted the funeral services, assisted by Rev. Mr. Loy and Rev. Harris Hill, all of whom spoke in high praise of Mrs. Warl. We mourn verily to part with a friend so dear and valued, while believing too that she has gone to her eternal reward, and we are sure that the influence of her sweet life will be revered and cherished until those who knew her shall have passed away.

LATEST MEASUREMENTS OF LIGHT.

In an address delivered before the Franklin Institute of Science in Philadelphia Prof. A. A. Michelson, of Chicago university, reported his latest measurements of the speed of light. The speed of light is probably the most fundamental constant in physics. Prof. Michelson was not content with the calculation which says light travels 186,300 miles a second, admitting of an error of a few miles. He wanted the measurements to be as nearly perfect as human agency can make them. So he spent nearly all last summer at Mount Wilson observatory in California making his measurements.

The method he adopted consisted of sending a beam of light from one mountain peak to another. The light was reflected back from one mountain to the other with a mirror, thus making it possible to measure the time it took a ray of light to make a round trip. The beams were sent from Mount Wilson to Mount San Antonio 22 miles away. The distance was measured by the U. S. government with an accuracy of two parts in a million. The ray used was obtained from a powerful electric arc lamp which gave off light almost as bright as the sun. The beam was sent through a small hole in front of a lamp and caught on a revolving octagonal mirror from which it was sent to Mt. San Antonio. From there it was reflected back and received on the original mirror which was revolving at such a rate of speed as to catch the returning ray on the succeeding face of the octagon.

By this method only two measurements were necessary—the distance between the mountains and the time taken by light to make the round trip. The distance between the two mountains was obtained of course by direct measurement. The time required for the light to make the round trip was given by the speed of rotation of the mirror. The tests proved that the former measurements made by physicists were substantially correct. Light travels 186,300 miles a second.—The Pathfinder.

Thompson.—E. C. Thompson was born January 16, 1839, died March 22, 1925. Brother Thompson was twice married: first to Rachel Shaw March 14, 1867; second to C. E. Stroud November 14, 1906.

To the first union were born 10 children; eight of these and his first wife preceded him to the grave.

The survivors are Mrs. Geo. F. Crutchfield (daughter), Will Ed Thompson (son) his widow, five or six grandchildren, three or four great-grandchildren.

Brother Thompson was a Confederate soldier. He rendered valuable service in the war between the states.

He was a consistent member of Chestnut Ridge church for more than 70 years.

The following ministers conducted the funeral services at Chestnut Ridge church March 23: Rev. A. G. Dixon, T. M. Johnson and the others. After the funeral services in the church the remains were quietly laid to rest in Chestnut Ridge cemetery. The large congregation present on this occasion shows the esteem in which his memory is held.

May God comfort the bereaved ones.

B. M. Williams.

Mrs. H. B. Newby.—Mrs. Delphema Newby, wife of H. B. Newby, died at her home near Pleasant Grove M. P. church in Davidson county last Friday, March 20, shortly after 12 o'clock. She was born in Davidson county December 19, 1846. For three weeks she had been suffering from an attack of influenza, and on Thursday before her death, friends and relatives thought her condition improved. Thursday night, however, she seemed to get worse and the doctor was called. He promptly responded and all that he, nurse, friends, and relatives could do was done but it seemed that God was calling, and her soul went back to God who gave it.

Grandma Newby, as she was affectionately called, was a member of Pleasant Grove church, Thomasville charge, and was a woman of noble Christian character. She lived the greater part of her life in Thomasville, and could not regularly attend the church of her choice, yet she did attend as opportunity came to her.

Prior to her marriage she was Miss Delphema Kennedy. On Jan. 29, 1866, she was married to H. B. Newby and to this union 12 children were born, 11 of whom survive. There are six sons, Benjamin, Robert, John, and William Newby of this section; Carl Newby of Alaska, and Edward Newby of Indiana. The daughters are Mrs. Emma Kennedy of California; Mrs. Rosa Peek of Michigan; Mrs. Maggie Cecil, Mrs. Sallie Kennedy, and Mrs. Nannie Wiley of Davidson county. She is also survived by two sisters, Mrs. Augusta Scott and Mrs. Teshie McDaniel, of Indiana; and by two brothers, Albert Kennedy of Indiana, and Charles Kennedy of Chicago. To all these the pastor and church extend the hand of sympathy; and especially to the aged husband who remains to await a similar call. He doubtless feels the shock most heavily, and we pray that God may console him and keep him most tenderly.

Owing to the illness of her pastor, her former pastor, Rev. Edw. Suits, assisted by Rev. J. M. Courtney, of Thomasville, conducted the funeral at the church. Brother Suits had been her pastor for seven years and all were pleased that he should be present and conduct the service.

Pall-bearers were Lawrence Cecil, Venton Cecil, Albert Newby, Robert Kennedy, Wallace Kennedy, and B. C. Kennedy—all grandsons of the deceased.

The many beautiful floral offerings were carried by Misses Maud Kennedy, Pauline Newby, Wanda Newby, Mary Kennedy, Helen Kennedy, Della Cecil, Mabel Cecil, Margaret Cecil, and Eloise Pope, all granddaughters of Mrs. Newby except one.

The body of Grandma Newby now lies in the large cemetery at Pleasant Grove church.

—Brother A. M. Cratt, of Thomasville, was stricken with paralysis while riding alone in his car. Somehow he stopped the car or it stopped because he ceased to feed it. He was found on the ground by the side of the car in an unconscious condition. This occurred on Monday between Lexington and the Yadkin River bridge. There is little hope of his recovery.

—The following young ladies of High Point College visited churches last Sunday and made brief addresses in the interest of the Young People's Summer Conference under the direction of Dean Harrison: Misses Hayes, Livenood, Falkner, and Williams. They spoke, some at Tabernacle, and some at West End.

—It is announced that Brother Chas. F. Finch, of Thomasville, has sold his business interests for about a half million dollars and will devote himself to the completion of the great church plant which he began so magnificently a few years ago. While building a memorial to his lamented wife, he is also thoughtfully building a monument to himself. May he succeed in providing an institution which will render the highest possible service.

—Dr. Spahr expects to have a series of pre-Easter services in Grace church, beginning with the Wednesday night service of this week and continuing nightly until Easter.

—Rev. N. G. Bethea was on hand Monday night according to announcement to begin evangelistic services in Calvary church. Pastor Gerringer and an evangelistic committee have been busy with preparations for the meeting. Considerable interest has been awakened in the community. The attendance began to increase before the meeting began. The attendance on Monday night was indeed gratifying.

—In the death of Prof. J. A. W. Thompson our church loses one of its most pious and devoted members. He was a man of great kindness of heart and as principal of the schools he directed he made many friends who will feel a sense of loss in his going.

—"Owner of the world's largest ranch dies." Yes, they all die. It matters not how much they accumulate, they must go, and when they go they can take nothing with them. Mrs. King's one million and two hundred and eighty acres of land could not hold her to the earth. She has gone; whose shall those things be that she has provided?

—Walter Camp, known as the founder of modern football, died March 14, in his sixty-sixth year. In his college days he was a great football player at Yale. Later he coached famous Yale teams. For many years, at the end of each football season, he has chosen "All-American" teams. The members of such teams were considered by him as the best football players in the country.

—More than a million Americans contributed $4,265,322 to Near East Relief in 1924. This sentence is taken from the annual report of Charles V. Vickrey, General Secretary of the Near East Relief. During the year that organization aided 554,978 persons, mostly women and children. Since it was founded the Near East Relief has spent more than ninety million dollars. Of this total, twenty-four million was used in Armenia, twenty million in Turkey, eleven million in Syria and Palestine, and three million in Greece.

—Pictures of all sections of the United States are to be taken from the air, beginning next September. The plan is to make picture maps that will be of much greater service than the ordinary maps now in use. The work will be done by the U. S. Air Service. The cost to complete the work is estimated at fifty million dollars.

—At Palm Beach, Florida, known as "the playground of the rich," two big hotels were burned to the ground with a property loss of about five million dollars. It was not known whether there was any loss of life. Governor Martin ordered State troops to Palm Beach to guard the fire district.

—Tokio, Japan, was swept by a fire that made thousands of persons homeless and was a reminder of the fire that visited that city following the terrible earthquake of September, 1923. Secretary of State Kellogg directed that an investigation be made to see if the United States could render any assistance.

—An explosion in a coal mine at Fairmont, W. Va., entombed thirty-four men. Every effort was being made to rescue them but it was feared that all had perished.

—General John J. Pershing, commander-in-

ENJOYING RELIGION.

A preacher approached a boy in his new appointment with the question, "Do people in Millbrook enjoy religion?" "Them that has it does," was the boy's reply. There is a bit of philosophy in that boy's reply. There is a great deal of criticism about religion; what it costs, the hardness of the way and the bitterness of the strife by people who have not any. The little boy is right. There is infinite joy and gladness in religion to those who have it, but the croakers in the Kingdom of God are the folks who have never gotten close enough to Jesus Christ, and have never gotten deep enough into the gospel of His love to know what the joy of salvation is. The deepest joy that is possible to the human heart is the joy that comes to those who know Christ and His blessed gospel.—Exchange.

FRANKLIN'S ANSWER.

When Franklin was 19 years old, he visited London. In search of work, and, having learned the printer's trade, he went straight to a printing office and made known his errand. The foreman was rather disdainful, and said:

"Ah, a lad from America seeking employment as a printer! Well, do you really understand the art of printing? Can you set type?"

Young Franklin stepped to one of the cases and in a brief space set up these words from the first chapter of John's Gospel: "Nathaniel said unto him, Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip said unto him, Come and see." The text conveyed such a delicate rebuke, and the work was done so quickly and accurately that a position was granted him.—Exchange.

Fancy and pride seek things at vast expense.—Young.

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS The Bad Break.

There's a break everywhere you look, a bad break. It is in nature. The geologist finds it in the earth's crust, and the astronomer in the upper blue. The biologist finds it in animal life.

The chemist constantly guards against the death element in the gases. The orchardist fights it by spraying. The farmer must overcome it to get a crop, and the stock-breeder vigorous young. The weather expert never knows when and where a sudden wild storm may bring destruction and death.

That break is in human life, too. Here it's a moral break. The banker and merchant think of it as they engage clerks, and plan surety bonds against somebody's failure to keep faith. The thoughtful parent and the wise teacher guard against it for the young people. We are all increasingly on our guard in a crowd. Even the mother is conscious of a something serious to be reckoned with in the will of her growing babe.

There's a break lurking everywhere. The break in nature grows out of the break in man. For man is the underlord of creation. He affects it. The two intertwine.

Away back that break began with God. Man was made free. He was like God in being free to think and act as he chose. There was the chance of a break. He could choose right, or wrong. He chose. He made a bad choice. That was the beginning of the break.

Do you remember the old garden story? The garden was full of fruit trees. Man was to eat freely of all he chose. Then God said, "The real things are the heart things. Let us keep in touch, real heart touch. It depends on you, your choosing to have it so.

"So, we'll call this tree here the tree of choice. I ask you not to eat of it, simply because I want you to stay in touch with me by choosing to. You may eat of it, of course, if you choose to.

"But, please, I ask you not to. I want your love because you choose to love, to stay in touch, and this tree is your opportunity." There was the chance for the break, in the man's power to choose as he pleased. And there the break came.

Mark keenly, that the break began with the man. It is what he did that made the break. There was no break on God's part, except the break in His heart as He saw the man break away. The old friendship was broken. It was broken by the man.

And we've all caught the break habit. It's contagious. It's easy to break. It's hard to break away from the break habit. Yet—yet, there is never an actual break with God except as each man makes it.

It's not a matter of that first man's break, even though he started the down-grade. It's each man's own break or not-break that matters. That, only that, but all of that. Every man stands on his own feet.

The old-fashioned word is sin. A new word sharpens the meaning. The break of sin is not merely a misfortune. It's not a thing to be cured by the surgeon's knife, nor the psychologist's formula. Else things could be fixed up by providing surgeons and psychologists enough.

It isn't merely a personal twist this way or that, more or less accidental, or incidental. No, at the core, sin is in the choosing power. It's preferring one's own way to God's. The root of that break is in the will.

There never has been any break on God's part toward man. That should be underscored black. His only break is with man's break. For the thing itself, that beseeking choice, that was bad. That hurt man.

A hell of suffering was packed in that. For man's sake that must be fought. The snake in man's bosom must be caught and slain lest it sting the man's life clean out.

God's feeling toward man has never changed, not by as much as half the batting of your eye-lid. But He hates the break bitterly. That's why the Man came to let us know how God feels both about us, and about the break.

That's why the extreme thing of dying was done, to break our hearts with the love of it, and rid us of the results of the break, and to put a new power into us.

So the break is ended up by our new choice. And a new tree of choice will grow in our garden. And He and we will meet in heart touch again under the Tree of Choice, which will become a tree of life, never-ending fruitful fragrant life.

What a prince man is that has such power of choice. What a princely power that choosing power is that can break the plan of God. And—and, can make us friends again with such a God.

What a love it is in that Man's heart, and the Father's to go to such extremes to mend that break. What a break, a bad break, that was, that the Man did such an extreme thing to fix up.

An old western stage-driver cried out in his delirium, "I'm on the down-grade. And I can't reach the brakes." Things seemed at their worst to him. That bad break really puts things at their worst.

SATAN'S WORK TRAP.

Satan often urges us into good works. That is sometimes the only way he can get Christians out of his way. A Christian woman who is an old friend of The Sunday School Times wrote recently to one of the editorial staff: "All blessing on you and your work. Listen to an old lady, and do not work too hard! Dr. Foster at Clifton Springs used to tell us that when the Devil could not tempt a Christian, he jumped on his back, clapped in his spurs, and said, 'Go—go—go—and get out of my way as soon as you can.' " Which is only another way of saying, as has often been pointed out, that when Satan finds he cannot prevent a Christian from doing the whole will of God he then tries to drive that Christian beyond the will of God. But we need never be deceived by Satan in this way, if we claim the protection of the shed blood of Christ, seek God's will as revealed in his Word, and turn confidently to God in prayer asking for his own wisdom as to what we should and should not do. To such a seeker for light, God "giveth . . . liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him" (James 1:5).—Sunday School Times.

The happiness we give is the happiness we keep.

THE PUNISHMENT OF SIN.

An eloquent minister of the modernist persuasion declared in a recent sermon that God does not punish sin, but that sin inflicts its own punishment. The fact is that the Holy Scriptures repeatedly declare that God does punish sin and sinners. Read Lev. 23:18: "And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, then will I punish you seven times more for your sins." Read Isa. 13:11 and 26:21: "And I will punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity." "For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity." Read Hos. 4:9: "And I will punish them for their ways, and reward them their doings." And read what Jesus Christ says: "The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: and there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." Matt. 13:41, 42. "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Matt. 10:28.

God is a just Sovereign as well as a merciful Father. He has attached penalties to His laws, penalties of remorse and everlasting punishment. He would neither be truthful nor just if He did not execute the penalties of violated laws. And remorse of conscience is only a part of sin's punishment. This is the worm that never dies, and the fire which shall never be quenched. The rich man in hell underwent a fourfold torment,—a tormenting flame, a tormenting contrast, a tormenting thirst, and a tormenting memory.

But why does God permit finally impenitent sinners to go to hell? It's the only place they can go to and feel at home. The devil's crowd naturally and inevitably gratitate to the devil's hell. They will be far less miserable there than they would be in heaven. "Our God is a consuming fire" as well as a most merciful and anxious Savior. A lost soul would suffer far more torment in the consuming fire of God's holiness than he would in the flames of the lake that burns with fire and brimstone.

To choose poison is to choose the death that follows. To choose sin is to choose the punishment that follows. Sinners eat the fruit of their doings. God is merciful to let them go to their own place,—the hell that they have chosen for their eternal abode. It would be unjust and unmerciful to take them to the torment of glory.—The Word of Life.

SCIENCE NEVER WORKS MIRACLES.

Miracles are always beyond science. Let us be careful, therefore, not to fall into the common error of saying that it ought to be easier to believe in miracles today, with scientific wonders abounding. A miracle is a supernatural act of God's sovereign and arbitrary intervention, beyond all laws, known or unknown, of the so-called "natural" world. Scientific marvels can be seen and accepted by the natural, unregenerate man. God's miracles can be apprehended fully only by the born-again man. Science appeals to sight. Miracles appeal to faith. Therefore any attempt to prove the facts or historicity of Bible miracles by adducing scientific evidence of similar results in the natural world is not helpful.

out is positively harmful, to Christian faith. For faith and sight are in fundamentally different realms. We are to believe in God's miracles, not because we see how they may be accomplished, but because God's Word declares that they have been accomplished. One of the most subtle and shocking attempts recently to prove the historicity of the virgin birth of Christ is an elaborate thesis on the parthenogenesis (reproduction without sexual union), asserting that, because laboratory experiments have succeeded in producing baby frogs without a frog father, we may now intelligently believe the gospel records of the virgin birth of our Lord Jesus Christ! Again, multitudes who love and honor the veteran Baptist minister, Dr. Russell H. Conwell, will deeply regret his statement to the graduating class of Temple University, Philadelphia, last month, as reported in the Public Ledger: "The theologian cannot find in the Bible any miracle more wonderful than the radio and the motion picture." Are radio and the movies, then, wonders equal to Christ's raising from the dead the decomposing body of Lazarus, and Christ's own resurrection? God forbid! The highest, most accurate human science is the result of man's natural thinking. But, says God, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways. . . . For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."—Sunday School Times.

THE POWER OVER "HUMAN" NATURE.

An ill-tempered young girl was sent away to a boarding school, where she was sweetly converted. She came home changed. She was gentle, unselfish and charitable. Her infidel cousin, George, was greatly surprised. He watched her closely till he was thoroughly satisfied that a real change had taken place. Then he asked her what had caused this great change. She told him it was the grace of God which had changed her heart. He said to himself, "I don't believe that God has anything to do with it. But a wonderful change has taken place in her, and I should like to be as good as she is. I will be so." He formed a lot of good resolutions. He tried to control his tongue and temper, and kept a strict watch over himself, but was all the time doing and saying what he did not wish to do or say. And, as he failed time after time, he would study his good cousin's example. He would read this living Bible, and say to himself: "How does it happen that she, who has not so much knowledge, or so much strength of character as I have, can do what I can't do? It must be God, as she says." He went into his closet and down on his knees and to the great Teacher, and he was soon rejoicing in the power of Him Whom the wind and the sea obey.—Selected.

WHEN HE ASCENDED.

All that might be termed the Gospel is founded upon the resurrection of Jesus. It is folly to say, as some so-called Christian teachers affirm, that "we should not put too much stress upon it." Upon the resurrection of Jesus depends our hope of immortality. More than that, take that fact from our Christian system, and the whole falls into pieces. Without the establishing of the truths which the resurrection seals, self is the one to be served by man; good is but his convenience; and sin no more than good in the formative stage. When He ascended His word was that He would send the Holy Ghost. If He be not ascended, then have we not received the Paraclete. But, thanks be unto God, He arose and has ascended, whereof the indwelling Spirit bears witness, not merely as a resurrected man to take his place in the company of spirits, but as God in man resuming the seat of authority. "All power is given unto me in heaven," said Jesus as he started back to the throne.—Exchange.

MY SAVIOR.

Fling wide the gates, the Savior waits

To tread his royal way;

He has come from above, in his power and love,

To die on this Passion Day.

His cross is the sign of a love divine,

His crown is the thorn-wreath of woe,

He bears his load on the sorrowful road

And bends 'neath the burden low.

How sweet is the grace of his sacred face,

And lovely beyond compare.

Though weary and worn, with the merciless scorn,

Of a world he has come to spare.

The burden of wrong that earth bears along,

Past evil, and evil to be,

All sins of man since the world began,

They are laid, dear Lord, on thee.

Then on to the end, my God and my Friend,

With thy banner lifted high!

Thou art come from above in thy power and love

To endure, and suffer, and die.

—J. Stainer.

"THOSE OTHER LITTLE SHIPS."

"And there were also with him other little ships."

The Sergeant's Sermon. During the great war some officers of an English regiment in France wished to have a religious meeting among themselves. They chose a tumble-down cottage for their place of worship and, screening the windows and the holes with turf and sacking so that no light should show and attract enemy aeroplanes, selected the hymns and decided who should make the prayer. Then arose the question who should preach the sermon. At last the choice fell on a sergeant known as Tubby. The nickname was a tribute to his jollity. Tubby gave careful thought to his task, and after the hymns and the prayer, read the story of the storm on the Sea of Galilee. Then he delivered his sermon.

"I don't know," he began, "whether you chaps ever noticed that it says, 'There were also with him other little ships.' It's about those other little ships I want to talk. What were they doin' there? I don't know; their duty, I suppose, same as you and I are tryin' to do here. But, anyway, when the storm fell on the disciples' ship those other little ships got it too. They were tossed about like corks and had a reg-lar bad time of it. Then when Jesus rebuked the wind and made the sea still, and there was a great calm—well, those other little ships got that too.

"Now, it's just the same in the war. The big ships are in it, but there are other little ships also—Denmark and Holland and Switzerland and Norway and Sweden—they're getting tossed about and having an anxious time. And when we win the great peace those other little ships'll have it too.

"And isn't it the same with you and me? If we get to playin' the fool with drink and gambling and other sins, we'll not be the only ones to feel the storm. There'll be other little ships in it with us—wives, and children, and sweethearts, and friends. They'll get the storm too. But then, again, if you let Jesus have his way in your heart—well, then those other little ships'll be as safe and happy as you are. Isn't it worth trying for, boys?"

Need it be said that every heart in that little gathering so far from home and kindred, so close to danger and to death, was deeply touched by the sergeant's sermon? Some time later Tubby was killed in an attack, but his words will live after him and help to make the great sea of life safe for "those other little ships."—Youth's Companion.

WHAT I PLEASE.

Pleasure comes from things that please. When I do "what I please" I am supposed to have a pleasant experience. But it behooves us to make sure that what we please is right. The news papers have been giving what seems to be one of the most terrible exposures ever made, of sin-driven, sin-consisting "pleasure," in the experiences of the two young university students who brutally slew Bobby Franks of Chicago. Dr. William A. White, president of the American Psychiatric Society, has told the court what he has learned by his psychological prying into the minds of these boy murderers. Of one of them he showed that "murder was as chaff weighed against his pleasures." That is, if "murder stood between him and "what he pleased," then he would commit murder as readily as he would brush a fly out of his way. That statement shocks us; but before we decide that we never could do that, let us recognize that we have all done exactly that with one sin or another,—yes, with many sins. Over and over again sin has been merely as chaff weighed against our pleasures. And all sin is murder-stuff; it has the "makings" of murder. "The wages of sin is death." Sin—our sin—took the life of Christ. Yet, knowing full well what sin is, and what God says about sin, we have deliberately sinned because it was "what I pleased." May God grant that the terrible exposures of the course of sin in these boy murderers may help us all to see sin and our own lives in their true light. The only remedy is to have Christ as Savior, Lord, and Life. Then we can say, with him, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." Then comes to pass the miracle in our lives that only God's will pleases us. "What I please" then is God's good pleasure; and that is "the life that is Christ" made mine.—Sunday School Times.

—Dr. J. James Swain, son of the late Rev. W. E. Swain, was formerly linotype operator in the Herald office. For several years he has been serving the Greensboro Daily Record in the same capacity. Now he has been promoted to the position of linotype machinist. He showed that he possessed mechanical ingenuity when he was with the Herald.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Last Saturday and Sunday were given to District rallies. I had the privilege of attending the rallies at Midway, Tabernacle and West End. These rallies were not as largely attended as we had hoped, but the messages were of a very high order and were well received. In the eight rallies held at this time, and in those to follow within the next few weeks, several hundred of our people were reached, and will be reached with very vital messages concerning the interest of the kingdom as promoted through the Methodist Protestant Church.

The Easter Tide.

Next week is Holy Week, and the people will be thinking of the Christ as perhaps at no other time during the year, with the possible exception of Christmas. So, it is a good time to get individuals to render their decision to live for Jesus. We rejoice to know that many of our churches will be holding special services, during Holy Week, for the strengthening of the saints and for the salvation of the unsaved. Asheville, Calvary, Grace, West End, Charlotte and Lexington are all holding special meetings during or near Easter. Of course there are others, but I do not happen to know which. Pray for the success of these meetings. An opportunity may present itself to each of us to point some one to Jesus at this happy season. We should be ready to seize such opportunities. It is the business of the church folks to lead people to Jesus. We do all our church work, and we raise all our church finances that people may be led to Jesus. Failing in this we fail utterly.

Pastors and Stewards Please Remember.

We are now passing into April, the last month of the second quarter. Report blanks will be mailed you during April, asking for your report on the 30th of April or the 1st of May. Soon thereafter we will publish in the Herald the standing of all charges on the budgets. When May comes half the year will be gone, and we trust that by that time we can report that every charge has paid something on both budgets.

The entire list will be published, whether blank or not blank. A. G. Dixon.

SPECIAL TO PASTORS AND SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS AND STEWARDS.

Once more I am making an earnest appeal to you to lead our people to do the thing that the president of our General Conference has suggested that we do:—

Observe Sacrificial Week.

These suggestions are made, one or the other of which many of our people will gladly observe if led to do so by those who are directing the church work.

"Suppose each one of us should bring to his pastor, to be placed to the credit of the General Conference budget, one-tenth of his earnings for that week.

"Or, suppose each one should go without one meal a day, or some luxury, and pay the price of that into the treasury.

"Or, suppose each one knowing that he is living constantly on the bounty of God, should pay the price of one week's board into the treasury.

"Or, suppose each pastor should recommend his own sacrificial plan to his church.

"Any one of these plans faithfully and universally practiced for this one week in the Methodist Protestant Church would produce ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS.

"What shall I render unto the Lord

For all his benefits toward me?

I will take the cup of salvation

And call upon the name of the Lord.

I will pay my vows unto the Lord,

Now in the presence of all his people."

The above is suggested for Passion Week, beginning with Sunday, April 5, and closing with Sunday, April 12.

Home Missions.

The Methodist Protestant Church has planned that the special offerings at Easter shall go toward home missions, and whatever other plans any church may have for the Easter time this offering can be taken for home missions. Twenty-three per cent of the General Conference budget is allotted to the Board of Home Missions.

Let every church make a special effort to raise that 23 per cent, and thus raise nearly one-fourth of the General Conference budget allotted to your charge. Then please send at once to Rev. S. W. Taylor, Burlington, N. C., and get full credit on your General Conference budget.

Do It Without Fail.

Much can be done in this way if our pastors and Sunday school superintendents and stewards will plan for a collection at each church either on Sunday, April 5, or on Sunday, April 12.

Easter Services.

Where the Easter Day services are being prepared make every reasonable effort to raise your 23 per cent through that service. Our Lord, who gave Himself for us, is expecting great things of us. We must not fail Him.

Yours in His service, A. G. Dixon.

YOUR EASTER OFFERING AND THE BUDGET.

Readers of this paper will not forget that the apportionment to the church for the Board of Home Missions is $115,000 per year, and that the goal set for Easter, 1925, is the full amount of this apportionment. Our slogan is "The Apportionment in Full from Every Charge." Why not? The General Conference after days of deliberation decided that it would be unwise to make any reduction in the scope of the denominational enterprises and re-affirmed the conviction expressed at Greensboro in 1920, that less than $50,000 would be insufficient to challenge the church, and would not support the work which it was decided should be done.

This same General Conference of 1921 decided that the several boards issuing special days programs would be entitled to raise the full amount of the apportionment to their respective interests on these special days. An article appeared in this paper in a recent issue from the pen of the president of the General Conference calling attention to this matter. In that article he noted that the collection made on Easter is intended for the Board of Home Missions. He called attention to several conditions to be observed in order that there may be no confusion. The first was the direction of the General Conference that all funds should pass through the hands of the annual conference treasurer, and be forwarded by him to the treasurer of the General Conference. To secure this result the material forwarded to those ordering the Easter programs included a blank form for this report to the annual conference treasurer, with full instructions as to making the remittance. Use this form, properly filled out, and there will be no confusion. Your charge will receive its full credit on its apportionment for the General Conference budget, and the board of Home Missions will receive the entire amount of your contribution for Home Missions on Easter.

The second condition is that this contribution must be specifically noted as an Easter offering for the Board of Home Missions. This is a very important note to this board. More and more we have come to depend upon the Easter offering for the support of our work. What the Board of Home Missions will be able to do next year will depend largely upon the income from the Easter offering from the Sunday schools and churches.

The third condition which should be considered is that the entire offering should go to the Board of Home Missions up to 25 per cent of the total apportionment for the General Conference budget to your charge. If you wish to make a gift for the General Conference as has been suggested by the Board of Home Missions, the number of annual conference churches and charges, an amount may be raised and the surplus above the 25 per cent will be reported to the annual conference treasurer as a credit on the designated fund. By a judicious use of the special days, our churches could provide 75 per cent of the apportionment for General Conference budget on the three official special days.

Do not forget that our goal is $115,000, and our slogan, "The Apportionment in Full from Every Sunday School, and from Every Church in the Entire Denomination."

PROBLEMS OF CHRISTIANITY IN CHINA.

"Encouraging as are all the lines of progress, they are only the roads along which the Christian movement is travelling. It has not yet arrived at the terminus of any one of them, and at every step lurks the possibility of the road suddenly stopping or branching off into a devious by-way."

"Excellent as the numerical growth has been, it has yet to reach 999 out of every thousand of the population."

"Stimulated as the response to the call for workers has been, yet over 90 per cent of the survey correspondents testify that the inadequacy of the occupation of their fields is due to the insufficient supply of Chinese workers."

There remain vast unoccupied areas, and untapped masses of the people, including nearly all of the rural 80 per cent of the population.

"The Christian movement is confronted with gigantic challenges, which if not accepted and carried out victoriously will finally defeat or neutralize the movement. Some of these are challenges growing out of its own life needs: How to promote self-reliance, both financial and spiritual; how to emphasize more adequately work by and for women; how to develop a Christian literature that is of, by and for the Chinese people; how to deepen the spirit of life of the Christian community, that is, how to promote stewardship, Bible and other devotional reading, and in fact to evolve to a higher level the whole system of religious nurture that shall produce all the fruits of the Spirit, all the virtues and graces of Christian character."

"Other challenges to the movement grow out of the needs of the society of which it is a part."

"It should engage as in a life and death struggle to help Chinese society meet the possibilities and dangers connected with the new industrial development; to deal with the complicated problems arising from the changing social life, as well as the passing of some ethical standards and the coming of others, to combat the rampant vice and drug traffics and the socialized cancers, such as gambling, opium, polygamy and concubinage, that gnaw at the vitals of the nation."

"However, it is not these challenges that threaten the movement. The direction of progress with respect to them is fairly clear, and the movement can proceed in that direction; but it is through toil and sweat, fire or blood."

"They appear as heroic tasks to be accomplished, where the whole force can apply itself with single purpose, and where failure or adversity created together does not weaken but strengthens the esprit de corps."

"The more critical situations arise where the way of duty or experience is not clear; the consequences of which may be division of counsel, confusion of practice, or even deflection of the entire movement into a wrong course."

"The most conspicuous example of this type now before the Christian movement, the crux of each appear as stated here.

"Influence of the New National Spirit. It is inevitable and certainly proper and desirable that the appearances of better internal conditions and signs of progress should arouse in the Chinese people ever growing pride in their civilization and all things pertaining thereto. The process is now going on. The point to safeguard is: will the Christian movement in the face of the rising tide of nationalism maintain its catholic spirit and its universal outlook. China can from her spiritual heritage and genius make a noble contribution to the interpretation of the Christian religion, by which the church universal will be enriched. But this will hardly be done if the spirit of nationalism should beget a narrow and proprietary attitude toward the Christian church within her borders."

"The need of our time is not for more adjectives to qualify the noun Christian, but for the adjective Christian to be prefixed to more nouns; not Chinese Christians, but Christian Chinese. The Christian movement must take possession of the nation, not the nation take possession of the movement."—From the China Mission Year Book. Fred. C. Klein.

GOD'S WAY BETTER THAN OURS.

There is something wonderfully inspiring in the thought that God has a plan and a purpose for our lives—for each life. We do not come drifting into this world, and we do not drift through it, like wind on the ocean. We are sent from God, each one of us with a divine thought for his life—something God wants us to fill. All through our lives we are in the hands of God, who chooses our place and orders our circumstances, and is ready to make all things work together for our good. Our part in all this is the acceptance of God's will for our lives, as that will is made known to us day by day. If we thus acquiesce in the divine way for us, we shall fulfill the divine purpose.

It is the highest honor that can be conferred upon us to occupy such a place in the thought of God. We cannot doubt that His way for us is better than ours, since He is infinitely wiser than we are. It may be painful and hard, but in the pain and the hardness there is blessing.

One is called apart from active life, and shut up in a sick-room. It seems to him that his time is being wasted. There are many things which need to be done, and which he might have done, instead of lying there in the darkened room. People to whom his life is a continual blessing miss him when he comes not. He seems in his illness to be leaving a great blank, where there ought to have been many good deeds and gentle ministries. Besides this loss to others and to the work of the world, sickness is most costly to the sick man himself; its money cost is great; then its burden of suffering is great.

What then is there to compensate for all this loss and cost, to make the long illness really a blessing? Is there anything? If we were directing the affairs of our own lives, we would not put the sickness in; is it possible that God's way is better than ours would have been?

Of course, we may not claim to know all the reasons there are in the divine mind for the pains and sufferings which come into our lives, or what God's design is for us in these trials. Without discovering any reasons at all, we may still trust God who loves us with an infinite love, and whose wisdom is also infinite. But we can think of some ways in which it is possible for blessing and good to come out of a sick-room experience.

The Master has other work for us besides what we do in our common occupations. We have other lessons to learn besides those we get from books and friends and current events and through life's ordinary experiences. There is a work to be done in us—in our own hearts and lives—which is even more important than anything assigned to us in the scheme of the world's activities. There are lessons which we can learn much better in the quiet, jaded sick-room than outside, in the glare of the streets and amid the clamor of earth's strifes. Our shut-in days need never be lost days. Whatever they may cost us in money or in suffering, we need not be poorer when they are over than if we had been busy all the while at the world's tasks.

We need only to accept God's way and go as He leads, and at the end we shall find that in not the smallest matter have we ever been unwisely led, but that at every step He has brought us to some good. We do not know what the future, even the nearest hour of the future, may have for us, but we know that we cannot drift beyond our Father's love and care, and that all that may occur dark or disastrous will reveal joy and blessing at the end.—J. R. Miller.

ARCANA.

"Never say that you know the last word of the human heart," says one whose name has been washed out of the record. I should like to ask him whether he was thinking up or down. Was he cynic or lover of folks? Times are when human nature seems to sink lower than the brute; other times when an every-day brother reaches up and writes his name among the stars. If the materialists were right, one could write history beforehand. Given causes would produce assured results. But they don't. There is another element to be reckoned with. Men react variously to the same stimuli. Paul and Nero grew in the same Rome. Washington and Benedict Arnold drew from the same soil. Edwin and John Wilkes Booth nursed at the same breast. Not only so, but the sinner may right-about-face and become a saint. In every soul are the potentials both of angel and devil. Till the last word is uttered, you never know what it will be—from the human heart. But Christianity believes most in the angel.—George Clarke Peck.

A BUSINESS MAN AND HIS BIBLE.

"I know I ought to read the Bible, but I am too busy earning money for my family." That is what a successful business man, who is a pretty good church member, said some time ago.

Was he correct in his statement? He thought so, but he was deceiving himself in the assertion. He did not put first things first. In his heart he could not realize that Bible-reading would impart through him to his family certain ideals and spirit which are of infinitely greater worth than money. The man who gives his family nothing but money does not give them much, though he keeps them in the lap of luxury. In addition he must give them himself. And to make himself of most worth to them he must be a Bible-reader, a church-goer, a Christian philanthropist, and a business man who follows the Golden Rule.

A DEAD SAVIOR IMPOSSIBLE.

There can be no resurrection victory unless the body which died is made alive. Not only did the spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ survive death, but his human body, which had died, was raised from the dead and given life again. Otherwise we should have no Savior. A God-Man half alive and half dead would not be able to save to the uttermost. Yet that is the only sort of Savior known to the Modernist who denies the resurrection of the body. His Jesus is not God; and his Jesus is not a Savior. Dr. Charles R. Erdman, of Princeton Seminary, has called attention to a striking fact in connection with the doubt, and then the triumphant belief, of the apostle Thomas. Thomas at first did not believe in the resurrection of the body. Nothing, he said, but a literal, visible, tangible demonstration of Christ's resurrection would convince him. Eight days later the risen Lord gave Thomas just such a demonstration. "And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God." Dr. Erdman's comment on this repentant and believing and joyous cry of Thomas is that there is a relation between the truth of the resurrection and belief in the deity of our Lord. Thomas may have thought he believed in the deity of Christ before that day; but now he really believed. There can be no complete and intelligent acceptance of Christ's deity while one supposes that his human body was allowed to see corruption and is somewhere on or in the earth today in dissolution. Only a bodily risen Lord can win from us the glad cry, "My Lord and my God!"—Sunday School Times.

JUST SUPPOSE.

I heard a little maiden say,
"I haven't much to give today;
My offering would be small,
I needn't give it in at all."
Now, just suppose each drop of rain
Would say it couldn't help the grain,
And couldn't make the flowers grow,
And so it wouldn't try, you know;
And just suppose each gleam of sun
Should say, because 'twas only one,
It wouldn't shine a single mite,
For fear it wouldn't make much light;
Or just suppose if every flower
Should keep tight shut in garden bower,
For fear it wouldn't grow as sweet
As others it might chance to meet;
Or, wouldn't it be very plain
We'd have no flowers, no sun, no rain?
And so you see, if one and all
Complain because their gift is small,
And for that cause their duty shun,
Our Father's work could not be done.
But every little beam of light,
Each raindrop, and each flower bright
Just does the best that it can do,
And that's what I'll do, won't you?

—Edith Sanford Tillotson.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES FOR SUNDAY, APRIL 12.

What Does the Resurrection of Jesus Mean to Me?

Daily Readings.

Mon. The dead live. Matt. 17:1-8.

Tues. Jesus' power to save. Heb. 7:23-28.

Wed. A home beyond death. John 14:1-4.

Thurs. A "house not made with hands." 2 Cor. 1:1-f.

Fri. Reward beyond. 2 Cor. 5:10-21.

Sat. A vision of heaven. Rev. 22:1-5.

Sunday. Topic. 1 Corinthians 15:1-20, 49.

(Easter Meeting.)

An Easter Song Service.

The Christian Endeavor Quarterly suggests the opportunity presented here for your society to do something new and wonderfully uplifting. Either morning or Easter evening hold an Easter Caroling on the street in front of your church. The country societies can hold it too in front of their church. Suitable songs would be, "Christ Is Risen," "Hallelujah," "Welcome, Happy Morning," "He Is Risen, He Is Risen," "Low in the Grave He Lay," "Come, Ye Faithful, Raise the Strain," and other Easter hymns.

A Very Personal Topic.

The fact that this topic is a very personal one should give each one of us a new grip on ourselves and on our faith in the resurrection of our Lord and increase our confidence that "in the fact that because He arose we too shall rise. Usually our topics are general and we talk of them in a general way and as some has said "use our neighbors as a sort of moral umbrella" letting the truths apply to them and slipping from under ourselves, but this time we cannot do that even if we wanted to. We do not want to though for if the resurrection means nothing to each one of us then religion means nothing to us. For if Christ be not risen then is our hope vain and our faith of no avail. Here is a chance to give our testimony for our faith in His resurrection. It is being assailed today perhaps as never before and Christian Endeavorers everywhere must rally to the help of Jesus as they would to the help of an earthly friend and give their testimony for Him and His resurrection power thus strengthening their own faith and that of others who may be wavering. Jesus was tried before Pilate and there was no one to say a word of good for Him. Will we let the world try Him again and we sit dumb while His accusers jeer and make light of Him? A thousand times, No! Let us stand for Him now as we believe the disciples should have stood by Him then.

The resurrection of the dead was taught long before Christ came to clinch the fact. The Pharisees and the Sadducees quarreled over it long before Christ was born just as bitterly as people are disputing over it today, but their arguments did not keep Christ in the grave and it will not keep us there.

"We have a certain earthly appearance because of our physical birth; we will have a much more beautiful and glorified heavenly appearance, because we shall awake in His image, if we have lived in accordance with a firm faith in Jesus' resurrection. Because He lives we shall live also.

Because He Lives We Live.

1. A Living Faith comes to us as a result of the proved fact of our Master's resurrection: for His resurrection means a living Christ to us. If it does not mean that then we are dead in sin without anything to stir us to earnest activity for His sake. But the living faith which comes to us keeps us striving onward and upward in His service.

2. A Living Bible is ours because of His resurrection. The Bible is history, but it is much more than history—it is inspired history. And it is inspired largely because there is breathed through it the never dying principle of eternity. And this can be made true only by the assurance of Jesus' resurrection.

3. A Living Hope comes with assurance only from Jesus' victory over death and the grave. Christian people would be most miserable without this living hope. But this living hope stays with us through time and through eternity. It keeps us looking ahead continually, and fills us with the divine energy which drives us on to real achievement for His name's sake. Our living hope is one of the greatest things in our hearts to keep us looking ahead.

4. A Living Activity is ours because of the assurance we have of His resurrection. If I believe in Him, and in His triumph over the grave, I must "strive to do whatever He would like to have me do." We know that we must work, and work hard, at anything else to make a success. Why can't we see that the same rule holds true for the extension of His kingdom? Earnest endeavor will certainly follow an earnest resurrection faith.

5. A Living Heaven is brought down to earth for us by faith in the resurrection of our blessed Master. We cannot know all about heaven. Many things about it we will never understand until we get there; but this we can know,—it is where Jesus is and that will be heaven enough for those who love the Lord. He said, "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also." John 14:2 and 3. "We know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." 1 John 3:2.

Things to Pray For.

1. Thank God for the testimony of His Word concerning the witness of Jesus' resurrection.
2. Thank God for the fact of Jesus' resurrection upon the first Easter.
3. Thank God for the power which belief in Jesus' resurrection brings to the lives of Christians.
4. Ask God to give all of you a fresh grip upon your faith in the resurrection.
5. Ask God to bless this meeting as a means to enliven the resurrection faith of all present.
6. Ask God to give you power to live the risen life from day to day.

Through the persuasion and influence of the assistant superintendent at Enfield $12 was added to what was already a good offering for the Home. If all assistant superintendents would do likewise the bank account at the Home would always be in a prosperous condition.

Enfield makes the largest report this week, but to all we say, thank you.

Our Woman's Missionary Society was organized one year ago. It has been very well attended and all dues paid up. Now we have re-organized with Miss Kate Medlock as president; we had several new members added to our list at the last monthly meeting. An interesting program was carried out. We hope to get several other members and have even better attendance. Have collected $14 this conference year. We think that right good for a small society in a rural church.

Ina Wood, Secretary Treasurer.

March 30.

The Seventh District Rally on March 28, 29, at Pleasant Grove Church, Thomasville Charge.

First session, Saturday morning, seven of the 11 pastors present, Rev. N. G. Bethea, chairman pro tem, presiding. Devotions led by the pastor, Rev. G. L. Reynolds.

Rev. C. L. Whitaker, D.D., gave an instructive and inspiring address on church music. Brother Hall from the college followed, talked on Prayer and Devotion. Then Rev. W. L. Carson talked on saving the unsaved. These three addresses fitted well together and should be a helpful preparation for the evangelistic campaign. Open discussion followed. And then a splendid dinner served by the ladies of the community. This latter was repeated in even greater profusion on Sunday.

On reassembling, Mr. J. D. Strader of Fairfield, Guilford charge, discussed the work of the Sunday school, giving as some of the needs spirituality, equipment, leadership, vision. Mrs. S. S. Coe talked about the Ladies' Aid, showing by what has been done the great possibilities for service. Then Miss Mary Young from the college faculty talked about the woman's missionary societies. She too gave facts which proved the possibility of greater service.

A paper on the Christian Endeavor by Mrs. Koontz of Lexington was so good I hope she will send it to the Herald that others may be benefited by it. Rev. C. H. Whitaker discussed the every-member canvass and the duty of stewards. The afternoon addresses were all under the general subject, "The Church Organized 100 per cent for Service."

Saturday evening Rev. O. B. Williams gave a splendid address on Home Missions.

Sunday morning Mr. J. B. Leonard of Lexington reviewed the lessons of the quarter in a very helpful address.

Rev. J. R. Hutton preached at the 11 o'clock hour; subject, "Getting Acquainted With God." I heard more than one declare his faith in the omnipotence and all prevailing power of Jehovah after hearing the sermon.

Secretary.

Lebanon Church, High Point.—In the absence of our pastor, who preached the eleven o'clock sermon for the district rally held in Pleasant Grove church, Thomasville charge, the Christian Endeavor societies gave a Dixie Endeavor program yesterday morning. The regular preaching service was held at the evening hour.

Monday evening, March 16, the Christian Endeavorers rendered an interesting program at the Junior Hall. The proceeds, which amounted to $30, will go to make a payment on the piano which has been purchased for the church.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society held a Thank-offering Service Sunday evening, March 15. A short pageant was given by the society, and Miss Annie Forrest was present and took part in the program. The offering amounted to something over $50.

The society held the last meeting of the year Wednesday evening, March 25. Officers were elected as follows: President, Mrs. Percy Payne; first vice president, Miss Lula Thacker; second vice president, Miss Mozelle Alridge; secretary, Miss Ida Guyer; assistant secretary, Mrs. J. W. Montgomery; treasurer, Mrs. Enos Blair.

Our church was made very sad by the almost sudden death on Monday night, March 23, of one of our members, Mrs. R. B. McCleau, who before her marriage two years ago was Miss Bertha Hutchins, the youngest child of Mrs. Sallie Hutchins. Surviving relatives are: husband, mother, one sister, and four brothers. She will be greatly missed in the church and Sunday school, but more by the husband and the widowed mother with whom she made her home. We cannot understand why she was taken so soon, just in her twenty-third year, but we realize that our heavenly Father doeth all things well.

Her funeral was conducted in Lebanon church Thursday morning, March 26, by her pastor, Rev. J. R. Hutton, and a former pastor, Rev. J. H. Moton. Interment was made in the church cemetery.

The floral offerings were many and beautiful. A Reporter.

Melton's Grove.—Our meeting closed Sunday, March 22. Mrs. Dixon did the preaching. She is just fine. There was only one profession, no great results are seen just now. I believe she did lots of good, and I hope the results of her work will be seen in the future. There was good attendance, especially at night.

We all love Mrs. Dixon very much and hope she can be with us again. She also reorganized our Sunday school and put courage in our hearts. Pray for us. Glenna Lane.

State Street, Lexington.—A large number from our Sunday school attended the rally at Pleasant Grove on last Sunday. Mr. John Leonard, teacher of the Men's Bible Class of Shiloh church, taught the lesson to the entire congregation in his most efficient and interesting way. At the eleven o'clock hour, a powerful sermon on "The Revelation of God to Man" was rendered by Mr. Hutton, pastor of Lebanon church, High Point, and immediately afterwards a bountiful and delicious dinner was served to all present by the congregation of Pleasant Grove church. In the afternoon address was given by Dr. Andrews, president of High Point College, on "The Condition and Outlook of the College."

Mr. Glen Madison, a student of the High Point College, talked about the Summer Conference of the young people to be held at the High Point College this summer. Mr. Fletcher Williams of High Point presented a layman's view of the Pastors' Summer Conference which is held every summer at the Children's Home. A male quartet from Thomasville was a delightful feature of the program. They gave us several songs which were much enjoyed by all.

Brother Bethea is in Greensboro this week helping the pastor of Calvary M. P. church in a revival meeting. We are all hoping that his efforts may be crowned with much success.

The Christian Endeavor society is growing and is becoming more interesting and helpful all the time. Reporter.

Matthews Chapel.—The Woman's Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. A. W. Moore on Saturday night, March 28, with 17 members present and many visitors. Meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. J. R. Shell. Song, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," was sung by the society; scripture reading by president and prayer by J. B. Edwards. Reading by Misses Lottie Edwards, Louise Bowen, Daisy Moore, and Addie Archer. Interesting talks by J. B. Edwards and A. W. Moore; collection, $3.40. Song, "Bless Be the Tie That Binds," by society. Meeting adjourned about 9:30 o'clock and will meet again with Miss Addie Archer on April 18.

TO FOLLOW JESUS.

Jesus was a world man in size and reach. He did not come to the Jews. That was the door. He came through Jew door. But He came to the world. He did not come to Palestine. That was only the door-sill. He stepped over the Palestine door-sill. But He came to the world. He died for the world, He said. He talked constantly about the world. At the last He sent His followers out on a mission to the world. He was a world man in reach and size.

And so the real Jesus follower is a world man in heart and outlook. It is a big thing to be a real Christian, bigger than some of us have taken in.—S. D. Gordon.

JEAN'S ALGEBRA.

Jean unstrapped her books, and took pad and pencils from the closet.

"I'd like to be polite, Mr. Marshall," she said, laughing across at her father's old friend, who was spending two days with him, "but I never dare to be polite until my algebra is done."

"What makes you like it so much?" Mr. Marshall asked, smiling. "Young ladies seldom have much taste for algebra."

"Like it!" Jean repeated vehemently. "I despise it. That's why I do it first; if I gave myself the tiniest margin of excuse, I'd never get it done. And I may be stupid—I am stupid in it—but it sha'n't conquer my morals, anyhow."

"I see," the guest replied, rising. "Well, good luck to it—and you, Miss Jean. Perhaps you'll like it better after awhile."

"Never!" Jean returned emphatically.

A month later, three girls were looking at one another with dazed eyes. They must take care of mother, of course, but how? Corinne's music? Barbara's art? They had not studied only for accomplishment—they never had supposed that they would need them.

Then a letter came from Mr. Marshall, with a wonderful offer of a well-paid position for Jean.

"Jean!" Corinne cried. "Why, she's the youngest!"

"And never studied typewriting in her life!" Barbara chimed in.

"For Miss Jean," Mrs. Randell read. "A young lady who always tackles her hard things first in her determination that they shall not 'conquer her morals,' is the kind of young lady we need fifty-two weeks in a year."—Pittsburgh Observer.

THE LITTLE CLOTHESPIN GIRL.

"I am called a little clothespin girl, because I work in a great factory in central Pennsylvania, where they make clothespins. I am one of the girls who run the turning machines which eat up thousands of little blocks of wood every hour. Would you like to know how a clothespin is made?"

"It takes a dozen or more quick movements to turn a piece of hard wood into a smooth, shapely slit pin such as the maid uses every Monday morning when hanging up the wash."

"Our mill is part of a large hard wood mill. Strips from boards are brought over from that mill to the pinmill and cut into small cubes. These cubes are soaked or steamed in the upper room of the mill, then thrown into chutes which lead to the turning machines. These turning machines are run by girls."

"We have to work our fingers quickly in order to keep the feeding canal tight with blocks so that the piece of wood will not fly out. The machinery goes so fast that the noise is deafening."

"My sister works one of the slotting machines, where the pins go next. These machines are as noisy, but not so dusty as the lathes. We do not have dust absorbers or gear protectors in our mills. The blocks are wet when put through, so that the dust does not fly. The dust comes from the piles of sawdust which have become dry."

"From the slotting machines the pins go into driers, then, when thoroughly dried, they go into the polishing drums and are quickly turned around in soapstone.

"After being washed the pins again go to the drier, then to the packing room, where girls work all day packing them into boxes which hold five hundred pins. These girls receive one cent for every box they pack, and usually they make a dollar and a half a day. Sometimes they make as high as two dollars and a half a day."

"Our mill averages five hundred boxes of five hundred pins a day. We sell them from forty-five to seventy-five cents a box and ship about three carloads a week. We send them to a broker in New York City, who ships them all over the world."—Queen's Gardens.

THE LITTLE SAMARITAN.

By Grace Louise Scott, Age 12 Years.

Dorothy lay back in her chair with a sigh, it was so hard to be an invalid, to have to lie in a chair all day and to watch the other girls play. It was spring, too. The birds were singing and everything was so beautiful.

Dorothy had been an invalid ever since she was a small child. She had fallen on the porch and hurt her back. The doctor at first said that nothing could be done, but as she grew older, he said an operation became necessary. That would take a great deal of money, and Dorothy's father was poor. Her father and mother did all they could for her, but there were many times when Dorothy was very lonely and sad.

One afternoon Cora Smith had gone out for a drive with her pretty young pony.

The Smiths had just bought a beautiful home and were nicely settled. Mrs. Smith had sent Cora out so that she might amuse herself.

Cora passed the little home where Dorothy lived, and saw Dorothy sitting on the porch. Her little face brightened as she saw the pretty pony and carriage. Cora, too, saw the little girl, and she thought to herself, I believe I will take her out for a drive. I am sure she would enjoy it. She then stopped her horse. "Would you like to go out for a drive?" asked Cora.

"Oh, I would love to," cried Dorothy, "but I cannot walk and papa is not here to carry me, but thank you just the same," she added, trying to make her voice cheerful.

Cora sat still, almost stunned. Not to be able to walk, to have to lie down or sit up all the time. It seemed dreadful. Then she said: "I will come for you tomorrow and papa will carry you out. What is your name? Mine is Cora Smith and we have just moved into Colonel Lang's."

"My name is Dorothy Penelope. Thank you so much. I shall love to go out with you."

Cora drove home slowly. She was still thinking how dreadful it was not to be able to walk.

At lunch she told her mother all about Dorothy.

"Certainly," said mother, "I shall be glad if you could make a little sunshine for her."

Cora's big brother only laughed. "Oh, you will soon get tired of that," he said.

"No, I won't, Bert Smith," said Cora, indignantly.

"Don't tease her, Bert," said mamma; "it is very nice that she can help someone."

The next day papa rode down as far as the Penelope cottage. They found Dorothy all dressed and waiting patiently. Mr. Smith carried her to the buggy and made her comfortable with pillows.

When they came back Dorothy's cheeks were pinker than they had ever been before. Her eyes had a bright sparkle in them, too. Dorothy's eyes were blue and her hair was light. She was really a very pretty girl. On the other hand, Cora was very dark, but just as pretty. She was thirteen and Dorothy only a few months older.

That day at lunch Cora told them all about Dorothy's pleasure.

"They are quite poor, but her father is a good man and works very hard, and her mother is lovely. She says that the doctor said she could be cured, but they can't afford it."

Every day Cora took Dorothy out for a drive and the girls became great friends.

Cora's birthday was in June, and it was May now. Cora had a plan which she intended to tell to her mother.

One day her mother was on the porch and Cora thought that now was her opportunity.

"Mama," she said in her most coaxing voice, "you know that it will soon be my birthday and I have a rather queer thing to ask. Instead of a party or a present I want papa to get a good doctor and send Dorothy to the hospital."

Mother considered a minute. "It is very unselfish of you, dear, and I shall speak to papa about it."

"Oh, you dear mamma, I knew you would," cried Cora, kissing her.

Mother then spoke to father about it and he said it was a fine plan and he would see about it right away.

Bert did not make fun of Cora any more, for he rather liked Dorothy (for it was he who lifted her in and out of the carriage now) and it was Cora's turn to tease him.

Cora talked her plan over with Dorothy.

Dorothy's delight showed no bounds. "Oh, Cora, how lovely of you! But are you sure that you want that for a birthday present?"

"Indeed I do," said Cora. "I would not have anything else; but I must be going home or papa will be after me."

The doctor came and examined her. "Yes, indeed," he said; "you can be cured and it won't be painful, either."

The next day Dorothy went to the hospital. It was quite a long distance and they took the train. Cora and her mother and Bert and Dorothy's mother all went, too.

"You are sure you won't feel nervous?" asked Cora as they were taking Dorothy into the operating room.

"No," said Dorothy, "I won't."

How the minutes dragged as they waited in the hospital. The nurse came down twice to tell them that everything was going along as well as might be expected and she allowed them to get a glimpse of her.

Dorothy was lying on a little white bed. She was very glad to see them all.

"I feel fine," she declared, "and I am so happy to think that I will soon be able to walk."

In a few weeks Dorothy went home again. She was not able to walk yet, but the doctor promised that the next day she might walk.

few steps and a little more every day until she could run and play like other girls.

The next day she did walk, and everyone was so happy. There were tears in Mrs. Smith's eyes as she and Cora went home. "It takes so little to make one happy," she thought.

I don't know who was the happiest. But Dorothy, kneeling down beside her bed, thanked God for His goodness.—Selected.

PEACE HAVEN.

"Company!" exclaimed Bess, as she added her dripping umbrella to the row on the porch. "Oh, yes, the Ladies' Aid meets with mother today. Well, hang your coat on the rack, Natalie, and we'll see if the dining room is occupied."

"Yes, it is," said a voice from the stairs, and Philip, Bess's younger brother, grinned down at them. "The Ladies' Aid overflowed into the dining room, and Sandra is furious; she had to make extra sandwiches and more salad. She won't have you in there."

"And it is dad's office hours," added Bess. "Well, Natalie, we'll have to go up to my room."

"Nothing doing," retorted Philip. "Cousin Nan came and she has a headache. She's lying down in your room. And the twins are in the nursery playing store; and Phyllis is in mother's room memorizing her orations."

"The spare room?" asked Bess, with a twinkle in her eyes.

"Is full of wraps and a committee of 'Aiders'," concluded Philip triumphantly. "There's nothing left for you except the attic or the cellar."

"But Philip, we must have some place for half an hour."

"We can go over to our house," suggested Natalie.

"In this pouring rain? And then you'd have to come clear back to the settlement house. No, we'll just have to use a corner of the steps, unless— Are you going out, dad?"

"For half an hour," he answered.

"May we use your office for that long? We have a list to check off before Natalie goes to work, and there doesn't seem to be a vacant spot in the house this afternoon."

"Why, certainly, Bess, if you make it snappy. I'll be back in half an hour."

"We'll be through," promised Bess. "Come along, Natalie. We'll have time, if we keep to business."

"There!" sighed Bess, after a busy twenty minutes. "Ten minutes to spare. We've thought of everything?"

"I think so. Is it always like this at your house, Bess?"

"Well, it isn't always so crowded. But there are a good many of us. We have a number of relatives, and they all seem to like to visit us. Dad and mother are sociable, and each one of the five of us has a friend or two."

"Why don't you come to the Settlement House to live?" asked Natalie persuasively. "Miss Hunt is leaving; I could get you her place."

"Leave home? I couldn't do that. Besides, they need me here."

"It's for you to say, of course, but I don't see how you stand it. Not to have one place you can call your own! Here's your father."

"Done, girls?"

"All done, and ten minutes to gossip," laughed Bess. "Well, Tom going to have the arm out of the sling today? That's good!"

Bess helped Natalie into her damp coat and stood at the steps as she started off.

"It's a shame you have to go out in this rain," she sympathized.

"Oh, I don't mind a little thing like that!" retorted Natalie.

"I suppose she meant to imply that she would hate to live in our house," thought Bess. "Well, it suits me."

"Natalie gone?" asked Phillip, coming down the stairs. "She doesn't think much of us or of our house, does she?"

"Well, I suppose it does look shabby to her, Phil. Hers is new, and so is all the furniture. Ours is pretty well worn. But it looks all right to me. I like our home."

"So do I," agreed Philip. "When you open the door, the hall says: 'Hello! Come on in and have a good time. Mother is somewhere around.' Now over at Natalie's her hall says: 'How do you do? Be careful, young man, and don't scratch my paint and varnish. No, I don't believe Mrs. Trench is at home.' I wouldn't trade houses for all her new furniture."

"But probably Natalie prefers her home."

"No, she doesn't, or she wouldn't choose to live at the Settlement House. Catch you doing that!"

Bess laughed and ruffled his hair affectionately. "You're right, Phil, I wouldn't. Well, I'd better help Sandra if she is cross."

"Sure, she always gets in a good humor if you're around. Say, if you ever go to live in the Settlement House, I'll leave, too."

"Then I'm glad I'm not going," and Bess bent over and gave him a kiss, which he did not wipe off, since no one was there to see.

"Anyhow," he thought, "Bess wouldn't kiss a fellow in front of people. She's a regular girl," he thought proudly.

By the supper time, the last member of the Aid had left, and, with the exception of Cousin Nan, only the family sat at the long table. Bess and Phyllis served, taking turns at refilling bread plates and coffee cups.

"Is your head better, Cousin Nan?" asked Mrs. Howe, during a lull in the conversation.

"Feels like new," smiled Cousin Nan, a slender little woman, pathetic in an expensive black gown. "There was something so peaceful about the girls' room that I was asleep before I knew it."

"Say," laughed Philip, "you should have seen our Bess try to find a vacant spot in the house this afternoon."

"Oh Bess, did I put you out?" asked Cousin Nan contritely.

"Not at all," Bess hastened to reassure. "All I wanted to do was to go over a list with Natalie. It was all right."

"Of course," said Philip uneasily, realizing that he had broken a commandment of the house by making a guest uncomfortable. "I didn't mean that, Cousin Nan. It was funny, though." He looked at Bess appealingly.

"I suppose it was funny," Bess laughed.

"Well, mother had her friends spread out in the two front rooms; Sandra was hanging pans around in the kitchen; and Phyllis was orating in mother's room; the twins were fighting in the nursery, the committee was in session in the spare room."

"And I sleeping in hers," added Cousin Nan. "Child, you ought to have a room all your own. Why do you keep a spare room, Sara?"

"For our guests!" cried Mrs. Howe.

"Send them to the hotel, including myself. You shouldn't let company crowd the family out," she said severely.

Bess laughed merrily. "Don't you know we like company, Cousin Nan? And a house is known by its guests. Oh, we're impossible, Cousin Nan. We will have our guests. What we need is a larger house."

"I have thought of adding a wing, now that the children are growing up," said Dr. Howe, "but building materials and labor are so high, it seems impossible. But I really think we shall have to do it, if we are to keep our children at home. I should hate to have Bess leave us as Natalie did her people, and live at the Settlement House."

"Don't worry; you couldn't push me out. I like this house and all the people in it."

Had Bess been less occupied with her plans for a sale at the Settlement House, she might have noticed the air of excitement which pervaded the Howe household during the next few days. But she left so early and came home so late that Philip's whisperings with Cousin Nan and her mother's smiles passed unnoticed. She was entirely unprepared for the surprise when it was revealed to her.

"Bess, you're tired, I know," said her mother. "But would you mind going up to the attic and bringing me the box in which I keep our summer hats? By the way, we've had an electric light put in up there. The switch is at the foot of the steps."

"Did you, really? Coming along, Philip?"

On tiptoe, the whole family followed, and were in time to hear her exclamation of surprise when she encountered a newly erected partition at the head of the stairs.

"What's this!" she cried.

"Read the card," and Philip pointed to a card on the door.

"FOR BESS

"A haven of peace when company pursues.

"Cousin Nan."

"But what does it mean?" Bess demanded.

"Push open the door," cried Phyllis, and Bess saw that the entire family had followed her. "Isn't it cunning?" cried Phyllis, when Bess looked about her silently.

"It's perfect!" she sighed.

Gone were the bare attic rafters; wall-board, painted a rich cream, covered them. A shining floor was under her feet, and the little room, with a row of windows across one end, was completely furnished. Bess recognized each piece, for everyone had contributed from his or her room.

"You shouldn't have done it!" she cried.

"I think it's a shame we had to have an outsider suggest it," said her father. "It was Cousin Nan's idea."

"And she insisted upon paying for it," added her mother. "Father and the boys did the work. Phyllis made the curtains."

"What a thoroughly nice family I have!" and Bess gave them a radiant smile. "Won't we enjoy this room though?"

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Orange Officials, please remember the second quarterly conference is to meet at Chestnut Ridge Saturday before second Sunday in April, 2:30 P. M. Candidates for delegate to the next annual conference to be nominated. Other important business. Sincerely,
B. M. Williams.

Burlington.—After a very pleasant ten days' stay with Brother Curry and his parishioners, in a meeting at Maple Springs, we are back at our post and lining up for real earnest spring work.

The thing of paramount interest in our city at this time is the Ham-Ramsay meeting, which begins April 12. The advance agent, Rev. G. C. Baumgartel, has been here for several days building the tabernacle and getting the churches organized for the work. The tabernacle will seat 6,000, and no doubt it will be many times more than filled. We are expecting a great meeting. The community seems ready for it. Mr. Baumgartel, in some introductory remarks before his sermon at our church last night, said that he had never seen a community more nearly ready for a meeting than ours is. The Lord grant us a great meeting.

Armenian Relief Day was observed in the Burlington churches yesterday. Rev. William S. Shackleton presented the cause in our church. The offering amounted to $74.

Wednesday night of this week we are to have our second men's meeting in the hut. It is to be no "April fool" either. A program without a dull moment is our policy for these meetings, and above all else, our desire is to make them spiritual. The "Jubilee Singers" (colored) have consented to sing for us.

Our Easter program is being prepared, and will be rendered Easter Sunday morning. The doors of the church will be opened at that time and we are expecting some additions.

A recent automobile accident took as its toll one of our young men, Brother J. F. Mann. He was thrown through the windshield and his jugular vein severed. Death followed in 15 minutes. The body was taken to Chatham county for interment. The family has our deepest sympathy.

Several of our people are sick. Mrs. S. M. Hornady seems to be improving, though slowly. Mr. F. S. Cheek is not so well at this writing. Mrs. W. N. Thompson is in Rainey Hospital, having undergone an operation Saturday morning. Maxine Kennedy is still at the hospital, but improving. Bennie Wilds and Charlie Thomas, two of our Sunday school boys, are also patients at our hospital. All of these have our prayers. S. W. Taylor, Pastor.

March 30.

Forzyth Tidings.—At Maple Springs a ten days' revival was closed on the night of March 25. Brother Taylor, who did all the preaching, gave us the gospel truth with beauty, clearness and power. There were five accessions to the church. We are now in a revival at Union Ridge. Brother Pierce is the pulpit help. We are hoping and praying for a good meeting. An interest in the prayers of praying people is asked.
George L. Curry.

"All love has something of blindness in it, especially the love of money."

High Point.—We are much gratified to report a continued improvement in Dr. Brown's condition, and he is now able to sit up a part of each day and see visitors who call. We feel that he is well on the road to recovery, and the grateful hearts of his congregation swell with thanksgiving to the merciful Father who has spared his life. God grant him many more years of usefulness and blessed service.

The pulpit was filled on last Sunday morning by Rev. Paul S. Kennett of High Point College faculty, who delivered a beautiful sermon on Friendship, one of the sweetest ties of our human existence. His hearers were delighted with his pleasing personality and ready flow of language. At the evening service President R. M. Andrews occupied the pulpit, and as usual delighted his audience. We feel that High Point College is peculiarly fortunate in the number of charming speakers in its faculty, which no doubt will be a wonderful inspiration to the young people within its walls and a precious memory in years to come.

A committee, Mrs. C. C. Robbins, Mrs. J. A. Gray, and Miss Lucille Pickens, is busy at work on the Easter service, "Easter Angels," which will be rendered by the Sunday school on Easter Sunday.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies held a called meeting at the church on Monday afternoon to close up the year's work before the branch meeting in Winston-Salem. Both societies have raised their budgets in full.

Much sympathy is extended to Mrs. D. A. Neese in the loss of her sister, Mrs. W. A. Bowman, who died at Wesley Long Hospital, Greensboro, in the early hours of Monday morning. She had undergone two serious operations in the past few months and her condition had been critical for several days. Mr. and Mrs. Neese and Margaret Opal went to see her Sunday, and Mrs. Neese remained over and was with her at the end. Mrs. Bowman was the wife of Mr. W. A. Bowman of Pleasant Garden, who represented Guilford county in the Legislature from 1917 to 1921. She was a consecrated Christian, and was prominent in church and community affairs of her section. The funeral services were conducted at Pleasant Union church on Tuesday by Rev. T. M. Johnson, and were attended by a number of friends from High Point, including Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hinkle, Mrs. C. C. Robbins, and others.

Frank Alexander, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Rankin, Jr., remains very ill, and their many friends are expressing much sympathy for them.

We are much pleased to note that Richard Reitzel, who is all in Watts Hospital, Durham, continues to improve. He has had a severe case of pneumonia. We are hoping to see him at home again at an early date.

Margaret Opal, the young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Neese, has been ill in High Point Hospital, but has recovered and is able to be in school again.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Gray and small sons have returned from Charlotte, where they went to attend the wedding of Mrs. Gray's youngest brother, Mr. Hutchinson.

Mr. A. M. Rankin, Sr., has returned from a stay of several weeks at Hot Springs, Ark.

Mrs. George Armacost of Westminster, Md., and Mr. George R. Brown of Atlanta, Ga., the daughter and son of Dr. and Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, have returned to their respective homes after being summoned to their father's bedside. Mrs. Armacost was called home by the death of her husband's sister.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. T. Penny and Miss Elizabeth Welch have returned from a visit to Washington City.

The "Aunt Lizzie Welch" Class of the Sabbath school, of which Mrs. C. C. Robbins is president and Mrs. Minnie P. Harrell is teacher, are making up money in various ways to furnish their new class room in splendid style. The members of the Ladies' Aid society are quite busy these days with ways and means to pay for the carpet for the main auditorium of the new church.

Mrs. Frank Armfield of Concord is the guest of relatives here for a few days.

March 24.

Hawkins Chapel, Littleton Charge.—I feel that the First District Rally that was held at Hawkins Chapel the 28th to the 29th has been a great help to us all. We were glad to have the visiting people from other charges. We hope that they enjoyed their short stay with us. I think that we can better see that if we have a will there will be a way, and I am quite sure that we will do better work this year and from now on.

On the last evening services at 7:30 o'clock Brother Fred W. Paschall, pastor at Whitakers, N. C., came to me and asked why I did not register the young people for the Summer Conference. I told him that I could not make any of them register. Then he asked me why we did not keep up the work of Christian Endeavor. I told him I could not do all by myself. When he preached that evening it was from this, "Having the power to finish." I said then that we would begin the Christian Endeavor work again, if any of the others would help me.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers,
Maggie Hawkins, Reporter.

March 30.

Whitakers Charge.—The work at both churches is in keeping with the natural world. Nature is taking on new life, so it is with the work of our churches. However, I do not mean to leave the impression that we have been dormant through the winter months. We have kept the work moving forward during these months, yet since the weather has been more favorable, every one seems a bit more enthusiastic. The attendance at all services during the past month has been gratifying. It is the wish of the pastor that the enthusiasm may continue to increase; that we may have the largest attendance ever at all services; and that between now and conference we may realize some great advances in kingdom work.

Some of our people were privileged to attend a Christian Endeavor convention held in Wilson March 20-22. Those attending were: Mrs. J. M. Cutchin, Jr., Miss Carmine Cutchin, Annie Lee Cutchin, Margaret Louise Braswell, Sarah Johnston, Wiley Bradley, Mack Cutchin, and the writer. The speakers were splendid and the topics discussed were very timely and beneficial.

We are planning to hold our revival in May.

We are going to have a union meeting with the M. E. church as we did last year. The special meeting will begin on the 11th of May and last two weeks. We are privileged to have with us as our evangelist, Dr. C. Morgan Compher of Washington, D. C. Pray for us that we may have a great spiritual awakening, a glorious revival in our town.

Fred W. Paschall, Pastor.

Maple Springs, Forsyth Circuit.—Our special meeting began Monday night, March 16, and continued ten days. Brother S. W. Taylor was our pastor's help. He preached strong gospel sermons and made the way very plain for both Christians and sinners, telling us if we would be true Christians, we must draw nigh unto God; so let our light shine; that we must bear much fruit; be witnesses for him; and that we must constrain Christ if He will abide with us. His last message was High Ideals for Christian Living. He said the Christian is doing a great work and why should this work cease whilst the Christian comes down into the valley of temptation to meet his enemy—sin. We appreciate his sermons and wish him to come back again.

We had two professions, five joined the church, four by letter: Mrs. Ira W. Baity from the First Baptist of Winston-Salem, Mrs. C. A. Long from Beulah Reformed church, Mrs. Eugene Grubbs from the M. E. and Mr. Grubbs from the Moravians. We are glad to have these join with us.

Our Sunday school is preparing to have the Easter program Easter Sunday night.

On March 10 the ladies of the W. H. M. S. of the First M. P. Church of Winston-Salem gave a missionary pageant, "Christ in America," at this place for the benefit of our W. H. M. S. Our collection was about $25. We enjoyed the pageant and appreciate their kindness very much. Yours in Christ, Ida M. Long.

Guilford Circuit.—Fairfield is moving up. You have already heard that Brother Pierce of Welch Memorial gave us a helpful sermon the third Sunday in March.

The regular service the first Sunday will be followed in the afternoon by a song service. The second Sunday the Sunday school will give their Easter program.

The year is not half gone yet and they have very nearly paid pastor, not up to date, but way ahead.

The second quarterly conference will meet at Vickrey April 16 at 11 A. M.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Resurrection of Youth.

Text: "And he said, Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." Luke 7:14.

A poor widow of Nain had lost her only son. The body was being carried to the place of burial. A large crowd of sympathizers was following the bier. Jesus and His disciples met this funeral procession. The distress of the widowed mother appealed to the tender pity of the Christ. He touched the coffin and the procession halted. To the corpse He spoke the life-giving words, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." He immediately sat up, and went to the embrace of his mother.

Many a young man, even in our day, is in the grip of a worse death than that which was bearing this young man to his last resting place. So many are dead in trespasses and sins. So many are unmindful and indifferent to every call of duty. And so many are asleep in the bewitching arms of sinful pleasure.

There is a strong demand for the exercise of a threefold resurrection. And Jesus alone has the power to impart this much-needed raising from the dead. Let us ask Him to do this for the young people of our land. Let us first consider that Jesus is able and willing to impart the Resurrection from the Death of Sin.

Death, physical and spiritual, is the awful penalty for sin. "The wages of sin is death." "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." This death is something more than ceasing to exist under present-day conditions. It is existence under conditions of entire separation from God. It is the death of lost opportunity. It is the death to which the voice of mercy no longer appeals. The spiritual death becomes eternal when the days of probation are ended.

But there is hope even for the dead soul. Jesus has said, "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." What a glorious hope this is! Every dead soul may hope in a crucified and risen Redeemer. "Whosoever will let him take the water of life freely." This hope is based first of all upon the omnipotent power of Jesus to save to the uttermost all who come to Him. It is based secondly upon the blessed fact that He died upon the cross that you and I might live in glory. And this hope is based in the third place upon the power of Christ's resurrection from the tomb. In His rising from the dead there is the pledge of assurance that we might rise from the death of sin to the life of righteousness. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is your life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

And this same adorable Christ is also able to impart the Resurrection from Indifference to Duty.

How quickly some weak believers lapse into indifference to God's call to service! They turn the deaf ear to the wail of the widow, the cry of the orphan, the agony of the distressed, and the appeal of the perishing. They may have a faint care for their immediate family circle, and pray like the Dutchman, "God bless me and my wife, my son John and his wife, us four, and no more!" Little care they that the unenlightened heathen by the millions sink into Christless graves and into a Christless hell. They manifest little or no concern for the lost neighbor right at their doors. And by such shameful indifference to others they are jeopardizing their own immortal souls. "Woe unto them that are at ease in Zion!" exclaims the prophet of God.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" spoke the angry Cain. And many spiritual descendants of Cain are repeating the same words today. Many a modern priest and Levite is passing by on the other side, and leaving poor, perishing souls to sink into everlasting perdition. The harvest of wilful neglect will be an enormous one.

These weak and indifferent believers need a touch of the risen Christ to enlist their energies for the needy of mankind. "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power," says the Psalmist; and truer words were never spoken. The eleven apostles were not deeply interested in souls before Pentecost. They were more anxious for a visible kingdom. But Jesus said to them, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

Get the endowment of power from the Holy Spirit and you will become very much alive to the needs of others. You will become co-workers with Christ. You will be glad to heed the Macedonian cry, "Come over into Macedonia and help us." You will be ready and anxious to rescue the perishing and snatch precious brands as it were from the everlasting flames.

In the last place let us note that Jesus is just as able to impart Resurrection from the Sleep of Pleasure.

There have always been those who were "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," that delighted more in that which pleased the senses than in that which pleased the immortal soul. Young people especially are much given to the pursuit of pleasure. They want to have a good time from a worldly point of view. Theatricals, circuses, and moving picture shows are patronized to an amazing extent. These usually prepare the way for more questionable pursuits of pleasure.

These manifestations of "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life" are revelations of a sad lack of spiritual life. The wise man uttered a startling truth in these words, "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." And Jesus mentioned "the pleasures of this life" along with "the cares of this world, the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things," as the unfortunate means of choking the word and making it unfruitful.

Nothing short of the resurrection power of Jesus can turn the bent of the soul from the pleasures of the world to the more excellent pleasures of religion. Men and women usually seek after what they want, and when they begin to "hunger and thirst after righteousness," then they will earnestly seek "the joy unspeakable and full of glory."

Let me exhort all the young people to yield themselves to Christ in deep penitence and full consecration. Let Jesus become their all in all. Let them turn their backs upon the world, the flesh, and the devil. Then Jesus Christ will give them peace, joy, life, and love. He will then say, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise."—The World of Life.

"We?" scorned Philip. "It isn't for us. It's for you—a place to work and rest so that you won't ever want to leave us."

"As if I ever would!" scoffed Bess. "Come in, won't you?"

But everyone, it seemed, had another engagement, and hurried away, leaving Bess alone in her room. Her eyes shone as she rested in the comfortable chair from the guest room.

As the busy days passed, Bess found many uses for "Peace Haven." On the day that Phyllis entertained her school class, Mrs. Howe developed one of her dreadful headaches. Phyllis was ready to cry when Bess came home to lunch.

"What shall I do? I can't let that crowd come here, and mother won't let me call off the party. If I had enough money, I'd take them all to some nice inn nearby for tea."

"Mother shall go to Peace Haven," decided Bess. "I'll help you get the things ready and you can serve your tea yourself with one of the girls to help you. I'd stay all afternoon, but I've too much to do at the Settlement House."

"But, Bess," protested her mother, "it's your room. If once we begin to use it, the whole family will soon overrun it."

"Nonsense! It was meant for a peace haven, wasn't it? And won't it be fine to be shut up there in the quiet, while the party rages below? Now come along, for I'm going to make you comfortable before I do anything else."

Refreshed and cured by the absolute quiet of her retreat, Mrs. Howe joined her family that evening.

"Why didn't we ever think of such a thing ourselves?" she asked. "We should build another room."

"No, one is plenty, mother. There's only one thing: I'm going to be selfish."

"You don't know how," said Philip.

"Yes, I do. I'm going to ask that, except in an extreme case, no one shall use Peace Haven without my permission or mother's."

"Nothing selfish about that," agreed the family.

Bess found many uses for the room. When her father had been out for several nights on a fatiguing case, it was in Peace Haven that he made up those lost hours not heeding doorbells or telephone messages. When one of the twins developed measles, he was taken at once to Peace Haven, where mother looked after him, thus keeping the others from contagion. One evening, Bess brought a little girl home from the Settlement House and installed her there with a cup of cocoa and a pillow, for a nap.

"She hasn't a soul to care for her," she explained to her family. "She is sick of loneliness and the strangeness of the city. I thought a dose of our family and a rest would be the best medicine I could give her."

"Running in on me?" smiled her father.

And so it continued. Many times Bess sought the quiet of that high room to work out some problem. Thus the room became sanctuary for the whole family, and its radius extended far beyond the limits of the wall-board partition.

"It is the nicest present I ever had," Bess wrote Cousin Nan. "Can't you come and see us?"

The room was in use when Cousin Nan arrived. One of Philip's friends, who had become involved in a silly but not disgraceful escapade, in shame fled there while Bess went to his stern father and showed him how harmless the prank had been. Successful in her appeal, she brought the boy's father home with her, delivered his son to him, and then joined the group in the living room.

"So that's how you use my Peace Haven?" demanded Cousin Nan.

"Cousin Nan!" cried Bess with delight. "When did you come? Did you see the room since it's been all fixed up?"

"Well, not yet. It was occupied. That room was built for you, young lady."

"I am not the only one who needs it," objected Bess. "You don't really mind, do you?" she asked anxiously, as they climbed the stairs.

"Mind? Why should I? I could hardly expect Paul and Sara Howe's daughter to be any different from what you are. If they hadn't kept open house for every Tom, Dick, and Harry, they might have been fairly rich. Don't know but what they are, anyhow. And you seem to be adding to their particular kind of wealth. Been enjoying it, haven't you?"

"Indeed I have. It is what this family needed?"

"Looks sort of shabby, doesn't it?" asked Cousin Nan.

"But comfortable," laughed Bess.

"Nothing very comfortable about this couch bed," smiled her cousin. "Here," she opened her bag and wrote on a slip of pink paper. "Buy a decent couch for this room."

Bess looked at the slip. "Cousin Nan! Oh, would you mind if I put the new couch in the living room, and brought the old one up here? It's comfortable, but shabby. And Phyllis likes pretty things so much."

"Elizabeth Alice Howe!" cried her cousin. "I wash my hands of you! You are just like your father and mother, only more so. May I have an hour in Peace Haven?"

As Bess turned to close the door, Cousin Nan's voice recalled her. "My dear, I think you have chosen the better kind of wealth." —Ida Williams Rae, in Forward.

THE LESSER MINISTRIES.

A flower upon my threshold laid,

A little kindness wrought unseen;

I know not who love's tribute paid—

I only know that it has made

Life's pathway smooth, life's borders green.

God bless the gracious hands that e'er

Such tender ministries essay—

Dear hands, that help the pilgrims bear

His load of weariness and care

More bravely up the toilsome way.

Oh, what a little thing can turn

A heavy heart from sighs to song!

A smile can make the world less stern,

A word can cause the soul to burn

With glow of heaven all night long!

It needs not that love's gift be great—

Some splendid jewel of the soul

For which a king might supplicate.

Nay! True love's least, at love's true rate,

Is tithe most royal of the whole.

THE EMPTY TOMB.

A great deal of attention has been attracted by the discovery and exploration of the tomb of Tutankhamen, at Luxor, Egypt. He was a Pharaoh who reigned 3,700 years ago. His tomb is beautiful with works of art, and contains treasures of almost priceless value. Descriptions of the tomb have excited the interest of a wide circle of readers. Royalty was present when the inner compartment was opened, in which the body of the dead sovereign lies.

The tomb, with all its wonderful workmanship and costly adornments of jewels and statuary, is still but a tomb, a resting place of the dead. It gives an impressive lesson of man's powerlessness in the presence of the great, all-conquering enemy Death. All the wealth of this king, which must have been great, could not save him from the conqueror of conquerors, all his power availed him nothing, with this dread enemy.

The countrymen of the king had found a way to prevent his mortal body from returning to its original elements, but they could not call back the vital spark. That which they preserved has lain a dead body, for 37 centuries, surrounded by treasures which were alike useless to the king and to the world.

To this sovereign may be applied the words of one who wrote centuries later—

"The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,

Await, alike, the inevitable hour,

The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

At this season, the thoughts of men turn back to another tomb, a tomb which, 19 centuries ago, was found open and empty, save for the discarded grave-clothes. The king who had occupied it for a brief period, had walked forth a conqueror over even the last great enemy. He conquered not for Himself only, but also for all His followers.

He had predicted His resurrection, as even His enemies knew. And so the tomb, because it was empty, attested His divine foreknowledge, as well as His divine power over death.

The resurrection was the divine seal of approval on the finished work of atonement.

In an especial sense, it proved the divinity of Christ. He was "Declared to be the Son of God with power . . . by the resurrection of the dead."

He arose as the "firstfruits of them that slept." Because of all these things, the empty tomb speaks, not of death, but of life and immortality. It speaks a message of joy and hope, the value of which cannot be estimated in the treasures of earth.

Because of that empty tomb, we can stand beside the open graves of loved ones, and know that the grave cannot hold them. We can see, even through the open portals of the tomb, a world of life and light and glory.

Because of that empty tomb, we can face the last great event with the triumphant challenge: "O death, where is thy sting. O grave, where is thy victory?"—Margaret H. Barnett, in The Presbyterian.

The best way to prohibit a wrong is to substitute a right.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—APRIL 5.

The Blessing of Pentecost.

Lesson Text: Acts 2:36-47.

Golden Text: Acts 2:38.

The Central Truth: The Holy Ghost responds to the faithful preaching of the word, which is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

Scriptural Points.

1. The descent of the Holy Spirit was a response to a fourfold condition. 1. The one hundred and twenty disciples were all together in one place of worship. 2. They were of one accord. There was no discord of beliefs, aims, or claims. They were one in Christ. 3. They prayed that they might be endued with power from on high. 4. And they waited in faith and expectation.

2. The Holy Ghost came down with the sound of a rushing mighty wind, cloven tongues of fire sat upon each of the one hundred and twenty disciples, each was filled with the Holy Ghost, and each spoke with tongues.

3. In his sermon on this occasion Peter set forth that the outpouring of the Holy Spirit was the fulfilment of the prophecy given in Joel 2:28,29, that Jesus of Nazareth was truly the Messiah and Savior, that He was crucified by wicked hands, that He rose from the dead, that He ascended and sat down upon the right hand of the Father, and that salvation was promised through repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

4. Earnest and pungent conviction for sin was the result of this faithful and powerful discourse. Thousands began to inquire the way of salvation: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" The gospel message imposed a fearful responsibility. Something must be done to remove the load of guilt.

5. Two obligations were given. Repentance of sin presupposed also the exercise of saving faith. Baptism meant a public confession of Jesus as Savior and Lord, a pledge of allegiance and service, and a bond of fellowship with all believers.

6. Evidences of the genuineness of the conversion of these three thousand were abundant and conclusive. They held steadfastly to the new doctrine of a crucified and risen Redeemer. They were constant in the fellowship of public worship. They prayerfully partook of the Lord's supper. Their consecration was beautiful and complete. Those having property cheerfully sold it and divided the proceeds among the needy. Their hearts overflowed with love and joy. And they pursued a service single to the glory of God.

7. "And the Lord added to the church daily such as were being saved." The revival went on with remarkable power and efficacy. The Holy Spirit was given the complete right of way. Soul-winning was the ruling passion of this early church. The love of souls led triumphantly to the salvation of souls. There was a mutual faith in a mutual Savior for the attainment of a mutual end,—the conversion of sinners and the glory of God.

Practical Points.

1. Pentecost was not an accidental event of history. It was the fulfilment of a promise. The condition of its fulfilment was worship without detraction, consecration without reservation, prayer without ceasing, union without division, faith without hesitation, and devotion without compromise. Pentecosts have been, and may still be, repeated by paying the price. And the pentecostal blessings are worth infinitely more than the price demanded.

2. Conviction for sin is imperative to a genuine work of the Holy Spirit. In the plan of redemption people get only what they want intensely.

3. There is entirely too much superficial conversion in these days. A superficial gospel, low standards, and loose methods are responsible for such. Many representatives of the cross persist in the card, standing, or handshaking methods of enrolling converts. "For they have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace."

4. Repentance is not only a necessary condition of salvation, but it prepares the way for the gift and exercise of saving faith. "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

5. Unworldliness is a source of much happiness, courage, liberality, and effective service. "Be not conformed to this world." "Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God."

—The Word of Life.

GOOD HUMOR AT WORK.

A Spanish Christian worker is a good example of combining a blithe mood with saintly living. She cultivated a sharp eye for the whimsical side of every object which she and her companions passed during the fifteen years of her pilgrimage along the great Andalusian highways.

Says one of her biographers: "It never occurred to her that she was called upon to make a choice between her laughter on the one hand and everlasting life on the other." "It would be dreadful," she writes, "if we could not seek the Savior until we are dead to this world. Neither the Magdalen, nor the woman of Samaria, nor she of Canaan, were dead to it when they found him."

There is no inconsistency between good humor and living the Christian life. The person who can see the funny side of things and who has the ability to make others see it is not to be put down as an enemy of Christ. The man who can joke and tell a clean story is rather a friend of the Master. For it is not the purpose of the Lord of life that we should always go our way with a long face.

Jesus came that we might have life and have it abundantly. Missionaries tell us that one of the most decided changes that is wrought in the people to whom the gospel is preached is to be seen on their faces; there are smiles where once there was a look of sadness. Gloom is characteristic of heathen religion. With pagans, existence is flat and sordid. It takes the sunny hope of Christianity to warm the heart and give zest to living.

The realm of good humor lies in the Kingdom of heaven, and it has been annexed to the devil's domains, it needs to be won back again. The Christian, above all others, is entitled to look at life and be cheery. The prodigal son spent the saddest part of his young life during the days when he came to himself and was sorry for what he had done. But when he returned to the old home-stead, he was so suddenly swept into the gaiety of the occasion that he had no time to mope.

There is no inconsistency between good humor and holiness, yet some think that there is. At any rate, they are careful not to be jovial with their minister, and they affected an unwonted solemnity when they mention church affairs. The mistake that they make is to put religion and life into water-tight compartments. As a great minister remarks, some Christians place their salt in one box while the food in another box spoils. The salt of humor should be mixed with our common daily life wherever it touches.

The salt of humor is saving. Of many men who pursued high and noble aims it has sometimes been said, "They had a saving sense of humor." A man is apt to take himself too seriously, especially if he is ambitious to achieve great things in life. Thus he is in danger of becoming a laughingstock himself and also saves many a situation from being stilted and severe. A daughter in the home circle roguishly accuses her father of his "crude humor," but it is a humor which often is able to smooth away a care and cause a smile to take the place of a frown.

But some one may wish to interrupt this appeal for sprinkling the whole of life with Attie salt, and say, "But you are not going to laugh at everything and make it common, are you?" No, nothing should be made common. But we should hold nothing in superstitious fear and dread. When Jesus taught his disciples to pray, he told them to name God as their Father. The Jewish people never permitted themselves to speak the name of God. "Jehovah" is our attempt to pronounce the symbol which they had for God, but it is not correct. Jesus told them to say, "Father," but immediately he admonished them to hallow that family name given to God. Nothing is common in the sight of the Master; everything is holy.

We should put our humor to holy uses. Let your good cheer loose in the chamber of affliction; it does good like medicine. Laugh away a harsh, unfounded criticism; it is quicker and easier than formulating defensive argument. Argument seldom leads to agreement. You and your opponent may find yourselves in the predicament in which two women, of whom Charles Lamb speaks, found themselves. One day he watched these two women leaning out of windows on opposite sides of the street, calling each other names. "Those women," said Lamb, will never get together, for they are arguing with each other from different premises."—Forward.

KINDNESS.

One of the most characteristic incidents in the life of Abraham Lincoln occurred when he was a young lawyer riding home from court with a company of lawyers. By the roadside he saw two little birds that had fallen from the nest. He dismounted and searched for the nest for half an hour. At last he found it, and after placing the helpless little birds in, he overtook his companions. They laughed at Lincoln for his tender-heartedness, but Lincoln was too big and too noble to mind being laughed at for doing right.—Selected.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Henderson.—Susan Elizabeth Henderson, born April 2, 1855, died February 13, 1925. Sister Henderson professed faith in Christ at a very early age and joined the Methodist Protestant Church. Later in life for some reason she moved her letter to the M. E. Church and remained in that church until death. While she was an M. E. in name she was a Methodist Protestant in heart. She always attended our church and was a consistent worker in the church. Her prayers were uplifting and her work untiring and her presence an inspiration. She always helped to bear the burden of the church with her money. She gave freely to the support of the pastor and to the various needs of the church. She did it not for any earthly reason or for anything that men might say, but because she loved God and loved His cause.

Sister Henderson was a devoted wife and mother. She loved her home and was the faithful counsellor. Her counsel was a wise counsel because it was founded on the Word of God. She studied the Bible and made it the rule of her life. From her knowledge of the Bible she was able to govern her home in a way that was well pleasing to God whom she so lovingly and faithfully trusted and served.

She was devoted to her husband. Brother Henderson has been an invalid for a number of years, but this loving wife stood by him and spared nothing for his comfort. Her last words were, "What will become of Mr. Henderson?" Fear not, Brother Henderson, thy God whom thou hast served so long will take care of thee.

Sister Henderson leaves besides her husband two daughters, Mrs. Angy Grant of Asheville, and Mrs. Dos Penley, of Halcumb Branch, several grandchildren and a host of friends.

The funeral was conducted from the home by the Rev. Mr. McClamrock, the writer not being able to be present.

May the Lord bless the bereaved one.

RESURRECTION.

"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above."—Colossians 3:1.

From the deep grave of sin, and low desire;

And from the grave of all that leads astray;

From all of self,—an ever-burning fire,—

Lord, raise us up this resurrection day!

From all which is unseemly in Thine eyes;

From thought, or word, or deed which is unkind;

Though buried deep within, oh, bid us rise,

And leave the dead past of our lives behind!

Dear Christ of God! whose bruised human form.

By seal and Roman guard could not be bound,

Thyself impart, so potent, living, warm,

And bid us from sin's graveclothes be unwound!

O Lord of Life and Death! our eyes unclose;

Our vision clear, that we Thy face may see:

We would rise unto Thee, and leave our woes

With Thine, dear Master, on Mount Calvary.

—Jennie Wilson-Howell.

FACING THE STORM.

The horrors of the recent World War tested the metal of our young manhood. The turning tides of that mighty carnage proved their merited place high up on the scroll of history. While all that is true, we are wondering if this same potential manhood will stand the gafts in times of peace. This age insistently calls for men who can throw themselves in the breach made by putrid forces that would lower ideals wrought out of yesterdays that are deathless. The age calls for a manhood that can unflinchingly face the blistering winds blowing against institutions for which patriots shed their blood. This era—this very hour—needs sun-crowned men who, at the very peril of life itself, will throw themselves across rents torn in moral dykes built of the blood and bones of martyrs.

Brave young men faced death in the air and on land and sea. We are now wondering if it will not take a braver breed to hold back the inwashing tides that are gnawing at the foundations in this aftermath of war.

The whole thing reminds us of what the captain in Joseph Conrad's "Typhoon," said to his firstmate during the crashing storm: "Don't you be put out by anything. Keep her facing it. They may say what they like, but the heaviest seas run with the wind. Facing it—always facing it—that's the way to get through. You are a young sailor. Face it. That's enough for any man. Keep a cool head."—M. J. Nichols.

THE SECOND DEATH.

Have you ever thought what it would mean to you to hear of "the second death" for the first time? Dan Crawford has just written a letter to the editor, from the Luanza Mission in the Belgian Congo, which describes this in a memorable way. "Let me give you one instance of how one old-fashioned phrase from His Word delivers unto salvation. Cold and casual to an American, it was that stabbing sentence, 'The Second Death.' Now try and imagine (but oh, you cannot!) what a strange thing this African sinner has struck in such an incredible phrase, never known in all the centuries of African night, The Second Death. Why, a man, any man, of any color, can only die once. Once, only once! It is their everlasting jibe. It is their cheapest comment, that any sort of man can only die once. And here comes a new phase of the dignity of our work. Here comes a new point of prestige for the old mad mission house. What? So a man can really die twice? So this Second Death is as endless as Eternity? So this is why the white missionaries 'hurried' (?) to tell the awful tale of such a wild warning. This Second Death is the key. No wonder (thinks he) we are at it night and day. If (and there is no IF about it), IF that great doom lies ahead, then why not leave all and come on, far on in, to warn their African tribes of the dark doom ahead? Thus it was in not one case but in many that this initial phrase about The Second Death led them on to the eternal life in Christ. Praise! So I ask you to pray for all such, and for us that God may keep us bright for Him."—Sunday School Times.

EASTER SUNDAY.

We celebrate Christmas joyfully, and Easter is also a time for joy. What if Easter were what would become of our hope for the future life? But Christ came out of the tomb and opened the gateway to eternal life for all who will enter there. As we celebrate the resurrection of Jesus we celebrate the opening of the doorway of glorious destiny for the human race. The purpose of God for man appears in the revelation of the first Easter time. It is God's will that we should pass from death unto life. When this Easter Sunday comes to us—if it does—let us spend part of it in thinking about and rejoicing over the meaning of it for us of this generation. There may be a rising again for us, too. May it be our great desire to be worthy of a part in the first resurrection.

—Among the many automobile accidents recently reported is one of especial interest to many of our readers. Mrs. Russell, of High Point, a sister of Rev. J. S. Williams of Asheville, and of Brother W. J. Williams of Greensboro, was driving with her children between High Point and Oak Ridge. Just as she drove into the highway between Winston and High Point a jitney came along and collided with her car, injuring two of the children, one quite seriously, and also hurting Mrs. Russell, besides the wrecking of her car. She says she was on her own side of the road and of course expects the people responsible for the injuries to pay proper damages.

—Calvary church people witnessed a pleasing spectacle last Sunday morning. It was decision day in the Sunday school. Rev. N. G. Bethea addressed the boys and girls and invited all who had already decided for Christ to come forward and stand in front of the altar with him. He also invited those who would then decide to be Christians to come forward. In response to these two invitations about fifty boys and girls stood up to be counted on the side of Christ. It was a pleasing sight. One little girl said she did not intend to go she and one of her plot something in 'parade' went.

—A quartet from Glenwood M. E. Church sang in Calvary meeting on Tuesday night. Rev. Mr. Millard, pastor of Alamance Presbyterian church, was present and led in one of the prayers.

—Brother Bethea preaches with such evident sincerity and such manifest appreciation of the truth he is presenting that it has its effect. He is not a loud speaker, but his message goes to the heart and conscience.

—Calvary church is fortunate in the number and quality of its friends. It now has a splendid walk, sixteen feet wide, from the church to the street, put down at the expense of the friends.—Mr. R. C. Woodburn, and two of his daughters, Miss Vera and Mrs. Johnson. Several friends have contributed money to aid in building. Now Mr. G. O. Coble proposes to beautify the grounds. All these favors are highly appreciated by members of the church, and the more so that they come from people outside our church organization.

RELIGIOUS PACIFISM.

During the late war the Government had the problem on its hands of deciding what to do with the pacifists, who for conscientious reasons refused to respond to the call of arms. It dealt with them gently in some cases; in others rather harshly—much according to the method and the manner in which the pacifist defended his principles. But pacifism had to be dealt with. No pacifist nation could long maintain itself against a neighboring predatory nation. Principles that are worth holding are worth defending, worth fighting for.

To be a pacifist is to be indifferent as to what is demanded to protect one set of truths and principles and rights against an opposing set. There is a great deal of such pacifism in the Christian church today. It is either blind, or indifferent, to the truth, and tolerant of nearly everything that runs counter to it. Truth? No church that believes its faith to be founded solely and only on the Scriptures can long exist on a pacifist theory of its calling and mission. It does not deserve to exist. A church without deep and abiding convictions, or without a sense of the obligation that rests upon it to come to the defense of its convictions, is a feeble church, a losing church. When it can no longer be held together on the basis of one Lord, one faith, one baptism, it may still be an imposing organization, but it ceases to be a faith-imparting organization; it ceases to be a witness-bearing church. "Do away with the assertion of your convictions," says Luther, "and you do away with your Christianity."—Lutheran.

ENLARGING MY GARDEN.

By Rev. Luther K. Long.

The garden belonging to the parsonage into which I had moved was too small to meet my needs, so I proceeded to enlarge it.

A strip of ground on the west side had been abandoned to grass and weeds; this I subdued and planted to tomatoes, beets, carrots and onions. On the east side I brought into cultivation another strip, including an unused path to the barn. Here I grew beans, cabbage, and kohlrabi. Extending across the south end was a border of wet ground given over to trash and rank grass. By opening a ditch on the boundary and clearing the area I came into possession of a bit of very fertile soil. On this I grew the main crop of sweet corn, and some squash and cucumbers. By these three extensions I added at least one-third to the area of the garden.

I broke up the ground deeper than had been the custom—thus providing increased feeding space for roots; I also made a liberal application of barnyard manure and commercial fertilizers—increasing the size of the garden by giving the growing crops more to feed upon. By thorough and frequent cultivation air was admitted to the soil, a dust mulch was provided, weeds were kept out, and all the space and plant food were given to the crops. Deep ploughing, adequate fertilizing, and thorough cultivation are three of the most effective helpers in a garden-enlarging program.

Drought, I was told, had sometimes seriously limited the yield of this garden. Fortunately I could use a fifth method for enlarging production. From an old well at the northeast corner of the garden I pumped water which then ran through old eaves' troughs and open ditches to all the higher, dry ground—more than doubling the yield of some crops.

The many good things we had to eat and to give away, the many fine flowers we had for the house and for friends were so delightfully rewarding that I am more than glad to pass on to others this five-way plan for enlarging a garden.

THE MORNING LAND.

There is a beautiful passage in the Book of Psalms which has been singing in my heart during the days of my pilgrimage. I wonder if I can set it singing in your heart, dear reader; or, if it is already singing there, if I can add somewhat to the volume of the song. The passage is from one of David's poems which, in the American Standard Version, carries the title, "Thanksgiving for Deliverance from death." "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Joy is set in antithesis to weeping; from which we gather that life is not a period of labor without remuneration. Life is not all weeping, there are times of rejoicing. While there is the shadow of the night, there is also the brightness and glory of the morning.

The world, however, is filled with weeping—the Rachels weeping for their children, and refusing to be comforted, because they are not; strong men bowed with sorrow, weeping bitterly beneath the blasts of this world too beating too fiercely upon them; repentant men, yet suffering the fruitage of the follies of youth, drinking their tears, and wailing, "O that I had saved the years which the locust hath eaten!"

This earth is a veritable "valley of Baca." How truly many can say, "My tears have been my meat day and night." "I am weary with my groaning; all the night make I my bed to swim: I water my couch with my tears. It is a universal experience; the world is a place of tears. Tears because of sin; tears on account of unimproved opportunities; tears which flow at the memory of departed friends—no wonder Tennyson sang:

"Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean,

Tears from the depth of some divine despair

Rise in the heart and gather to the eyes,
In looking on the happy autumn-fields,
And thinking of the days that are no more."

But the world is not only filled with weeping, it is a world of night. Think of the night of mystery. Let one try to understand his own life, and he is met by a most baffling problem. Undertake to fathom the mystery of birth, or of death, or of growth as seen in animal and plant life. Then contemplate the most august mysteries—the mystery of God; or, as a finite being, born to live but a day, think upon the mystery of eternity.

Then turn the mind upon the thought of the unfinished task—unfinished because the hand which had been set to it drops, a limp, dead thing. "How demoralizing to have the riderless horse of a chieftain careering and snorting across the battle plain." Why must Henry Kirk White be taken just when at 21 he was giving evidence that he possessed the song power of a Watts or a Wesley? Why was it John Sumnerfield, the flaming evangel, died at twenty-seven, just as his life work was opening before him? Why did William Morley Punshon have to close his earthly career in his prime, when there was so much for him to do, and when a sinful world so much needed to hear his voice? Why must the pen drop from the nerveless fingers before the manuscript is finished; the artist drop his brush midway to the completion of his masterpiece; the poet stop in the midst of his song? Why must so many bright days be beclouded at noon?

There is the night of adversity, and the night of pain. How many lives have been darkened by seeing the earnings of years swept away in a few hours. What painful bodies multitudes carry through life—many by disobedience to nature's laws; others, cursed by the sins of their forbears.

But there is a heartening thought. The morning cometh! Your heart responds, does it not, to the thought of the morning? "What a benediction is this fragrance of the early morning! The vernal grass fills the whole atmosphere as with a shower of sweetness. And then the rose-border. What intensity in those odorous buds, making the very spirit bound as though a message had reached it from heaven. And the verbenas bed is compassed with fitful fragrance. Even the pansies, with their dewy eyes, are ready to rival the violets now. Most especially do the fragrant leaves make this the hour of their choice favors. My rose geranium scarcely needs a finger touch to win her response, and the lemon verbenas is freer still with her bounty. Nor must the purple buds of the calycanthus be forgotten. 'Sweet-scented shrub' indeed; for let me hide but a single one of these in some fold of my dress, and the spices of Araby will float around me till the evening." Thus Sarah Smiley; and then she goes on to tell what a fine time the early morning is for communion with God. Most of us have been touched at one time or another with the beauty and fragrance of the morning.

But it is the morning land to which I desire to call attention. O Morning Land! What will the experience be when we become denizens of that country? We walk here in the darkness—the darkness of mystery, the darkness of adversity, the darkness of pain; but in the Morning Land there will be none of these things. No mystery. No adversity. I shall be able to bring my plans to fruition then. No pain. There will be no sickness there, no deformity, no monstrosities. All will be perfection in that blissful state.

And there will be no tears. "No weeping yonder." There will be restorations of what we have loved and lost. I hear an ancient king saying of his departed child, "I shall go to him." Oh, the wonder and sweetness of it! The parent will have back the child, the child the parent. Lover will be joined to lover. During the Great War a maid and her lover passed out of this world, he from a battlefield of France, she on this side the great water, by the hand of disease. The body of one rests, perhaps, "in Flanders fields," where poppies grow; the other, in a beautiful "God's Acre" in our own land. I have tried to fancy their meeting as they walked the fields of paradise. Friend will clasp the hand of friend.

"O then what raptured greetings

On Canaan's happy shore,

What knitting severed friendships up,

Where partings are no more!

Then eyes with joy shall sparkle,

That brimmed with tears of late,

Orphans no longer fatherless,

Nor widows desolate."

Almost we wonder why we should weep here in view of the absolute assurance that day after day carries us toward the Morning Land where God will wipe away tears from all eyes, and where "sorrow and sighing shall flee away." We do not wonder Tennyson spoke of tears as "idle tears." And Lizette Woodworth Reese sings triumphantly:

"When I consider life and its few years—

A wisp of fog betwixt us and the sun,

A call to battle, and the battle done

Ere the last echo dies within our ears;

A rose choked in the grass; an hour of fears;

The gusts that past a darkening shore do beat;

The burst of music down an unlistening street—

I wonder at the idleness of tears.

Ye old, old dead, and ye of yesternight,

Chieftains and bards, and keepers of the sheep,

By every cup of sorrow that you had

Loose me from tears, and make me see aright

How each hath back what once he stayed to weep:

Homer his sight; David his little lad.

Do we not see how this changes everything? When we give assent to this precious doctrine, having sought and found Him "that turneth the shadow of death into the morning," life takes on a new aspect. We journey through a vale of tears, but there is coming a time when not a single tear will ever fall. Here we are constantly encountering the parting hour.

we are frequently speaking the farewell
Here there are multitudes of poor souls their hearts out for the sight of their loved ones. But there is coming a time there will be no separations and no utter-of the farewell word. We journey
h the night. But there is coming a time the eternal morning will break. "Weep-endure for a night, but joy cometh in orning."

day, we say, and turn our eyes ard the fair hills of Paradise; day, some time, a sweet new rest blossom flower-like in each breast; day, some time, our eyes shall see faces kept in memory;
day their hand will clasp our hand, over in the morning land.

day our ears shall hear the song triumph over sin and wrong;
day, some time, but oh! not yet;
we will wait and not forget some day all these things shall be, rest be given you and me;
wait, my friends, though years move low,
happy time will come, we know, orning land! O morning land!"

this was looked upon as crass supersti-y the Protestant church until scientific ology called attention to it as some-that could no longer be ignored. It is o be wondered at, in these days of the eal application of psychology to educaaw, industry, and all social relationships, that the results of this research should likewise have significant bearing upon the religious life. Religion can no longer be regarded as a mere emotional experience but rather as a mental attitude toward life. Its suggestive power is at once noted by those whose business it is to study mental facts and processes.

The late Professor Munsterberg in his book
"Psychotherapy" expressed the opinion that an emphasis upon Christian healing cheapens religion by creating in the mind of the patient a selfish desire for his own welfare alone.
Bodily ease and comfort become his one idea.
One naturally asks whether it would be more spiritually profitable for the patient to continue to suffer. The suggestion of ease and comfort can always be offset by setting before the convert the ideals of the kingdom. He is saved for something apart from his comfort and welfare.

There can be no doubt that this movement has cheapened religion when it has been carried on by men of selfish aims. But evangelism in certain forms has cheapened religion for many. The fact that a thing can be cheapened or degraded does not prove it cheap by any means.

This writer further declares that religion as far as mental healing is concerned is an active side-issue, and that the real cure has been wrought by the same methods that are used by the worldly neuropathologist. But because the infinite power flows through so-called natural channels is no reason to deny its supernatur-alness. If we are to follow Munsterberg's contention to its logical conclusion, we might affirm that preaching is potent because of the art of elocution and rhetoric alone, and not because of the spiritual truths proclaimed by the speaker. The Infinite Spirit is immanent in all things, and because one psychologist fails to use the thought terms of religion it does not follow that he is independent of its aid. He must bring the thought of Order, Beauty, Peace, Joy, and Love if he is to calm a troubled mind, and these are other names and attributes of Deity.

It seems that the truth must first masquerade before the world in the clothes of error and fanaticism before it can be accepted by sober minds.

The most fantastic exhibition of hiding the truth beneath the robes of self-appointed authority and arrogant claims is seen in the so-called Christian Science movement. But with all its vagaries Christian Science stands today as the most compelling evidence of the efficacy of divine healing. The most intelligent and worthy people in every community accept its error for the sake of the truth that it contains. Professor Sheldon sums up the case clearly when he declares:

"The founder of Christian Science made no real discovery. She simply laid hold of a truth which in this age of industrious psychological research was bound to come to its own, and surrounded it with a mass of fantastic, exaggerated, and mutually contradictory assertions."

The Protestant Episcopal Church has been a pioneer in this country in spiritual healing.
In fact, it has been the only church to take a definite stand upon the matter. It has given every encouragement to those of its communion who have claimed to heal through divine aid alone. Dr. Elwood Worcester of Boston some years ago inaugurated the Emmanuel Movement. Through prayer alone, and its suggestion of flooding the mind with the thought of the divine power to aid, many persons suffering from functional diseases have been cured, and those with organic complaints greatly helped. It is remarkable that a conservative church should encourage such an innovation, but even such extremists as Thomas Moore Hickson, who visited Boston some time ago, have been given every encouragement. Healing missions have been conducted by them under the patronage of the church, and prayers for the healing of the sick have been included in the book of prayer. The Emmanuel Church of Boston has become famous throughout the country as a center of Christian healing.

It would be easy to attack the position of these specialists on theological and philosophical grounds, but we are more interested in the practical results of their work than in their explanation or theories. In assuming positive leadership in mental and spiritual healing the ministers of the Protestant Episcopal Church are rendering an invaluable service in providing an antidote for the crudities of Christian Science. In this age of increasing nervous diseases on the one hand and earnest psychological research on the other, people everywhere will in the future seek for help and inspiration from the faith healer. If he is sane in his philosophy and well balanced in his theology, his leadership will be of intense value to the Christian church. If he is an erratic mountebank, his influence will be detrimental to the program of the kingdom. But sane or insane, the religious emphasis of the future will be upon mental facts and processes. It is not too extravagant a prophecy to make, that the church which divides the wheat from the chaff in this field will be rendering a service to the century equal to that rendered by the Wesleyan movement to its day.

While organic diseases cannot be completely cured by faith healing, the soul of the patient may be marvelously strengthened and life prolonged. The writer in his parish calls visited an elderly lady who was dying of cancer. She was approaching the stage of the disease when her end was speedily looked for.
But, calling a week later, he was amazed to find the lady sitting up and talking cheerfully with her friends. A Christian Science practitioner had been called in, and it was declared that in another treatment or so she would be well. Interest in the case prompted a second call a few weeks later, when the information was given that the patient had died.
While the mind had been marvelously stimulated by suggestion, the poison in the body still remained. Had her disease been one of nervous disorder she would have been cured.
Many functional disorders can be removed,
and the patient taught the too-oft-forgotten truth that the Spirit of God operates in the physical realm. This in reality is what the same faith healer seeks to demonstrate.

We have not as yet seen the light in our church and are therefore not in a position to make any positive contribution to this perplexing question. We believe, however, that the attitude of every minister should be one of deep and prayerful sympathy. It is not so much a question of working cures as the helping of the suffering. The testimony of blessing received from right thinking in times of physical and nervous stress is well-nigh universal. The whole Christian healing movement is a challenge to the church to proclaim the power of Christ to save not only from sin but from all that causes unhappiness. Marden in his "Peace, Power, and Plenty" quotes William James as follows:

"We are just now witnessing a very copious unlocking of new ideas through converts to metaphysical healing or other forms of spiritual philosophy. The ideas are healthy-minded and optimistic. The power, small or great, comes in various shapes to the individual; power not to mind things that used to vex one, power to concentrate one's mind, good cheer, good temper, and a firmer and more elastic tone. The most saintly person that I have ever known is a friend now suffering from cancer of the breast. I do not presume to judge the wisdom or unwisdom of her disobedience to the doctors, but cite her solely as an example of what an idea can do. Her ideas have kept her practically well, for months after she would have otherwise given up and gone to bed. They have annulled pain and weakness and given her a cheerful, active life unusually beneficent to those around her."

All mental movements have taught the truth of the power of right thinking. This we must both practise and preach. The famous motto of the sun-dial would make any life beautiful: "I mark only those hours that are sunlit." We dwell far too much upon hours that have not been illuminated by any light of cheer. This does not mean that we are to go about blandly smirking upon life and refuse to see its distress. Many who do so have the same effect upon others as the highly emotional Christian of a few years ago. They do not appear human. An emphatic display of one's feelings may at times be necessary and beneficial without violating the disciplinary warning against indulging in sinful tempers. It is not repression that must be always sought for, but a directing of all our moods and impulses in right channels.

Prayer-meetings in all our churches have long since become serious problems as far as securing a respectable attendance is concerned. This is not due entirely to what is termed a lack of spirituality on the part of the people. This one service which is supposed to be the layman's platform or forum has been lacking in helpfulness. The laymen or laywomen for the most part have had little to say that was calculated to strengthen and cheer. Much of the testimony has been unhealthy in tone and based upon morbid introspection due to wrong psychology. A young preacher once called upon one of the saints of his church in making his first round of pastoral visitation. The good sister put the new minister through a thorough examination as to the number of diseases and ailments from which he had suffered. Upon being obliged to admit that thus far he had escaped, she sighed and said: "Well, I don't see how you are going to do me any good. I wish the conference would send a more experienced minister." While the illustration is somewhat extreme, it reveals the attitude of many church members toward disease. It is something to be dwelt upon to the point of enjoyment of details rather than to be banished from the mind. The preacher who could not or would not do this was looked upon as one who could bring no comfort or cheer. In fact, he was lacking in sympathy. Here is the greatest peril. The one who emphasizes the power of the mind over physical suffering is in danger of being charged with lack of sympathy for the afflicted. It is easy enough to talk glibly of Christian healing, but when one is placed upon a bed of torture the challenge of "Physician, heal thyself" is not easy to meet, and when one sees his loved one there, he will not listen patiently to him who declares that her suffering is due to error or even sin.

One must indeed be as wise as a serpent and harmless as a dove in approaching this important question. An open mind and a sympathetic spirit will eventually lead us into the light. The healing movement is yet in its infancy, and no prophecy can be too extravagant as to what may be discovered in this realm in the future. Let us banish from our minds the illusion that we are dealing with a fad that will be outgrown. We are rather confronted by a central truth of our Christian faith, and by its further unfolding we shall be made free.—Rev. D. Harold Hickey, in Zion's Herald.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Sunday, April 5, was spent on Saxapahaw charge with Rev. H. L. Isley and his people. We reached Concord church in time for the Sunday school and I enjoyed teaching the lesson to a splendid class of men. I preached and presented the College endowment at Concord, Orange Chapel, and Saxapahaw churches, and while there were not as many pledges made as we had hoped, the people at all three of the churches gave me encouragement to believe that they will do what we asked them to do. These are good people, and we are persuaded that they now realize the justness of this call, and we believe they will respond.

Hilarious Giving.

Some one has said that "a cheerful giver" means "a hilarious giver." And Webster says "hilarious" means "mirthful; noisy; merry." Somehow I cannot just understand why our people in every church in the conference don't give hilariously to this College endowment.

We have succeeded, even beyond the very best expectations of any of us, in building and equipping and starting a College. It must have an endowment to assure its success. We are only asking each church for a very reasonable amount, so come on, folks, and let us do this thing, cheerfully, happily, hilariously and quickly. We need your help, we expect to get your help, and what is greatly to be desired is your help speedily.

Those Easter Services.

May the dear Father abundantly bless in all your Easter services. Wherever Methodist Protestants are gathered together on Easter Sunday a special offering for the Lord's work should be taken, and according to the plans of our church that special offering rightfully goes to help the cause of home missions. Raise your 23 per cent of the General Conference budget that day, and have that much done. Send your offerings at once to Rev. S. W. Taylor, Burlington, N. C., and tell him what it is for.

May God bless and direct and keep all His workers. Yours in His service,

A. G. Dixon.

The Church of Christ: Its History and Principles.

Twice recently we have studied "My Denomination" in our Christian Endeavor meetings. So let us consider this topic from the broader viewpoint.

A brief and concise history of the Methodist Protestant Church with its Constitution and Articles of Faith will be found by reference to the first few pages of the Discipline of the Methodist Protestant Church, if you care to discuss this topic from the denominational standpoint.

We are proud of our denomination's past but we are much more concerned about her future. Even greater tasks face us today than those which challenged our fathers. We must do greater things than they did, because our opportunities and privileges are so much greater.

Some one has said, "There are three kinds of church folks: those who pull the load, those who ride, and those who ride and drag their feet." All Christian Endeavorers are expected to belong to those who pull the load and not to those who ride, and surely we will never ride and drag our feet.

One of the vital principles of the Christian church is to show the people the way to Christ. This is the divine purpose of the church on earth. Hence, the kind of service Christ performs in any community depends upon the character of the church in that community.

The church has been a fellowship of service. That is its history and its glory. One value of church history is that it makes us seek to be worthy of the work good men before us have done, and to carry on their task to victory.

Doing His Bidding.

The Bible is our guide book into the path of service He would have us walk. The Bible is not a book on farming, chemistry, geology, astronomy or on any science, though all these are suggested in it. But it reveals God and how to find Him. It tells us of Jesus and how to obey Him. It is a book on how to live here and how to prepare to live forever, how to die and how to see God face to face eventually.

The Master said, "Ye are my friends if you do whatsoever I command you." And the effectiveness of our discipleship can be measured in no other terms. The mission of the church is to make disciples of every creature and the Head of the church is holding us responsible for the doing of our best in the carrying out of that program.

Hall Caine, the writer, says of the Bible: "I think I know my Bible as few literate men know it. There is no book in the world like it, and the finest novels ever written far short in interest of any one of the stories tells. Whatever strong situations I have in books are not of my creation, but are taken from the Bible. The Deceiver is a story of the Prodigal Son. The Bondman is the story of Esau and Jacob. The Scapegoat is the story of Eli and his sons, but with Samuel as a little boy; and The Manxman is the story of David and Uriah."

What Our Scripture Lessons Teach.

Acts 1:1-8 gives us the source of inspiration in the early church. Jesus "began both to do and to teach" when He was here upon earth; but the carrying on of the doing and teaching He left for His church to do. He loved His love for mankind by His life, His death and His resurrection, and thus provided a perfect foundation for the church.

The power of the church of Christ was to be furnished, after He had left the earth, through the Holy Spirit. He told the early apostles and disciples to tarry in Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high. Then they were to go out and witness for Him in Jerusalem, in Judea, in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth. The church grows and prospers today just in proportion as His followers faithfully witness of His true gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth.

I Tim. 3:14-17 shows what connection God's word bears to the church and to our life. Paul knew the Scriptures, and he knew that they meant to him, and he was anxious that Timothy remain steadfast in the word, in his faith and in his preaching. So must we remain true to God's inspired Word if we would build our lives and His church as He intends them built.

The Bible affords the most profitable instruction for a Christian and for the church. It is the divine truth; it proves Jesus' love for humanity; it will correct us when we are inclined to go astray; and will instruct us in righteousness. Only as the church so uses God's Word will it be a real church of Christ.

Things to Pray For.

Thank God for the Bible, which is our rule of faith and practice.

Thank God for the fathers, who established the church we love, and through which we serve.

Thank God for the consecrated men and women of today who are ready to defend the faith.

Ask God to give us a real blessing in this Christian Endeavor meeting.

Ask God to make our church a real church of Christ in fact as well as in name.

Ask God to help us, in our lives and through our society, to transmit the truth of the gospel as it is in Christ Jesus.

After a short vacation our budgets make their appearance again. In the mean time some very good gains have been made. Charlotte going over the top lets all below four move up. Then Henderson did some good work and moved up from 14 to 9, Granville jumped from 24 to 11. That was fine, Granville! Calvary made the greatest gain of all, going from 33 to 15. These three moving up naturally topped those who were ahead of them, but Spring Church and Stanly were alert to this possibility as well as the great need of the Kingdom and sent in contributions, each trapping the one above them and so in spite of the greater gains of other churches these two hold their place in the line. Good work. All goes from there as before until Weaverville makes her entry into the A. C. B. at 29 and everything below had to go down one. Welcome, Weaverville. Burlington sent in the largest contribution of the interval, but being at the top her advance can only be "over the top."

On the General Conference budget there has been some good work done. Halifax appearing where she should have last report takes 11 from Stanly and lets all the rest down one. Orange makes her entry this week and we extend a hearty welcome. Orange takes 17 from Yarbrough and Spring Church again on the job with an eye out for the probabilities sent in a contribution and went up one but because of the two new entries in this report gave up 18 for 19. Keep it up, Spring Church. Better luck next time, maybe. Lincolnton comes up from 30 to 26 and Vance from 32 to 30, taking the place vacated by Lincolnton.

English Street, High Point, sent in a contribution of $12 but failed to state which budget it was for. Let Brother Taylor know, English Street. If we knew you would be either 49 on the A. C. B. or 25 on the G. C. B. We most heartily welcome you to whichever it is.

This leaves only nineteen of the eighty-two charges not heard from on either of the budgets. This is fine and God is being glorified by the efforts of those who are working. Now what about you nineteen who have not sent in anything on either of these kingdom interests yet. Nearly half of your opportunity has gone. Half your chance for doing your best has gone. No one can do in half a year what they can do in a whole year. You may raise all your budget, but "he gives twice who gives quickly." Come on, the Kingdom needs your help.

Yours for a full year's service,

A. G. Dixon.

WHY THE PASTORS SHOULD CO-OPERATE IN MAKING THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUMMER CONFERENCE A SUCCESS.

Our Young People's Summer Conferences for the last few years have been well attended, and have been very helpful and uplifting to all those who have attended. This year we are to meet in our own High Point College in the central part of the State, and live together, and study together, and pray together for ten days. Those having the work in hand are planning for the greatest gathering, in every way, we Methodist Protestants have ever had in North Carolina.

Why Should Pastors Co-operate?

The pastor especially should be interested in and concerned about this gathering because it will mean so much for the future of the High Point College, and every pastor who is interested in the Conference is interested in the College. This conference is being planned with care that all those who attend may have given to them the very best instruction concerning the special job that is theirs back in the local church. It will mean much in the way of better service in the local church to attend this conference.

That pastor who would have his forces so trained that they will render better service as Sunday school and Christian Endeavor workers, and as stewards and other church workers, will do well to get them to the Summer Conference June 15 to 25.

No one can learn it all in ten days, but those who attend this conference will learn many things which they will want to put into practice at home.

For the Association.

Every pastor in the conference can well urge his young people and workers to attend this conference for the sake of the associations of the week. Through contact with Mrs. Van Noppin, Miss Booker, Mrs. Floy, Mrs. Maier, Dr. Landreth, Dr. Forlines, and our own conference workers who will teach in this conference, they will get much of mental and spiritual uplift that will make them better men and better women all their lives.

Results As Lasting As Eternity.

I have heard many young people say at the close of conferences like this, "This has been the greatest experience of my life. I would not have missed it for anything." I once heard eight young men in the late teens and early twenties say, "We have had the best time of our lives at this conference." I heard one leading pastor in Ohio say, "This Summer Conference has revolutionized the working force of my church." This pastor was always present at the Sabina Camp Grounds in Ohio with from twelve to twenty of his young people in each conference for young people.

You can not tell what wonders will be wrought in the life of your young people at the Young People's Summer Conference in the High Point College this summer. They will be benefited for time and for eternity. Plan for a good delegation to come from your charge, and plan to come with them to help us see that they get the very best.

Let us make it a great gathering of our young people and workers.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

A FIGHT OF SELF-DEFENSE AGAINST THE ROMAN CHURCH.

By Dr. Adolf Keller, Secretary of the Central Bureau for Relief of the Evangelical Churches of Europe.

A fight of self-defense has been imposed upon the Evangelical churches of Europe by the strong Roman Catholic aggression which is the distinctive feature in the present-day situation. Most have heard the proverb that from a military standpoint France won the war, from the political, England; from the economic, America, and from the religious standpoint the Roman Catholic Church has won the war.

We do not complain if the Roman Catholic Church is strengthening its position, is uniting and collecting its forces. It must also be said that present-day Catholicism in countries where it has come into contact with the Reformation, is inspired with a new religious spirit, with a new love of Christ and his church and has also in some parts started a social activity which deserves our admiration.

But there can be no doubt that the Roman Catholic aims go far beyond the desire of strengthening the old positions and of deepening the religious life in the church. The hope is openly expressed that the time has come to heal the schism of the church and to win back the lost territories. Not only little provincial periodicals, but even such an official organ as the "Osservatore Romano" has been outspoken enough to say that the time is not far distant when Germany, for instance, or England, will come back to the "infallible church."

A great propaganda for the conversion of the Protestants, directed especially by the Jesuits, the specific anti-Protestant order, has begun. Societies with these specific aims have been formed and campaigns have been organized not only in Germany, but in such old Protestant countries as Holland, Scotland and even the Scandinavian countries, where a special apostolic Legate has been sent for this purpose.

The Pope has sent his Nuncios into nearly all countries where it has been possible to create such centers of Roman influence. This influence has not only religious, but also political aims as always in the history of this church.

In Germany with its 65 per cent of Protestant population the four last chancellors of the Republic have been Catholics; the president is a Catholic. In Holland where the majority of the people are Protestant, the majority of the ministers are Catholic.

In Germany last year 88 evangelical institutions had to be closed for lack of funds; but since 1919 more than 700 Roman Catholic institutions and monasteries have been opened in that country. The 65 per cent of Protestants have 16,700 pastors, the 33 per cent of Catholics have an army of 22,262 priests.

A Catholic author said openly that three stars shed their lights over Germany: Liberalism, Marxism and the Church of Rome. But he added: "The two first are extinguished but the third star is shining bright and hopeful over this unfortunate country."

Against this Roman Catholic aggression we do not wish to struggle with political or worldly means. The only thing which we can do and are allowed to do is to strengthen our churches, to unite our forces, to deepen religious life and to lend mutually a bolder hand. First of all, we need more intonation.

A great evangelical press service would be very helpful in this respect. A compression of Protestant world opinion, arising of certain justified Protestant claims would tremendously strengthen the situation of small Protestant minorities, of little churches and schools far away in Transylvania or Poland or Hungary and Austria. The governments of these countries would not dare defy public opinion in the Protestant countries because they need them for getting order or protection.

We are still far way from having the necessary organs for expressing the united opinion of Protestantism. Such union alone could produce the effect which is not within the power of one or that single church. We would on the Protestant side not be afraid of a really religious struggle which would be fought with the power of the Spirit.

But many of our Protestant communities have to face all kinds of political and special manoeuvres from the other side. They are, for instance, numerous institutions whose property is in danger of being bought by Roman Catholic institutions or whose opposition to buying neighboring lands or houses which they need for enlarging their activities are snatched away by a well organized Roman financial enterprise. What a help it would be at the present time when most of our churches have heavy constructive tasks, to have a Protestant bank or at least a bank credit guaranteed by the great Protestant bodies, in order to enable us to act without delay in such emergencies.

We cannot wait for collections when a phanage, as recently in Poland, is in danger of falling down, or when, as in Spain, the faithful were on the point of buying an evangelical college which was saved almost by a miracle. We should be ready then at once to express a general Protestant feeling of responsibility and brotherliness would have already prepared the action necessary at a given moment.

We are already doing what we can to defend ourselves, to save what is menaced, to strengthen the faith and courage of our churches. But do you think that we have no other obligations because we are nearer, or because we are sister denominations? We must care for denominational interests in the moment when the whole house is burning. The Central Bureau tries at least to find help for all who are in need.

But we cannot do this work alone, therefore we stretch out our hands towards America. And in doing it we do not think only of material help. Because the crisis is spiritual as well as material. Therefore we ask, help us pray!

Let us humiliate ourselves together! Let us seek the old sources of the Reformation, let us seek new life for the churches in America, let us build up together. To do this together would mean a great historic hour, an opportunity to erect a monument of magnitude, that of Stone Mountain (the Confederate memorial on the side of a mountain of granite near Atlanta, Ga.), not hewn in rock but living hearts and built with gratitude.

with a consciousness of new relationships and new responsibilities.

ENFORCING ANTI-TOBACCO LAWS.

By Will H. Brown.

While there has been no unusual activity on the part of anti-tobacco workers in recent months in having new laws against the weed enacted, there is noticeable a great improvement in the matter of enforcing such laws as are already on the books. In many states the law against selling tobacco to minors is receiving special attention, and almost without exception the public school principals and teachers are either taking the lead in the matter, or heartily co-operating with those who do lead out.

The grand jury of Henry county, Indiana, has given orders to the sheriff to strictly enforce the law against selling to any one under 21. One of the daily papers of the county says: "Any person under age with cigarettes in his or her possession will be placed under arrest and held for trial. This state almost makes it an offence to sell or give cigarettes or cigarette material of any kind to any one under 21, with a fine of not less than $10 or more than $50 for the first offence, and not less than $10 or more than $500 for the second offence, to which may be added imprisonment in the county jail or work-house for any period not exceeding thirty days."

It is not only against the law of Indiana for a person under 21 to have cigarettes in his or her possession, but also a violation of law to misrepresent one's age for the purpose of obtaining them.

The mayor of Winchester, Ind., has issued a public and signed statement to the effect that the law will be rigidly enforced in that city, which has a population of about 5,000.

ITINERATION IN CHINA.

The following from "The Chinese Recorder" will be of interest not only to our pastors but to all our readers, inasmuch as we gain an insight into conditions the missionary faces, the demands upon him, the discomforts he must endure, and the joy of leading souls out of heathen darkness.

"Itineration,—the word brings to mind dirty inns and cheerless chapels void of any quiet retreat, long roads, hot and dusty, or perhaps cold and muddy, caving crowds watching to see what the foreigner eats, how he washes his face, how he goes to bed; many modes of travel, wheel-barrow, donkey, mule cart, boat and now a motor-cycle; street preaching, tract and Gospel selling, roadside conversations, tea shop, preaching, group of inquirers in school houses and inns, the gradual growth of the outstations, 'the care of all the churches.'"

"The word brings to mind painful experiences, sad mistakes, disappointments and sorrows. The word brings to mind touching acts of kindness by non-Christians, friends and strangers, high and low; a crowd of Chinese Christians, friends real and true; the joy of soul-saving; some of the most previous experiences a man can have in this life.

"I have been in China twenty-eight years. May I be permitted to magnify my office? I would not trade my job for a chair in any theological institution, or for the presidency of a university.

"It is a position of unlimited opportunities; it is foundation work, helping the church to birth and growth, it brings many joys.

"I find that the most encouraging work is that that opens up naturally in some place where there is a Lydia whose heart God has opened.

"Tired, after supper in a nasty, dirty inn at the town of T'ie-fu-sih, some eight or nine years ago, I went up to the north end of the town, on invitation, to preach in a school house, near which I knew there were several interested men.

"After the most of the crowd had left, I noticed sitting near me an opium sot, emaciated, sad, dejected. I begged him to repent and believe in Jesus, and begged him to go to the hospital, and obtain help in breaking off his opium. He said he would, but my faith was too small, I did not believe him. I had received this kind of promise too often. But he went; he was cured and he came back a thoroughly converted man.

"He was a man of influence and fairly well-to-do. He had led a vile and sinful life. He was altogether changed, and has never gone back to his old life. For years now we have had an outstation at T'ie-fu-sih, and a happy band of Christians.

"In going in search of a certain person, I passed directly by the west gate of Ch-i-p'an. One day at high market, I went to sell books. I was pleasantly received, so determined to come back and spend a night there.

"In the inn, late after supper, when the crowd of listeners had nearly all gone, I noticed a hunch-back squatting near the door. He was interested. I questioned him and found that he knew a good deal about the Gospel. He had been once at the dispensary at Sutsien, and received one of Griffith Johns' catechisms. He said he believed it. Well, I determined that I must come back there, of course. There is now in Ch's-p'ar an organized church and partly self-supporting. Other out-stations have opened up in the country around there. We have now preaching in our field a half-dozen men from that general section, several men in university and seminary, girls and boys in high school."

F. C. Klein.

OUR GREAT DOXOLOGY AND ITS AUTHOR.

By Rev. H. H. Smith.

"Praise God, from whom all blessings flow;
Praise Him, all creatures here below;
Praise Him above, ye heavenly host;
Praise Father, Son and Holy Ghost."

It may well be called our great doxology, for, as a hymnologist says: "This is the doxology of the Christian church in all parts of the world where the English language is spoken. . . . It is doubtful if any stanza of religious poetry ever written has been so often, so universally, and so heartily sung in the worship of the Triune God as this."

Of the thousands who sing it every Sabbath perhaps only a few know anything of its origin or authorship. For the benefit of those who would like to learn something of the history of this grand doxology, we set down a few facts gathered from various sources.

It was written by Thomas Ken, a bishop of the Church of England, born at Berkhamstead, England, in 1637. It forms the closing stanza of each of his three famous hymns:

Morning, Evening, and Midnight hymns. Bishop Ken is referred to as "one of the gentlest, truest, and grandest men of his age." He was appointed Chaplain to Charles II in 1680. In this capacity "he fearlessly did his duty as one accountable to God alone, and not to any man. He reproved the 'merry monarch' for his vices in the plainest and most direct manner. 'I must go and hear Ken tell me my faults,' the King used to say good humoredly."

Macaulay says: "Before he became bishop, he had maintained the honor of his gown by refusing, when the Court was at Winchester, to let Nell Gwynn, the King's mistress, lodge at the house which he occupied as prebendary. The King had sense enough to respect so manly a spirit. Of all the prelates, he liked Ken the best."

He retained the confidence of the King to the last, and was his faithful spiritual adviser on his death-bed. He also attended the Duke of Monmouth at his execution.

In 1688, with six other bishops, he was imprisoned in the Tower of London for refusing to publish the "Declaration of Indulgence" issued by James II. After three weeks imprisonment he was brought to trial and acquitted.

Macaulay seems to have been deeply impressed with the noble Christian character of Bishop Ken, and paid him this high tribute: "The moral character of Ken, when impartially reviewed, sustains a comparison with any in ecclesiastical history, and seems to approach, as near as any human infirmity permits, to the ideal of Christian perfection."

Dryden said of Ken:

"David left him, when he went to rest,

His lyre; and after him he sang the best."

As noted above, the doxology forms the closing stanza of Bishop Ken's three great hymns. These hymns were originally "written for the use of the students in Winchester College. . . . He thus counsels the young men: 'Be sure to sing the Morning and Evening Hymns in your chamber, devoutly remembering that the Psalmist upon happy experience assures you that it is a good thing to tell of the loving-kindness of the Lord early in the morning and of His truth in the night season.'"

Praise and thanksgiving occupied a most prominent place in the spiritual life of the author of the great doxology. "For many years before he died he headed all his letters with the words, 'All glory be to God;' and these are said to have been the last words he ever uttered."

Note the expressions of praise in his Morning Hymn:

"Wake, and lift up thyself, my heart,
And with the angels bear thy part,
Who all night long unwearied sing
High praises to the Eternal King."

"All praise to Thee, who safe hast kept,
And hast refreshed me while I slept."

An omitted stanza of this hymn reads:

"I would not wake nor rise again,
And Heaven itself I would disdain,
Wert Thou not there to be enjoyed,
And I in hymns to be employed."

It was his custom to sing this hymn every morning upon waking, playing the accompaniment upon his lute.

The Evening Hymn sounds a note of praise in the opening words:

"Glory to Thee, my God, this night,
For all the blessings of the light."

Bishop Ken died in 1711 and was buried at Frome. "This had been his expressed desire, and he had wished to be laid in his last resting place 'under the east window of the chancel, just at sun-rising.' There, in the midst of that solemn scene, and as the daylight brightened, they sang his own anthem of praise. 'Awake, my soul, and with the sun.'"

Monekton Milnes (Lord Houghton), touched by the sight of Bishop Ken's last resting place, wrote some beautiful lines, two stanzas of which we quote:

"Who was this father of the church,
So secret in his glory?
In vain might antiquaries search
For record of his story;
But precious tradition keeps
The fame of holy men;
So there the Christian smiles or weeps
For love of Bishop Ken.

"A name his country once forsook,
But now with joy inherits,
Confessor in the church's book,
And martyr in the Spirit's!
That dared with royal power to cope,
In peaceful faith persisting,
A braver Becket—who could hope
To conquer unresisting."

The author of "Duffield's English Hymns" says: "The composer of the tune, 'Old Hundred,' which is so invariably associated with the doxology, was Wilhelm Frane, a German, whose work may have been revised by no less a hand than that of Martin Luther."

As to the doxology itself, one only need be reminded that every clause of it is based upon important Scriptural truth admirably expressed; the Triune God is the source of every blessing, then let all creatures below unite with the heavenly host in praising Him.

"The Methodist Hymnal Annotated" gives this interesting note: "The author was accustomed to remark that it would enhance his joy in heaven if when he reached that happy place he might be permitted to hear his songs sung by the faithful on earth:

"And should the well-meant song I leave behind,
With Jesus' lovers some acceptance find,
'Twill heighten e'en the joys of heaven to know
That in my verse, saints sing God's praise below."

"If saints in heaven can hear the songs of earth, surely then the good Bishop's joy is very great."

Notice, will you, what a gathering of singing people did at Fairfield, Guilford charge. They carried out the spirit of the scripture which reads as follows: "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Progressive Sunday schools and churches, help to make progress at the Children's Home, and progress at the Home helps to make us all happy. Thanks to every one who helps to make it so.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

Mrs. Durham is giving us a splendid report of her district meetings. We wish others would report these to this department.

On the second Sunday, March 8, we held our district meeting in the Bellemont church, on Mt. Hermon charge, with a very good attendance. Five churches represented at this meeting. Miss Annie Forrest was with us and was the speaker for the morning session. Miss Josephine Evans of Greensboro was with us and spoke of the home work in the afternoon session. Miss Evans is a splendid speaker and we were fortunate in securing her at this time. Rev. S. W. Taylor conducted the round-table discussion, which created much enthusiasm in both home and foreign-work.

We organized a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society at the Bellemont church. The officers for this society are as follows: President, Mrs. B. H. Hargie; vice president, Mrs. Charles Sharpe; secretary and treasurer, Miss Vitus Nicholson; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Hazel York; Record agent, Mrs. O. L. Smith. Their address is Burlington, Route 7.

March 29 we met with the Glen Raven people at their church and with the assistance of Miss Paulette Rogers we organized a Woman's Home Missionary society. The officers elected for this society are: President, Mrs. R. G. Hornaday, R. 4, Burlington; vice president, Mrs. C. C. Garrison; secretary, Miss Eula Dixon; treasurer, Mrs. Tom Hornaday, R. 4, Burlington; corresponding secretary, Mrs. V. L. Bookout, R. 4, Burlington.

C. C. Durham,

AN EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION FOR SERVICES WELL RENDERED.

At a recent meeting of the board of trustees of the Children's Home, Mr. H. A. Garrett, the efficient and much beloved superintendent of the Home, tendered his resignation to take effect just as soon as a suitable man could be found to fill the vacancy. Mr. Garrett's assigned reason for his resignation was the failing health of his wife, and her great need of rest.

The trustees of the Home, with one consent, regretted more than words can tell to have Mr. Garrett resign. But, realizing that Mrs. Garrett was in great need of being released from the exacting tasks which had been hers for so long a time, they reluctantly, yet unanimously voted to accept the resignation of Mr. Garrett.

A committee was appointed to secure another man to fill the vacancy. And, that the services of Mr. Garrett might be had whenever needed by the Home, in an advisory capacity, he was elected associate superintendent to co-operate with whoever might be elected to take his place. And a committee was appointed to draft an expression of our appreciation for the services of Mr. and Mrs. Garrett to the church through the High Point Children's Home.

Our Appreciation Faintly Expressed.

These two servants of the Master came into special and active service for their church in the Children's Home at a time when just such persons were needed to do this specific piece of work. They gave up the quiet of their own home life, and a position which was paying much more in money, that they might answer the call of their church to serve as father and mother to the orphan children gathered in our Children's Home. In this capacity they served nobly and well for more than 11 years.

We wish to assure them that they have the grateful appreciation of the entire conference, and especially of the trustees of the Home, for their careful and painstaking efforts to make the Home a success, and a blessing to needy children.

Mr. Garrett proved himself a good business manager and director in the affairs of the Home, and gained the love and confidence of the entire denomination. Mrs. Garrett, in her sweet, quiet way, lived more behind the scenes, and here she proved herself a true mother to the children. Few women could have filled this place so well in the early years of the life of the Home. For their services in this capacity, and for the sacrifices they made we thank them, and wish to assure them of our prayers for the blessings of God upon them in whatever they may undertake in future service for Him.

We also wish to assure them that we are glad to know that they are to serve the North Carolina Conference, in what we hope will prove even a larger field of usefulness, in connection with the High Point College. May the rich blessings of heaven be upon them and theirs continually.

We recommend that a copy of this paper be filed with the minutes of the meetings of the trustees of this Home, that a copy be furnished Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Garrett, and that a copy be sent to the Methodist Protestant, the Methodist Recorder, and the Methodist Protestant Herald for publication.

Signed by the committee,

J. Norman Wills,
Mrs. W. C. Hammer,
A. G. Dixon.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—APRIL 12.

The Cripple at the Beautiful Gate.

Lesson Text: Acts 3:1-11.

Golden Text: Ex. 15:26.

The Central Truth: It is the souls beggared by sin that most need the restoring and life-giving touch of the Son of God.

Scriptural Points.

1. Pentecost, with its stream of power, salvation, and uplift, was now a most delightful memory. The church had grown to more than three thousand. And there were daily conversions and accessions.

3. The large upper room was now too small for even a prayer-meeting. They now worshiped in the temple, to accommodate the large crowd. There is another reason, no doubt. The apostles were no longer afraid of the Jews. The pentecostal experience had taken away the fear of man. They became bold defenders and expositors of the truth of the gospel. They no longer feared persecution.

4. "The hour of prayer," being three o'clock in the afternoon. This was the regular, appointed time for public worship.

5. The gate Beautiful was so large and massive that it required twenty men to swing it on its hinges. It was no doubt the chief means of entrance.

6. It was a fine resort for beggars. People inclined to enter and worship God would likely be also inclined to help those in extreme need.

7. A forty-year-old cripple was carried and laid at this gate every day. It is not likely that this had been kept up very long. For he would have most probably been healed by Jesus, had he been at the temple during His frequent visits thereto.

8. Peter and John did not, as many others, pass the cripple unnoticed. They looked upon him with deep sympathy. Peter said to him, "Look on us." Look upon their faces, glowing with the love and joy of Christ, was enough to stir up faith and expectation.

9. When Peter saw the beggar's expression of confidence, he said, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee; in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk."

10. The lifting him up by the right hand was necessary to strengthen the poor cripple's faith, for all such healing comes through faith in God.

11. There was an immediate and thorough cure. Strength was given, and he leaped to his feet.

12. And he was most grateful. He praised God, the Author and Source of his restoration. He also showed his gratitude to Peter and John, who were the instruments in God's hands that brought about the cure. He held them, probably an arm around each of them.

13. A crowd of wondering people quickly gathered. And Peter embraced the opportunity to preach a gospel message, which is recorded in the rest of this chapter.

Practical Points.

1. Prayer in the early church was the chief function of public worship. Preaching and exhortation come in as secondary. Taking collections was little thought of then. The attitude of the apostles toward public worship was expressed in Acts 6:2-4: "It is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables. . . . But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word."

2. Spiritual lameness is a prevalent calamity even among professing Christians. They no longer walk the straight and narrow way, because they have been crippled by the darts of the devil.

3. The unsaved are cripples from childhood. They have never been able to walk or run the Christian race. The gospel is the power of God unto their salvation and ability to press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling.

4. Many Christians do not walk because they have not yet outgrown their spiritual babyhood. Some do not grow because they feed upon the husks of worldliness instead of upon the Bread of life that came down from heaven to give life unto lost mankind. And some do not try to walk, and become life-time cripples in the church of God. "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

5. The two outstanding characteristics of the early church were its poverty and its power; the chief characteristics of the modern church are its wealth and its weakness. It can no longer say, "Silver and gold have I none;" neither can it say, "Rise up and walk." And we have the same gospel, the same Christ, and the same opportunity that the early church had. And wherein lies the difference? We have lost out in faith, in consecration, and in power.

6. Genuine and constant thanksgiving is one of the most becoming fruits of conversion. But it is as rare as it is beautiful. About nine out of ten forget to give God the glory due unto His name for His unspeakable gift. "Were there not ten cleansed, but where are the nine?"

Matthews Chapel, Greenville Circuit.—Brother Powell filled his appointment yesterday as usual, using as his subject, "Human and Divine Agencies in Christ's Kingdom." We are always glad to see Brother Powell come, for we know he has something good to tell us.

The second quarterly conference will be held next Saturday at Wesley's Chapel.

The third Sunday morning in April will be Communion Day at Matthews Chapel. All members are urged to be present.

Our Sunday school is increasing since the advancing of spring and there has been right much sickness among our members; this has taken our school down right much.

The writer and several others had the pleasure of attending the District Rally at Hawkins Chapel last Sunday. We enjoyed being with these good people, and also enjoyed the splendid talks given by the different pastors from other charges. These people were strangers to us, but we were given a warm welcome. We hope to have this privilege again. Lottie Edwards, Reporter.

Philadelphia, Greenville Circuit.—Yesterday Mr. Powell gave us a good and helpful sermon. We had a right large congregation and every one enjoyed it to the highest. Since the weather has become better our Sunday school is improving very much.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Reporter.

Henderson.—Our faithful reporter has done her work so well that it has not seemed necessary for the pastor to write for quite a while. It is not enough to say that things are running in the usual way. For many months past we have been looking forward to getting in our new Sunday school building and so we are there. The five large rooms on the second floor are being used by classes and some of the basement is being used. The Ladies' Aid appointed a committee a few days ago to meet with the pastor and the Sunday school superintendent with the idea of buying the necessary equipment for the children's division of the Sunday school, so we are hoping to have things in good condition before long. Our Sunday school attendance is going well over the 20 mark almost every Sunday now and we are encouraged. Yesterday five bright boys and girls came forward in the decision day service and gave their lives to Christ. The pastor will meet with them and any others who may want instruction in the meaning of church membership and church Baptism on Friday of this week and all who wish to be received into church membership will be received next Sunday. Our second quarterly conference was held a week ago. Brothers T. J. Evans and Roy Dixon are nominees for delegate to the annual conference.

One feature of our church work that is encouraging is the fine work being done by our choir. Miss Sallie Charles Cheatham, the organist, is simply working wonders and is bringing out a choir that we are proud of. It is gratifying to hear people of other denominations in the city say that we have the best choir in the city. The music yesterday both morning and evening was simply splendid.

The time for our revival has been set for the first Sunday in September and Rev. J. R. Hutton has been engaged as the pulpit help. We are looking forward with pleasure to having Brother Hutton with us.

Our faithful reporter, Miss Katie Cook, is taking treatment in Rex Hospital in Raleigh. We certainly hope she will be benefited.

Next Sunday at the morning service we will have the Easter sermon with an abundance of Easter music. Then at eight P. M. we will have an Easter pageant, entitled, "The Gate Beautiful." Mrs. H. A. Jordan has taken the lead in getting it up and while we have given some high class pageants here in the past few years we are expecting this one to be the equal of any of them. The offering will go to Home Missions.

Miss Elizabeth Fox, Mrs. C. F. Tankersley, Jr., and Mrs. Pritchard will attend the missionary meeting in Winston-Salem this week. J. E. Pritchard.

Timberly, Davidson Circuit.—Rev. Edmund Ridge filled his appointment here Sunday at 11 o'clock. He preached us a fine sermon. Sunday school is coming along nicely. Our Sunday school collection was $6.80, which we sent to the orphanage at High Point. Our superintendent is Mr. Ed Morris.

Our pastor is teaching us singing every Wednesday and Saturday night. He has a large class and many visitors.

We were very glad indeed to have Brother Robert Short and family of Mecklenburg circuit visit us last week.

Remember our prayer services Sunday night, April 12. Mr. Grady Burkhead opens the service. Come out and let us make it a good service. Gracie Lanier, Reporter.

April 7.

—The interest in Calvary meetings continues. The attendance seems rather to improve and the atmosphere of the meeting seems to be highly spiritual. Quite a number have given evidence that they were impressed with the truth and some have surrendered to Christ. We hope for quite an addition to our roll of members next Sunday.

JOHNNY WINS THE PRIZE.

Johnny Bliss was in a peck of trouble. He had fallen into the creek while skating and had been soaked to the skin, and that was the only suit he had with him. He had been rolled in warm blankets and put to bed and Grandmother Bliss had brought him the best dinner that Johnny had ever eaten, or at least that is what he told grandmother; but that afternoon at four o'clock was Mary Miller's party, and of course, if a boy had no clothes to wear, he could not go.

"If Johnny wasn't as broad as he is long I could get him a new suit," said Grandmother Bliss. "If only his mother had sent an extra suit! But she thought Johnny was going to stay only two days, and no one knew the ice was so thin. Well, we'll make taffy and popcorn and have a party right here ourselves, Johnny."

Johnny bravely wiped back the tears, but staying in bed eating popcorn was not to be compared with going to a wonderful party.

The news of the accident and Johnny's trouble flew round the village and before two o'clock seven boys had called with coats that they hoped Johnny could squeeze into to go to the party. But, alas! Johnny was too stout for every garment that was offered.

"I'll give a prize of one dollar to any boy or girl who will think of a way for Johnny to go to the party," said Miss Ellen, the teacher of the second grade, when she heard of the difficulty. "Think hard and perhaps some one will find a way."

It was a half-holiday that day, and so every one sat down to think of a way to win the dollar. No one was to have help from a grown person. My, but it was a quiet afternoon as the clock ticked off the minutes toward four o'clock when the party was to be held! Mamie Jones wanted to move the whole party to Johnny's bedside, and Ruth Lawrence thought a suit could be had if some one drove very swiftly to the nearest city and back before four; Jay Hoskins thought the village tailor could make a whole new suit before the party came off, and Herbert Lane suggested that they bundle Johnny in a blanket and let him sit in a corner of the room and watch. There were other suggestions.

Just as the clock struck three, Johnny said to Grandmother Bliss: "If they'd all go in dress-up clothes as we did last winter when I was here at Christmas, I could be Santa Claus and wear grandfather's old suit. It wouldn't look funny if all the rest were dressed up."

Grandmother telephoned to Miss Ellen, and she came through the snow with a shining dollar in her hand. "The very thing I had in mind, and, if you had been five minutes later, I should have told the plan myself and kept the dollar. Now I must hurry round to help get the witches and elves and fairies and clowns and brownies ready."

It took little getting ready on Johnny's part. The legs of the Santa Claus trousers were cut off and an extra big pillow stuffed into the front of the suit; the fur-trimmed great coat and the cap were made ready by some magic stuffing in the right places.

"You can stay there and dry all night if you want to," said Johnny to his suit steaming by the kitchen stove. "I'm going to the party anyhow."

It was a wonderful party, which lasted until nearly eight in the evening, and no one had a better time than the fat Santa Claus, who jingled his bells and gave the children apples and pop-corn out of his pack.

"Isn't it odd that Johnny won the prize?" said one and another of the children.

"I don't know about that," said Johnny. "The rest of you could come to the party whether you thought of a plan for me or not, but I couldn't; so I had to think the hardest." —Hilda Richmond, in The Youth's Companion.

YOUR EASTER OFFERING.

Our goal for Easter is the apportionment in full from every Sunday school, every church, every pastoral charge, and every annual conference in the denomination. The General Conference in session in 1924 at Tiffin, Ohio, made some changes in the method of securing and distributing the General Conference funds, the most notable of which perhaps was in directing that the percentage distribution should be upon the undesignated part of the receipts on account of the General Conference budget. Designated offerings must be placed to the credit of the Board or Institution designated, but if desired by the contributors, credit may be allowed upon the apportionment for the General Conference budget.

A limit was placed upon the amount to be credited, however, under certain conditions. This all appears in the Journal of the General Conference, 1924, page 93. Any church may raise any amount of money it wishes to raise on any one of the special days, but it may only report the proper percentage to be credited to the board preparing this special days program. In the case of the Easter offering, any church may raise its budget apportionment in full, but it should report all above 23 per cent for credit to the undesignated budget, the 23 per cent should be reported as an Easter offering, and so designated, so as to allow the money to go as intended by the contributors. Other special gifts may be made for current use, and may be credited to the apportionment of the church from which it comes for General Conference budget, up to $500. All amounts in excess of $500 may be received and placed to the credit of the board or institution, but shall not be charged against the total sum of dollars to be received by the Board, or credited to the church budget apportionment.

The apportionment made by the General Conference for home missions is $115,000 per year. Under the law as it now stands, this entire amount could be raised and paid at Easter time. Or it can be composed of the Easter offering, plus special gifts such as were discussed in the preceding paragraph, plus receipts from the undesignated budget. No board may receive more than its allotted appropriation, until all have reached the full amounts apportioned.

You will see therefore that we are carrying out the instructions of the last General Conference in asking that the entire apportionment for Home Missions be paid at Easter time by those churches which do not have a regular every-Sunday plan for meeting this assessment. Where the every-member canvass has been made; where the contributions promised were sufficient to cover all local expenses, plus the annual conference and the General Conference budgets; and where these payments are being made in full and reported to the annual conference treasurer on the first day of every month, a free-will offering may be made by the Sunday schools as provided by the law of the church. See the Constitution and Discipline of the Methodist Protestant Church, page 92, paragraph 8.

Send your offering to the treasurer of your annual conference the very next day after Easter. Our needs are many and constant and we have made our plans to meet pressing obligations from this fund.

SEAMEN WANTED.

The United States Coast Guard has opened a recruiting station at Room 9, Barge Office Battery Park, New York City, and in several other cities of the country (Boston, Baltimore, Norfolk and Philadelphia) to recruit seamen between the ages of 18 and 35 years to man the 100 new 75-foot patrol boats which will be added to the dry navy this spring.

Commissioned officers in charge of the New York station appeal to the law-abiding element of the country to help Uncle Sam man these boats with capable, honest men who can be depended upon in the fight to rid the Atlantic Ocean of liquor pirates.

The appeal for recruits is being broadened by Arthur J. Davis, State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of New York, who in co-operation has been sought by officers at the Battery Recruiting Station. Mr. Davis was called upon to transmit the Government's appeal through all the publicity channels at the League's command. The recruiting officers hope in this way to reach a class of citizens who will accept service as a matter of patriotic duty, as well as of adventure, and who have at heart the success of the job in thus preventing the lawless element from undermining the ranks of the service.

"This is an unprecedented opportunity," Mr. Davis declared, "for the people of the country to get solidly behind this branch of the Government, and the least that law-abiding people can do is to bring this service to the attention of capable trustworthy men and encourage them to join the dry navy."

Recruiting starts immediately, and the need for men is urgent as each of the hundred boats must be manned by a crew consisting of chief boatswain's mate; boatswain's mate, first class; chief motor machinist; two motor machinists, first class; ship's cook, second class; and a seaman, first class. The demand is for experienced seamen even if their experience is limited to yachts and small boats, but a few inexperienced young men will be taken as apprentices. The service also wants radio men and operators who understand the up-keep of marine gas engines.

Recruits will be enlisted at once and sent to New London to the receiving unit where they will be given some training. Their transportation to New London will be free. Wages range from $21 to $126 a month, plus increment for previous Government service.

According to the commissioned officers in charge of recruiting there is an excellent opportunity for ex-service men who can see the positions as chiefs, taking command once, if their previous experience and qualifications are adequate. Advancement is sure and will be quick because of the urgency of the demand to fill vacancies in the entire new unit of 100 boats.

Previous discharges from service will be required. Recommendations are necessary and will be thoroughly investigated. Young men between the ages of 18 and 21 must have the consent of parents.

"We want to strengthen the morale of the Coast Guard and insure the integrity of our new crews," declared the commissioned officer who appealed to Mr. Davis for co-operation. He said:

"With crews made up of honest citizens who are interested in the enforcement of law and who regard the service of their country as of paramount importance, we can soon clean up the pirates who are defying the Government and making a farce of our laws.

"The prohibition law is on the statute books today because the people of the country wanted it, the great majority of our people are for it and are demanding its enforcement. Congress has appropriated vast sums to insure enforcement and, as the Government is willing to do its part by supplying boats and equipment, it is not too much to ask the decent, law-abiding element to help man these boats with honest, stalwart, trustworthy men."

The Coast Guard Service has a long and honorable history. Its establishment dates back to 1790 when it was organized as the Revenue Cutter Service. It formed the Coast Defence of the country before the regular Navy was established and its career covers four wars during each of which it participated in national defence. During the World War the Coast Guard was declared part of the Navy and its boats acted as ocean escorts and convoys for troops and supplies, establishing patrol bases at Gibraltar and Best.

The duty of the crew on patrol boats will be varied including, besides the activities in the elimination of Rum Row, the rescue of ships at sea and of ship-wrecked victims, warning vessels of the nearness of ice-bergs and ice-floes, transmission of messages and picking up distress signals.

The radio department offers varied and interesting experience as the new patrol boats have been fitted up with new transmitting and receiving sets, perfected by the Western Electric Company, which combine all the latest devices and the most up-to-date equipment.

Recruiting offices in other cities are the Custom House in Baltimore, Boston and Norfolk, and at the Post Office Building in Philadelphia.

MARJORIE CLEMENT'S CHOICE.

Marjorie Clement was left an orphan at the age of fourteen. Her father had been unfortunate in business, and left but little of this world's goods, though he had been rich in Christian faith and integrity of character. Marjorie had a half-sister, Mrs. James Stanley, many years her senior, and this half-sister offered the bereaved girl a home. Now, at eighteen, Marjorie had been graduated with honors from the local high school, and began to think of doing something to earn her living. The Stanleys were in moderate circumstances, and Marjorie was not really needed in their home, though she had been very helpful to them in many ways.

"Marjorie is a good girl, and has always been willing to do her part," Mrs. Stanley remarked to one of her friends, "but I shall be glad when she becomes self-supporting. Of course, she cannot expect us to do anything more for her. I could not see my sister want; but we have given her a home for four years and helped her through school, and now she must look out for herself. She is energetic and capable, and can do anything she likes. And we must think of our own children."

"Certainly, my dear," agreed Mrs. Dunning. "Will Marjorie teach?"

"She is undecided yet. But she has had a most tempting offer which I think she will do well to accept. Mrs. Marston will take her as nursery governess to her little girl, four years old. The salary would be good indeed, considering the duties, and next winter the Marstons are going on a tour through the South and to California, and Marjorie could accompany them and have all her expenses paid, in addition to her salary."

"That is a wonderful offer for a young girl to have. But Mrs. Marston always fancied Marjorie. And the Marstons have money in abundance. Of course, Marjorie will accept."

"Mrs. Marston gave her a week in which to decide. For my part, I do not see that the matter requires any thought. Still, it is well, perhaps, not to be hasty in deciding anything. I shall not try to influence my sister. I have simply told her that I thought the offer was an exceptionally good one, and now she must decide for herself."

"She certainly cannot be blind to her own interests," said Mrs. Dunning emphatically.

Meantime, Marjorie was on her way home from the post office. She glanced at a little cottage, surrounded by evergreens, hesitated a moment, and then went up to the door and rang the bell.

A little old lady, somewhat bent, and with a worn but pleasant face, opened the door. She smiled when she saw Marjorie.

"Is it you, dear?" she said, in a sweet but tremulous voice. "Bless your heart, you do not forget the old woman. Come in."

"How are you today, Cousin Amelia?" as she sat down in a little rocker and looked at the pretty, blooming plants.

"Oh, as well as usual. I had an ill turn, a few days ago, but fortunately it did not last long."

"It is not safe for you to live here alone," said Marjorie, with a troubled look. This cousin had been very dear to her mother.

"Well, my dear, perhaps it isn't. But I see nothing else to do. There is no one to live with me, so far as I know. I might dispose of this house, I suppose, and go to some institution, but I do not like the idea. This little place has grown very dear to me."

"Yes, I know," said Marjorie gently. "And you are comfortable here, of course."

"Very comfortable. But I am seventy years old, and my friends all tell me that I ought not to live alone. Then I find that my duties are more burdensome to me than they were. The hens and chickens are quite a care. But they bring me an income, with what I have besides, which is sufficient for my needs. I haven't property enough to tempt anybody to come to live with me, so I hardly know what will become of me, but I can trust God."

"And He will never forsake," murmured Marjorie. In a moment she added, "Mother thought of you when her life was fast ebbing away."

"I know she did. We were first cousins, and I loved her like a younger sister. But, dear, now that you are through school I suppose you will soon be doing something for yourself. I know that you have looked forward to this time. Have you decided yet what you will do?"

"No, I have not decided—not fully. I will be in again in a day or so," said Marjorie, as she rose to go.

In a thoughtful mood, Marjorie went down the sidewalk. What did duty require of her? She knew that she could be a help to the lonely soul in the little cottage. She knew that she could make Amelia Leavitt's last days pleasant. But could she relinquish all her plans and consign herself to a lonely life? It seemed for a time that she could not. And surely no one could expect such a sacrifice of her. She was only eighteen, Miss Amelia was seventy. But why had the thought come to her? Did God require her to care for this aged servant of His?

"Show me the way," she prayed, "and I will follow it."

"You have been gone a long time," said Mrs. Stanley, when Marjorie entered the pleasant living-room.

"Yes. I called to see Amelia Leavitt."

"I suppose she is much as usual?"

"Yes."

"Amelia is an old lady now, and it really isn't right for her to stay there alone. I wish some sensible, middle-aged couple would take care of her for what property she has. But then, she hasn't a great quantity of this world's goods, and she may live for years and be a great care. By the way, Marjorie, have you decided whether you will accept or reject Mrs. Marston's offer?"

"I have not decided."

"Well, my dear, I shall not try to influence you; but I do not see how you could think of refusing it. It is a remarkable offer. Think how much next winter would mean to you."

"I do think of it," replied the girl, in a low voice.

"And your duties would not be hard. Little Alice is a lovable child. But, as I said, I shall not try to influence you," and the good lady rose and put up her sewing, as a preliminary to making preparations for tea.

Marjorie said but little that evening. She seemed to be thinking intently. She retired at an early hour, but not to sleep. She thought and prayed. At two o'clock, having reached a decision, she fell into a refreshing slumber, and at the breakfast table she was as bright-looking and cheerful as usual. That afternoon she again called on Amelia Leavitt. When she returned, her sister looked inquiringly at her.

"Everything is settled, sister," said Marjorie, as she inhaled the fragrance of a rose she had gathered from one of Miss Leavitt's bushes. "With your approval, I am going to live with Cousin Amelia."

Mrs. Stanley lifted her hands in surprise. "Why, Marjorie!" was all she could say at first.

"Amelia was very kind to mother in the years that are gone, and aided her in many ways. They were like sisters. And now—well, I feel sure that mother would favor the course I am taking."

"If that is the way you feel about it—but I never dreamed of such a thing! What will you do there?"

"Care for chickens, garden, take care of Cousin Amelia, read and study."

"It all sounds very well; still, I call it a dreary prospect for a young girl. When you had such a splendid opening, too!"

"I know; it is very different from what I had planned. But God has shown me the way; I believe He wants me to do this."

"You are a strange girl, Marjorie. You can plan your own life, of course, and do what you think is right, and I only hope you are not mistaken. And it will be pleasant for me to have you near," Mrs. Stanley added, by way of afterthought.

And so Marjorie went to the little cottage and began her homely duties. Yet who can say that they are homely or simple in God's sight? Amelia Leavitt is duly grateful and always cheerful and trusting, and Marjorie is not unhappy and does not regret her choice.—Willard N. Jenkins, in Zion's Herald.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Revival at Gibsonville.—The church at Gibsonville is in the midst of a revival which has been going on since March 25. The pastor is doing the preaching and is assisted by Mr. N. J. Miles of Mebane, N. C., who has charge of the music, and is rendering great service. There has been a growing interest from the very first service. Up to Sunday night, April 5, there had been thirty-three professions of faith. Twenty-nine of these persons are uniting with this church. The attendance has grown until many are being turned away for lack of room.

Cottage prayer meetings are being held each evening during this week, and a thorough awakening is in evidence. Services are expected to close Sunday, April 12.

G. H. Hendry, Pastor.

Fountain Place, Burlington.—We have not been heard from for some time, not because we have not been busy, because we have been almost too busy to write. We told you before something of our plans for a campaign to raise funds to complete the Sunday school department of our church. This campaign has been put on, but not quite completed, because some of the workers have been so enthused that they can't stop work. Final reports have not been received; however, we have had a very nice sum subscribed, and a portion of it paid in. Plans of the church are now being drawn and we hope to begin work before long.

Our pastor is conducting a series of meetings at Gibsonville, and our pulpit will be filled Sunday by our president, the writer understands. Brother Hendry has been doing some fine preaching at Gibsonville, and is having good attendance.

Things here are now being shaped up for the Ham-Ramsey meeting. We trust that much good may be accomplished.

Creswell.—I am indeed glad that five of our young people (including the pastor) were able to attend the First District Rally held at Hawkins Chapel. From their report they had a very nice time. They returned with a wonderful report. The people of Hawkins Chapel are real Methodist Protestants, judging from the hospitality given our people.

On Monday night the ones who remained at home were very anxious for the five who attended the rally to give a report of it in the Christian Endeavor meeting. This they did in short outline work.

The Ladies' Aid is working as it has never worked before. They are striving hard to finish paying off a debt. With God's help they hope to do this very soon.

Our Sunday school is not what it should be but we must continue to work for God has said he will not forsake us.

We are planning to organize a Parsonage Aid in order to make our pastor and family more comfortable. Only a few months ago there were two mattresses given to the parsonage, one from Creswell church and one from Rehoboth church.

Our reporter is in the hospital at present, but we hope that she will be at home in the course of a few days, God helping her.

We are looking forward with great hopes to the third Sunday in May when our annual meeting begins. We desire the prayers of the readers of the Herald for this meeting. Not only for this meeting do we desire your prayers but we want them constantly.

A Member.

Randeman Charge.—The second quarterly conference met at Worthville on Saturday, 2:30 P. M. Mr. Ed Jarrett and Mr. Sam Hinchshaw were elected candidates for delegate to the next annual conference. The pastor was authorized to have the parsonage screened.

Next Sunday's program for this pastor is overcrowded; but the folks up here believe in doing things. A sunrise praise meeting will be held at Mt. Lebanon. An Easter exercise will be held here at 11 A. M., at the same hour the regular service at Worthville will be held. At three P. M. I go to Level Cross and back to Worthville at night for the Easter service.

A cordial invitation is extended to everybody to attend these services.

At this writing Brother Dosier is confined to his room sick. He was unable to attend services yesterday.

Wm. H. Neese.

Shelby.—Our work here has been moving along as usual since our last report in the Herald. Services have been fairly well attended. The Sunday school has been holding up very well.

The services last Sunday were well attended, considering the rainy weather. The children of the Sunday school are preparing the Easter program which will be rendered next Sunday night. Mrs. J. T. Ramsey and Miss Verda Chapman are training the children for the service.

Rev. W. H. Wall, a Baptist minister, who is not now in the active ministry, will preach at our church here next Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock service. The pastor and family are on a visit to relatives at Burlington and near Pittsboro.

Our revival meeting will begin the third Sunday in April. Rev. C. E. Phillips, pastor of the Lincolnton Methodist Protestant church, will arrive on Monday and do the preaching during the meeting. We are hoping and praying for a very successful revival.

C. B. Way, Pastor.

The Ninth District Rally.

A report of this meeting should have been made last week. The meeting was held at our Lincolnton church on Saturday and Sunday, March 28 and 29. Rev. J. D. Morris, the chairman, of Fallston, planned well for the meeting and prepared a helpful program, which was carried out very effectively.

The first session was held on Saturday morning beginning at about 10:15 o'clock, with Brother Morris present and presiding. There were also present for the initial session a number of the Lincolnton people, some from the Fallston and Cleveland charges and the Shelby church. Rev. J. M. Morgan, Rev. C. E. Phillips and the writer were the only pastors present for the opening session in addition to Chairman Morris.

After the song and devotional service, conducted by Rev. C. E. Phillips, the first address was delivered by Rev. J. M. Morgan, on the subject, "The Prayer and Devotional Life of the Church." This address was a very timely and helpful one, in which Brother Morgan brought his hearers a message of vital truths concerning the devotional period of our church services and the great need of prayer on the part of the people in preparing for the reception of the gospel message by the preacher.

The second address was by the writer on the subject, "Church Music and Congregational Singing." The discussion of this very important subject provoked considerable discussion at the end of the morning session when the open discussion period was reached. The attitude of those who joined in the discussion of the subject was that the old-time songs and church music should not be discarded, while the new songs should be used and there should be inspiration gained by their use in our Sunday schools and churches. It was further agreed that the Methodist Protestant church hymnal should have a place in the church music of all our churches, along with the present-day song books.

Rev. J. D. Morris was the last speaker at the morning service and discussed the subject, "Duties of Stewards and the Every-Member Canvass." His address was full of good suggestions as to the solution of the financial problems of the churches. He urged some plan of financing the church. He spoke favorably of either the pledge system or the assessment system, with the greater emphasis on the pledge, or every-member canvass plan. Brother Phillips, the pastor of the Lincolnton church, in discussing the subject, said that the Lincolnton church was handling their financial matters in a splendid manner, meeting all of their obligations each week. They ascertained what the total amount of their expenses were by the week and paid them each week. That church is a fine example for other churches to follow.

A very interesting period of the meeting was reached about 12:30 when the time arrived for the dinner. The good people of the Lincolnton church brought well-filled baskets of good things to eat and the dinner was spread in picnic style in the church yard. Brother Morris offered the prayer of thanks and the large crowd partook of the bountiful dinner to their entire satisfaction. It was most delicious and delightful, to say the least about it.

The afternoon session began at 1:30 o'clock with song and devotional service conducted by the Shelby pastor. The first address delivered was by Rev. E. A. Bingham, pastor of Bess Chapel and Bessemer City churches. His subject was, "The Sunday School," and he handled the subject in a very able manner, and to the edification of all who heard the discussion. The Sunday school was magnified by Brother Bingham, and he emphasized the fact and insisted earnestly that the Sunday school is a part of the church and should be regarded as such by the people, the young, the grown-ups, the middle-aged and the old. He also urged the graded lessons for our schools and stressed the great need of class rooms as well as trained teachers.

The next address was on the subject of the Christian Endeavor society, delivered by Brother Phillips, and he emphasized the importance of this organization, for the development of our young people in church work and in preparing them for the duties and responsibilities of church work.

Brother Morgan spoke again in the afternoon on the home and foreign missionary organizations in our church and declared that the women of our denomination are doing far more for missions than the men are doing. He urged the maintenance of these organizations in our churches.

This writer did not attend the Saturday night session and the Sunday sessions of the district meeting, and therefore, cannot give a report in detail of these sessions. Brother Bingham was on the program at the Saturday night session for an address on "Extending Our Efforts Beyond Our Borders." Sunday morning program called for Sunday school and a sermon by Rev. J. M. Morgan on the theme, "Life, Service and Substance." In the afternoon the discussions were on the interests of the High Point College and the Young People's Summer Conference, and the speakers were Rev. J. M. Morgan and Rev. C. E. Phillips.

The final meeting was Sunday night, with a sermon by Rev. J. M. Morgan.

The district meeting was not well represented on Saturday, there being only a few representatives from the charges outside of Lincolnton. We feel that much good will result from the sessions of the rally, and Brother Morris is to be congratulated upon his work in the Ninth District and for the splendid program for the meeting.

The writer regretted his inability to attend the sessions on Sunday, the regular services at the Shelby church being held that day.

English Street Church, High Point.—English Street Church is in the midst of a glorious revival which started March 22. The pastor, Rev. A. M. Hamilton, is being assisted by Rev. and Mrs. R. E. Andrews, Miss Norman of the Friends Church, Rev. W. C. Hall of the High Point College, Rev. Mr. Sheppard of the Christian Church, and Rev. J. W. Hulin of Why Not circuit. Brother E. B. Montgomery of the Southside Baptist Church has charge of the singing, being ably assisted by his lovely daughter, Miss Ruby, who presides at the piano. Brother Montgomery puts his whole soul into the song service, and sings the old-time gospel songs which are enjoyed so much by every one present.

The gospel is being preached with power sent down from heaven, and souls are praying through to victory. There have been 33 conversions up to the close of the service Sunday night. Brother Andrews preached a soul-stirring sermon, after which an altar call was made and 19 young men and women came forward and gave their hearts to God. Brother Hamilton opened the doors of the church and 13 of the newborn souls united with the church. We are truly grateful to God for the hearty co-operation we have had from the pastors and workers from the other churches of the city. Surely God is good to us, and is blessing us as we yield ourselves for service to others. How it cheers our hearts to know that in these days when there is so much worldliness and modernist ideas in the church, that there are a faithful few that believe in a Bible hell, and the doctrine of the new birth. We covet an interest in the prayers of every one that knows the Lord. Pray that we keep humble at Jesus' feet, so that we may be used in the salvation of precious souls for whom Christ died. Clifton L. Croker, Reporter.

Haw River Circuit.—A great Easter Monday program is made for Mizpah church on Easter Monday. A number of noted divines, as well as ex-pastors, are on the program for the great epoch in the history of Mizpah church in the laying of the corner stone of the splendid new church. Indeed it appears that old things have passed away and all things have become new about Mizpah.

Come right along with full baskets and meet your old friends of long ago, and let us have a glorious time together such as we will remember when the earth is fading from our vision.

Don't forget the time and the place—Mizpah the place, Easter Monday the time, 11 o'clock the hour, all day the length.

W. D. Reed.

Graham.—On Saturday night, April 4, the quarterly conference was held. Mrs. Clara Steele and Mr. D. M. Johnson were named as nominees for delegates to the annual conference.

At Sunday school today we had 144 present, offering $10.85 for the Children's Home.

Tonight our Easter program was given. Much credit is due to the boys and girls who made the pageant a success, and especially to Miss Mary Tom Hughes, who directed it. The congregation was unusually large, and included many members of other churches in Graham and Burlington. We are always glad to have these friends worship with us. The offering amounted to $37.

We will have Communion Service at the 11 o'clock service Easter Sunday. All members of the church are earnestly requested to attend.

We are glad to know that little Rebecca Reavis, who was operated on for appendicitis recently, is improving rapidly. We miss her from our junior Sunday school and hope she will soon be back with us.

Much interest is being shown in the union prayer services that have been held in our town for the last few weeks. Last Wednesday night at the meeting held at the Presbyterian church our pastor had charge of the services and made a helpful talk. The Ham-Ramsey meeting begins next Sunday in Burlington. Pray for us that we may have a great spiritual awakening and a glorious revival in our sister communities. E. C. R., Reporter.

Dublin, Mecksville Charge.—The weather being unfavorable yesterday we had a very small congregation but a splendid sermon. Our pastor was called away and Rev. A. C. Swafford filled his appointment for him.

The Fourteenth District Rally which was held last Saturday and Sunday was helpful from start to finish. Some of the speakers that we were expecting were not there; if they are kept away on account of sickness, we hope they may soon be restored to health. We are glad to have had our church honored with this rally. The church was filled Sunday and among the crowd were Pastor Sisk's father and brother; we were glad to have them worship with us on this occasion.

Reporter.

Burke Chapel, Connelly Springs Charge.—We are still alive and getting along with our work splendidly. Rev. J. R. Gurner delivered us a very touching sermon. Our Sunday school is moving along very well. We are going to work on a Children's Day soon and hope all the children will be greatly interested in taking a part. We would be glad to see a report from the sister churches and see what they are doing. We desire the prayers of all Christian people. Best wishes to the Herald and its readers. Jessie Greenhill, Reporter.

Midway, Haw River Circuit.—We are moving along very nicely at Midway; there were 89 present at Sunday school yesterday; collection $1.67. We have prayer meetings once a month with very good attendance, though the attendance ought to be better at all our services.

The fifth Saturday and Sunday in March we had district conference at this place which was enjoyed by all who attended. We had splendid talks on different subjects from good speakers. On Sunday at 11 o'clock Brother Trogon from Flat Rock circuit preached a splendid sermon to a very good congregation.

Next Sunday at three o'clock P. M. we will have our Easter program. We are hoping for a large congregation with plenty of money ready to give for home missions. Come, everybody, and let us help the Board of Home Missions by denying ourselves and giving for this cause. Pray for us.

—The revival at Union Ridge continues with interest. Last night (Sunday) there were about 15 conversions and reclamations. Brother Pierce is doing fine work with us. The meeting will continue for a number of days yet. Geo. L. Curry.

Our Second Quarterly Conference.

The second quarterly conference, Granville circuit, 1925, was held at the parsonage on Saturday, March 21, at 11 o'clock A. M.

By 11 o'clock eighteen official members were present. This is an average of six members for each of the three churches and while the number was not equally divided among the churches, all of the churches were well represented. The business was transacted with dispatch and without a single hitch. The reports were all said to be comparatively good. Brother James T. Cozart of Rehoboth and Brother Charles W. Finch of Mt. Carmel were chosen as nominees for delegate to the next annual conference. This conference was one of the most pleasant we have ever held and the parson and parsoness enjoyed it very much.

There being only three churches on the charge, the rule is for one conference to be held at the parsonage and this rule works well and to the advantage of pastor and people.

The Next Postal Card.

The next Postal Card is to be a special number. The editor, as a member of the committee on evangelism, will write on this all-important subject. The text for this issue will be the 10th chapter of the Acts and we request all readers of the Herald and of the Postal Card to study with us this 10th chapter of Acts. Incidentally the editor will give the dates for the special or revival meetings on Granville circuit and also the names of the evangelists who are to do the preaching or at least to assist the pastor in the preaching. Billy Sunday will not be among the number; but one of our evangelists will be from a city where Billy is to hold a meeting prior to our meetings and one is a man of God who is especially interested in our country churches. We shall expect great results from these special meetings. Look out for the next Postal Card and continue to study, with us, the 10th chapter of Acts.

Henderson, April 2.

High Point.—We are profoundly grateful to be able to report that our pastor, Dr. Brown, continues to improve, and has gone to his home where he is now recuperating and receiving visitors. We are hoping that he will regain strength rapidly, and will soon be able to occupy his pulpit again.

The Young People's Missionary Society presented a most attractive and entertaining play, "Converting Aunt Jane to Foreign Missions," on Sunday evening at the church. The following girls took part: Misses Claire Douglas, Irene and Inez Reynolds, Rosalie and Alma Andrews, Alice, Louise and Grace Koonce, Lela Johnson, Annie Robbins, Marjorie Welborn, Margaret Snipes, Esther Pritchard, Katherine Askay, and Inez Strader. This play was greatly enjoyed by the congregation, and the silver offering amounted to $10.

Rev. P. E. Lindley of the faculty of High Point College conducted services on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, and delighted the congregation with a splendid discourse on the "open heaven experience." He says that there are four obstructions or hindrances which prevent us from enjoying Christian experiences: ignorance, idolatry, impurity, and idleness. His quotations from Browning and Tennyson were very apt and forceful. Mr. Lindley made a most favorable impression on his audience, who will be much pleased to hear him again.

The girls' literary society of High Point College, the Artemisian, gave a most delightful banquet to their friends on Saturday evening in the College dining-room.

The engagement of a popular young member of our church, Mrs. J. Richard Reitzel, and Miss Lily Nelson Mason of Durham is announced, the wedding to occur in early summer. Mr. Reitzel is one of our finest young men, the older son of the late Dr. and Mrs. J. R. Reitzel, who has a host of friends here and in other parts of North Carolina. His bride-to-be has often visited friends here, and she will receive a warm welcome to her new home. Mr. Reitzel is now recovering from a serious illness of pneumonia, which has kept him in Watts Hospital, Durham, for several weeks.

We are sorry to note that the little son of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Rankin, Jr., who is so ill, does not improve.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Walker went to Thomasville Sunday to attend the funeral of Mr. Brown Finch, who was killed by a Southern train Saturday morning while crossing the track near Mr. C. F. Finch's home. This tragedy, which took heavy toll in the life of an upright and promising young man, is greatly deplored.

Rupert T. Pickens, Jr., was at home from the University for the week-end.

March 30.

Surprise Birthday Dinner.

On Sunday, March 22, Rev. G. A. Laughlin of Cedar Falls, N. C., went to Sunday school, as was his custom. He was expecting his sons and daughters-in-law to come in and, as he thought, partake of a private birthday dinner in honor of his seventieth birthday.

So after Sunday school on nearing his home imagine his surprise when he beheld groups of people all about, and his grounds filling with automobiles so fast it looked as though it was going to be necessary to install a traffic cop, while out on the lawn under the old apple tree something was fast taking shape like a gigantic table. When the writer beheld the veteran preacher immediately after the true state of affairs was revealed to him, his eyes were filled with tears of happiness as he beheld car after car filled to capacity with his relatives, friends, and admirers from this and other counties, coming in to pay him homage.

The affair was a huge success; everybody present was happy and smiling and enjoying every moment of the time. We wish to make special mention of the preacher's brother, Mr. A. G. Laughlin of Cedar Falls, who is seventy-five years old, and of his cousin, Mr. Jesse Fred of Ramseur, who is seventy-six. These three old boys have had many exciting times together in their youth, and it was good for them to be together again on this occasion. Mr. Laughlin thanked the vast throng of people for remembering him, and welcomed them to his home. He said his brother preachers with whom he had labored had often said they could call on him any time, always finding him full, but this was one occasion when he was empty. But literally speaking he was not to remain empty long, nor any of the one hundred nine guests who were present, for immediately upon his concluding Mr. Routh of the Methodist conference was called upon for a few words and to pronounce the benediction. Mr. Ruth compared the feast to the marriage supper, making a beautiful illustration and immediately afterwards pronounced the benediction, and everybody gathered around the table and the celebration began in earnest, and such a feast! words are inadequate. It was said by some to be the finest display of food they had ever seen, and if some of us had the same experience as the little tot who had eaten too many sweets, we are to be excused, for such a repast was certainly tempting in the superlative degree. We do not believe it could be duplicated, and certainly not surpassed anywhere. We were filled, not only with the good things to sustain life, but with fellowship and brotherly love one for another. Such occasions are highly beneficial to all those who are present. New acquaintances are formed and old ones renewed, and lasting good results.

Many of us went back to our homes after this occasion, feeling that we had not only celebrated a man's 70th birthday, but that we had paid homage to a man who had spent at least part of that seventy years in trying to help somebody else, and there is no doubt in our minds about his having succeeded, and we ask God's blessings upon him, and wish him many happy returns of the day.

One Who Was There.

LET US USE OUR OPPORTUNITIES.

We are held accountable and responsible according to our light and understanding and opportunity. "For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required" (Luke 12:48). Jesus said, "Go ye into all the world." I believe he means for us to use every opportunity at home as well as abroad. We are more responsible for our neighbors than for those across the ocean, because of our opportunity: "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men" (Gal. 6:10). We should be ready and awake to every opportunity. If we do not lift up Jesus before those around us every day, how can we expect to life Him up effectually before those who know us not? Every man, woman and child has a precious immortal soul for whom Christ died; every soul is worth more than all this world.

Let us do all in our power to bring these souls to Jesus. No matter who they are or what, even if low or vile, they have precious immortal souls to be saved or lost—lost through all eternity. It is through the mercy of God that we who are enjoying salvation are saved today.—Selected.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Mrs. Fruzia J. Williams.

Mrs. Fruzia J. Williams, mother of Rev. B. Williams, died suddenly March 21 at the home of her son at Esland. The husband having preceded her to the glory world some years ago, Mrs. Williams has made her home with her son. The funeral was conducted in the home by the writer. The body was taken for burial to Hemp in Moore county where the family used to live.

She leaves to mourn their loss one son, Rev. B. Williams, pastor of Orange circuit, two daughters, Mrs. N. M. Phillips of Union, S. C. and Mrs. Rom W. Lewis, of Florence, S. C. and several grandchildren. Mrs. Williams, little more than seventy-two years of age at the time of her death, became a follower of Christ in early life and joined the Methodist Protestant church. It was her custom to take membership with her when she changed place of residence, having placed it in the hands of the church when the family moved there.

A Good Man Gone.

On March 4, 1925, as the day was drawing to a close, the spirit of Brother Alfred N. Roberson went back to the God who gave it. He was born October 4, 1847, being 77 years of age. At the age of 17 he enlisted in the Confederate Cavalry, and was a faithful soldier until the close of the war. Soon after his return to his stricken, devastated Southland home, he was happily married to Miss Margaret Jane McDaniel, who lived only a few years. Some time later he was married the second time to Miss Roxie Luzenia Guthrie, who survives him. To this union nine children were born: Mrs. W. T. Garrison, Mrs. G. M. Swin, Lois, Roy, Loy, Ola, Neva, Nona, and Ella.

After receiving his education at Graham Normal College (which later became Elon College), Brother Roberson taught school for a number of years. Being born and reared on a farm, he chose farming as his life work. By reason of his fine judgment, his intelligence, and wise application of business principles to agricultural pursuits, he became one of the prominent farmers of Alamance county and God blessed him with an abundant supply of this world's goods.

Early in life Brother Roberson was converted to Christ and allied himself with Concord Methodist Protestant church, on Saxapahaw charge. As a Methodist Protestant he loved the church of his choice. Her history, her doctrines, her policy, were all dear to him. He knew church law and always insisted on strict adherence to the law. He was interested in the progress of his church, both local and general, and gave liberally of his means to this end. In the councils of his church his advice was always sought for. He was delegate to the annual conference of this state several times, and served on some of the important committees.

We would pay a last tribute to Brother Roberson as a Christian. To him Christ was all and in all. He knew him in whom he had believed, and was persuaded that he was able to keep that which he had committed unto him against that day. One who grew up with him had this to say: "I have known Alfred all his life. He was always a good fellow." Calmly and joyfully he walked down through the valley of the shadow of death with the Good Shepherd in whom he had put his trust saying, "I will fear no evil for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." His home-going was like the setting of some bright star and of it we can say with the poet,

"He died as sets the morning star
Which sinks not down behind the darkened west,
Nor rests obscured midst tempests of the skies,
But melts away into the calm light of heaven."

How Concord church and his home will miss him! How his pastor will miss his advice and sympathy!

The funeral service was conducted by his pastor, assisted by Rev. S. W. Taylor. Then his body was gently laid to rest in Concord cemetery.

May the rich blessings of our Heavenly Father rest upon his companion and children who are left behind, and may they prepare to meet him in that better country.

Death of Little Margaret Elizabeth Billups.

Death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Billups Friday night, March 6, and took from them their beloved little daughter, Margaret, only a few days old.

Goodby, dear little darling, we miss you, but we know you have gone to dwell with our Savior, where no sickness or sorrow can come. Thou hast crossed over the river to rest under the shade of the trees, and to be at home with our Savior.

A Cousin, Maggie Elizabeth Willey.

Memorial of J. H. Butler.

J. H. Butler was born August 18, 1850. He went from his earthly home to his heavenly home on March 3, 1925. He was in failing health for some time. His friends had realized for some time that the old house of clay was fast going to pieces. A few weeks before departure he was confined to his room. The doctor came but could not stay the hand of death. He had well rounded out his three-score years and ten. He laid down his cross to take up a crown which the angels placed upon a faithful brow.

He leaves a wife, feeble in health, three sons and three daughters, three children having died in early days.

Brother Butler in early life and manhood was a sinner among sinners. In full manhood he was powerfully saved. He joined the Methodist Protestant Church at Hobbs Chapel. In his Christian life he was faithful and true to every interest of his church and kingdom of Christ. He was strong in the condemnation of wrong-doers. He upheld the right and pleaded with sinners to be reconciled to God. He was for many years an official in his church. He was a faithful and liberal supporter of his church, always his pastor's friend. For many years he was superintendent of Sunday school. He was an official in his church when God called him to his eternal reward. Brother Butler frequently responded with hearty amens and praised God aloud in the worship. During the past year he attended church when so feeble that he had no strength to sit or stand till he had lain down on church steps or pews to rest and regain strength. He was a good citizen, peaceful and law-abiding. Truly, a good man has gone from us. We shall greatly miss him. We call him dead but his influence still lives.

His funeral was conducted from his home by his pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Shipman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. His earthly remains were laid to rest in the old Butler cemetery, he being the last of the old family. There was a large crowd of weeping, sorrow-stricken friends to pay the last tribute of love and respect to one whom we all loved.

May God bless the bereaved and comfort them in their affliction. "He is not dead but sleepeth."

H. L. Powell, Pastor.

A Good Woman Gone to Heaven.

On March 25, 1925, death came into the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. I. Lewis, and took their loving aunt, Miss Johnnie Lewis. For two weeks before she died she suffered as no one could tell; death was a relief to her. All that doctor and loving hands could do could not cure her; she had been a sufferer for many years, but the most patient sufferer we ever knew. Miss Johnnie had been a member of Orange Chapel church ever since she was young. The church has lost a faithful member, a good woman has gone to heaven. She was always just as kind and good as she could be. Everybody loved her. She leaves behind one brother, Mr. Davie Lewis, three nieces, one nephew and many other relatives and friends. She cannot come to us any more, but we can go to her, if we only live the good pure life that she lived. She has gone home to rest, where no sufferings and heartaches come. The funeral was held at Orange Chapel church by her pastor, Rev. H. L. Isley, and her body quietly laid to rest in the cemetery. The flower girls were the mission circle children. She loved the children, and they loved her.

May we all bow in humble submission to God who does all things well. The bereaved ones have our prayers and sympathy.

A Friend.

Professor Thompson Passes.

Professor J. A. W. Thompson, who has suffered intensely during the last several months, was released from his suffering March 30. Truly a great and good man has been lost to Alamance county and the Methodist Protestant Church. An obituary will appear later.

With this issue we are completing a tabulated report of all subscriptions and payments received on the insurance endowment. We would be very glad if anyone reading the list as given who discovers an error will at once notify us so that the error may be corrected. The list as printed in the Herald last week and completed on this page, is intended to give in dollars and cents the amounts pledged per year by the subscriber, or if not by year it represents the total amount they give. And now for convenience' sake, we are publishing the number of fifty-dollar shares subscribed for or paid for by the churches and members of the churches in a serial form. These, you know, begin with one and run to three hundred. When three hundred shares are taken the campaign closes. You will see by the following list that sixty-six shares are taken up to date; our next report would therefore begin with 67, etc.

We have visited the majority of our congregations. Many of these have taken the quotas allotted them, and have found subscribers for the total amount. We had promises from others that the canvass would be put on later and the amounts subscribed. Some of the churches did not promise and have not as yet done anything. Dr. Dixon, Mr. Garrett, and I, with the assistance of several others, are still working at the problem and hope that soon more of our people will join in the campaign and the total amount be subscribed.

Fraternally,

R. M. Andrews.

Bess Chapel and Bessemer City.—The third day in March Rev. Lawrence Little was with us and spoke on the College endowment at Bess Chapel in the morning and at Bessemer City in the evening. Mr. Little seemed at his best. He brought us a message of information and inspiration. Bess Chapel came within a few dollars of their quota. Bessemer City more than subscribed their quota. We appreciate the interest shown in our High Point College.

Monday after the third Sunday in March we started our special revival services at Bessemer with Rev. J. D. Morris as pulpit help. Brother Morris did some good preaching during the week. There were four professions, and the church greatly revived. We hope more really was accomplished than we could see. We thank Brother Morris for his noble service and welcome him back.

Both of our Sunday schools are preparing for an Easter service. The service will be at Bess Chapel Easter morning, and at Bessemer City Easter evening. We are hoping for a grand day in Kingdom service.

We are glad to report that the members at Bess Chapel have put a new cedar roof on the parsonage. Mr. A. A. Beam is due a great deal of credit as he has taken the lead in collecting the money. A dry well has also been dug for the pastor to keep his milk and butter cool this summer. We wish to thank every one who has helped make these improvements possible. I have already reported the covering of barn and sheds.

I am hoping to meet all the members. I have not yet been able to meet all the members. Christian friends, it is time we were forming acquaintance. If you are sick I should like to hear from you. If you are well, come to church. There is much to be done and only a few months to do it in. Conference will soon be dawning upon us. Let us go. I am counting on you. Don't disappoint me.

M. P. Chambliss, Pastor.

Nothing draws along with it such a glory as the Sabbath. Never has it unfolded without some witness and welcome, some song and salutation. It has been the coronation day of martyrs—the first day of saints. It has been from the first day until now the sublime day of the church of God; still the outgoings of its morning and evening rejoice. Let us then remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.—James Hamilton.

READY.

Dear Lord, I crave to live as one unmindful
Of all the world can give and take away,
Made buoyant by eternal life within me,
And purified by hope against that day.
No anchor cast of mine own wish or casting,
No cable thrown to hold my craft to land,
But like some ship with sails spread from the mastings,
So may I want Thy call and Thy command.
And whether my release come with the rapture,
Or whether piloted by Thee at death,
I pray that naught may keep my soul from flying
To meet Thee here or there with my last breath!
That naught of earth distract my thoughts from Thee
For all the space of time and through eternity!
—Jane Dalziel Wood.

—The reprint of Wheeler's History of North Carolina will be ready for distribution early in May, as announced by the New York publisher, Frederick H. Hitchcock. The book, which contains valuable information of the early days and families of North Carolina (much of which is found nowhere else) will be a facsimile of the original volume as published in 1851.

It will also have some new and interesting matter. Included in this a list of the present State officers and members of the last Legislature, both House and Senate; State Judiciary; U. S. Congress and Senators; Governors from 1851 to the present, and names of counties added since 1851.

There are still 200 copies available for advance subscribers at $4. Write Mrs. E. L. Shuford, State Historian D. A. R., Hickory, N. C. When these are exhausted the regular book-sellers' price, will take effect at $6.50 each.

—Field Marshal Lord Haig is sailing from England this month for America. He will visit both Canada and the United States. As Sir Douglas Haig he was commander-in-chief of the British armies in France in the World War. After the war he was raised to the British peerage.

—Australia and the Argentine have taken up the task of supplying wheat to Europe, and their combined shipments, which began with the new crop in January, have now reached totals which, for the time being, constitute the dominant factor in European imports. India, which begins its harvest this month, expects to send 40 million bushels, but its crop will not reach the market until July, and will only serve to fill in until the American and Canadian production begins to move in the fall. Already European bidding for the new American crop has had sharp effect upon prices.

AFFLICTION.

It is said that gardeners sometimes, when they would bring a rose to richer flowering, deprive it for a season of light and moisture. Silent and dark it stands, dropping one fading leaf after another, and seeming to go down patiently to death. But when every leaf is dropped, and the plant stands stripped to the uttermost, a new life is even then working in the buds from which shall spring a tender foliage and a brighter wealth of flowers. So, often in celestial gardening, every leaf of earthly happiness must drop before a new and divine bloom visits the soul.—H. W. Beecher.

PLAYING AT RELIGION.

The religious world is taking the eternal issues entirely too easy. The average Christian has not the spirit of supreme sacrifice. The burden of atonement for lost souls is exceedingly rare. So few are willing to pay the price of a recurrence of Pentecost.

What is the matter? Is not our Christ being wounded in the house of His friends by a paralyzing indifference to the millions for whom He died? How few really agonize in supplication for the heathen world? And how few more are wrestling, Jacob-like, for the lost at home?

Does our advancing civilization tend to neutralize the forces of the Spirit? Does prosperity, luxury, and ease make men less keen for the supreme value. As the sensibilities of the soul dulled by a too close contact with the world and its many allurements? Is it not so sadly true?

Let us get out of this fatal route of unconcern. Let us seek a baptism of zeal for immortal souls. Let us hunger and thirst for the realization of the higher ideals of our holy religion. Let the spirit of prayer dominate our waking moments. Let the Holy Spirit have His way in an entirely abandoned sense. Let Christ be enthroned in our lives as never before.—The Word of Life.

PRAYER'S PART.

Martin Luther, the titanic man, who, under God, "broke the spell of ages and laid nations subdued at the foot of the cross"—he was the man who said: "I have so much work to do today that I cannot yet along on less than three hours of prayer." We can hardly think too highly of the apostolic ministries of John Wesley, but I fear that we seldom rightly appraise the significance of those early hours of prayer each day, wherein this dynamic life was charged with its spiritual power. John Knox saved Scotland. It was his prayers that terrified the tyrannical Mary. We are told that the study walls of Richard Baxter were stained with prayer breath. No wonder Kidderminster had such a wonderful evangelistic pastor. David Brainerd prayed with a passion that few men have ever known; the savages of the world to whom he went soon became communities of splendid Christian men and women. And William Carey and Henry Martyn and Robert Murray McCheyne and others who have helped to stamp missions on every page of the last century's history learned through the journals of this flaming soul the secret of that prayer life that made them such mighty agencies in extending Christ's kingdom. The revival under Jonathan Edwards in the eighteenth century began with his famous call to prayer. It was in the Haystack prayer meeting at Williams College that Mills and Judson were born into the missionary life, and the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions was born into Christian history. Moody was successful as an evangelist when the Christian people prayed; he failed when they didn't. Our New Testament tells us that the first home mission revival, Pentecost, followed a ten days' prayer meeting, and that the first foreign missionary enterprise had its rise in a prayer service at Antioch, Syria.—Rev. Ira Barnett.

WHY THEY WERE KEPT WAITING.

At Northfield one summer Dr. Wilton Merle Smith recalled what Mr. Moody once said as to why the disciples had to wait ten days before the blessing of Pentecost came: "I fancy they waited one day and said, 'Why does not the blessing come?' Then Thomas arose and said, 'Why, brethren, I believe the trouble is with me. I am not entirely free from my doubts.' And then another apostle arose and said, 'I think the trouble must be with me. I am not entirely rid of my desire to be first in the kingdom.' And by and by, perhaps the next day, Peter arose and said, 'Brethren, pray for me. I still want to be the prime here in the kingdom, and I want you to pray for me.' So there followed confession from one after another of these disciples, and by and by the Spirit of God came upon them all. The cleansing made possible the power."

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY.

Dr. Lewis says, "There are four great ideals which point the way to the prosperity, efficiency and permanence of the Methodist Protestant Church." One of these he mentions as organization, full and complete.

One of these organizations which perhaps has done as much for the development of the church or possibly more since its beginning is Christian Endeavor. Wonderful discoveries have been made by this means of what our young people are, and what they are able to do when properly guided by an organization that looks solely to their spiritual welfare and the guidance of their recreations in such a way as to bring strength to the body without moral blight. Many young people have been misunderstood both by the older people of the church and the other young people until Christian Endeavor societies have been organized and made to function. Through association in a society of this kind members naturally know each other better, and can love each other more, and, therefore, work together harmoniously in any undertaking of the church.

Traits of character and talent may be discovered through Christian Endeavor. For instance, I have known young men and women who had never been expected to pray in public, when given the opportunity in a Christian Endeavor prayer meeting, were glad, and uttered prayers of such fervor and earnestness that it was at once evident that they prayed sincerely in secret, and also that they had talent in this important part of church service.

The social benefit from Christian Endeavor is by no means a little thing. Many young people who could not become acquainted through working together are able to do so by playing together. The very atmosphere at Christian Endeavor socials is wholesome, and the members do enjoy the right kind of entertainment when given the opportunity. I fear the young people today are being criticized too severely for loving base and ugly things. If they do care more for the wicked pleasures, isn't it because they have had only that kind? Young people everywhere are going to have some sort of a good time, and they enjoy the social functions of the church. But if they can't find a place for play in the church, then they find it in the world and too often find the wrong kind. The Christian Endeavor Society more than any other department of the church looks after this very necessary thing.

What is a Christian Endeavor society anyway? You know, to be sure you do, but have you ever stopped to think what it means to "think on your feet"? Doubtless you have wished for courage to express yourself just as you felt, but for lack of training along this line you could not. This is one of the great helps in Christian Endeavor work. What the literary society is to the school, the Christian Endeavor society is to the church. It trains the young people to express their thoughts in a way that will make their meaning clear. But that is not all. That is a small part of it. The real purpose is the training of the members in such things as are necessary in the spiritual life, so as to know how to do the things that are needful for the church and those about us.

The Sunday school teaches us the truth, the Christian Endeavor society enables us to express that truth, to do that truth. For example, in Sunday school we are told that we should be kind and helpful to the aged and sick. Through the flower committee the Christian Endeavor society reaches these people and expresses love and cheer with flowers.

Should a church be fully organized? The points mentioned by our General Conference President are these: A full-time pastorate, fully organized churches, genuine budget, denominational integration. One of the best ways by which this ideal may be reached is by taking care of our young people in such a way as to get them to see their possibilities. Such rapid development is made in Christian Endeavor work that these possibilities are soon discovered. The members just "feel themselves growing" from the beginning and enjoy the work because they see in it something worth while.

Christian Endeavor fosters the spirit of denominational loyalty. "For Christ and the Church" is the motto. Can there be any better? And listen to the pledge. "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would like to have me do; that I will make it the rule of my life to pray and to read the Bible every day, and to support my own church in every way, especially by attending all her regular Sunday and mid-week services, unless prevented to some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Savior, and that just so far as I know how, throughout my whole life, I will endeavor to lead a Christian life."

Through the programs of the various committees the Endeavorers become interested in all activities of the church. Through the work of the missionary committee, for example, the members become interested in both home and foreign missions, and will more than likely become valuable members of the Woman's Missionary society, and who knows but that some may even preach the gospel in China, India, or Japan, or in the remote regions of our own land?

You say you think the work of Christian Endeavor is great, and you ask, can it be done in the country church or on the circuit where the pastor is not there all the time? Ask the three churches on Guilford, two on North Davidson, two on Thomasville, one on South Davidson, and one on West Thomasville, about ten in this district, that are operating where they do not have an all-time pastor at that particular church. This is argument enough that it can be done.

The town church has a much better chance to keep her society going and there should be no lack there. Whether we represent a country church or a city church, let us not fail to have this very important auxiliary as one of a complete whole in our organized church life, for without the Christian Endeavor society, the church cannot be organized one hundred per cent. Mrs. C. L. Koontz.

—Arthur Coble was recently operated on for appendicitis. He is recovering.

—We saw Brother D. H. Hunter, now in his 93d year, last Sunday. He is not often able to go to church, but sits by the fire and talks to friends who call much as he ever did. Remember him in prayer.

THANK YOU, AND PLEASE.

Easter has come and gone. Whatever the Board of Home Missions of the Methodist Protestant Church could contribute to the observance of the day in the churches and Sabbath schools of the denomination has been given. Our programs were sent free to Methodist Protestant Sunday schools as far as they were desired. A number of schools of other denominations ordered the program and paid for them at the usual rates. Some orders were sent to Ontario, Canada, and many commendations have been received from various sources. Competent critics have characterized it as being the best program of its class issued this year.

Our records have been broken in the number of orders received, the largest previous record being 759. In 1925, 795 Methodist Protestant Sunday schools ordered our service. A considerable number of schools ordered enveloped, where it was not practicable to use the program, and offerings were made for the support of the Home Missionary work of the denomination. Only a small number of the edition of 50,000 copies of the service remain on hand, and we had to reorder offering envelopes, a total of nearly 140,000 being sent out to our Sunday schools and churches.

The orders have been handled in the office of the board without extra help, the shipments have been made from the office of our Baltimore Book Concern, and very few complaints have been received as to delay in transit. There should be no delays, but parcel post is sometimes slower than first-class mail, and we have approached to as near a one hundred per cent record as we might reasonably expect to do.

So we want to say "Thank You" to Rev. W. B. Judefind for the music; to the Methodist Protestant Sunday schools and churches which have so willingly co-operated with us in the development of the plans proposed this year, to the Baltimore Book Concern for its service in printing and mailing the programs; to the editors of our church papers; to conference presidents; and to the Budget Council, and others who have given the weight of their official positions to the advancement of this department of the work. The "better day" in the Methodist Protestant Church records a constantly increasing spirit of co-operation which promises still greater achievements in the coming days.

Then we want to say "Please" to the officials who have charge of the Sunday school and church finances. Please see that the total amount of your apportionment for home missions is in hand if possible. You will remember that our goal is $115,000 on Easter, and our slogan, the apportionment in full from every church and every Sunday school in the entire denomination on Easter Sunday. If your offering fell short of this amount, please bring it up to this standard by special appeal if necessary. This will cover 23 per cent of your total General Conference Budget apportionment, and will be duly credited to your church.

And "Please" send this remittance designated as your Easter offering for home missions to your annual conference treasurer at once, so it will be possible for him to reach Mr. Staley, the treasurer of the General Conference, previous to the close of the month.

The next special day service is the Children's Day service in June. Let us see to it that all former records are broken in this service also both as to the number of the schools observing Children's Day, and in the amount of the offering taken at that time.

THE MODERN USE OF THE BIBLE.

Much has already been written about this latest book of Dr. Fosdick; much in its praise and much in dispraise. All agree that it displays literary art and rhetorical skill. It shows wide acquaintance with a certain type of literature, and wonderful ability to press into service all that can be made to aid his cause. Those who are in accord with Dr. Fosdick's views will have no cause to complain of the way in which the views are presented. Those who differ will find many points in the book that are vulnerable.

To begin with, instead of the Modern Use of the Bible, a better title would be the Use of the Modern Bible. The whole discussion proceeds on the assumption that we have a modern Bible, a Bible vastly different from the Bible of the fathers. Their Bible was in a very real sense The Word of God. The Westminster divines attribute the authorship to God, and they meant by this that what the Bible says God says. Their Bible was plenary verbally inspired, and was infallible throughout from Genesis to Revelation. The Bible of Dr. Fosdick and his school is the the product of natural evolution. It grew up through the centuries and shows the slow and gradual development of the religious consciousness of the Jews. They have torn it apart and discovered the different strata of which it is composed. These strata are of very unequal worth. The oldest strata give us such conceptions of God, of the world, of religion and morality as are common to races in their childhood. Dr. Fosdick illustrates this view of the Bible by showing us how some of these ideas developed. The Jews started by conceiving God as a "man who walks in a garden in the cool of the day, or as one who comes down from the sky to confuse men's speech lest they could build their tower so high as to reach his home." From that low and puerile beginning they went on purifying and enlarging their conception until they came to think of God as revealed in Christ. In like manner he shows how their degraded ethical ideas improved until they reached high water mark in the Sermon on the Mount. It is perfectly obvious that the important question is not how we should use the old Bible in these modern times, but how we should use this modern Bible so as to make it serve the interests of religion. If we had the same old Bible, of course, we would use it in the same old way. We should go to it to learn from an absolute authoritative source all that we are to believe concerning God, and all the duties that it requires of man. But how are we to use a Bible that speaks with no authoritative voice, and which is merely a history of the religious development of one of the various Semite tribes? This is the question which Dr. Fosdick is trying to answer. He recognizes, as all he may, the danger that those who exchange the old Bible for the modern Bible will find that the exchange has left them greatly impoverished. The new Bible is hardly worth the effort to master its contents so as to be able to sift the wheat from the chaff. "It is possible," says Dr. Fosdick, "to be emancipated from the bondage of ancient categories without undertaking the mental toil of constructing new ones." He frankly admits that Liberalism lacks clarity. "How much of our preaching," he says, "is intellectually chaotic and obscure! We have liberated ourselves from older ways of thinking, bondage to which had become mentally intolerable, but too generally we have shirked the difficult yet necessary task of restating in mental categories which modern minds can confidently use the central experiences of the Christian soul." One less skilled in the use of euphemistic language would express Dr. Fosdick's thought by saying that having rejected the plain and easily understood teachings of the old Bible, liberal preachers have a difficulty in saying just what they do believe. Even Dr. Fosdick with his rich vocabulary of devotional terms, and his rare skill in rhetorical phrasing, does not escape the charge of a lack of clarity. The crowds who attend his preaching strongly insist on his evangelical orthodoxy. But many able thinkers who make a careful analysis of his written language fail to find any trace of sound evangelical teaching. They persist in thinking that his proper and logical place is with the Unitarians. For ourselves, after reading The Modern Use of the Bible with painstaking care, "we can not find that he commits himself to one single fundamental evangelical doctrine. He lays stress on "experience" without once telling us how a sinner is to come by that experience.—Presbyterian Standard.

COMING HOME.

It was the Sunday after Easter. In front of the platform stood a line of young people that reached nearly across the church. They had all been baptized on Easter Day, and now good Doctor Ashley, the joy of his heart shining in his eyes, was extending to each one the right hand of fellowship in the church.

It was a great day for the village church. It was the answer to many prayers, the rainbow of hope for the future, the joy of welcome like that of the angels in heaven. Yet as the faithful ones looked along that line of young people through eyes dimmed with happy tears, it is certain that they lingered a little as their glance rested upon Edith Fleming. She had been so proud, so sure of herself, so outspoken in her declarations that she was going to live her own life outside of the church, that her yielding seemed almost a miracle, even to the most faithful ones. How was it with Edith now? What had caused this sudden change of attitude? How deep in her breast did it lie? The last words were spoken, and the new members turned to go to their own seats. Then indeed a quick breath of wonder sighed across the church. For the people saw Edith's face was a face illumined, and it seemed as if her joy came not simply from some inner feeling, but from what she saw around her. She looked about the little church with a glance that was a caress; she smiled back happily at those whose glances she met, and when she entered the old Fleming pew she sat up close, close to her mother, and clasped her hand as if she had just returned from a long journey.

"Yes, that is it, exactly," she told Aunt Achsah Waldon, the mother in Israel who asked her about it, "I felt as if I had just got home. I had been trying to make believe, you know, that I was going to live somewhere else. I called it home, but my heart never really felt at home till I came back to God. Now I can rest, and work, and not feel like a stranger in a strange land. It is wonderful, and I am so happy."

Coming home. Yes, there is no better symbol of the Christian life than coming home.—Selected.

IS GOD WAITING?

I was standing on the wall of a great lock. Outside was a huge lake vessel about to enter. At my feet lay the empty lock—waiting. For what? Waiting to be filled. Away beyond lay great Lake Superior with its limitless abundance of supply, also waiting. Waiting for what? Waiting for something to be done at the lock—ere the great lake could pour in its fulness. In a moment it was done. The lock-keeper reached out his hand and touched a steel lever. A little wicket gate sprang open under the magic touch. At once the water in the lock began to boil and seethe. As it seethed I saw it rapidly creeping up the walls of the lock. In a few moments the lock was full. The great gates swung open and the huge ship floated into the lock now filled to the brim with the fulness impoured from the waiting lake without.

Is not this a picture of a great truth about the Holy Spirit? Here are God's children, like that empty lock, waiting to be filled. And, as that great inland sea outside the lock was willing and waiting to pour its abundance into the lock, so here is God willing to pour his fulness of life into the lives of his children. But he is waiting. For what? Waiting, as the lake waited, for something to be done by us. Waiting for us to reach forth and touch that tiny wicket gate of consecration through which his abundant life shall flow. Is it hard to move? Does the rust of worldliness corrode it? Is the will stubborn and slow to yield? Yet God is waiting for it. And once it is done he reveals himself in fulness of life as he promised. . . . For all the barriers have been on our side, not his. They are barriers not of his unwillingness, but of our unyieldedness. And so you say you got all of Christ when you were saved? Doubtless you did, but the point in issue here is not whether you got all of Christ, but did Christ get all of you?—James H. McConkey.

MARRIED.

Easter-Chandler.

Mr. L. C. Easter and Miss Madaline Chandler were quietly united in marriage last Sunday evening, at the parsonage of Welch Memorial church, in the presence of a few friends who came to witness the ceremony, Rev. T. E. Pierce, the pastor, officiating.

Mr. Easter is the son of Rev. F. W. Easter, of this city, and holds a responsible position with the silk mills. Mrs. Easter is the charming daughter of Mrs. Jennie Chandler, who also resides in the city. The father, Mr. Richard Chandler, died several years ago.

The many friends of the young people wish for them many years of happiness.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Easter Sunday, with the joy and happiness it brings to the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, has come and gone. We are already hearing some good reports from the Easter services. Many were received into the church at various places. Watch reports to Herald for the Easter ingathering, and also for the offerings for the General Conference budget. One of our youngest churches, State Street, Lexington, reports G. C. B. paid in full; and our very youngest, Calvary, Greensboro, reports more than its 23 per cent raised on Easter. Other good reports will come, I am sure.

Because of the recent illness of Dr. Geo. R. Brown, pastor of First church, High Point, I had promised to spend Easter Day with his congregation, preaching in his stead. It was a genuine pleasure to preach the gospel to old and new friends in their splendid new church. They are using the Sunday school auditorium for their preaching services at present. At the morning service this splendid auditorium was comfortably filled with interesting and interested people, and at night it was about half filled. It was a joy to preach to them.

We were delighted that Dr. Brown was able to attend the morning service, and trust that he will soon be able to fill his accustomed place in service there. It was also a pleasure to have Rev. J. H. Stowe in the service.

Thursday evening of Holy Week I had the pleasure of preaching to the West End, Greensboro, people, and assisting the pastor with the Communion Service. It was a very impressive service.

Easter Monday Dr. R. M. Andrews, Rev. W. F. Ashburn, Rev. B. M. Williams, Mr. H. A. Garrett, and I, all met with pastor Reed and his people at Mizpah church, Haw River charge, to participate with them in the opening exercises of their new church, and also in laying the cornerstone.

It was a beautiful day with very impressive services, and it was a happy day for the Mizpah congregation, and for the many friends gathered there.

It is delightful to see the spirit of progress that is being made manifest by our people in so many places in the preparing of better places of worship for themselves and their children.

Pastors Please Note.

In the list of payments on the G. C. B. nothing has yet been counted that has been paid in through the woman's societies. Just the amounts sent to Rev. S. W. Taylor, conference treasurer, appear in the published list.

Now that the branch meeting has been held we are asking all pastors to find out just how much your Woman's Home missionary society has paid since last conference. Also what your Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has paid. A blank will be sent you soon for this report. Be ready with these facts. When these figures are gathered they will be published for the benefit of those charges whose women are thus helping to pay the G. C. B.

Pastors would do well to have some of the ladies visit their churches and organize the missionary societies. The women of the local churches need to do this kind of service, and the kingdom needs to have them do it.

Yours in His service,

A. G. Dixon.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

Report of the North Carolina Missionary Branch Meeting.

The seventeenth session of the North Carolina Branch of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies convened in Winston-Salem April 7 to 9, and proved to be the most largely attended and in general the most successful meeting the societies have ever held.

Since the meeting is asking that one or more reports be printed in the Herald each week, it is useless to mention them here. You will find them helpful and encouraging since there has been a splendid increase in interest, efforts, and gifts in almost every auxiliary and society. Many new auxiliaries have been organized this year.

We do want to give you the benefit of some of the splendid things included in the program other than reports.

An address by Mrs. W. C. Hammer, State president of the Home Missionary Branch, was the feature of the opening session on Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. Hammer sounded the call to service, and stressed the importance of Christian education, urging the women of the State to hold high the torch of missions.

"Christ in America," a beautifully impressive pageant, staged by the auxiliary of the hostess church, brought the cause of missions to our very door. All the countries from which America draws her immigrants were represented, showing that while the church is busy in foreign fields, too little is being done for the foreigner in our own country. The central appeal was, "Give us the Christ of America in America." We highly recommend this pageant.

During the Wednesday morning session we heard from all the interests of our home missionary work.

Rev. Homer Casto told us of the home life and religious atmosphere of the Bethel Home where he conducts a Christian home for tubercular men. Mr. Casto said, "I love to carry a tray to a sick man. I love to help him with his bath, and do the things for him that would be done at home."

He also told us of the financial condition of the Home. Each patient pays $10 a week. No one is turned away for lack of sufficient funds. The superintendent receives no salary. His is a ministry of love. There is still a balance of $800 due on the mortgage. Very satisfactory results were obtained from the "talents."

Mrs. A. G. Dixon, president of the denominational Woman's Home Missionary Society, spoke particularly about our work among the foreigners of Ohio and Pittsburgh; of the much-needed home for Methodist Protestant girls in Baltimore; and of our mountain school at Pine Ridge, Kentucky. Large as her subject was, in well chosen words Mrs. Dixon brought our duties at home so forcibly before us that we felt we must go back to our churches and urge greater efforts.

Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk gave a very splendid account of his first five months as superintendent of the Children's Home at High Point. This institution has some needs, and Mr. Lowdermilk has great plans for enlarging activities at the Home as a means of education along industrial and useful lines.

We always like to hear from Mr. J. Norman Wills. On Tuesday evening he gave us his impressions of the recent missionary conference at Washington, D. C. Mr. Wills appealed especially for larger development along missionary and educational lines throughout the Methodist Protestant Church.

The meeting Wednesday afternoon was a joint session presided over by the district chairmen. All matters of equal importance to both the home and foreign societies were taken up at this meeting. Reports were heard from the secretary of literature, the Record agent, and the following committees: Courtesies and Credentials, Resolutions, and Education. The joint meeting accepted the invitation to meet in the Community Church, Thomasville.

On Wednesday evening a very interesting address was given by Rev. G. R. Heath, Winston-Salem, a missionary of the Moravian church, who spoke on "Mission Work Among the Indians of Central America."

Thursday was given over to the work of the Foreign Missionary Branch meeting. The address of the president, Mrs. George R. Brown, was especially interesting and instructive. This was followed by the reports of officers and committees. The report of the corresponding secretary showed a marked increase in membership and finances. The treasurer reported the budget of $6,000 raised in full. The report of the secretary of Young People's Work showed that greater interest is being aroused among the young people of the conference.

The committee on budget and finance asked for an increase of $250 in the budget for the coming year.

One of the most interesting features of the meeting was the study of pioneer missionaries, which were given each day in connection with the devotional exercises.

Hats off to State Street, Lexington, the first over the top on the G. C. B. I am sure they feel good about it and so do I. One of the very youngest charges, they are starting out right. God will have the use of their money for almost six months of this year and the kingdom will benefit by it. Wouldn't it be a thing to rejoice in if we all did as well as this by the kingdom and our Lord!

Graham and Charlotte both enter the list in the G. C. B. this week. We welcome these two new names on this budget and wish very much to see others do likewise. Don't "eat your cake alone" while others whom you should help provide for are in great need.

On the A. C. B. look who has taken second place! A good jump, Mt. Pleasant!

"When the roll is called" there are still seventeen that do not respond on either budget. Fifty-one do not respond on the G. C. B., and twenty silent yet on the A. C. B. This is your task, men! This is your task, churches and charges! It is your response to the kingdom needs beyond your own needs. God grant that He may treat us better than we are treating Him.

Yours for a full roll, A. G. Dixon.

HOW ABOUT THE ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN?

In the Biblical Recorder of last week, Dr. Maddy, the secretary of the Board of Missions for North Carolina Baptists, has an appeal for $200,000 from 347,000 Baptists to be paid in twenty days. The church is behind this amount on their annual budget for the year.

Now this is fifty-seven cents per member in twenty days. Can the Baptists do it? He says they can. I hope that they may. It would be almost a tragedy for them to fail.

But it 347,000 Baptists can raise $200,000 in twenty days, how about 26,000 Methodist Protestant raising $15,000 in the same time? If I am not mistaken this is exactly the same amount per member that our Baptist brethren are raising. If the Baptist can and will do this, will we Methodist Protestants do the same? Can we do as well as they? Are we as able per capita? Are we as willing to do this for the college as they are to do it for their colleges and missions? Is it a question of ability, or training in giving? Or is it purely a matter of being unwilling or willing to do it?

I believe that our people, rank and file, are as able to do this thing as the Baptists are. I believe they could do it without hurting themselves or hurting any other interest in our church. We may not have had as much training in giving as these Baptist people, for they are well known for their gifts, but I do believe that our people are as capable of learning how to do big things as any people in the State. And I somehow have a feeling that they will do it.

But as yet less than $4,000 of the amount has been subscribed and of this amount less than $2,000 has been paid and this in face of the fact that a majority of our churches have been visited and the cause earnestly presented by some one well acquainted with it. Is it possible that our people, after giving of their means to erect beautiful college buildings, will now fail to give the cause the needed support and allow the institution to fail to do the very thing these buildings were erected to do?

We are facing a crisis in this enterprise; we must have the support of the entire church or our cherished hope in a college will wane and we will fail to get the support of our own young people.

We have made an excellent start; we are expecting to become fully accredited when we graduate our first class in 1927. We can do this with the support of our church and no one will be hurt, but without this support it will be impossible for us to meet the requirements. And worse still, it will be impossible for us to offer assistance to worthy students who are unable to pay all their way in college.

We are depending on you; shall we succeed or must we fail? If we succeed, it will be your success, and if we fail, the failure will be yours.

How about it, friends and fellow church members? Shall we do it or shall we wait for others to do it?

Orange Circuit Did It.

Did what? They subscribed their quota under the most difficult circumstances of any charge in the conference that has even attempted such a task. After some of our workers visited the churches on this charge and after there was but little to show for their efforts, the pastor, Rev. B. M. Williams, got in his "tin Lizzy" and finished the job. Now was it easy? Ask Ben. But hard or easy, when Ben Williams sets his head on doing a thing it is done. He put Buncombe circuit over in the campaign for buildings under circumstances possibly more difficult than those existing on Orange.

But knowing Orange and knowing Ben, I never had any doubt about Orange circuit's subscribing their full quota for the endowment campaign. I am proud of this people, glad that I once had the pleasure of serving them as a pastor, and I say all honor to Rev. B. M. Williams, for it was he that took the college to the people in their homes. And I have a conviction that wherever this is done the needed amount will be obtained. How about it, pastors? Have the people yet heard about the endowment campaign through you?

Correction.

There was an error in listing the amounts subscribed by Orange. G. H. Crutchfield listed 50 cents when it should have been $5, and Orange was credited with securing five shares when it should have read seven.

We thank Brother Williams and his loyal people for this heartening support which they gave in this campaign. May others follow their example.

Additional Pledges Since Last Report.

Hurrah for Orange Chapel. If there were a thousand loyal souls in our conference as interested in our college as Sister Crawford, there would be no need of a field secretary's hat at all. The thing would run itself.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

A recent letter received from Rev. J. C. Berrien, D. D., a former secretary of the Board of Education, brought encouragement and good cheer. Dr. Berrien is still suffering from a degree of ill health but his interest in the work of the board and his love for his church are greater if possible than ever.

Mr. J. W. Knott, for many years president of the Board of Education, occasionally drops into the office to inquire how the work is progressing. Mr. Knott gave himself without stint to these interests and is always happy to learn of any good news of evidences of progress.

The effort to raise $2675 for the Student Loan Fund is meeting with success. Only $416.30 is now required to take care of the eighteen people to whom we are obliged for this school year. A recent visit to the Cincinnati churches together with some return payments gave the cause a substantial lift.

Two items of news were a real inspiration. One brother made an annuity gift of $500 to the board for the Student Loan Fund, while another informed the secretary that he is making provision in his will for the work. In the light of present rates the board's annuities are generous while those who set aside something in their will are also helping make our work more effective and permanent.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of Kansas City University which was held in the middle of March it was voted to borrow $50,000 to liquidate outstanding obligations, to spend several thousand dollars in repairs and improvements on the grounds and buildings, and to furnish funds for the initial steps for a campaign for $500,000. This campaign is to be carried on simultaneously in the supporting churches and in the Kansas cities. This is not an effort so much to save the life of the school and to place it on a more solid financial foundation as to meet the requirements of the standardizing agencies to take better advantage of its educational opportunity. Chancellor May, after more than two years of most earnest and faithful service, felt he must resign. The trustees adopted very complimentary resolutions commending Dr. and Mrs. May for their untiring efforts in behalf of the University and urgently requested him to become the head of the department of religious education.

The Board of Education was given by the executive committee of the University, the privilege of making a nomination for a successor. After consulting with several of our denominational leaders the secretary notified the committee we had no nominations to make and they were free to make what selection they deemed best.

The secretary spent two weeks in Alabama, in the interests of the denominational program. A series of group meetings had been arranged by Rev. J. S. Eddins, secretary of the conference, who accompanied us on our journeys. The meetings were very well attended and the interest in the General Conference budget is gratifying. The Alabama people are very loyal to their church and are glad to know the work it is trying to do. We believe they will support the program more and more generously.

Western Maryland's campaign for $375,000 is well under way. One of the most interesting features of the recent session of the Maryland Conference was a banquet given by the college to the ministers and delegates. Brief addresses were given by church and conference officials but the main message was delivered by Professor William J. Thompson of Drew Theological Seminary and the son of a former minister of the Maryland Conference. Although the gigantic nature of the task is well understood there is quite general confidence that it will be a great success.

The secretary, together with Rev. J. C. Williams, D.D., president of the Ohio Conference, were planning to spend two or more weeks in the Southwest in the interests of Westminster College but word has been received that the board of regents did not think such an effort was advisable at the present time. Westminster College is having one of the best years in its history, but like all our schools, it is greatly in need of more funds. President Biggs and his loyal corps of helpers are putting forth every effort to build up this enterprise, but they must have a more generous support on the part of the denomination or our cause in that territory will be lost.

To the end of March the receipts from Rally Day totaled $12,974.65. To this should be added $454.60 received since the close of our fiscal year, April 30, belated returns from Educational Day. That makes a total of $13,429.25, which is nearly $400 in excess of the returns for last year and the report for April is not yet available. It is an encouraging evidence of the loyalty of our church to its educational responsibilities and purposes. Although the change in days has wrought injury we believe this can be overcome entirely this year and the future be made more fruitful still. Maryland has forged ahead of Ohio with a total contributed of $3,642.89, while Ohio has sent in $3,584.40.

Frank W. Stephenson,
Secretary, Board of Education.

STARTING EARLY.

By the time this is read in the church papers, the Children's Day Service samples will have been mailed to our Sunday school superintendents and pastors throughout the denomination whose names and addresses we have.

The haste in mailing so soon after the Sunday schools have held the Easter service in the interest of the Board of Home Missions is for the purpose of getting the benefit of the old postal rates, as the new and higher rates are to go into force on April 15, and we must mail on the 13th and 14th.

Easter this year is somewhat later than usual, but we have been most anxious for our Sunday schools to have all possible opportunity to center their thought and efforts on the excellent service which the Board of Home Missions prepared at great cost and labor, and in securing for the Board the largest possible offering this year to enable it to care better for the great interests entrusted to its hands.

The Children's Day service is generally held in the month of June, but the schools have been governed by local conditions and requirements, and have held their service at their most suitable time, hence some hold the service as early as in May, and some in the late summer.

It is earnestly hoped that the sending of the samples at this time will result in having the order cards, which are included therein, filled out and mailed promptly, in order that the Sunday schools may have ample time to prepare the best service possible.

The Children's Day service for 1925 stands in a class all by itself, for its beautiful front cover is a work of real art, and is unrivaled and is sure to receive praise on every hand.

The music is among the best composed by our own distinguished musician and composer, Rev. W. B. Judeford of the Maryland Conference, and the recitations, exercises and the pageant are mainly the productions of our regular contributors among whom is the gifted poetess, Miss Jessalie L. Jones, whose grandfather was a devoted member of our church.

The pictures show some of the workers buildings, etc., of the three countries where the Union Board carries on work.

The information, statistics, etc., of the work give value to the service and altogether make it the very best Children's Day Service which Methodist Protestant Sunday schools can obtain, and ought to be used by all of them as a part of the missionary education they are intended to impart.

Then we are this year celebrating the 40th anniversary of the introduction of the Children's Day service into our Sunday schools and calling upon our schools to join in honoring the memory of the late Rev. F. T. Tagg, D.D., who issued the first service in 1885.

Then too the General Conference has authorized the celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the organization of the Methodist Protestant Church which comes due in 1928.

One feature of the plan is that the churches are called upon to lay on the altar each year the entire budget as an expression of our gratitude for the goodly heritage bestowed on us through the sacrifices and toils of our church founders, and we call upon our Sunday schools to do their full part in bringing that to pass.

Indeed it ought to be possible for the Sunday schools to raise in their offering on Children's Day 25 per cent, or one quarter of their local church's budget, and for this we earnestly plead.

Fred C. Klein.

AUTHORIZED AND IMPORTANT.

The Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration authorized the publication in the church papers of the list of subscriptions made at the General Conference in Tiffin, O., for the Japan church and the China work, and the payments received thereon.

An individual letter was recently sent by me to each subscriber which stressed the urgent need of the money, since the mission could not start to build the church, and is in an unenviable position by failure to keep our part of the agreement after our Japanese students and friends gave their Yen 50,000, or U. S. $25,000, for large additions to our college property in Nagoya.

This is a further appeal for payment of subscriptions at the earliest possible date. Our mission's reputation and standing, and the work for that great student body of over 1100 enrolled, and the community suffer by delay in building caused by lack of funds.

Additional gifts will be gratefully received. The following list is from Treasurer H. C. Staley, and is up to April 8, 1925.

Fred. C. Klein, Executive Secretary.

TOO MUCH ATHLETICS?

Do American colleges and universities pay too much attention to athletics? That is a question on which noted educators disagree. Dr. Henry S. Pritchett, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, thinks that they do. He says: "Today the outside activities of the college overshadow and run counter to the intellectual life. Athletics, in large measure professional in its methods and organization, fills a larger place in the eyes of students and even of the public than any other one interest. No scholar in the undergraduate life of one of our university-colleges would expect to receive the recognition or appreciation given to a successful football player. A dozen new activities call for the time and energy of the students. The college is no longer distinctively an intellectual agency. The paid coach, the professional organization of college athletics, the demoralization of students by participation in the use of extravagant sums of money, constitute a reproach to American colleges and to those who govern them."

Bear Ribbs is the name given to President Coolidge by the Hunkapapa tribe of Indians in North Dakota. The Hunkapapas have adopted the president as a member of their tribe. Bear Ribbs was the name of one of the most beloved chiefs of that tribe. He is remembered by the Hunkapapas as a "far-seeing, progressive man. He tried to teach us the white man's way." Thus, the Indians pay the President the highest honor in giving him their former chief's name.

AN ALABAMA ITINERARY.

Responding to an invitation from the Budget Council of the Alabama Conference, the councilor for the Fourth Area spent two weeks there visiting the churches and speaking to a series of group meetings. The schedule had been carefully arranged by Rev. J. S. Eddins, pastor of the Birmingham church and secretary of the conference and of the council. All the pastors gave us the finest co-operation and there were no failures and no antagonism to the plan. Pastors and people gave us the most cordial welcome and declared the visit and messages were just the things needed. Rev. Mr. Eddins accompanied the councilor and proved a delightful companion as well as an effective speaker. His account of the plans being used in the Birmingham church to raise 100 per cent of the General Conference budget stimulated enthusiasm and led to the adoption of definite plans with a view of the same end.

Emphasis was placed upon observing the special days, Easter, Children's Day and Rally Day, and the churches were urged to put forth their best possible efforts for Easter. It was suggested that they do the same for the other days and to try to treat all alike. Four or five charges declared their intention to make the most earnest effort ever made to raise their full General Conference quota. In some places pledges were made, in others cash offerings were taken, and some of the pastors appointed a committee to solicit funds for the Easter offering. Even where no Easter program will be given an offering will be taken for the Board of Home Missions.

By reason of the activities of the Conference Budget Council the receipts are far ahead of last year. Each member of the council is giving freely of his time, although the bulk of the work necessarily falls upon Secretary Eddins. In spite of the fact that he is a very busy pastor, he finds time to give this important task considerable time and thought.

The itinerary began with a meeting of the Budget Council at Montgomery and the first group meeting in the local church. After visiting nearly twenty charges and touching over thirty churches, the series closed in the Birmingham church with a congregation that filled the auditorium.

Great credit is due Rev. J. S. Eddins for the thorough manner in which the program was worked out and the arrangements made. And there is a fine spirit among the Alabama pastors while their people are manifesting a growing interest in the work of their denomination. We are confident the end of the year will reveal a substantial increase in the contributions this conference is making to the General Conference program.

The Ford Motor Company made an average profit of $47 on every automobile, truck and tractor made in 1924. The total number sold was 2,100,000. Therefore the total profit for the year was close to one hundred million. The Ford Company may well be called the industrial wonder of the world. It is owned by only two men—Henry Ford and his son Edsel. The company has total assets of more than 644 million and more than 300 million cash on hand. Its surplus exceeds 542 million, a hundred million more than the surplus for 1923.

Illinois was the banner road-building State in 1924. It completed 1,190 miles of concrete road, eighteen feet wide. That is a world's record for hard-road building. Pennsylvania ranked second, with 550 miles, and Michigan third, with 530 miles. New York completed 500 miles, Indiana 383 miles, Wisconsin 286 miles, Ohio 213 miles, North Carolina 205 miles. The following States each built more than 100 miles of concrete road: California, Missouri, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Virginia and Iowa.

The number of Germans who lost their lives in, or as the result of, the World War, is 2,055,000. That is announced by the Bureau of Statistics of the German government. The majority were killed outright, the others died of wounds or exposure. Nearly half were from twenty-one to twenty-two years of age; three fourths were under thirty.

Mrs. H. S. B. Thompson from Spring Church circuit, Pleasant Hill, N. C., is in the Roanoke Rapids Hospital; was operated on March 29. Her many friends will be glad to know that she is getting on nicely. J. B. O.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—APRIL 19.Life in the Early Church.

Lesson Text: Acts 4:32-5:5.

Golden Text: Acts 4:32.

The Central Truth: The power of the resurrection of Jesus raises the yielded believer out of selfishness and sin into the inclination and ability to love God with all his heart and his neighbor as himself.

Scriptural Points.

1. By daily outpourings of the Holy Spirit in the ingathering of souls the three thousand new members on the day of Pentecost had now grown to five thousand.

2. This multitude was cemented by an abounding and overflowing love for each other. It was a most delightful "unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

3. "They had all things common." This was not the result of any set rule of the Jerusalem church. It was the spontaneous outburst of love and devotion to each other. They trusted a common Savior, and shared a common experience, and were led to regard their possessions as common property.

The resurrection of Jesus became the capstone in the arch of redemption. Without it all other doctrines of grace would be meaningless and ineffective.

5. Great power characterized the preaching of this fundamental doctrine. The power that raised Jesus from the dead became the power that lifted believers out of the death of sin into the life of righteousness. And the Holy Spirit dispensed this power in the new birth and the more abundant life. Every member shared the "great grace" of life, love, and power.

6. The members who had any property voluntarily sold it and turned the proceeds into a common treasury for distribution among the poor members of the church. Plenty among the few supplied the physical needs among the many.

7. The names of two donors are given in this lesson by way of contrast. And the contrast was threefold. There was a contrast of motive. Jesus, surnamed Barnabas, sold his possession and laid the proceeds at the apostles' feet from the motive of disinterested love for Christ and the brethren; Ananias sold his and claimed to give it all from a most selfish motive—the self-glory of being a great benefactor. There was a contrast of sincerity. Barnabas gave all and kept nothing back; Ananias gave only a part and said that it was all. The one told and acted the truth; the other told and acted a falsehood. There was also a contrast of consequences. Barnabas became an apostle of the gospel of Jesus Christ. He was called, "The Son of Consolation." It is recorded that "he was a good man, and full of faith and of the Holy Ghost." Ananias died suddenly for his duplicity, under the curse of a sin-avenging God.

8. Ananias thought that he was deceiving a set of men and that the deception would never be found out. But his falsehood was a slap in the face of Almighty God. In his venture for popularity by the devious route of misrepresentation he lost his life and his immortal soul.

Practical Points.

1. The worst enemies of the church of Christ are not the infidels that attack its doctrines, nor the powerful ones that persecute

His followers; nor the world that seeks to compromise the faith and practice of its members, nor even the demons of hell that are arrayed against it. But its worse enemies are on the inside, the false professors and formalists in the church.

2. These quench the Holy Spirit's operations and influence in the church. They destroy the harmony, power and effectiveness of any church organization. They paralyze the joint efforts to advance the kingdom. They became stumbling-blocks in the way of sins. And they nullify the entire program of Jesus Christ.

3. No wonder Jesus denounced hypocrites in such terrific language! No wonder He uncovered their corruption so mercilessly! No wonder He exposed them as the blackest brood of Satan! No wonder He warned them so faithfully,—"Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?"

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES FOR SUNDAY, APRIL 26.Friendliness as Expressed through Educational Missions.*Daily Readings.

Mon. High Thinking. Dan. 1:8-21.

Thurs. Teaching the children. Deut. 6:1-9.

Fri. A great teacher. Acts 28:17-31.

Sat. The highest education. 1 John 1:1-3.

Sunday. Topic. Acts 18:1-11; 19:8-10.

For the Leader.

Prof. George D. Heron says, "The fundamental principle of education is the discovery and apprehension of right. The education of a man consists in the fulfillment of his life as a mission, as a divine errand in the world. True education is the bringing of a man into right relations with his fellows and with God. It is the realization of one's manhood, the development of a man in his entirety." Christian missions along educational lines are striving to do this—teach the people and develop them mentally while they teach them the living Word and how to learn of Him.

The Christian Endeavor Quarterly says, "A disciple means a learner. An earnest Christian is always eager to learn more that he may be a better disciple of the Great Teacher. One who has never become a Christian needs to become a friend of Christ, through learning more about Him and His Kingdom. Educational missions fills this need. As the native in foreign lands comes to know some of the simple things which are every-day facts to us in America, his mind opens to the great truths of the Gospel. And his life opens to the truth just as a bud opens into full flower.

Religion and education went hand in hand in the early development of our United States. They must still be intimately connected if our country is to continue to grow and prosper. Religion and education must be close partners in the foreign lands or religion will not be properly understood and assimilated. The permanent effects of missionary work are due largely to the development of the minds and hearts of the people brought about through Christian education.

Education prepares the mental and spiritual soil for the gospel seed and the fruitage comes in after years thirty, sixty and one hundred fold. We young folks here tonight have had educational advantages for which we should be very thankful indeed. The best way to show our thankfulness is to do our utmost to see that the benighted people of earth have the same privileges."

The Need of Teaching and of Teachers.

In Romans 10 Paul says, "How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they call on him in whom they have not believed?" Educational missions are gathering in the little ones and teaching them and they are going back to their homes and telling the older ones and they too are coming out to hear. Many homes are being brought to Christ first by the school children of the Christian schools. The children in all lands are the hope of the Christian workers, and in heathen lands there are being reached more effectively through the schools and the kindergartens than any other one way.

In the same connection Paul goes on to say, "How shall they hear without a preacher?" Paul is using preacher here in the sense of a teacher. And he asks a very pertinent question. Without a teacher how can one learn? The best work done on the mission fields is done through teaching because in that we, the workers, have a chance to get an audience with the unsaved and win them—first through secular education, then as they teach the Bible in all Christian schools the pupils are won for the Kingdom. As the pupils come to the schools for an education they keep coming and as they come year after year there is a great opportunity to not only teach them the truths of the Gospel but to found and ground them in the faith and in practice which in a heathen country is so necessary because all the foundation work that we have done for us naturally in our Christian homes as we are growing up is lacking in the heathen pupil, or one from a heathen home.

In our home mission schools the pupils, by being in the school and associating with the workers, become established in the truth. The schools for the colored children in the Southland have transformed whole sections and done untold good. In them the head, the heart, and the hands are cultivated and educated simultaneously; and these young colored folks are trained to depend upon themselves and the Master. Multitudes of them are living splendid lives today as a result of this Christian training, and many of them are outstanding leaders in their own race."

C. E. Q.

Our own school at Pine Ridge, Ky., is an example of what can be done by educated, consecrated Christian leaders. It would be impossible to estimate the good that school is doing and the change that is coming about because of its leadership. We might have had as good Christians there as we have and yet had they not been well educated and well equipped to teach all that an A 1 state high school requires we would not have had the pupils nor would our workers have commanded the respect that they have won from the people. Their ability has won the friendliness of the community as well as the recognition that they are the friends of the community. Far beyond the local community they are regarded as the efficient Christian leaders they are.

Right here in these mountains wonderful things have been accomplished in mission schools. Many of the outstanding leaders in church and state have come from these same Southern mountains and we are truly expecting that our school will not be lacking in these products as the results of the work of our splendid corps of teachers and other workers.

The Bible in Mission Schools

In mission day schools, contrary to the general practice in the public schools of the United States, the word of God has a generous place. It is doubtful if there is a mission school in existence where the Bible is not a definite part of the course of study. It seems sad that the heathen children, in far-away lands, have these privileges of Bible study, which are denied our own children here at home.—C. E. Q.

Darkness and Light.

There is darkness still, gross darkness, Lord,
On this fair earth of thine.
There are prisoners still in the prison-house,
Where never a light doth shine.
There are doors still bolted against thee,
There are faces still set like a wall,
And over them all the shadow of death
Hangs like a pall.

Spread the light! Spread the light!

Till earth's remotest bounds have heard
The glory of the Living Word;
Till those that see not have their sight;
Till all the fringes of the night
Are lifted, and the long closed doors
Are wide forever to the light.
Spread the light!

—John Oxenham.

Tabernacle Christian Endeavor Society.

We as a society are still alive although we have not reported for some time.

We held our regular weekly prayer meeting Sunday afternoon with a very good attendance. A. S. Jones, Jr., was leader for the afternoon.

We were pleased to have with us Miss Palmer and Miss Gold from the N. C. C. W. Miss Palmer rendered us a beautiful duet, "Face to Face," which we appreciated.

We as a society are striving to do more for the Master from this time forth than we have in the past. A Member.

A Tribute to a Beloved Co-laborer.

As we approach the season of the annual meetings of the missionary societies of the Methodist Protestant Church of North Carolina, memories of those whose wise counsel and untiring efforts along mission lines come bringing to us a new realization of their achievements. In the passing last November of Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Barrow McCulloch, of Greensboro, the missionary societies lost an efficient worker and a loyal supporter, her family a loved one, and her friends one who was ever true. Happy indeed were those who were numbered as her friends. Kind and conscientious, loyal and true was she. Burdens were never too heavy and demands upon her time and strength were willingly borne.

Following her graduation at Adrian College, Mrs. McCulloch began letting the light of her beautiful life and character shine through avenues of service. Her sweet, quiet, unassuming manner and her superior ability won for her friends wherever she accompanied her husband on his pastoral work and finally in her permanent home. Without a murmur or complaint her life ended quietly and peaceably, but her influence will go on and on, and her work so well begun will be fraught with unmeasured success. Her friends, knowing her superior ability, leaned heavily upon her in her home, her church and her State.

May those of us who feel there is an empty chair at the missionary meetings, which are in progress at Winston-Salem this week, strive to forward the work which was so close to her heart.

For many years she was editor of The Woman's Missionary Record, the official organ of the W. F. M. S. She was a woman of unusual ability and her life and talents were consecrated to the Great Giver of all good and perfect gifts. Her death brings to a close a life of beauty and usefulness. Of an unusually quiet and retiring disposition, an ideal wife and mother, thoroughly domestic in her instincts and habits, yet she took a deep interest in literary and public matters and was a wise reader, and those who were privileged to know this side of her character found her a wise and delightful companion. Those who knew her best will long treasure the memory of a sweet, lovely, gentle woman.

Few women in her sphere of life exerted so wide an influence, or can count so long a list of friends. Her Christian character and her unswerving piety, her gentle love and sympathy, her willingness to serve and help, wherever service and help were needed, made her greatly beloved. Truly her life was a benediction to all who knew her. "A Morning Thought" by Ella Wheeler Wilcox was practiced in her every-day life and will comfort and cheer those with whom she has been associated.

"A Morning Thought."

"Let me today do something that shall take
A little sadness from the world's vast store,
And may I be so favored as to make
Of joy's too scanty sum a little more.
"Let me not hurt by any selfish deed Or thoughtless word the heart of foe or friend;
Nor would I pass, unseeing, worthy need,
Or sin by silence when I should defend.

"However meager be my worldly wealth,
Let me give something that shall aid my kind,
A word of courage, or a thought of health, Dropped as I pass for troubled hearts to find.

"Let me tonight look back across the span
'Twixt dawn and dark, and to my conscience say,
Because of some good act to beast or man,
'The world is better that I lived today.'"

Runaway Mountain.

"Moving Mountain," near Meeker, Colo., has taken another little trip. The peak, which is about two thousand feet high, moved westward about one hundred yards in two days last week. Hundreds of feet of main roads in its path were destroyed. The mountain has taken several trips of this kind in the past. When an earthquake is in progress the mountain seems to rise and fall like a great ocean wave.

Philadelphia World's Fair.

President Coolidge has issued a proclamation inviting all the States of the Union and all the nations of the world to take part in the Sesquicentennial Exposition at Philadelphia. That exposition, or world's fair, is to be held in 1926. It will commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

ROBIN'S ESCAPE.

As Kate and Lionel wended their way to school one bright spring morning the very Sunshine seemed to enter their young hearts, and fill them as full of life as the merry birds that hopped and trilled on the bushes and shrubs around.

In two very different ways the birds afforded special pleasure to these two children.

Kate loved the little feathered playmates who shared with her the Heavenly Father's care. Lionel was always glad to see them, as they were such good targets for his unerring stone-throwing, of which he was extremely proud, and many were the tragedies in bird-land in account of his wanton sport.

As they ran along a fine redbreast alighted on a stump in front of them. In an instant Lionel had grasped a stone, and had taken aim.

"No—don't!" cried tender-hearted Katie. "O Lionel, don't!"

Lionel took no notice. Katie saw she must act if she would save Robin's life. Quick as thought she stepped between the boy and the bird. Lionel had not yet thrown and of course knew now that if he did he might do serious damage. But anger overcame his better feelings, and he sent the stone spinning onward. Katie stood firm, and received the blow directly on her arm. The pain brought tears to her eyes, and thus it was a woe-begone pair who faced the teacher a little later.

Of course the teacher wanted an explanation, which, when he heard it, brought down his wrath upon Lionel. I do not know which had the greater sting—the cutting reprimand from his teacher or the heavy cuts of the cane, but certain it is Lionel did not soon forget his shameful conduct and its reward.

Let us hope, too, it made him less cruel to the innocent little birds.—Selected.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS."

Mrs. Babcock's face wore a troubled frown. Her two children, Clyde and Ella, had come downstairs ready for school with such untidy appearance, dirty faces and unpolished shoes, that they had had to be sent back "for repairs."

"If only Mother could teach you children not to come down looking so unpresentable," she said, as she inspected them a second time, and kissed them good-by. "I shall have to think up some method of doing it, surely."

"We don't mean to be so thoughtless, mother dear," said Ella, "we just forget."

"We shall have to try stopping that 'forgetter,' then," replied their mother, as the children scampered off to school.

After the morning's work had been completed, their mother and their sister, Ruth, held a consultation.

Finally Ruth exclaimed: "Oh, mother, I have it! Let's make rules and regulations for them, which must be obeyed, under penalty of some sort of punishment."

"That might work," commented her mother, thoughtfully. "but we would have to make it interesting for the kiddies, else it would prove too irksome and they would not enter into it in the right spirit."

That evening there was a consultation held around the library table.

"Children," said their mother, "your sister and I have been discussing the matter of your untidy appearance this morning. We believe we have a sort of game which we can all play at and which will doubtless break you of your bad habit. We thought we would all make the plans this evening."

Clyde and Ella were interested. "All right, mother," said Clyde, "I'll be glad if I can remember to do these things. We don't mean to leave our work for you to do, but it seems we can't get up in time to do it, or we always forget, or something."

All entered into the "game" with considerable zest, and before long the following "Rules and Regulations" had been written out on two large sheets of white paper—one to be hung in each child's room:

1. Get up at first bell.
2. Turn back covers to air.
3. Polish shoes.
4. Wash and brush teeth.
5. Dress hair and manicure nails.
6. Dress.
7. Hang up night clothes.
8. Open bedroom windows.
9. Be down to breakfast as second bell sounds.

10. After breakfast, go immediately to rooms and put away all clothing on proper hooks or in proper drawer. Close all drawers and closet doors. Put top of dresser to rights. tidy up room. Make beds.

11. Before leaving for school, make inspection of lower rooms, to see if any of your belongings are lying about; if so, put them in their proper places.

12. If you want anything, do not shout to mother. Go to her and ask for it, instead of expecting her to come to you.

13. Always be kind, courteous, and respectful, as well as obedient to mother and father.

"Demerits" were provided for, as penalties. They were to be "worked off" in various ways usually by assignment to some task the offender particularly disliked.

Inspections were to be made ten minutes before time to start for school. If anything was still to be done, it must be done in that ten minutes. If it took longer, they had to stay just the same and do it, and that meant running all the way to school or being late!

The first few mornings, it was difficult for Clyde and Ella to carry out the schedule on time, but they entered into the "game" heartily, and did their best. In a few days things began to move smoothly, and their mother was much pleased with the results. She said it took a load off her, because it lessened her work considerably.

When rules were violated, "punishment" was given, usually in the form of some duty in the kitchen. If there was anything in the world Clyde disliked to do it was to wash dishes, and that was usually his "punishment." Ella "just hated" to pare potatoes, so that proved a punishment severe enough for most of her "demerits." It wasn't long, however, before the children became so orderly in their habits that not much "punishment" had to be given.

Clyde and Ella did not become "models" right away, of course, but the plan worked wonders in their lives, and they are thankful for it, because, they say, it has taught them habits of tidiness and neatness which have been very valuable all through their lives.

This plan can be worked in breaking many other habits, and if any of you children wish to try it, you will no doubt find it interesting. I am sure your parents would not have any objections either.—Sunday School Times.

WHEN THE BOOK TALKED.

By Chester E. Shuler.

"You ought to go with me to church this evening, Helen," said Laura to her chum as they walked homeward together from school one beautiful autumn afternoon. "Our pastor is holding a series of special evangelistic services now, and his sermons, especially for the young people, are so helpful. I wish you could hear some of them."

Helen laughed carelessly. "Don't turn preacher, Laura," she said. "I know I'm a giddy girl—that's what most folks seem to think anyway—and fond of a good time, and—"

A pause followed. "But, Helen—" Laura hesitated a bit. "But, Helen, dear, you know what the Bible says about our salvation—it's something we must look after now. I hope you understand me."

"Yes, I think I do, Laura. But I'll take my chances for a while yet. However, I'll say I appreciate your motive in speaking to me—you're a true friend, and I don't mind going with you to church."

"Very well; we will go at 7:30. Will you come over to my house as soon as you've had your supper?"

And so it was arranged. Shortly after seven that evening Helen rang the bell at Laura's home. Laura was in her room, and Helen was asked to go up.

After a bit, Laura said, "Excuse me, Helen, but I want to help mother with the supper dishes. You will find my books in the case there, and here are my kodak albums. I hope you won't be lonely. I'll not be gone long."

"Not at all, Laura. I am sure I can amuse myself."

After Laura had gone to the kitchen, Helen arose and walked leisurely about the pleasant room—studied the pictures on the walls and the photograph of Laura's mother and her sister that stood on the dresser. Just then her eye rested upon a little black Bible lying on the table near by.

She picked it up idly. It appeared much used. Someway it seemed fitting that the little Bible should be Laura's.

The little Book fell open at a spot where the pages were much thumbed. It was marked there: John 3:16, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Helen turned the pages and read the next marked passages upon which her eyes fell—the first verse of the eighth chapter of Romans. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

It was strangely fascinating to the girl who had never cared before to read the Bible. She turned over other pages and soon came upon another marked verse, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

Helen shut the book impatiently. What wa coming over her, anyway, that she should actually want to read the Bible? She was about to lay it back upon the table, when something impelled her to open it again. It opened at another well-thumbed passage, Ecclesiastes 12:1, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth" was underscored.

Helen closed the Book again, but this time very gently, and replaced it on the table. What a good girl Laura was! What a fine, true friend! How reliable, and trustworthy, and clean-minded! Yes, she was different from the other girls she knew. Was it, after all, because in Laura's life there was something—something which came from her God—which she herself did not possess? Helen wondered if that little black-covered Bible, with its marked passages, had anything to do with it. Was that why she was always to be depended upon? Was it the reason she scorned a disloyal thought as well as a dishonorable action?

"And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

"There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus."

It was very quiet in the little room; no sound was to be heard save the delicate "tick-tick" of the tiny clock on the mantel.

Helen looked at the picture of Laura's mother, with her sweet face and tranquil eyes. "It's easy to see Laura has a good mother," she mused. And then she sighed. For Helen could not remember her own mother. She had died when Helen was but three.

Again she opened the little Book.

It opened readily at Psalm 90:1, "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations."

Again the girl sighed.

How the marked passages accused her of wasted hours and neglected opportunities—of a life thus far spent absolutely with no thought of or care for that Heavenly Father who gave his only Son to a lost world!

She repeated softly—for the words remained fresh in her memory still: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

A quick step on the stairs sounded, and Helen hastily replaced the Book on the table. Laura bounded merrily into the room, a bit of song on her lips, her pretty face wreathed in smiles.

"Ready, Helen? Sorry to keep you waiting so long—there were more dishes than usual this evening."

"Yes, I'm ready—for the first time in my life," replied Helen with a new and reverent gravity. Laura noted the seriousness of her chum all the way to church, but said nothing concerning it. She sent up a silent prayer to her Savior that Helen's heart might be touched.

All through the sermon, which happened to be especially applicable to young lives which were not being lived for God, Helen listened with rapt attention, drinking in with a strange eagerness the preacher's message.

One of the ushers came to Laura's side and whispered something into her ear. She nodded, then turned to Helen and whispered:

"The minister has requested that I sing a solo for the invitation number at the close of the sermon. You won't mind if I leave you for a bit?"

"No, Laura. Go."

Laura uttered a silent prayer for the Spirit's guidance and stepped before the audience. Then, in a clear, rich voice, vibrant with the deep emotion caused by the Spirit's presence in her heart, she sang:

"I have a Savior, he's pleading in glory,
A dear, loving Savior, though earth-friends be few;
And now he is watching in tenderness o'er me,
And oh, that my Savior were your Savior, too!"

Scarcely had she begun the second verse when there was a slight commotion in the audience, and a girlish figure arose and came forward.

It was Helen.

Many in the crowd were surprised, but not so Laura. She only knew it was the answer to her fervent prayer, and was glad that her Savior had used her to win her chum.

And when, a week later, Helen told Laura of the part the little black-covered Bible, with its marked passages, had played in helping her make the great decision of her life, Laura realized even more fully still the goodness of the Heavenly Father whom she loved so well.

"That little Book seemed fairly to 'talk' to me, Laura," said Helen. "And it was truly the 'Sword of the Spirit.'"—Selected.

DADDY'S COMIN' HAME.

Noo, Jessie, lay your knittin' doon an' dress your hair sae fine,
An, Rabbie, polish up your shoon an' mak'

Thank God, your feyther went an' noo thank God he's comin' hame!

The music o' his merry voice, the magic o' his smile,
That used tae mak' us a' rejoice we've missed a dark lang while;
But we yince mair the bonnie bliss o' voce and smile shall claim,
Oh! ne'er was day sae great as this, for Dad-dy's comin' hame!

But, bairns, we maun' no greet or grieve if he is changed a wee,
His coat may hae an empty sleeve, his broo'
may bandaged be;
His step may lack its spring o' yore, but aye his heart's the same,
An' a' his wounds for us he bore, for Scotland, God, an' hame!

"YE DO IT UNTO ME."

Christ does not any more stand in need of Mary's ointment, or Martha's hospitality, or the Samaritan's drink of water. He is beyond the reach of these things, and will never need them more; but He has left many of His brothers and sisters behind in this world, some diseased, some lame, some like Lazarus, all covered with sores; and He says what you do to them you do to me. Do you live plainly, in order to have more to give away? Do you put away vain and gaudy clothes, that you may be able to clothe the naked?—McCheyne.

A BUNCH OF KEYS.

What key is the hardest to turn? A donkey.
What key is the most amusing? A monkey.
What keys are the brightest? Yankees.
What keys do we like to eat best? Turkeys.
What keys are used in prisons? Turn-keys.
What key should you never touch? Whiskey.—Selected.

PRESSING TOWARD THE GOAL.

"No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God" (Luke 9:62).

A divided heart is not a good asset in the business of life. Lot's wife, giving a longing look toward Sodom, never took another step in the way of safety. One cannot go forward while looking back. We must forget the things that are behind and forget self while pressing towards the goal of victory. One only truly lives when he consecrates all to win a world for God. We should do with our might what our hands find to do, in His name and by His strength. Looking backward is turning away from your leader, which means spiritual decline. The next step after looking back is going back—going back into the Egyptian bondage and the indulgence of past evil habits. No one can plough a straight furrow when his attention is attracted with other things.

We are sent forth into this world to plough and cultivate for a great harvest. Our motto should be, "This one thing I do; I press towards the mark for the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus." Gazing back at past failures and pitfalls is discouraging to the soul. Our only hope is in looking unto Jesus, beholding the incoming of His everlasting kingdom, until He says: "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Edwin W. Caswell, in The Bible Champion.

LET'S BE DIFFERENT.

Let's be different! Pick out the good points in the church and talk about them whenever you get a chance; and like Napoleon, if you do not see an opportunity, make one. The best advertising for a firm in business is the talk of its satisfied customers. Talk your church up! When you are inclined to find fault, just be different. Change your tactics, face about. It is perfectly all right to point out errors, to offer suggestions, to make corrections, to criticize constructively, but all of this is very different from fault-finding. Criticize to help, not to hinder!—Selected.

—Little Miss Louise Pierce, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. T. E. Pierce, had the misfortune to break her leg several days ago, and is confined to bed in the Guilford General Hospital, High Point, under the care of Dr. S. S. Coe. It is reported that she is doing as well as could be expected.

The gods love those of ordered soul.—Sophocles.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Fairview, Anderson Charge.—We have not made a report to the paper in some time but it is not that we have not been working. There have been so many things to take up our time, for instance being without a regular pastor for a while. At the beginning of the year, the Conference sent Rev. and Mrs. E. G. Lowdermilk to us again. They were called to the Children's Home in High Point, and although we loved them dearly we were willing to give them up since we realized it was their duty to answer the call. Then Rev. Mr. Pike came to us but his health failed so he asked to be released from the work. In March Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Koons and their three precious children came into our midst. They are diligent Christian workers and we learned to love them at first sight. The church is making great progress with such an earnest, wide-awake leader.

The children of the Sunday school rendered an interesting and impressive Easter program on Easter Sunday before a large congregation. More than sixty little folks took part and each did his part well. A collection of $5 was taken for home missions.

Rev. Mr. Koons has been preaching a series of good sermons on "Life's Railway" or "From the Cradle to the Grave."

April 13.

Kernersville Charge.—The second quarterly conference for this charge will meet at Sandy Ridge on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in April. We will have with us at that time Dr. Dixon, and other visitors. Services will begin at 10 o'clock with an address by some one of the visiting brethren. Lunch will be served, after which the business of the quarterly conference will be transacted. All of the officials please take notice and be present if possible. Since spring opened up our attendance at all of the services has increased. There is evidence of progress along all lines. The people show a willingness to co-operate with the pastor, and we are expecting great things on this charge for the remainder of the year. Come on, friends, and help make this the best year in the history of your church up to the present. Your church needs you, but you need your church more.

Since our last report we have received several tokens of kindness which we appreciate very much.

Edw. Swits.

Grace Church.—The Junior Christian Endeavor society recently gave a Japanese play in the church but. The Endeavorers took a great deal of interest in the play, which made it possible for the play to be a success. It was a very suitable play for children to give and appealed to them very much as it gave the customs and ideas of the Japanese people and too the idea of thoughtfulness and kindness was brought out in it. The attendance was splendid, we thought, and we made $11.25 on it.

We had very nice Easter services Sunday. During the Sunday school hour we had a short Easter program by the children which was composed of songs and recitations.

The church service was quite impressive, as there were sixteen people who joined the church at this time. Fourteen of the sixteen were children, the other two moving their membership here from a church out of town. Maude Jones.

Democrat Church.—We are having a good Sunday school and we have prayer meeting every Sunday at 3:00 P. M. and are getting along fine. Everybody seems to be interested in it.

We held our second quarterly meeting at Terry's Fork Saturday before the first Sunday in April. Brother Bates preached for us at 11 A. M. He preached a good sermon. We all enjoyed it. Mrs. Lelia Wyatt, Reporter.

Littleton Circuit.—The First District Rally met with us at Hawkins Chapel the 28th and 29th of March. It was quite a treat for our people, especially Hawkins Chapel church and community. The papers read and the addresses made were both instructive and enjoyable to all who heard them. Our chairman, Rev. R. C. Stubbins, added greatly to the program by his spicy talks thrown in all along.

The rally was well attended and the interest was good from the beginning to the end. We had good music which helped very much in the program. We appreciate our friends from our neighboring circuits' coming to spend this time with us. We hope that our people got enough inspiration that will mean more interest and progress in our church. We say to our friends, Come again.

J. B. O'Brian.

Mocksville Charge.—It has been some time since you have heard from us through the columns of the Herald, but it has not been because we have not had anything to report. There are many things that we feel are encouraging on this field. The work is in the best financial condition that it has been since we came to the work. We have paid about $225 on the parsonage debt, and are keeping up with the pastor's salary and more has been paid on claims than has ever been paid this early in the year.

Sunday Schools.

The Sunday schools are having record-breaking attendance. Union Chapel is in the lead with a record attendance of 132, with an average of 94 for the month of March. Bethel comes next with an average of about 75 for the month of March. Bethel leads in the offering. Dulins and Elbaville have good live Sunday schools but I am not prepared to give exact figures as to their average attendance.

Health Conditions.

There has been quite a lot of sickness among our members for some time. Mrs. L. C. Crouse of Elbaville was carried to a hospital in Winston-Salem Sunday morning. Miss Minnie Sain and mother of Bethel are confined to their beds with "flu." Brother J. A. Reynolds, Mrs. W. F. Martin, and Hughie Sisk (our son) have all recently returned from Long's Sanitarium at Statesville where they underwent operations.

Second Quarterly Meeting.

The second quarterly meeting was held at Elbaville Saturday, February 28, and named Brother M. F. Nichols of Union Chapel and Brother C. S. Summers of Bethel as nominees for delegate to the one hundredth annual conference to be held at High Point.

Fourteenth District Rally.

The Fourteenth District Rally was held at Dulins church March 28 and 29 with a large representation. Most of the speakers were of the local field. Mr. C. H. Smith of Winston-Salem presented the subject, "Our High Point College and Its Future" very efficiently. We feel sure that those who heard from him have a deeper appreciation of our church.

J. T. Sisk, Pastor.

Kistlers Church, Cleveland Circuit.—We are still trying to do something for the Master, notwithstanding our church has been made sad by the death of two of our oldest and most beloved members. In the going of Brother and Sister Kistler, Kistlers church has lost two of its most faithful members. But our loss is their gain.

It was my privilege to attend the district conference. We had a good conference, every charge represented but one. Everybody seemed to be delighted with the good things said. It was a treat to be there and to enjoy the hospitality of those good people. May God bless Brother Phillips in his work there and his people.

Brother Morris filled his appointment at our place April 5 and preached us a good sermon as usual. His subject was, "A Risen Christ." We had a good service. We are trying to do things the best we can. Pray for us that this may be the greatest year that Cleveland circuit has ever witnessed.

Praying the blessings of God upon the editor and the many readers of the Herald, I remain your friend till death. Reporter.

Charlotte, Richland Circuit.—We are not heard from very often but are moving steadily along. We are having a splendid Sunday school. The interest and attendance kept up fine during the winter, and as spring came we increased in number. We had the largest attendance today we have had in months, and it encourages the faithful ones to see people coming and taking an interest.

At 11 o'clock today Rev. C. H. Hill delivered a splendid sermon to a large and attentive congregation. Every one enjoyed his discourse.

April 4 the second quarterly conference was held at New Union. The attendance was fairly good. All the churches were represented and the work of the conference was completed in harmony.

The ladies of the circuit are invited to meet at the parsonage on Saturday, April 18, to discuss plans of getting up a quilt to raise money for this charge.

Charlotte is glad to report that her part of the debt on the parsonage is paid in full. The money was raised in a very unique way. One of the ladies in the community became very much interested and volunteered to give a pig to help pay off the debt. Tickets were issued and sold at 50 cents each, the money going to the debt on the parsonage. The one getting the lucky number on the ticket got the pig free; in this way the pig brought $106.50. [This way of raising money is not to be recommended. It is the lottery scheme.—Editor.]

Mr. and Mrs. Worth Bulla are the fond parents of a new son, Everette Worth. Mr. and Mrs. T. T. Redding have a little daughter in their home.

Both of the fathers are the faithful stewards of the church.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

April 5.

Welch Memorial Church is quietly moving along, making some progress. The Sunday school has been growing so rapidly, we had to provide more rooms; so we just utilized the basement, by partitions making three rooms instead of one, the Baraca Class going back upstairs to their former room and leaving the basement rooms for the young folks. The young people of the Sunday school rendered a very beautiful Easter program Sunday evening.

Several weeks ago we asked the church to pledge their quota for College endowment, who was $150. They very readily did so, and much of it has been paid in. We expect to pay all of it in a few more weeks.

The first Sunday in this month, the pastor being away assisting Rev. G. L. Curry at Union Ridge in a special meeting, Rev. E. Lowdermilk filled the pulpit at the 11 o'clock service, and at the evening service Rev. F. W. Easter filled the pulpit. The congregations were well pleased with the messages brought to them by these brethren. We aim to begin our meeting some time in the near future, just as soon as it will be convenient for our Brother, Rev. J. L. Trolinger, to be with us.

Friends, pray for us that we may have a real revival.
T. E. Pierce, Pastor.

Easter Sunday at Calvary.—Last Sunday was a good day at Calvary church, Greensboro. Rev. N. G. Bethea had been with us for two weeks preaching nightly in evangelistic services. Results were seen in the accession to the church on Sunday morning. The following persons united with us: Mr. and Mrs. Cary Kirkman, Ruby Blaylock, Margaret Pope, Ruth Hines, Elizabeth Dixon, Hulda Booth, Dorothy Hines, Elizabeth Williams, Joseph Hines, Richard Causey, Charles Coe, Jr., Oman Coe, Mabel Cox. Communion service was held at the 11 o'clock hour after the reception of members and the baptism of some of the new members. Then at night came the Easter service, which drew a full house. The service of the Sunday school boys and girls was well rendered, and made a pleasing impression. The offering for home missions was about $70.

—A telephone report from Dr. Spahr informs that Grace church had a splendid day last Sunday. The Easter service came before preaching and was highly successful in every way. The contribution for home missions was about $100. The other services of the day were well attended, and the day was a very satisfactory one.

—Rev. L. W. Gerringer is preacher this week in a series of evangelistic meetings in State Street Church, Lexington. His pulpit in Calvary church will be occupied next Sunday by Rev. N. M. Harrison at 11 o'clock and by Rev. T. F. McCulloch at eight o'clock.

St. Paul Revival Services.—A series of revival services will begin at Saint Paul M. P. church in Revolution the fourth Sunday, the 26th of this month. Preaching at 11 A. M. and at 7:30 P. M. Services during the week, 7:30 P. M. each day.

Rev. G. H. Hendry of Gibsonville will do the preaching. The public is cordially invited to attend the services.

J. H. Moton, Pastor.

Henderson.—It would be difficult to record our impressions of yesterday. The day was bright and beautiful and full of the Easter spirit. It was a pleasure to have with us in the Sunday school so many of our young people who are either in college or are away teaching. Then at the 11 o'clock service our choir took us up into the third heaven. An abundance of Easter music had been prepared and was rendered so splendidly that the writer and it seemed everybody else present were simply charmed. The music together with the scripture lesson and the receiving of five bright boys into church membership consumed all the time and the pastor saved his sermon.

At eight last evening the beautiful Easter pageant, "The Gate Beautiful," was rendered in the presence of a great throng of people. Almost half an hour before time for the service to start the people were standing in the vestibule out to the outside door. For the benefit of those who could not see it last evening we have decided to repeat it on Tuesday evening of this week.

The Easter music of yesterday morning with two or three other numbers will be given next Sunday evening. The entire hour will be given over to music.

Those uniting with the church yesterday on profession of faith were: Richard Gooch, Albert Scoggins, Harold Roberson, Francis Martin and Milton Hight.

Miss Katie Cook, our faithful reporter, underwent a serious operation in Rex Hospital, Raleigh, N. C., Saturday morning. The last report was that she was doing well.

J. E. Pritchard.

Orange Charge.—The second quarterly conference met Saturday, 11th, at Chestnut Ridge church. A good attendance of the officials. Business transacted harmoniously. The different reports showed we are making progress.

The prospects for beginning the new parsonage soon are good.

The following brethren were nominated as candidates for delegate to the next annual conference: W. A. Davies of Union Grove church, S. N. Hayes of Chestnut Ridge church. Either of these brethren will make a good representative. Sincerely,

B. M. Williams.

Lebanon, Spring Church Circuit.—Brother Thompson filled his appointment yesterday as usual. He gave the children a very interesting little talk before preaching, which they enjoyed. His subject was, The Resurrection, and he gave us a good sermon.

Am glad to know that Mrs. Thompson is improving and hopes to be able to come home soon. She has been in Roanoke Rapids hospital for three weeks and has had a very serious operation.

We were glad to have Brother O'Brian and his wife with us Sunday afternoon.

There were several visitors with us; hope they will come again.

The second quarterly conference will be held at Pleasant Hill Saturday before the fourth Sunday. Mrs. W. W. Grant.

Fine Grave, Kernersville Charge.—Pastor Suits filled his appointment yesterday at 11 o'clock. He always seems to be at his best. Pastor Suits has just returned from a very pleasant stay of two weeks over in Asheville, where he helped Rev. Mr. Bates in a series of meetings.

We are glad to report that after a very desperate struggle we are just about "over the top" with our church debt.

On Saturday before the fourth Sunday in this month the second quarterly conference will be held at Sandy Ridge church beginning at ten o'clock. Pastor Suits is urging not only the official members but as many of the membership to be present as possible. It will be a kind of get-together affair. Dr. Dixon and probably other speakers will be there.

Miss Neile Gray attended the Fourth District Rally which was held at West End last Sunday, March 29. She was very disappointed that no more of our number were present to hear the splendid addresses.

Our hearts go out in sympathy with Mrs. McMichael in the loss of her daughter, Mrs. Annie Gardner. Annie was always such a good sweet girl. She leaves three precious little children besides her relatives and friends.

With all good wishes to the Herald and its readers,
Reporter.

English Street Church. We had a good day Sunday, the 12th. Had 158 in Sunday school. It is an inspiring sight to see so many young people in Sunday school and also so many of them taking an interest in every department of the church work. What a privilege we older ones have of training the young minds in the gospel way. We pray that God will help us to feel the responsibility He has placed upon us, in giving us in charge these splendid boys and girls that we may teach them the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. We had a good attendance at both the morning and evening services. At the evening service Brother Hamilton preached a splendid sermon. He exhorted every member to find their place in the Master's vineyard, and to serve faithfully in any way to advance the cause of Christ in the world. May God help us every one never to shirk any duty, but to be always diligent about the King's business. We believe the time has come when God wants real red-blooded men that stand for the vital things of the Bible. We want our church to be a home-like place where the stranger is always welcome. Pray for us and visit us whenever possible to do so.

Yours in His service,

Clifton L. Croker, Reporter.

There was need for courage in Eden, and courage has been the crying need of the world ever since the gates of the Garden closed behind the exiles. Fear began with sin and guilt, and it will exist until those twin evils are stamped out. Until then every fight in every realm demands courage.—Selected.

KEEPING AT ONE'S BEST.

Professor Gairdner used to say, "One never knows what work God may ask one to do at any moment, and one should always be at one's best." And surely that is only a paraphrase of the Master's counsel: "Have your loins girt, and your lamps trimmed, and be ye ready." And if this spiritual readiness is to be ours it will demand a spiritual habit and not merely an occasional act. For it implies a way of living. It means that the soul keeps itself reverently posed toward the eternal with an alert readiness to know and to do the will of the Lord.

That is one of the shining distinctions of the angels of God: "They do His commandments hearkening unto the voice of His word." Their spirit is ever ready, they are alert and vigilant. They are receptive and appreciative, and their mood is constant. They serve him day and night in his temple, and it is a service in which they never tire, and never grow old.

Yes, we should always be at our best, and the secret of being at one's best is found in waiting on God "all the day." We must seek continuity of communion. We need a Divine fellowship which remains unbroken in seasons of merriment and in the hours when we earn our daily bread. Our God is a Companion for the whole journey. He will accompany us all the day and all the way.—J. H. Jowett.

CHRISTIANIZING THE AUTO.

When the auto really gets enthused over religion, it is a powerful factor in a community. They have been known to get out of the garage when they found the door open on Sabbath morning and go running over the community looking up children for the Sabbath school, and men and women for the Bible classes. One was discovered in North Carolina, where they raise all sorts of things, that spent every Sabbath hunting up crippled folks and old folks to take to church. It seemed to enjoy taking them to church and waiting till the service ended to take them home.

The next drive must be to Christianize the auto. We must have a survey to determine how many are religious and how many are not. And as we send missionaries to the heathen lands to Christianize barbarians, we must send missionaries to the garages to convert automobiles. We must not let godless autos come into well-behaved families and turn them away from their church. If any family has an unconverted auto and it refuses to be Christianized, sell it and walk. It is better to go through life on foot and go to church every Sabbath than to have a super-six and spend Sabbath whizzing down the pike just to keep up with the Joneses. If you try to keep up with them, you will land in the ditch with them. What effect is your auto having on the religious life of your boys and girls? If it is a heathen auto, taking them at break-neck speed on a bad road, sell it and get a Christian auto that will take them on the Zion road.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

A GIRL DETECTIVE.

Nancy put down her book with a sigh of regret. "I wish I were a man. I'd be a detective," she declared.

"Why not be a woman and a detective?" Uncle Porter asked, smiling.

Nancy tipped her head and looked at him doubtfully. Uncle Porter was a joy, but nobody ever did know just where his remarks would bring one out.

"I am sure that would not be at all the same thing," she replied. "But you may tell me—I can see that you are aching to."

"Well," Uncle Porter declared, with a twinkle over Nancy's penetration, "there are a great many women detectives. Some of them specialize on dirt; they could 'run down' a speck of dust in the dark; others are remarkably skilled in seeing the faults of other people. I've heard them say that they knew there was something wrong about such and such a person—they just felt it"—Nancy, for some reason, colored brilliantly—"and, of course, very soon they discover the terrible thing. That, I am bound to say, is a cheap form of detection—almost anybody can learn to do it in three lessons. But there's another splendid variety of detective—the one who can always find beautiful things in people, no matter how disagreeable they seem to others. Your grandmother was like that; she was one of the real seers of life—she saw a child of God in everybody. Sometimes it takes a genius to do that, Nan."—Epworth Era.

INVESTMENTS.

It is dangerous to desire money. The only way to be delivered from that danger is to desire God's will; if it is God's will that we should ask him for money, and receive money, it will keep us from its injury. A man of earth has said: "My permanent investments have not made me a good man. I do not think money ever helps a man morally, and he is a splendid man who can keep money from hurting him." There are no splendid men except those whose lives are hid with Christ in God. Such men can safely be entrusted with money, for they recognize that anything and everything they have is only a trust. They know that it does not belong to them, but to God, and as honorable stewards they ask the Owner what he would have done with that which is his. Then any so-called "permanent investments" are so far outweighed by their eternal investment in Christ that they are guarded from stumbling.—Sunday School Times.

WHAT CHRIST TAKES AWAY.

"Taking away" is a work which only God can do with finality. Sometimes, indeed, He has to do it in judgment and punishment; but over and over again he does it in grace and blessing. The expression occurs scores of times, from Genesis to Revelation. One of the early cases is when Pharaoh's daughter said to the sister of the baby Moses, "Take this child away, and nurse it for me." The princess did not realize it, but God here "took away" Moses from death and the Egyptians eternally, though the final deliverance was not consummated until many years later. The last mention in the Bible is the dread prophecy of judgment that "if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life" (Rev. 22:19). But perhaps the two "blessed" "takings away" in the whole Book and in all of God's purposes are touched upon in the scripture prophesying Christ's second coming. The actual words are not there, but the truth is, as we read (Heb. 9:28): "So Christ was offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." In the Keswick Calendar for July 7, the comment of Alfred Mace on this Scripture was given: "Brethren, get on your tiptoes here, gird your loins, stretch your neck, open wide your eyes. We are not looking for death and judgment; we are looking for the Lord himself! The first time he came he took our sins away; the next time he comes he will take ourselves away. Are you ready? The gathering shout may come before we sleep to-night, and on lightning wings we who are his shall be caught up to meet him in the air."—Sunday School Times.

FIFTY YEARS WITH THE BIBLE.

There is no doubt that Abraham Lincoln's conception of manhood and character was built up from his study of the Bible. In his childhood and youth it was the one Book of the community; in his father's house it was constantly read, debated, quoted. He grew to know it textually as few men do. It colored what he wrote and cropped out in his daily conversation. Many of his keenest and most widely quoted comments on public matters during the Civil War were direct or adapted quotations from the Bible. Thus, there was his dismissal of the Fremont boom in 1864. Fremont was a "protest" candidate for the Presidency. His supporters loudly claimed that at the Cleveland convention, held in the spring of that year, he would draw "thousands." But it turned out that there were only some four hundred persons present. When this was reported to Lincoln, his only comment was to pick up the Bible, which always lay on his office desk, open it without hesitation, and read: "And everyone that was in distress and everyone that was in doubt gathered themselves unto him and he became captain over them, and there were with him about four hundred."

But Lincoln knew the Bible spiritually—felt its truth; and particularly did he understand the type of character that the Bible holds up to man and strives to make him love and emulate. I think it is quite clear, both from Lincoln's words and actions, that he believed that it was only the kind of man that he saw portrayed in the Bible who could ever be of any lasting and powerful influence in building up democracy.—Ida M. Tarbell.

LONG-SUFFERING.

Fred had become a Christian, and with several other juniors he had been baptized and united with the church. Some of his chums, knowing about Fred's quick temper, said among themselves, "Let's get Fred mad and then tell him his Christianity is no good." And so they tried. They hid his book when he wanted to read; they threw mud on the walk that he had just swept; they called him names as he went down the street. But Fred showed no signs of anger, and when those very boys were out on a raft which began to sink, it was Fred who sprang into the boat and rescued everyone.

As he brought them back to shore the boys said, "Say, Fred, you're all right. We believe you now, that you're really a Christian, and we want to be like you."—Selected.

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS.

By Mr. S. D. Gordon.

The God-Man.

The blacksmith was right. Ignorant, blasphemous, he railed on the man trying to sell a Bible. The man deftly left a copy behind as he supped out. The blacksmith began crying, "There's a man in the book." Yes, there is a Man in the Book. That's the outstanding thing. Look at Him. Born in pure poverty, cradled among cattle, His life in an unsavory village, among people intensely clannish, He had no touch with tools, never traveled far, had no book, experience, and wrote none, left no organization and died a death of peculiar shame. Yet in three days after, He was seen alive, within three centuries he changed the calendar of imperial Rome.

It is fascinating in these older leaves to get glimpses of an Unusual Man. He talks of childless Abraham under the blue, and the twinkling stars to number Abraham's grandchildren. He wrestled one dark night with Jacob, and gives the strange soft touch which bends that rugged chieftain's will. He is intrepid Joshua at Canaan's gateway, and gives orders, and is obeyed.
